Intendente /intendénte/. In Spanish law, the immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces into which the Spanish monarchy is divided.

Intendment of law. The true meaning, the correct understanding or intention of the law. A presumption or inference made by the courts.

Common intendment. The natural and usual sense; the common meaning or understanding; the plain meaning of any writing as apparent on its face without straining or distorting the construction.

Intent. Design, resolve, or determination with which person acts. Witters v. United States, 70 U.S.App.D.C. 316, 106 F.2d 837, 840. A state of mind in which a person seeks to accomplish a given result through a course of action. As used in intentional torts, "intent" is desire to bring about result that will invade interests of another. Wager v. Pro, C.A., 603 F.2d 1005, 1010, 195 U.S.App.D.C. 423. A mental attitude which can seldom be proved by direct evidence, but must ordinarily be proved by circumstances from which it may be inferred. State v. Gantt, 26 N.C.App. 554, 217 S.E.2d 3, 5. A state of mind existing at the time a person commits an offense and may be shown by act, circumstances and inferences deducible therefrom. State v. Evans, 219 Kan. 515, 548 P.2d 772, 777.

The word "intent" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, 2nd, to denote that the actor desires to cause consequences of his act, or that he believes that the consequences are substantially certain to result from it. Sec. 8A. See Intentional tort.

Intent and motive should not be confused. Motive is what prompts a person to act, or fail to act. Intent refers only to the state of mind with which the act is done or omitted.

See also Aforethought, Constructive intent; Intention; Larcenous intent; Legislative intent; Malice aforesaid; Manifestation of intention; Mens rea; Predatory intent; Premeditation; Presumed intent; Scienter; Specific intent; Willful.

Common intent. The natural sense given to words.

Criminal intent. See Criminal; Knowingly; Mens rea Premeditation.

General intent. In criminal law, the intent to do that which the law prohibits. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the defendant intended the precise harm or the precise result which eventuated.

Specific intent. In criminal law, the intent to accomplish the precise act which the law prohibits; e.g. assault with intent to rape.

Transferred intent. In tort law, if A, intending to strike B, misses B and hits C instead, the intent to strike B is transferred and supplies the necessary intent for the tort against C. See also Transferred intent doctrine.

Intento /inténsh(u)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, the formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the prator.

In old English law, a count or declaration in a real action (narratio).

Intento ceeça mala /inténsh(u)yow siyka méda/. A blind or obscure meaning is bad or ineffectual. Said of a testator's intention.

Intento inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni /inténsh(u)yow insrváiry débät liyjabas, nón liyjyz inténshiyównay/. The intention [of a party] ought to be subservient to [or in accordance with] the laws, not the laws to the intention.

Intento mea imponit nomen operi meo /inténsh(u)yow míyó impównat nówmnow óparay miyów/. My intent gives a name to my act.

Intention. Determination to act in a certain way or to do a certain thing. Meaning; will; purpose; design. "Intention," when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as not unlikely to follow from a deliberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desires it or not. See also Four corners rule; Intent; Intentionally.

Intentional. See Intent; intention.

Intentionally. To do something purposely, and not accidentally. State v. Marshall, 15 Ohio App.2d 187, 239 N.E.2d 755, 758. Person acts "intentionally" if he desires to cause consequences of his act or he believes consequences are substantially certain to result. State v. Bright, 78 App. 239, 337 S.E.2d 87, 89. For purposes of criminal statute means willfully or purposely, and not accidentally or involuntarily. State v. Schott, 222 Neb. 456, 384 N.W.2d 620, 624. See also Intent; Intention.
Intentional tort. A tort in which the actor is expressly or impliedly judged to have possessed intent or purpose to injure.

Intentional tort. A tort in which the actor is expressly judged to have possessed intent or purpose to injure.

Intention to kill. An element in certain aggravated assaults and batteries which requires the prosecution to prove the intent to kill in addition to the other elements of the assault and battery. See Aggravated assault; Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Inter /inter/. Lat. Among; between.

Inter alia /inter éyl(i)ya/*éliya/. Among other things. A term anciently used in pleading, especially in reciting statutes, where the whole statute was not set forth at length. Inter alia enactatum fuit, among other things it was enacted.

Inter alia causas acquisitionis, magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis /inter éyl(i)yas kőzé akgwazišiyownas, mágna, sélábras, ét famówa ést kőzá danéyshiyownas/. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift.

Inter alios /inter élyiyas/. Between other persons; between those who are strangers to a matter in question.

Inter alios res gestas alis non posse praecidium facere sepe constitutum est /inter élyiyas ríyz jéštas állyiyas nón pósiy prajúwdskándem fásériy siyiply kóstatówyútam ést/. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice.

Inter apices juris /inter éyposiyj júras/. Among the subtleties of the law. See Apex juris.

Inter arma silent leges /inter armas sáylant liyiyyz/. In time of war the laws are silent. It applies as between the state and its external enemies; and also in cases of civil disturbance where extrajudicial force may supersede the ordinary process of law.

Inter brachia /inter brékyiya/. Between her arms.

Inter cæteros /inter sétorows/. Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term applied in the civil law to clauses of disinheritance in a will.

Intercalare /intarkaléry/. Lat. In the civil law, to introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate.

Intercedere /intarsiydary/. Lat. In the civil law, to become bound for another's debt.

Intercept. As used in federal wiretapping statute, means the aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of any electronic, mechanical, or other device. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510. See Eavesdropping; Interception; Wiretapping.

Interception. Within Federal Communications Act, prohibiting interception of communication by wire or radio, indicates taking or seizure by the way or before arrival at destined place, and does not ordinarily connotate obtaining of what is to be sent before, or at the moment, it leaves the possession of the proposed sender, or after, or at the moment, it comes into possession of intended receiver. Communications Act of 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Goldman v. United States, N.Y., 316 U.S. 129, 62 S.Ct. 993, 995, 86 L.Ed. 1322. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Interchangeably. By way of exchange or interchange. This term properly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy which he delivers to the other.

Inter conjugae /inter kónjagiyz/. Between husband and wife.

Intercourse. Communication; literally, a running or passing between persons or places; commerce; sexual relations.

Interdict /intardikt/. A prohibitory decree.

Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services (i.e. sacraments) are prohibited to be administered either to particular persons or in particular places.

Roman and civil law. A decree of the prætor by means of which, in certain cases determined by the edict, he himself directly commanded what should be done or omitted, particularly in causes involving the right of possession or a quasi possession. In the modern civil law, interdicts are regarded precisely the same as actions, though they give rise to a summary proceeding.

Interdicts are either prohibitory, restorative, or exibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc.

An interdict was distinguished from an "action" (actio), properly so called, by the circumstance that the prætor himself decided in the first instance (principaliter), on the application of the plaintiff, without previously appointing a judex, by issuing a decree commanding what should be done, or left undone. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used than were the actions themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justinian were generally dispensed with.

Interdiction /intardikshan/. French law. Every person who, on account of insanity, has become incapable of controlling his own interests, can be put under the control of a guardian, who shall administer his affairs with the same effect as he might himself. Such a person is said to be "interdict," and his status is described as "interdiction."

Civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.
French-Canadian law. A proceeding instituted for the purpose of obtaining a curator of the person and property, and includes the calling of a family council and a petition to the court or its prothonotary, followed by a hearing.

International law. An "interdiction of commercial intercourse" between two countries is a governmental prohibition of commercial intercourse, intended to bring about an entire cessation for the time being of all trade whatever. The Edward, 1 Wheat. 272, 4 L.Ed. 96.

Interdum evenit ut exceptio quae prima facie justa videtur, tamen inique nocet: Esto enim si quis aksēpēsh(y)ow kwiy práymā féyshiy(y) jāsta vādytār, tāmān anāykwīwā nosiyat/. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal.

Interesse /intarésiy/. Lat. Interest. The interest of the judge, and liability, of rights, privileges, powers and immunities and distributive to mean any one of them. Sec. 5.

Pro interesse suo. For his own interest; according to, or to the extent of, his individual interest. Used (in practice) to describe the intervention of a party who comes into a suit for the purpose of protecting interests of his own which may be involved in the dispute between the principal parties or which may be affected by the settlement of their contention.

Interest. The most general term that can be employed to denote a right, claim, title, or legal share in something. In its application to real estate or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms "estate," "right," and "title." More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title.

The word "interest" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, Second, to denote the object of any human desire. Sec. 1.

The word "interest" is used in the Restatement of Property both generically to include varying aggregates of rights, privileges, powers and immunities and distributively to mean any one of them. Sec. 5.

"Interest" which may disqualify a judge from hearing a suit is a personal proprietary or pecuniary interest or one affecting individual rights of the judge, and liability, gain or relief to judge must turn on outcome of suit. Mears v. Hall, 263 Ark. 827, 569 S.W.2d 91, 94.

See also Add on interest; Adverse interest; Against interest; Beneficial interest; Community of interest; Compelling state interest; Compound interest; Conflict of interest; Contingent interest in personal property; Coupons; Equitable interest; Executory interests; Future interests; Identity of interests; Insurable interest; Leasehold interest; Legal interest; Lessee's interest; Lessor's interest; New York interest; Ownership; Pecuniary interest; Possessory interest; Public interest; Security interest; Senior interest; Terminable interest; Usury; Vested interest.

Absolute interest. Person has absolute interest in property when such is so completely vested in individual that no contingency can deprive him of it without his consent. So, too, he is the owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sustain the loss if the property is destroyed. See also Fee simple; Title.

Easement. An easement is an "interest" in land and involves the title. Allen v. Smith, Mo.App., 375 S.W.2d 874, 878. See Easement.

For use of money. Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use or forbearance of borrowed money. Jones v. Kansas Gas & Electric Co., 222 Kan. 390, 565 P.2d 597, 604. Basic cost of borrowing money or buying on installment contract. Payments a borrower pays a lender for the use of the money. Cost of using credit or funds of another. A corporation pays interest on its bonds to the bondholders.

Accrued interest. Interest earned but not yet paid. See also Accruing interest.

Accumulated interest. Interest on bonds and other debts which is due or overdue but not yet paid.

Boston interest. See Boston interest.

Compound interest. Interest upon interest; i.e. interest paid on principal plus accrued interest. Exists where accrued interest is added to the principal sum, and the whole treated as a new principal for the calculation of the interest for the next period. Interest added to principal as interest becomes due and thereafter made to bear interest. Wieland v. Loon, 79 S.D. 608, 116 N.W.2d 391, 393.

Conventional interest. Interest at the rate agreed upon and fixed by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that which the law would prescribe in the absence of an explicit agreement.

Excessive interest. See Usury.

Ex-interest. In the language of stock exchanges, a bond or other interest-bearing security is said to be sold "ex-interest" when the seller reserves to himself the interest already accrued and payable (if any) or the interest accruing up to the next interest day.

Gross interest. The total interest paid by the borrower which includes administrative costs and expenses to lender.

Interest rate. See Interest rate.

Interest upon interest. See Compound interest, above.

Legal interest. See Legal interest.

New York interest. Computation of interest on the exact number of days in a month and not on a thirty day month. See also Boston interest.

Nominal interest. The interest stated on the security and not the rate based on the price of the security.
Ordinary interest. Interest computed entirely on the principal with no interest computed on the interest past due.

Simple interest. That which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance, made by law or agreement of parties. Interest calculated on principal where interest earned during periods before maturity of the loan is neither added to the principal nor paid to the lender. That paid on the principal lent as distinguished from compound interest which is interest paid on unpaid interest. B. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 598. Difference between “simple interest” and “compound interest” is that “simple interest” does not merge with principal and thus does not become part of base on which future interest is calculated. Stewart v. Isbell, 155 Mich.App. 65, 399 N.W.2d 440, 446.

Imputed interest. In taxation, taxable income resulting from the purchase at a bargain of assets for less than their fair value; such occurs when one is so placed as to take advantage of an opportunity not available to others. An estimated charge for interest for use of capital though no cash payment is provided. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

For certain long-term sales of property, the IRS has the authority to convert some of the gain from the sale into interest income if the contract does not provide for a minimum rate of interest to be paid by the purchaser. The application of this procedure has the effect of forcing the seller to recognize less long-term capital gain and more ordinary income (i.e., interest income). I.R.C. § 483. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

Insurance. See Insurable interest.

Intervention. Word “interest” as used in provision of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure that on timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action when representation of his “interest” by existing parties is or may be inadequate and he is or may be bound by judgment in action means specific legal or equitable interest in case. Toles v. U. S., C.A.N.M., 371 F.2d 784, 785, 786. See Fed.R.Civil P. 24.

Interest sufficient to support intervention as of right must be significant, must be direct rather than contingent, and must be based on a right which belongs to the proposed intervenor rather than to an existing party to the suit. Vazman, S. A. v. Fidelity Intern. Bank., D.C. N.Y., 418 F.Supp. 1084, 1085. An “interest” in the subject of an action so as to render the holder thereof a necessary party or a proper intervenor does not include a mere, consequential, remote or conjectural possibility of being in some manner affected by the result of the action but must be such a direct claim upon the subject matter of the action that the holder will either gain or lose by direct operation of the judgment to be rendered. Bunting v. McDonnell Aircraft Corp., Mo., 522 S.W.2d 161, 169.

Penalty. Interest as a penalty is exaction for past-due obligations; it is compensation for delay in payment (e.g., interest impose by IRS on overdue taxes). Wayne Tp. in Passaic County v. Ricmin, Inc., 124 N.J.Super. 509, 308 A.2d 27, 30. See also Penalty.

Interested party. For purposes of administrative hearing, are those who have a legally recognized private interest, and not simply a possible pecuniary benefit. First Nat. Bank v. Oklahoma Sav. and Loan Bd., Okl., 569 P.2d 993, 996.

Interest equalization tax. Tax imposed on each acquisition by a U.S. person of stock of a foreign issuer, or of a debt obligation of a foreign obligor if such obligation has a period remaining to maturity of a year or more. I.R.C. § 4911(a). This tax expired in 1974.

Interest-free loans. Bona fide loans that carry no interest (or a below-market rate). If made in a nonbusiness setting, the imputed interest element is treated as a gift from the lender to the borrower. If made by a corporation to a shareholder, a constructive dividend could result. In either event, the lender may have interest income to recognize. I.R.C. § 7872.

Interest rate. The percentage of an amount of money which is paid for its use for a specified time. Commonly expressed as an annual percentage rate (APR). Federal and state laws regulate interest rate amounts and disclosures on consumer loans. See Annual percentage rate; Coupon rate of interest; Truth-in-Lending Act; Usury.

Lock rate. An interest rate established at the time of the mortgage application and guaranteed for a specified period, usually until closing. A rate can be “locked” for varying periods—30, 60 or 90 days, in most cases.

Nominal interest rate. The periodic rate of interest that is stated in a loan agreement or security. Frequently the effective interest rate is greater than the nominal rate because of factors like the frequency of compounding and the deduction of interest in advance.

Prime rate. The most favorable interest rates charged by a commercial bank on short-term loans to its best (i.e., most credit worthy) customers.

Real interest rate. The inflation-adjusted rate charged for borrowing funds.

Variable interest rate. A flexible rate of interest which increases or decreases according to current market rates.

Interest reipublicae ne maleficia remaneant impunita /intérét riyaypáblisí niý mélèsis(h)i(y)ya raményiant imponáyta/ . It concerns the state that crimes remain not unpunished.

Interest reipublicae ne sua quis male utatur /intérét riyaypáblisí niý s(y)úwa kwís mély yi yatéyta;r/ . It concerns the state that persons do not misuse their property.

Interest reipublicae quod homines conserventur /intérét riyaypáblisí kwód hómanijy kónsarvénťar/ . It concerns the state that [the lives of] men be preserved.

Interest reipublicae res judicatas non rescindt /intérét riyaypáblisí riýz juwdskéyta;n nón rásíndar/ . It concerns the state that things adjudicated be not... rescinded. It is matter of public concern that solemn adjudications of the courts should not be disturbed.

Interest reipublice suprema hominum testaments rata haberi /interēst riyaypalsisi y(s)ypryyma hōmanam tēstāmenta rētya habiray/. It concerns the state that men’s last wills be held valid (or allowed to stand).

Interest reipublice ut carceres sint in tuto /interēst riyaypalsisi yē kārsorizy sint in t(y)dwotow/. It concerns the state that prisons be safe places of confinement.

Interest (imprimis) reipublice ut pax in regno conservetur, et quæcumque paci adversentur provide declinentur /interēst amprāmys riyaypalsisi yē pēks in régnow kōnrōvyētēr yē kwiykōŋkwēiy pēsay ādvērsēntēr pravāyidī dēklānēntēr/. It especially concerns the state that peace be preserved in the kingdom, and that whatever things are against peace be prudently avoided.

Interest reipublice ut quilibet re sua bene utatur /interēst riyaypalsisi yē kwāyōlsot rī y(s)ywās blyniy ystēytēr/. It is the concern of the state that every one uses his property properly.

Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium /interēst riyaypalsisi yē sit fāynas láysh(y)am/. It concerns the state that there be an end of lawsuits. It is for the general welfare that a period be put to litigation.

Interfere. To check; hamper; hinder; infringe; en-croach; trespass; disturb; intervene; intermeddle; interfere. To enter into, or to take part in, the concerns of others. People ex rel. Benefit Ass’n of Railway Employees v. Miner, 387 Ill. 393, 56 N.E.2d 353, 356.

Interference. A Patent and Trademark Office proceeding to determine priority of invention between two or more parties claiming patentably indistinct subject matter. An interference may be between two or more patent applicants or one or more patentees and at least one patent applicant. It may be declared sua sponte by the Patent and Trademark Office or requested by a patent applicant. An interference is decided by the Board of Patent Appeals. 35 U.S.C.A. § 135. See also Infringement.

Interference with business relationship. The elements of this tort are the existence of a business relationship under which the plaintiff has legal rights, an intentional and unjustified interference with that relationship by defendant, and damage to plaintiff as result of breach of that business relationship. Gerber v. Keyes Co., Fla.App. 3 Dist., 443 So.2d 199, 200.

Interference with contractual relationship. This tort has four elements: existence of valid contract, defendant’s knowledge of that contract, defendant’s intentional procuring of breach of that contract and damages. Wegman v. Dairylea Cooperative, Inc., 50 A.D.2d 108, 376 N.Y.S.2d 728, 736.

Interim /intaram/. Lat. In the meantime; meanwhile; temporarily; between. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. See also Interlocutory.

Interim committitur /intaram kamititar/. “In the meantime, let him be committed.” An order of court (or the docket-entry noting it) by which a prisoner is committed to prison and directed to be kept there until some further action can be taken, or until the time arrives for the execution of his sentence.

Interim curator /intaram kyāryētār/’ kyārūsētār/. In old English law, a person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict, until the appointment by the crown of an administrator or administrators for the same purpose.

Interim financing. A short-term loan secured to cover interim costs associated with building construction, corporate takeovers, or the like, until permanent financing (e.g., mortgage, bonds) is obtained. Also called a bridge loan.

Interim officer. One appointed to fill the office during a temporary vacancy, or during an interval caused by the absence or incapacity of the regular incumbent.

Interim order. One made in the meantime, and until something is done.

Interim receipt. A receipt for money paid by way of premium for a contract of insurance for which application is made. If the risk is rejected, the money is refunded, less the pro rata premium.

Interim statements. In accounting, statements issued for periods less than the regular, annual accounting period. Most corporations are required to issue interim statements on a quarterly basis.

Interinsurance exchange /intarinshūrons ōkschēynj/. Reciprocal exchange (q.v.).

Interior Department. Executive level department of federal government overseeing agencies concerned with Indian affairs, mining, fish and wildlife, geologic research, land management, national parks and monuments, territories, flood control, conservation, public works, and related areas. See also Bureau of Land Management.

Interlaqueare /intarlēkwēryēr/. In old English practice, to link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called “interlaqueata” where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summoned by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrantors.

Interlineation. The act of writing between the lines of an instrument; also what is written between lines. See also Interpolate.

Interlining. The practice whereby a carrier, whose certificated routes do not reach the shipment destination, transfers the shipment to another carrier for delivery. Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. U.S., Mass., 371 U.S. 115, 83 S.Ct. 217, 221, 9 L.Ed.2d 177. See also Joint through rate.

Interlocking confession. Confessions which are substantially the same and consistent concerning the major elements of the crime involved. They are admissible in joint trials. State v. Chaffee, 285 S.C. 21, 328 S.E.2d 464, 469.

Interlocking directors. Persons who serve simultaneously on the boards of directors of two or more corporations that have dealings with each other. Federal antitrust law prohibits interlocking directors of competing businesses (15 U.S.C.A. § 19); such directors may also create problems involving fiduciary duties.

Interlocutory /Interlók(y)toriy/. Provisional; interim; temporary; not final. Something intervening between the commencement and the end of a suit which decides some point or matter, but is not a final decision of the whole controversy. An interlocutory order or decree is one which does not finally determine a cause of action but only decides some intervening matter pertaining to the cause, and which requires further steps to be taken in order to enable the court to adjudicate the cause on the merits. In re Merle's Inc., C.A.Wash., 481 F.2d 1016, 1018.

As to interlocutory Costs; Decree; Injunction; Judgment; Order; and Sentence, see those titles. See also Intermediate order.

Interlocutory appeal. An appeal of a matter which is not determinable of the controversy, but which is necessary for a suitable adjudication of the merits. See also Final decision rule.

Interlocutory Appeals Act. Federal Act which grants discretion to the courts of appeals to review any interlocutory order whatever in a civil case if the trial (i.e. federal district court) judge, in making the order, has stated in writing that the order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of litigation. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292.

Interlocutory decision. Any decision prior to a final decision. See Interlocutory. Compare Final decision or judgment.

Interloper. Persons who interfere or intermeddle into business to which they have no right. Persons who enter a country or place to trade without license. One who meddles in affairs which are none of his business and for which he has no responsibility; an intruder; an intermeddler. Encroachment on rights of others.

Intern. To restrict or confine a person or group of persons, particularly in time of war (e.g. enemy aliens). An advanced student or recent graduate in a professional field; e.g. one trained in a profession allied to medicine who undergoes a period of practical clinical experience prior to practicing his profession. Regents of University of Mich. v. Michigan Employment Relations Commission, 38 Mich.App. 55, 195 N.W.2d 875, 878. See also Internment.

Internment. Relating to the interior; comprised within boundary lines; of interior concern or interest; domestic, as opposed to foreign.

Internal act. That which transpires within a person or organization or government as contrasted with a happening outside such.

Internal audit. See Audit.

Intermediary bank. Any bank to which an item is transferred in the course of collection except the depository or payor bank. U.C.C. § 4-105(c).

Intermediate. Intervening; interposed during the progress of a suit, proceeding, business, etc., or between its beginning and end. See Interlocutory. Intervention.

Intermediate account. In probate law, an account of an executor, administrator, or guardian filed subsequent to his first or initial account and before his final account. An account filed with the court for the purpose of disclosing the acts of the person accounting and the state or condition of the fund in his hands, and not made the subject of a final judicial settlement.

Intermediate courts. Those courts which have general jurisdiction, either trial or appellate or both, but which are below the court of last resort in the jurisdiction.

Intermediate order. An order made between the commencement of the action and its final determination, incident to and during its progress, which does not determine the cause but only some intervening matter relating thereto; one that is not directly appealable. See Interlocutory.

Intermediation. A financial term which refers to the placement of funds with a bank or other financial institution, also known as an intermediary, with the objective of investing such funds in stocks, bonds, etc.

In terminis terminans /in términas términántibus/. In terms of determination; exactly in point. In express or determinate terms.

Intermittent easement. See Easement.

Intermittent stream. A stream, the flow of which in the state of nature is interrupted either from time to time during the year or at various places along its course, or both. U. S. v. Fallbrook Public Utility Dist., D.C.Cal., 109 F.Supp. 28, 78.

Intermixture of goods. Confusion of goods; the confusing or commingling together of goods belonging to different owners in such a way that the property of no particular owner can be separately identified or extracted from the mass. See also Confusion of goods.

Intern. To restrict or confine a person or group of persons, particularly in time of war (e.g. enemy aliens). An advanced student or recent graduate in a professional field; e.g. one trained in a profession allied to medicine who undergoes a period of practical clinical experience prior to practicing his profession. Regents of University of Mich. v. Michigan Employment Relations Commission, 38 Mich.App. 55, 195 N.W.2d 875, 878. See also Internment.

Internal. Relating to the interior; comprised within boundary lines; of interior concern or interest; domestic, as opposed to foreign.

Internal act. That which transpires within a person or organization or government as contrasted with a happening outside such.

Internal audit. See Audit.

Intermediary. An arbitrator or mediator. A broker; one who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who for that purpose may be agent of both; e.g. insurance broker. See also Finder.
Internal affairs of corporation. In conflicts, the rights and liabilities of a corporation are determined by the local law of the state which has the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 302(1). Such affairs are generally left to courts of the state of incorporation.

Internal commerce. See Commerce.

Internal financing. Financing of business from funds generated from normal operations in contrast to financing from borrowed funds or stock issues.

Internal improvements. With reference to governmental policy and constitutional provisions restricting taxation or the contracting of public debts, this term means works of general public utility or advantage, designed to promote facility of intercommunication, trade, and commerce, the transportation of persons and property, or the development of the natural resources of the state, such as railroads, public highways, turnpikes, and canals, bridges, the improvement of rivers and harbors, systems of artificial irrigation, and the improvement of water powers; but it does not include the building and maintenance of state institutions.

Internal police. A term sometimes applied to the police power, or power to enact laws in the interest of the public safety, health, and morality, which is inherent in the legislative authority of each state, is to be exercised with reference only to its domestic affairs and its own citizens, and is not surrendered to the federal government. See also Police power.

Internal revenue. Governmental revenues from internal sources by way of taxes as contrasted with revenues from customs and foreign sources.

Internal Revenue Code (I.R.C.). That body of law which codifies all federal tax laws including income, estate, gift, excise, etc. taxes. Such laws comprise Title 26 of the U.S. Code, and are implemented by the Internal Revenue Service and through it by Treasury Regulations; Revenue Rulings, etc. Because of the extensive revisions to the tax statutes that occurred with the Tax Reform Act of 1986, Title 26 of the U.S. Code is now known as the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Internal Revenue Service. The Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) is responsible for administering and enforcing the internal revenue laws, except those relating to alcohol, tobacco, firearms, explosives, and wagering. It is a part of the Department of the Treasury. Basic I.R.S. activities include providing taxpayer service and education; determination, assessment, and collection of internal revenue taxes; determination of pension plan qualification and exempt organization status; and preparation and issuance of rulings and regulations to interpret the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Internal security. That branch of law and government (e.g. CIA, FBI) dealing with measures to protect the country from subversive activities.

Internal security acts. Federal Acts (Smith Act, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2385, 2386; McCarran Act, 50 U.S.C.A. § 781 et seq.) controlling and making illegal subversive activities of communist organizations and other groups whose purpose is to overthrow or disrupt the government.

Internal waters. Such as lie wholly within the body of the particular state or country. See also Inland waters.

International agreements. Treaties and other agreements of a contractual character between different countries or organizations of states (foreign) creating legal rights and obligations between the parties.

International commerce. See Commerce.

International Court of Justice. Judicial arm of the United Nations. It has jurisdiction to give advisory opinions on matters of law and treaty construction when requested by the General Assembly, Security Council or any other international agency authorized by the General Assembly to petition for such opinion. It has jurisdiction, also, to settle legal disputes between nations when voluntarily submitted to it. Its judgments may be enforced by the Security Council. Its jurisdiction and powers are defined by statute, to which all member states of the U.N. are parties. Judges of such court are elected by the General Assembly and Security Council of U.N.

International jurisdiction. Power of a court or other organization to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries or foreign states. See International Court of Justice.

International law. Those laws governing the legal relations between nations. Rules and principles of general application dealing with the conduct of nations and of international organizations and with their relations to the laws and treaties, rules and practice of civilized nations utilize in regulating their relationships and such customs have great moral force. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd., D.C.Pa., 494 F.Supp. 1161, 1178. International customs and treaties are generally considered to be the two most important sources of international law.

International Monetary Fund. Agency of United Nations established to stabilize international exchange and promote balanced international trade. See also World Bank.

International Shoe Case. Due process requires that a foreign corporation be "present" within a state by a measure of minimal activity within the state for suits to be maintained against it in the state. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, etc., 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. See also McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 2d 95. See also Minimum contacts.

International Trade Court. See Court of International Trade.

Internment. The detention or confinement of enemy aliens or persons suspected of disloyalty in specially designated areas; e.g. Japanese during World War II. Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763, 70 S.Ct. 936, 94 L.Ed. 1255.

Internuncio /in'tarnúnk(h)ýos/. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the papal court in countries where that court has no nuncio.

Internuncius /in'tarnúnk(h)ýos/. A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties.

Inter partes /in'tar pártíyz/. Between parties. Instruments in which two persons unite, each making conveyance to, or engagement with, the other, are called "papers inter partes."

Interpellate /in'torpólyat/. To insert (additional or false) words in a complete instrument or document, thus altering meaning of such. See also Interpolation.

Interpolate /in'tópólyat/. A plea by which a person sued in respect to property disclaims any interest in it and demands that rival claimants shall litigate their titles between themselves and relieve him from responsibility. See Interpleader.

A statutory proceeding, serving as a substitute for the action of replevin, by which a third person intervenes in an action of attachment, sets up his own title to the specific property attached, and seeks to recover the possession of it.

Interpleader. An equitable proceeding to determine the rights of rival claimants to property held by a third person having no interest therein. Balish v. Farnham, 92 Nev. 133, 546 P.2d 1297, 1299. When two or more persons claim the same thing (or fund) of a third, and he, laying no claim to it himself, is ignorant which of them has a right to it, and fears he may be prejudiced by their proceeding against him to recover it, he may join such claimants as defendants and require them to interplead their claims so that he may not be exposed to double or multiple liability. A defendant exposed to similar liability may obtain such an interpleader by way of cross-claim or counterclaim. Interpleader in federal court is governed by the federal Interpleader Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1335, and Fed.R. Civil P. 22. Similar statutes and court rules govern interpleader in state courts.

Interpol. International Criminal Police Organization; a coordinating group for international law enforcement.

Interpolate /in'tópólyat/. To insert (additional or false) words in a complete instrument or document, thus altering meaning of such. See also Interpolation.

Interpolated terminal reserve. The method used in valuing insurance policies for gift and estate tax purposes when the policies are not paid-up at the time of their transfer.

Interposition /in'tarposishan/. The doctrine that a state, in the exercise of its sovereignty, may reject a mandate of the federal government deemed to be unconstitutional or to exceed the powers delegated to the federal government. The doctrine denies constitutional obligation of states to respect Supreme Court decisions with which they do not agree. Bush v. Orleans Parish School Bd., D.C.La., 188 F.Supp. 916. The concept is based on the 10th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States reserving to the states powers not delegated to the United States. Historically, the doctrine emanated from Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (Dall.) 419, wherein the state of Georgia, when sued in the Supreme Court by a private citizen of another state, entered a remonstrance and declined to recognize the court's jurisdiction. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected this doctrine of interposition in Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 3 L.Ed. 2d 5.

Interpret. To construe; to seek out the meaning of language; to translate orally from one tongue to another.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus, est optimus interpretandi modus /in'tóprprérdíry et kómpkardéry líjíjí ljiýjábas, ést ópímsas in'tóprprérdíndí ay mówðsé/. To interpret, and [in such a way as] to harmonize laws with laws, is the best mode of interpretation.

Interpretatio chartrum benigne facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam per eát /in'tóprprérdíshílyów kárterórm bánychí fáyshílyéndá ést át ríyíj méýjjas vályiyat kwájí már kéhrýjáy/. The interpretation of deeds is to be liberal, that the thing may rather have effect than fail.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam per eát /in'tóprprérdíshílyów fáyéndá ést át ríyíj méýjjas vályiyat kwájí már kéhrýjáy/. Such an interpretation is to be adopted that the thing may rather stand than fail.

Interpretation. The art or process of discovering and ascertaining the meaning of a statute, will, contract, or other written document. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas.

It is said to be either "legal," which rests on the same authority as the law itself, or "doctrinal," which rests upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either "authentic," when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or "usual," when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doctrinal interpretation may turn on the meaning of words and sentences, when it is called "grammatical," or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as "logical." When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious meaning, it is called "extensive;" when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the intention of the legislator, it is called "restrictive."

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction. See also Broad interpretation; Last antecedent rule.

Construction distinguished. In the strict usage of this term, "construction" is a term of wider scope than "interpretation," for, while the latter is concerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text. Interpretation and construction of written instruments are not the same. A rule of construction is one which either governs the effect of an ascertained intention, or points out what the court should do in the absence of express or implied intention, while a rule of interpretation is one which governs the ascertainment of the meaning of the maker of the instrument. In re Union Trust Co., 89 Misc. 69, 151 N.Y.S. 246, 249.

These two terms are however, commonly used interchangeably.

Close or strict interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called "literal."

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva, called, also, "liberal interpretation") adopts a more comprehensive significatio of the word.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio volver), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws is that given by the legislator himself, which is obligatory on the courts. Customary interpretation (also called "usual") is that which arises from successive or concurrent decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity; as distinguished from "authentic" interpretation, which is that given by the legislator himself.

Interpretation clause. A section of a statute which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

Interpretatio talis in ambiguus semper fienda est ut evitetur inconvenientes et absurdum (interpretatio soluta) et absurdum (interpretatio stricta); Last antecedent rule.

Between four walls.

Inter regalia (interpretatio predestinata) In English law, among the things belonging to the sovereign. Among these are rights of salmon fishing, mines of gold and silver, forests, forfeitures, casualties of superiority, etc., which are called "regalia minoria," and may be conveyed to a subject. The regalia majora include the several branches of the royal prerogative, which are inseparable from the person of the sovereign.

Interregnum (interpretatio predestinata). An interval between reigns. The period which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

Interrogation. In criminal law, the process of questions propounded by police to person arrested or suspected to seek solution of crime. Such person is entitled to be informed of his rights, including right to have counsel present, and the consequences of his answers. If the police fail or neglect to give these warnings, the questions and answers are not admissible in evidence at the trial or hearing of the arrested person. Miranda v. State of Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. As conceptualized in the Miranda decision of the United States Supreme Court, constitutionally protected interrogation must reflect a measure of compulsion above and beyond that inherent in custody itself. Rhode Island v. Innis, R.I., 446 U.S. 291, 100 S.Ct. 1682, 1688, 64 L.Ed.2d 297. See also Confession; Custodial interrogation; Exclusionary Rule; Investigatory interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Custodial interrogation. Questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. See also Miranda Rule.
Interrogatories. A set or series of written questions drawn up for the purpose of being propounded to a party, witness, or other person having information of interest in the case.

A pretrial discovery device consisting of written questions about the case submitted by one party to the other party or witness. The answers to the interrogatories are usually given under oath, i.e., the person answering the questions signs a sworn statement that the answers are true. Fed.R. Civ. P. 33.

The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. See Fed.R. Civ. P. 49.

In terrorem clause. A provision in a document such as a lease or will designed to frighten a beneficiary or lessee into doing or not doing something; e.g., clause in a will providing for revocation of a bequest or devise if the legatee or devisee contests the will. A condition "in terrorem" is a provision in a will which threatens beneficiaries with forfeiture of their legacies and bequests should they contest validity or dispositions of will. See in terrorem clause.

In terrorem populi. A technical phrase formerly necessary in indictments for riots.

Interruptio. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit prescriptionem semel obtentam. Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.

Interrogatoire. In French law, an act which contains the interrogatories made by the judge to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused.

Intersection. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 752, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. "Intersection" may also apply where street or highway runs into but without crossing another; e.g., a "T" intersection.

Inter se or inter sese. Lat. Among or between themselves; used to distinguish rights or duties between two or more parties from their rights or duties to others.

Interspousal. Between husband and wife.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Interstate. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially. Compare intrastate commerce.

Interstate agreements. See Interstate compact.

Interstate and foreign commerce. Commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term "United States" means all the States and the District of Columbia. 49 U.S.C.A. § 10102.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Interrusticos. Among the illiterate or unlearned.

Intersection. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 752, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. "Intersection" may also apply where street or highway runs into but without crossing another; e.g., a "T" intersection.

Inter se or inter sese. Lat. Among or between themselves; used to distinguish rights or duties between two or more parties from their rights or duties to others.

Interspousal. Between husband and wife.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Interstate. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially. Compare intrastate commerce.

Interstate agreements. See Interstate compact.

Interstate and foreign commerce. Commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term "United States" means all the States and the District of Columbia. 49 U.S.C.A. § 10102.

Interstate commerce. Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state and points in another state; commerce between two states, or between places lying in different states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L.Ed. 23; Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U.S. 557, 7 S.Ct. 4, 30 L.Ed. 244. It comprehends all the component parts of commercial intercourse between different states. Furst v. Brewster, 282 U.S. 493, 51 S.Ct. 295, 296, 75 L.Ed. 478. See Balancing of interests.

Interstate Commerce Act. The act of congress of February 4, 1887 (49 U.S.C.A. § 10101 et seq.), designed to regulate commerce between the states, and particularly the transportation of persons and property, by carriers, between interstate points.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission regulates interstate surface transportation, including trains, trucks, buses, water carriers, freight forwarders, transportation brokers, and a coal slurry pipeline. The regulatory laws vary depending on the type of transportation; however, they generally involve certification of carriers seeking to provide transportation for the public, rates, adequacy of service, purchases, and mergers. The Commission assures that the carriers it regulates will provide the public with rates and services that are fair and reasonable. 49 U.S.C.A. § 10301 et seq.

Interstate compact. A voluntary agreement between two or more states which is designed to meet common problems of the parties concerned. Compacts on major matters must receive the consent of the U.S. Congress as specified in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution. They usually relate to such things as conservation, boundary problems, education, port control, flood control, water rights, and penal matters.

Interstate extradition. The reclamation and surrender, according to due legal proceedings, of a person who, having committed a crime in one of the states of the Union, has fled into another state to evade justice or escape prosecution. Art. IV, § 2, U.S. Const.; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3181 et seq. See Extradition; Interstate rendition.

Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1701 et seq.), the purpose of which is to provide purchasers and lessees of undeveloped land with the information they need in order to make an informed decision with regard to the land being sold or leased. As indicated by its title, this is a "disclosure" act.

Interstate law. That branch of law which affords rules and principles for the determination of controversies between citizens of different states in respect to mutual rights or obligations, in so far as the same are affected by the diversity of their citizenship or by diversity in the laws or institutions of the several states.

Interstate rendition. Right of one state to demand from asylum state surrender of a fugitive from justice from the demanding state when the fugitive is found in the asylum state. Art. IV, § 2, U.S. Const. Application of Dugger, 17 Ariz.App. 297, 497 P.2d 413. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See Extradition; Interstate rendition.

Interval ownership. Type of ownership of second (i.e., vacation) home whereby the property is owned for only an interval (e.g., two weeks or a month) of the year. Each owner receives a deed covering his interval period. See also Timesharing.

Intervening act. Such act of third person in order to break chain of causation and obviate liability for original breach of duty must be a superseding cause and one which original wrongdoer was not bound to anticipate as the natural or ordinary result of his acts. Littell v. Argus Production Co., C.C.A.Kan., 78 F.2d 955, 957. See also Intervening cause; Superseding cause.

Intervening agency. To render an original wrong a remote cause, an "intervening agency" must be independent of such wrong, adequate to produce the injury, so interrupting the natural sequence of events as to produce a result different from what would have been produced, and one that could not have been reasonably expected from the original wrong. An independent "intervening agency" which will protect the original wrongdoer must be the efficient cause of the injury of which complaint is made, and not a negligent act or omission of such agency concurring with or succeeding the original negligence permitted by the original wrongdoer to continue and which in the natural course of events results in such injury. In short, the result prevented by the intervening agency must be the injury complained of, and not the requisite for that injury. Swanson v. Slagal, 212 Ind. 394, 8 N.E.2d 993, 1000. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening cause. In tort law, as will relieve of liability for an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. Kopriva v. Union Pacific R. Co., 592 P.2d 711, 713. An act of an independent agency which destroys the causal connection between the negligent act of the defendant and the wrongful injury; the independent act being the immediate cause, in which case damages are not recoverable because the original wrongful act is not the proximate cause. An "intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and injury, and itself becomes direct and immediate cause of injury. Phillabaum v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 315 Ill. 131, 135 N.E. 806, 808.

In criminal law, a cause which comes between an antecedent and a consequence; it may be either independent or dependent, but in either case it is sufficient to negate criminal responsibility. See also Intervening act; Intervening agency; Superseding cause.

Intervening damages. See Damages.

Intervening force. One which actively operates in producing harm to another after defendant's act or omission has been committed. Intervening force will not break a causal connection if that force was itself probable or foreseeable by the original wrongdoer. Kerns v. Engelke, 54 Ill.App.3d 323, 12 Ill.Dec. 270, 369 N.E.2d 1284, 1293. See Intervening cause.

Intervener. An intervenor is a person who voluntarily interposes in an action or other proceeding with the leave of the court. See Intervention.

Intervention. The procedure by which a third person, not originally a party to the suit, but claiming an interest in the subject matter, comes into the case, in order to protect his right or interpose his claim. The grounds and procedure are usually defined by various state statutes or Rules of Civil Procedure; e.g., Fed.R.Civ.P. 24; 28 U.S.C.A. § 2403. Intervention may exist either as a matter of right (Rule 24(a)) or at the discretion of the court (Rule 24(b)).

In English ecclesiastical law, the proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-mat-
Inter vivos /inter váyvovs/. Between the living; from one living person to another. Where property passes by conveyance, the transaction is said to be inter vivos, to distinguish it from a case of succession or devise. So an ordinary gift from one person to another is called a "gift inter vivos," to distinguish it from a gift made in contemplation of death (mortis causa) or a testamentary gift.

Inter vivos gift. Gift made when donor is living and provides that gift take effect while donor is living as contrasted with testamentary gift which is to take effect on death of donor (testator).

Inter vivos transfer. A transfer of property during the life of the owner. To be distinguished from testamentary transfers where the property passes at death. See e.g. inter vivos gift.

Inter vivos trust. Trust created during lifetime of settlor and to become effective in his lifetime as contrasted with a testamentary trust which takes effect at death of settlor or testator. See also Trust.

Intestabilis /intestábilis/. Lat. A witness incompetent to testify.

Intestable. One who has not testamentary capacity; e.g., an infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead.

Intestacy /intestássy/. The state or condition of dying without having made a valid will, or without having disposed by will of a part of his property.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutatur /in tésstamentóis pléniús tésstatórís intetiónem skrótwétam/. In wills we more especially seek out the intention of the testator. See also Trust.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testamentum interpretatur /in tésstamentóis pléniús vóluntátes tésstamentum intetprétaur/. In wills the intention of testators is more especially regarded.

In testamentis ratio tacta non debet considerari, sed verba solum spectari debent; adeo per divinationem mentis a verbiis recedere durum est /in tésstamentóis réyshyów tésstata nón débét konsidérréyay, séd várba sóowlam skprétkéray débont, ádíyow pór diwáneyshyównámn méntas éy várba ráslyáriy dyýurám ést/. In wills an unexpressed meaning ought not to be considered, but the words alone ought to be looked to; so hard is it to recede from the words by guessing at the intention.

Intestate. To die without a will. A person is said to die intestate when he dies without making a will, or dies without leaving anything to testify what his wishes were with respect to the disposal of his property after his death. Under such circumstances, state law prescribes who will receive the decedent’s property. The laws of intestate succession generally favor the surviving spouse, children, and grandchildren and then move to parents and grandparents and to brothers and sisters.

The word is also often used to signify the person himself. Thus, in speaking of the property of a person who died intestate, it is common to say “the intestate’s property,” i.e., the property of the person dying in an intestate condition. Compare Testate.

Intestate laws. State statutes which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their estates by will. See Descent.

Intestate succession. A succession is called “intestate” when the deceased has left no will or when his will has been revoked or annulled as irregular. In such case the property of the deceased will be disposed of under the laws of descent and distribution. See Intestate.

Intestato /intéstetow/. Lat. In the civil law, intestate; without a will.

Intestatus /intéstetús/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, an intestate; one who dies without a will.

Intestatus decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit; aut non jure fecit; aut id quod fecerat ruptum irirítmv facítm est; aut nemo ex eo hæres exstítit /intéstetús dásýldast kwáy ót omnáynów tésstamétam nón fíysat, ót nón júriy fíysat, ót id kwód fíysarát raptam irátamviy fákrtam est, ót nýmov éks iyow híriy éksstatet/. A person dies intestate who either has made no testament at all or has made one not legally valid; or if the testament he has made be revoked, or made useless; or if no heir has come forward.

In testimonium /in téstamówn(i)yam/. Lat. In witness; in evidence whereof.

In the course of employment. The phrase “in the course of” employment, as used in workers’ compensation acts, relates to time, place and circumstances under which accident occurred, and means injury happened while worker was at work in his or her employer’s service. Peter Kiewitt Sons’ Co. v. Industrial Commission, 88 Ariz. 164, 354 P.2d 28, 30. See also Arising out of and in the course of own employment; Course of employment.

Intimacy /intómsiý/. As generally applied to persons, it is understood to mean a proper, friendly relation of the parties, but it is frequently used to convey the idea of an improper relation.

Intimate. Close in friendship or acquaintance, familiar, near, confidential. Atkins Corporation v. Tourny, 6 Ariz. 88, 354 P.2d 480, 484. To communicate indirectly; to hint or suggest.

Intimation. In the civil law, a notification to a party that some step in a legal proceeding is asked or will be taken. Particularly, a notice given by the party taking an appeal, to the other party, that the court above will hear the appeal.

Intimidation. Unlawful coercion; extortion; duress; putting in fear.
INTIMIDATION

To take, or attempt to take, "by intimidation" means willfully to take, or attempt to take, by putting in fear of bodily harm. Such fear must arise from the willful conduct of the accused, rather than from some mere temperamental timidity of the victim; however, the fear of the victim need not be so great as to result in terror, panic, or hysteria.

Intitle. An old form of "entitle."

Into. A preposition signifying to the inside of; within. It expresses entrance, or a passage from the outside of a thing to its interior, and follows verbs expressing motion. It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "at," "inside of," and "to," and has been distinguished from the words "from" and "through."

Intol and uttol /in tölāl ænd ætal/. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out.

In totidem verbis /inz towdeydam värbs/. In so many words; in precisely the same words; word for word.

In toto /inz tòtwò/. In the whole; wholly; completely; as the award is void in toto.

In toto et pars contineitur /inz tòtwò et párz kóntänjytor/. In the whole the part also is contained.

Intoxicating liquor. Any liquor used as a beverage, and which, when so used in sufficient quantities, ordinarily or commonly produces entire or partial intoxication. Any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Frisvold v. Leahy, 15 Cal.App.2d 752, 60 P.2d 151, 153. See also Alcoholic liquors.

Intoxication. Term comprehends situation where, by reason of taking intoxicants, an individual does not have the normal use of his physical or mental faculties, thus rendering him incapable of acting in the manner in which an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would act under like conditions. Hendy v. Geary, 105 R.I. 419, 252 A.2d 435, 441.

A disturbance of mental or physical capacities resulting from the introduction of substances into the body. Model Penal Code, § 2.08.

The fact that a person charged with a crime was in an intoxicated condition at the time the alleged crime was committed is a defense only if such condition was voluntarily produced and rendered such person substantially incapable of knowing or understanding the wrongfulness of his conduct and of conforming his conduct to the requirements of law. An act committed while in a state of voluntary intoxication is not less criminal by reason thereof, but when a particular intent or other state of mind is a necessary element to constitute a particular crime, the fact of intoxication may be taken into consideration in determining such intent or state of mind.

Under most state statutes dealing with driving while intoxicated, "intoxication" includes such by alcohol or by drug or by both. See Driving while intoxicated.

Confirmed habits of intoxication caused by voluntary and excessive use of liquor is a ground for divorce under many state divorce statutes.

See also Habitual drunkenness or intoxication; Intemperance.

Public intoxication. Public intoxication is being on a highway or street or in a public place or public building while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, narcotics or other drug to the degree that one may endanger himself or other persons or property, or annoy persons in his vicinity.

Voluntary intoxication. The voluntary introduction of any substances into the body which the defendant knows or should know are likely to have intoxicating effects. The Model Penal Code (§ 2.08) uses the term "self-induced intoxication" to refer to this idea. Evidence of voluntary or self-induced intoxication can be admitted in some circumstances but not others.

Intoxilyzer. Breath analysis. A device used to measure the concentration of alcohol in the blood of motorists suspected of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. California v. Trombetta, 467 U.S. 479, 481, 104 S.Ct. 2528, 2530, 81 L.Ed.2d 413. See Breathalyzer test; Intoximeter.

Intoximeter. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. Also commonly called breathalyzer test. See Breathalyzer test.

Intra /inträ/. Lat. In; near; within. "Infra" or "inter" has taken the place of "intra" in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

Intra anni spatium /inträ ånay spéyshiyam/. Within the space of a year.

In traditionibus scriptorum, non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum est, inspiciatur /in tradiishiyownabas skripṭōrām, nōn kwōd diktam ēst, sēd kwōd ēstam ēst, anspliṣṭōr/. In the delivery of writings, not what is said, but what is done, is looked to.

Intra fidem /inträ fäydam/. Within belief; credible.

In trajectu /in trajĕkt(i)yam/. In the passage over; on the voyage over.

Intraliminal /intralimina/. In mining law, the term "intraliminal rights" denotes the right to mine, take, and possess all such bodies or deposits of ore as lie within the four planes formed by the vertical extension downward of the boundary lines of the claim; as distinguished from "extraliminal," or more commonly "extra-lateral," rights.

Intra luctus tempus /inträ luktas tēmpas/. Within the time of mourning.
In transitu /in tráenz(t)yúw/. In transit; on the way or passage; while passing from one person or place to another. In the course of transportation.

Intra parietes /intra parayatiyz/. Between walls; existing within the walls. Existing within. The Commerce within a state, as Intrastate commerce.

Intra quatuor maria /intra kwotuwar mseriya/. Within the four seas.

Intra vires /intra vayriyz/. An act is said to be intra vires ("within the power") of a person or corporation when it is within the scope of his or its powers or authority. It is the opposite of ultra vires (q.v.).

Intrinsic. Internal; inherent. Pertaining to the essential nature of a thing.

Intrinsic evidence. Evidence brought out by the examination of the very witness testifying. Compare Circumstantial evidence; Extrinsic evidence.

Intrusion. Act of wrongfully entering upon or taking possession of property of another. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

At common law, a species of injury by ouster or amotion of possession from the freehold, being an entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or reversion. Boylan v. Deinzer, 45 N.J.Eq. 485, 18 A. 119, 121.

Intrust. To confer a trust upon; to deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. See also Bailment; Fiduciary; Trust.

Inutitus /inytúwatas/. Lat. A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuitu (q.v.), with a different view.

Inundation. To flood or swamp. The overflow of waters by coming out of their natural bed or confines. See also Backwater; Flood; Water; Water course.

Inure /inyúr/. To take effect; to result. In property law, to come to the benefit of a person or to fix his interest therein.

Inurement /inyúrmant/. Useful, beneficial; serving to the use or benefit of a person or thing. Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U.S. 578, 25 L.Ed. 618.

Inutitis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis /inyúwtalas léybar ét séanyi fráktyúw non ést sëktas liyjas/. Useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, chargeable, and unprofitable.

In utroque jure /in ystrówkwiy júriy/. In both laws; i.e., the civil and canon law.

Invadiare /invédiyériy/. To pledge or mortgage lands.

Invadiatio /invédiyésh(i)yów/. A pledge or mortgage.

Invadiatus /invédiyéytas/. One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him.
Invention. A double mental act. Hoffner v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901. The finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates. Mere adaptation of known process to clearly analogous use is not invention. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, 952, 953.

Inventive skill has been defined as that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what had not before existed, or bringing to light what lay hidden from vision; it differs from a suggestion of that common experience which arose spontaneously and by a necessity of human reasoning in the minds of those who had become acquainted with the circumstances with which they had to deal. Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901. Invention, in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it.

For Examination of invention, see Examination. See also Patent; Reduced to practice.

Inventiones /invënišhiyówniyz/. See Inventio.

Inventor. One who invents or has invented. One who finds out or contrives some new thing; one who devises some new art, manufacture, mechanical appliance, or process; one who invents a patentable contrivance. See invention.

Inventory. A detailed list of articles of property; a list or schedule of property and other assets, containing a designation or description of each specific article; quantity of goods or materials on hand or in stock; an itemized list of the various items or articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their estimated or actual values. In law, the term is often applied to such a list made by an executor, administrator, or trustee in bankruptcy.

In accounting, refers to segment of financial statement reflecting value of businesses’ raw materials, work in process, and finished goods. The two primary types of inventory accounting methods are First-in, first-out, and Last-in, first-out. See FIFO and LIFO.

Goods held for sale or lease or furnished under contracts of service; also, raw materials, work in process or materials used or consumed in a business. U.C.C. § 9-109(4). Also, written schedule of such goods.

Inventory search. An inventory search is not an independent legal concept but rather an incidental administrative step following arrest and preceding incarcera-

In ventre sa mere /in věntre sa mér/. L. Fr. In his mother's womb; spoken of an unborn child.

Invenus /invéntas/. Lat. Found. Thesaurus inventus, treasure-trove. Non est inventus, [he] is not found.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accessit /in věra kwaontatěytam fádiějússor téneaturn, nísí pro certa kwaontáteyts aknek/. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity, unless he agree for a certain quantity.

In verbis, non verba, sed res et ratio, quærenda est /in věrbis nôn věrbá, sèd rěs èt rěšiš(ly)ow, kwærěnda èst/. In the construction of words, not the mere words, but the thing and the meaning, are to be inquired after.

Inveritare /invehrìař/. To make proof of a thing.

Inverse condemnation. An action brought by a property owner seeking just compensation for land taken for a public use, against a government or private entity having the power of eminent domain. It is a remedy peculiar to the property owner and is exercisable by him where it appears that the taker of the property does not intend to bring eminent domain proceedings. Ossman v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 32 Colo.App. 230, 511 P.2d 517, 519. Such an action might result, for example, where use and value of property adjacent to new airport or freeway is materially diminished.

Inverse order of alienation doctrine. Under this doctrine, mortgage or other lienor, where land subject to lien has been aliened in separate parcels successively, shall satisfy his lien out of land remaining in grantor or original owner if possible, and, if that be insufficient, he shall resort to parcels aliened in inverse order of their alienation. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.N. C., 74 F.2d 881, 884.

Invest. See Investment.

Investigate. To follow up step by step by patient inquiry or observation. To trace or track; to search into; to examine and inquire into with care and accuracy; to find out by careful inquisition; examination; the taking of evidence; a legal inquiry. See also Discovery; Inspection.

Investigatory interrogation. An "investigatory interrogation" outside scope of Miranda Rule is questioning of persons by law enforcement officers in a routine manner in an investigation which has not reached an accusatory stage and where such persons are not in legal custody or deprived of their freedom of action in any significant way. State v. Price, 233 Kan. 706, 664 P.2d 869, 874. See also Interrogation.

Investigatory powers. Authority conferred on governmental agencies to inspect and compel disclosure of facts germane to the investigation. See also Inquest; Inspection laws; Search warrant; Subpoena.

Investigatory stop. Such stop, which is limited to brief, nonintrusive detention during a frisk for weapons or preliminary questioning, is considered a "seizure" sufficient to invoke Fourth Amendment safeguards, but because of its less intrusive character requires only that the stopping officer have specific and articulable facts sufficient to give rise to reasonable suspicion that a person has committed or is committing a crime. U.S. v. Black, C.A.I11., 675 F.2d 129, 133. See also Stop and frisk.

Investitative fact /inveštītav fěkt/. The fact by means of which a right comes into existence; e.g., a grant of a monopoly; the death of one's ancestor.

Investiture /inveštī träy/. A ceremony which acco- mpanied the grant of lands in the feudal ages, and consisted in the open and notorious delivery of possession in the presence of the other vassals, which perpetuated among them the aura of their new acquisition at the time when the art of writing was very little known; and thus the evidence of the property was reposed in the memory of the neighborhood, who, in case of disputed title, were afterwards called upon to decide upon it.

In Ecclesiastical law, investiture is one of the formalities by which the election of a bishop is confirmed by the archbishop.

Investment. An expenditure to acquire property or other assets in order to produce revenue; the asset so acquired. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. Securities & Exchange Commission v. Wickham, D.C.Minn., 12 F.Supp. 245, 247. To purchase securities of a more or less permanent nature, or to place money or property in business ventures or real estate, or otherwise lay it out, so that it may produce revenue or gain (or both) in the future. See also Investment contract.

To clothe one with the possession of a fief or benefic. See Investiture.

For Capital investment, see Capital. See also Legal investments; Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Investment advisor. Any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. Uniform Securities Act, § 401(f).

Investment banker. A financial institution that underwrites and sells new securities. In general, investment bankers assist firms in obtaining new financing. An underwriter, the middleman or broker between the corporation issuing new securities and the public. The usual practice is for one or more investment bankers to buy outright from a corporation a new issue of stocks or bonds. The group forms a syndicate to sell the securities to individuals and institutions. Investment bankers also distribute very large blocks of stocks or bonds—perhaps held by an estate. Thereafter the market in the security may be over-the-counter or on a stock exchange. See also Underwriter.

Investment banking. Underwriting and selling primarily new issues of stocks and bonds to investors. See Investment banker.

Investment bill. Type of bill of exchange purchased at a discount and intended to be held to maturity in the form of an investment.

Investment company. Any issuer which: (1) is or holds itself out as being engaged primarily, or proposes to engage primarily, in the business of investing, reinvesting, or trading in securities; (2) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or has been engaged in such business and has any such certificates outstanding; or (3) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading in securities, and owns or proposes to acquire investment securities having a value exceeding 40 percentum of the value of such issuer’s total assets (exclusive of Government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis. Investment Company Act, § 3.

A company or trust which uses its capital to invest in other companies. The most common kind of investment company is the mutual fund. An investment company differs from a holding company in that the latter seeks control of the ventures in which it invests while an investment company seeks the investment for its own sake and normally diversifies its investments. There are two principal types: the closed-end and the open-end, or mutual fund. Shares in closed-end investment companies are readily transferable in the open market and are bought and sold like other shares. Capitalization of these companies remains the same unless action is taken to change. Open-end funds sell their own new shares to investors, stand ready to buy back their old shares, and are not listed. Open-end funds are so called because their capitalization is not fixed; they issue more shares as demanded. See also Mutual fund.

Investment Company Act. Federal statute passed in 1940 which regulates investment companies. 15 U.S.C.A. § 80a–1 et seq. See Investment company.

Investment contract. A contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. S. E. C. v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103, 90 L.Ed. 1244, 1249. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. State by Spannaus v. Coin Wholesalers, Inc., Minn., 250 N.W.2d 583.

To fall within scope of the federal securities acts an “investment contract” must involve three elements: (1) an investment of money, (2) in a common enterprise, and (3) an expectation of profits solely from the efforts of others. Hector v. Wiens, C.A.Mont., 533 F.2d 429, 432.

Investment credit. See Investment tax credit.

Investment indebtedness. Debt incurred to carry or acquire investments by the taxpayer in assets that will produce portfolio income. Limitations are placed upon interest deductions that are incurred with respect to such debt (i.e., generally to the corresponding amount of investment income).

Investment property. Generally, any property purchased for the primary purpose of profit. The profit may be from income or from resale.

Investment security. Under U.C.C., an instrument issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer. § 8–102(1)(a). See also Investment contract; Security.

Investment tax credit. Federal legislation designed to stimulate investment by business in capital goods and equipment by allowing a percentage of the purchase price as a credit against individual and corporate taxes due and not merely as a deduction from taxable income. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 generally repealed this credit retroactively for most property placed in service after January 1, 1986. See also Recapture of investment tax credit.

Investment trust. A company which sells its own stock and invests the money in stocks, real estate, and other investments. See also Investment company; Mutual fund; Real estate investment trust.

Invidious discrimination. Term “invidious” in context of claim that difference in treatment amounts to “invidious” discrimination in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, means arbitrary, irrational and not reasonably related to a legitimate purpose. Eaton v. State, Del., 363 A.2d 440, 441.

In vinculis /in víkn(y)lás/. In chains; in actual custody. Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him.

Inviolability /ínviályábilidály/. The attribute of being secured against violation. Safe from trespass or assault.

Inviolate. Intact; not violated; free from substantial impairment. Com. v. Almeida, 362 Pa. 596, 68 A.2d 595.

In viridi observancia /in víríád obsváranší(y)á/. Present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.
In the law of negligence, and with reference to trespasses on realty, invitation is the act of one who solicits or incites others to enter upon, remain in, or make use of, his property or structures thereon, or who so arranges the property or the means of access to it or of transit over it as to induce the reasonable belief that he expects and intends that others shall come upon it or pass over it. Thus the proprietor of a store, theatre or amusement park “invites” the public to come upon his premises for such purposes as are connected with its intended use.

The differences in duties of care owed as between and among licensees, business guests and social guests have been eliminated in many jurisdictions so that today reasonable care is owed to all lawful visitors and this phrase includes all but trespassers. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

An invitation may be express, when the owner or occupier of the land by words invites another to come upon it or make use of it or of something thereon; or it may be implied when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe that the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared and allowed to be used.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine; Invitee.

Invitation to bid. Type of advertisement used by one who desires bids to be submitted for a particular job; it usually contains sufficient specifications to permit an intelligent bid.

Invited error. Doctrine of “invited error” provides that when the court acquiesces in course of conduct urged by defendant, defendant is estopped on appeal from raising as error that conduct or its result. People v. Crespin, Colo.App., 682 P.2d 58, 59. See also Error.

Invitee. A person is an “invitee” on land of another if (1) he enters by invitation, express or implied, (2) his entry is connected with the owner's business or with an activity the owner conducts or permits to be conducted on his land and (3) there is mutuality of benefit or benefit to the owner. Madrazo v. Michaels, 1 Ill.App.2d 583, 274 N.E.2d 635, 638. Person who is on property of another for economic benefit of owner or for the economic benefit of both parties. Joseph v. Calvary Baptist Church, Ind.App. 4 Dist., 600 N.E.2d 250, 253.

The leading English case of Indermaur v. Dames laid down the rule that as to those who enter premises upon business which concerns the occupier, and upon his invitation express or implied, the latter is under an affirmative duty to protect them, not only against dangers of which he knows, but also against those which with reasonable care he might discover. The case has been accepted in all common law jurisdictions, and the invitee, or as he is sometimes called the business visitor, is placed upon a higher footing than a licensee. The typical example, of course, is the customer in a store. There is however a conflict of decisions as to whether certain visitors are to be included in the definition of invitee. The minority view is that there must be some economic benefit to the occupier before his duty to the visitor attaches. The majority view holds however that the basis of liability is not any economic benefit to the occupier, but a representation to be implied when he encourages others to enter to further a purpose of his own, that reasonable care has been exercised to make the place safe for those who come for that purpose; e.g. persons attending free public lectures, persons using municipal parks, playgrounds, libraries and the like. The element of “invitation” however must exist.

See also Guest; Licensee; Public invitee.

Invito /inváytow/. Lat. Being unwilling. Against or without the assent or consent.

Invito beneficium non datur /inváytow ben-fish(i)y3m non déytar/. A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it; that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur /in vówssbáss vâyéndam non éy kwyó séd éd kwíd semyétar/. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced.

Invoice. A written account, or itemized statement of merchandise shipped or sent to a purchaser, consignee, factor, etc., with the quantity, value or prices and charges annexed, and may be as appropriate to a consignment or a memorandum shipment as it is to a sale. Joseph B. Cooper & Son, Inc. v. Finlay Depts., Inc., 11 Misc.2d 382, 174 N.Y.S.2d 265, 269. Document showing details of a sale or purchase transaction. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. A writing made on behalf of an importer, specifying the merchandise imported, and its true cost or value. See also Consular invoice.

Invoice book. A book in which invoices are copied.

Involuntary. Without will or power of choice; opposed to volition or desire. An involuntary act is that which is performed under duress, force, or coercion. See Coercion; Duress.

As to involuntary Dismissal; Indebtedness; Nonsuit; Trust, see those titles. For involuntary bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy proceedings.

Involuntary alienation. A loss of or parting with property by attachment, levy, sale for taxes or other debts. See also Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary confession. Confession is “involuntary” if it is not the product of an essentially free and unrestrained choice of its maker or where maker's will is overborne at the time of the confession. People v. Pickerie, 32 Ill.App.3d 822, 336 N.E.2d 778, 780. Term refers to confessions that are extracted by any threats of violence, or obtained by direct or implied promises, or by exertion of improper influence. Phillips v. State, Okl. Cr., 330 P.2d 209, 214.
Involuntary manslaughter. The condition of one who is compelled by force, coercion, or imprisonment, and against his will, to labor for another, whether he is paid or not. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 5 S.Ct. 935, 29 L.Ed. 89; In re Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 69, 21 L.Ed. 394; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U.S. 275, 17 S.Ct. 326, 41 L.Ed. 715. Slavery, peonage, or compulsory labor for debts; all of which are prohibited by the 13th Amendment, U.S.Const.

Involuntary servitude. See Involuntary servitude.

Involuntary trust. An implied trust which arises because the law imposes trust-like consequences on certain transactions where, for example, an agent breaches his fiduciary duty and buys property in his own name which rightfully should have been purchased for the benefit of his principal (constructive trust) or A supplies the funds for purchase of property by B with the understanding that A will own it but title will be taken in the name of B (resulting trust).

In witness whereof /in witnes (h)wérov/. The initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands", etc. A translation of the Latin phrase "in cujus rei testimonium".

IOLTA. Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts. In some states, lawyers turn over such interest to public service institutions (e.g., Mass.).

Iota. The minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word "jot" is derived therefrom.

IOU. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters ("I owe you"), a sum of money and the debtor's signature, is termed an "IOU".

Ipsæ leges cupiunt ut jure regantur /ipsiy liyjyj kywpiyant at juriy rag&ntar/. The laws themselves require that they should be governed by right.

Ipsæ dixit /ipsiy diksat/. He himself said it; a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

Ipsissimis verbis /ipsisimas várbas/. In the identical words; opposed to "substantially".

Ipso facto /ipsow fékto/. By the fact itself; by the mere fact. By the mere effect of an act or a fact.

Ipso jure /ipsow júriy/. By the law itself; by the mere operation of law.

IRA. Individual Retirement Account.

Ira furor brevis est /árvo fyúrar bryvyas ést/. Anger is a short insanity.

Ira motus /árvo mówtas/. Lat. Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of non assault demense.

IRAN. Individual Retirement Annuity.
INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT BOND.
IRE AD LARGUM /āiry̆ ad lārgam/. Lat. To go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty.
IRON-SAFE CLAUSE. A clause in policies of fire insurance, requiring the insured to preserve his books and inventory in an iron or fireproof safe, or in some secure place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement.
IRRATIONAL. Unreasonable, foolish, illogical, absurd; a person may be irrational in such sense, and still not be insane in the legal sense.
IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCES. No-fault ground for dissolution of marriage under many state divorce statutes. See also irretrievable breakdown of marriage.
IRRECUASABLE /irskûy̆wâzabal/. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. They are distinguished from recusables which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person on whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irreccusable obligation is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusable obligation is based upon some act of a person bound, which is a condition precedent to the genesis of the obligation. These terms were first suggested by Prof. Wigmore in 8 Harv.Law Rev. 200.
IRRREGULAR. Not regular; not according to established law, method, or usage; not conformable to nature, to rules of moral rectitude, or to established principles; not normal, disorderly. Sultan Turkish Bath, Inc. v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Los Angeles, 169 C.A.2d 188, 337 P.2d 203, 210. As to irregular deposit; indorsement; process; and succession, see those titles.
IRRREGULARITY. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices. The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; consisting either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner. The technical term for every defect in mechanics of proceedings, or the mode of conducting an action or defense, as distinguishable from defects in pleadings (see e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 32(d), irregularities in taking of depositions). Term is not synonymous with "illegality."

In Canon law, any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.
IRRREGULAR JUDGMENT. One rendered contrary to the method of procedure and practice allowed by the law in some material respect. Davidson Chevrolet, Inc. v. City and County of Denver, 138 Colo. 171, 330 P.2d 1116, 1118, 1119.
IRRELEVANCY. The absence of the quality of relevancy, as in evidence or pleadings. The quality or state of being inapplicable or impertinent to a fact or argument. Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. Such irrelevancy in pleadings may be stricken on motion of party. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f). See also Immaterial; irrelevant allegation; irrelevant evidence.

An allegation is irrelevant, where the issue made by its denial has no effect upon the cause of action or no connection with the allegation. In this connection, "redundant" is almost a synonym for "irrelevant." Irrelevant matters may be stricken from pleadings on motion of party. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(f).
IRRELEVANT ANSWER. See Answer.
IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE. Not relevant; immaterial; not relating or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue or fact to be proved. Evidence is irrelevant where it has no tendency to prove or disprove any issue of fact involved. Irrelevant evidence is commonly objected to and disallowed at trial. Fed.Evid.R. 402. See also Immaterial; Impertinence; irrelevancy.
IRREPARABLE DAMAGES. See Damages.
IRREPARABLE HARM. See Injury (Irreparable injury).
IRREPARABLE INJURY. See Damages; Injunction; Injury (Irreparable injury).
IRREPLEVABLE /irrplevazabal/. That cannot be repleved or delivered on sureties. Spelled also, "irreplevisable" /irrplevazabal/.
IRRESISTIBLE FORCE. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army. See also Act of God.
IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE. As used as insanity defense, an "irresistible impulse" means an impulse to commit an unlawful or criminal act which cannot be resisted or overcome because mental disease has destroyed the freedom of will, the power of self-control, and the choice of actions. Snider v. Smyth, D.C.Va., 187 F.Supp. 299, 302. The "irresistible impulse" test for insanity is a test which is broader than the M'Naghten test. Under the "irresistible impulse" test a person may avoid criminal responsibility even though he is capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, and is fully aware of the nature and quality of his acts, provided that he establishes that he was unable to refrain from acting. Com. v. Walzack, 468 Pa. 210, 360 A.2d 914, 919. See also Insanity; M'Naghten Rule.

Irretrievable breakdown of marriage. As a no-fault ground for divorce means a condition in which either or both spouses are unable or unwilling to cohabit as husband and wife and for which there are no prospects for reconciliation. Harwell v. Harwell, 233 Ga. 89, 209 S.E.2d 625. In some jurisdictions, it is the sole ground for so-called no-fault divorce. See also irreconcilable differences.

Irrevocable letter of credit. A confirmed irrevocable letter of credit, irrevocable letter, or a confirmed credit is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledgment or acceptance other than is therein stated. See also Letter of credit.

Irrevocable offer. An offer which cannot be revoked or recalled by the offeror without liability. U.C.C. 2-205. See Firm Offer.

Irrevocable trust. See Trust.

Irrigation company. A private corporation, authorized and regulated by statute in several states, having for its object to acquire exclusive rights to the water of certain streams or other sources of supply, and to convey it by means of ditches or canals through a region where it can be beneficially used for agricultural purposes, and either dividing the water among stockholders, or making contracts with consumers, or furnishing a supply to all who apply at fixed rates.

Irrigation district. A public and quasi-municipal corporation authorized by law in several states, comprising a defined region or area of land which is susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source and by the same system of works. These districts are created by proceedings in the nature of an election under the supervision of a court, and are authorized to purchase or condemn the lands and waters necessary for the system of irrigation proposed and to construct necessary canals and other works, and the water is apportioned ratably among the landowners of the district.

Irogare /ir-agari/ Lat. In the civil law, to impose or set upon, as a fine. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

Irrotulatio /er-o-tu-layosh(ey)ow/. Lat. An enrolling; a record.

I.R.S. Internal Revenue Service.

Is. This word, although normally referring to the present, often has a future meaning, but is not synonymous with "shall have been." It may have, however, a past signification, as in the sense of "has been."
Issue, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first inception; as the issue of an order or a writ.

See also Date of issue.

Pleading and Practice

A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the allegations and pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. A fact put in controversy by the pleadings; such may either be issues of law or fact. An "issue" is a disputed point or question to which parties to action have narrowed their several allegations and upon which they are desirous of obtaining either decision of court on question of law or of court or jury on question of fact. Muller v. Muller, 235 Cal.App.2d 341, 45 Cal.Rptr. 182, 184.

Real or feigned. A real or actual issue is one formed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual controversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury upon some question of fact collaterally involved in the cause. Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious.

Ultimate issue. Signifies either such an issue as within itself is sufficient and final for the disposition of the entire case or one which in connection with other issues will serve such end. First State Bank of Seminole v. Dillard, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 407, 410.

See also Failure of issue; Feigned issue; Genuine issue; Issue of fact; Issue of law; Issue preclusion; Lawful issue; Legal issue; Ultimate issue.

Commercial Transactions

Issue. The first delivery of an instrument to a holder or remitter. U.C.C. § 3-102(1)(a). The term also applies to documents and refers to the first delivery of a document by the person who created it. See U.C.C. § 7-102(1)(g) (definition of "issuer"). Also describes the act of the issuer of a letter of credit in sending the credit for the purpose of establishing it.

Descendant’s Estates.

All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. Offspring; progeny; descent; lineage; lineal descendants. In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree, and it is so construed generally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is, of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the language used by him; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an intention clearly appears.

The term "issue" and "descendants" have been held to be co-extensive and interchangeable. In re Radt’s Will, 6 Misc.2d 716, 167 N.Y.S.2d 817, 818.

"Issue" within its normal usage in wills connotes at least all progeny or blood descendants. In re Wolf’s Estate, 98 N.J.Super. 89, 236 A.2d 166, 170.

The word “issue” in a will is generally a word of limitation, and when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to “heirs of the body”. But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words “heirs of the body”, and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a work of purchase.

Formerly, this term included only legitimate issue. Large v. National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio Prob., 170 N.E.2d 309, 312; contra Will of Hoffman, 53 A.D.2d 55, 385 N.Y.S.2d 49. This limitation, however, is changing as a result of Supreme Court cases which prohibit unjustified discrimination against children born out of wedlock. Reed v. Campbell, 476 U.S. 852, 106 S.Ct. 2234, 90 L.Ed.2d 858; Trimble v. Gordon, 430 U.S. 762, 97 S.Ct. 1459, 52 L.Ed.2d 31. In New York, for example, an illegitimate child shares in the intestate estate of the father. N.Y.EPTL 4–1.2(a)(2)(c). In Massachusetts, the word “issue” in a trust was formerly construed to mean legitimate children. In trusts executed after April 16, 1987, however, the word “issue” is to be construed to include all biological descendants unless the donor clearly expresses a contrary intent. Powers v. Wilkinson, 399 Mass. 650, 506 N.E.2d 842.

Many state intestacy statutes provide that an adopted child is “issue” of his or her adopted parents.

Securities

Any of a corporation’s or government’s securities offered for sale at a certain time to the public, or the act or process of distributing (i.e. offering) such for sale by a corporation or government entity. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted or for additional working capital.

New issue. A stock or bond sold by a corporation for the first time. Proceeds may be used to retire outstanding securities of the company, for new plant or equipment, or for additional working capital.

Issue of fact. An issue of fact arises when a fact is maintained by one party and is controverted by the other in the pleadings. General Elec. Co. v. Employment Relations Bd., 3 Wis.2d 227, 88 N.W.2d 691, 701. An issue which arises upon a denial in the answer of a material allegation of the complaint or in the reply of a material allegation in the answer.
Issue of law. An issue of law arises where evidence is undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom. Chaison v. Stark, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 500, 503. An issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the complaint, cross-complaint, or answer, or to some part thereof; or, upon a motion to strike. Calif.C.C.P. § 589.

In making motion for summary judgment, party must show that only issues of law exist for court to consider; i.e., must show that there is no genuine issue of material facts. Fed.R.Civil P. 56.

In pleading, an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. The term "issue" may be so used as to include one of law raised by demurrer to the complaint, as well as one raised by answer.

Issue preclusion. Term means that when a particular issue has already been litigated, further litigation of same issue is barred. Hawkeye Sec. Ins. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., Iowa, 199 N.W.2d 373, 379. As it relates to civil actions, concept of "issue preclusion" is in substance that any fact, question or matter in issue and directly adjudicated or necessarily involved in determination of action before court of competent jurisdiction in which judgment or decree is rendered on merits, is conclusively settled by judgment therein and cannot be relitigated in any future action between parties or privies, either in same court or court of concurrent jurisdiction, while judgment remains unreversed or unvacated by proper authority, regardless of whether claim or cause of action, purpose or subject matter of two suits is same. Palma v. Powers, D.C.II., 295 F.Supp. 924, 933. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Res (Res judicata).

Issuer. Corporation, governmental bodies, and other entities that issue and distribute securities. With respect to obligations on or defenses to investment securities "issuer" includes a person who: (a) places or authorizes the placing of his name on a security (otherwise than as authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent or the like) to evidence that it represents a share, participation or other interest in his property or in an enterprise or to evidence his duty to perform an obligation evidenced by the security; or (b) directly or indirectly creates fractional interests in his rights or property which fractional interests are evidenced by securities; or (c) becomes responsible for or in place of any other person described as an issuer in this section. U.C.C. § 8-201(1). Everyone person who issues or proposes to issue any securities; generally the legal entity owning the securities and the possessor of goods to deliver. Issuer includes any person for whom an agent or employee purports to act in issuing a document if the agent or employee has real or apparent authority to issue documents, notwithstanding that the issuer received no goods or that the goods were misdescribed or that in any other respect the agent or employee violated his instructions. U.C.C. § 7-102(g).

Issue roll. In English practice, a roll upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. It was not, however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipitur on the roll. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834.

Issues and profits. As applied to real estate, comprehend every available return therefrom, whether it arise above or below the surface. "Issues" are goods and profits of the land. Costanzo v. Harris, 71 Wash.2d 254, 427 P.2d 963, 965.

Ita est /ayta èst/. Lat. So it is; so it stands. In modern civil law, this phrase is a form of attestation added to exemplifications from a notary's register when the same are made by the successor in office of the notary who made the original entries.

Ita lex scripta est /ayta léks skriptam èst/. Lat. So the law is written. The law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl.Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl.Comm. 32.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio /ayta sémpor fáyt reléshiy(ô)ôw ût váliyát dispažish(ô)ôw/. Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.

Ita te Deus adjuvet /ayta tî dîyâs âjâvot/. Lat. So help you God. The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia, So help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints.

Ita utere tuo ut alienum non lazad /ayta yûtərə ti(y)u wôw ût ælîyîyânəm nôn liyôd(ê)/. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written "Sic utere tuo", etc. (q.v.).

Item /aytam/. Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. This word was formerly used to mark the beginning of a new paragraph or division after the first, whence is derived the common application of it to denote a separate or distinct particular of an account or bill. One of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; something less than a whole; a number, quantity, mass, or the like, regarded as going to make up, with others or another, a larger number, quantity, mass, etc., whether actually separate or not; a piece, fragment, fraction, member or constituent. A separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total. An "item" in an appropriation is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Common-

For commercial paper purposes, a negotiable or non-negotiable writing for the payment of money that is collected through the collection process governed by U.C.C. Article 4. U.C.C. § 4-104(1)(g).

Itemize. To set down by items. To state each item or article separately. Used commonly with reference to tax accounting.

Itemized deductions. Certain personal expenditures allowed by the Internal Revenue Code as deductions from adjusted gross income if an individual taxpayer chooses not to use the standard deduction and total itemized deductions exceed the standard deduction. Examples include certain medical expenses, interest on home mortgages, state income taxes, and charitable contributions.

Iter /ˈaɪtər/. Lat. In the civil law, a way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (præedium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e.g., via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc.

In old English law, a journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission.

In maritime law, a way or route. The route or direction of a voyage; the route or way that is taken to make the voyage assured. Distinguished from the voyage itself.

Iteratio /ɪtəˈrɪʃən/. Lat. Repetition. In the Roman law, a bonitary owner might liberate a slave, and the quiritary owner's repetition (iteratio) of the process effected a complete manumission.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum /ˈaɪtər ɛst jəs ˌiːndi, əmbəˈlændi həˈmɪnəs, nɒn ˈjyəntəm ægəndi vəl ˈvɛhɪkyləm/. A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Itinera /ˌaɪtəˈnerə/. Eyres, or circuits.

Itinerant. Wandering or traveling from place to place; formerly applied to justices who made circuits. Also applied in various statutory and municipal laws (in the sense of traveling from place to place) to certain classes of merchants, traders, and salesmen.

Itinerant peddling. The going about of a merchant from place to place, meeting and dealing with his customers where he finds them. Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 264 App.Div. 620, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 91. See Hawker.

Itinerant vendor. This term is variously defined in statutes; e.g., a person engaged in transient business either in one locality or in traveling from place to place selling goods. See also Hawker; Peddler.

Ius cogens. A peremptory norm of general international law. For the purposes of the present convention, a peremptory norm of general international law is a norm accepted and recognized by the international community of states as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character. (cf. Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1958, Article 53.)

An abbreviation for "Jacobus," the Latin form of the name James; used principally in citing statutes enacted in the reigns of the English kings of that name; e.g., "St. 1, Jac. II."

Lat. Lying in abeyance, as in the phrase "hereditas jacens," which is an inheritance or estate lying vacant or in abeyance prior to the ascertainment of the heir or his assumption of the succession.

A gold coin an inch and three-eighths in diameter, in value about twenty-five shillings, so called from James I., in whose reign it was first coined. It was also called broad, laurel, and broad-piece. Its value is sometimes put at twenty-four shillings, but Macaulay speaks of a salary of eight thousand Jacobuses as equivalent to ten thousand pounds sterling.

Boasting of something which is challenged by another. A false boasting; a false claim; assertions repeated to the prejudice of another's right.

The species of defamation or disparagement of another's title to real estate known at common law as "slander of title" comes under the head of jactitation, and in some jurisdictions (as in Louisiana) a remedy for this injury is provided under the name of an "action of jactitation."

In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting or giving out by a party that he or she is married to some other, whereby a common reputation of their matrimony may ensue. To defeat that result, the person may be put to a proof of the actual marriage, failing which proof, he or she is put to silence about it. 3 Bl.Com. 93. The High Court has jurisdiction over such actions.

In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title.

Lost by default; tossed away.

In the civil law, a throwing of goods overboard in a storm; jettison. Loss from such a cause.

A throwing of goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. See Jettison.

The throwing down of a stone. One of the modes, under the civil law, of interrupting prescription. Where one person was building on another's ground, and in this way acquiring a right by usucapio, the true owner challenged the intrusion and interrupted the prescriptive right by throwing down one of the stones of the building before witnesses called for the purpose.

Judge Advocate General.

A gaol; a prison. A building designated by law, or regularly used, for the confinement of persons held in lawful custody. A place of confinement that is more than a police station lockup and less than a prison. It is usually used to hold persons either convicted of misdemeanors (minor crimes) or persons awaiting trial or as a lockup for intoxicated and disorderly persons. See also Gaol; Lockup; Prison.

Refers to time spent by criminal defendant in confinement awaiting trial that will be deducted from his or her final sentence.

See Gaol.

A keeper or warden of a prison or jail.

Inmate of a penal institution who spends his time reading the law and giving legal assistance and advice to inmates, especially to those who are illiterate. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 89 S.Ct. 747, 21 L.Ed.2d 718.

See Gaol.

See Gaol.

Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Also a species of serfs among the Germans. The same as commendati.

An argument looking in both directions at the same time, e.g., urging jurors not to be swayed by sympathy, but adding that any sympathy should be in favor of the arguing counsel's client. Davis v. Franson, 141 Cal.App.2d 263, 296 P.2d 600, 606.
Jaques. In old English law, small money.

Jason clause. Clause in bills of lading which obligates cargo owners to contribute in general average in cases of danger, damage, or disaster resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in management of vessel, her machinery or appurtenances, provided that shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make vessel in all respects seaworthy, and to have her properly manned, equipped, and supplied. Merklen v. Johnson & Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 897, 898.

Javelin-men /jévelmén/. In old English law, yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

Jay walking. Proceeding diagonally across a street intersection. Also, crossing a street between intersections, or at a place other than a crosswalk.

J.D. Short for "Juris Doctor" or "Doctor of Jurisprudence." This is now the basic law degree, replacing the "LL.B." in the late 1960's.

Jedburgh justice /jédboré jéstæs/. Summary justice inflicted upon a marauder or felon without a regular trial, equivalent to "lynch law." So called from a Scotch town, near the English border, where raiders and cattle lifters were often summarily hung. Also written "Jeddart" /jédart/ or "Jedwood" /jéwad/ justice.

Jencks Act or Rule. A criminal defendant in a Federal Court is entitled to access to government documents for assistance in cross-examination of witnesses in order to impeach for prior inconsistent statements. Jencks v. U.S., 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103. Following this case, a federal statute was enacted to the same effect; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500. See also Fed.R.Crim.P. 26.2.

Jeofaile /jéfæyl/. L. Fr. I have failed; I am in error. An error or oversight in pleading.

Jeopardy. Danger; hazard; peril.

The danger of conviction and punishment which the defendant in a criminal action incurs when a valid indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case and give a verdict in a court of competent jurisdiction. Hanley v. State, 83 Nev. 461, 343 P.2d 440, 442. The condition of a person when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. For purpose of constitutional prohibition against double jeopardy, a court proceeding which may result in incarceration places a person, adult or juvenile, in "jeopardy."

J.a. Fain v. Duff, C.A.Fla., 486 F.2d 218, 225. The terms "jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense," "jeopardy of life or limb," "jeopardy for the same offense," "in jeopardy of punishment," and other similar provisions used in the various constitutions, are to be construed as meaning substantially the same thing.

See also Double jeopardy; Former jeopardy; Legal jeopardy.

Jeopardy assessment. If the Internal Revenue Service believes that the collection of a tax deficiency is in jeopardy due to delay, the IRS may assess and collect the tax immediately and without the usual formalities. I.R.C. § 6861.

Jetsam /jétsæm/. Goods which, by the act of the owner, have been voluntarily cast overboard from a vessel, in a storm or other emergency, to lighten the ship. See also Jactus; Jettison.

Jettison /jétdæn/. The act of throwing overboard from a vessel part of the cargo, in case of extreme danger, to lighten the ship. The thing or things so cast out; jetsam. A carrier by water may, when in case of extreme peril it is necessary for the safety of the ship or cargo, throw overboard, or otherwise sacrifice, any or all of the cargo or appurtenances of the ship. Throwing property overboard for such purpose is called "jettison," and the loss incurred thereby is called a "general average loss." See also Jactus; Jetsam.

Jetty. A projection of stone or other material serving as a protection against the waves.

Jeux de bourse /zhuw da burs/. Fr. In French law, speculation in the public funds or in stocks; gambling speculations on the stock exchange; dealings in "options" and "futures."

A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things.

J.N.O.V., Abr. Judgment non obstante veredicto; judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Job. The whole of a thing which is to be done. A specific task or piece of work to be done for a set fee or compensation. Employment position. Criminal act (e.g. robbery).

Jobber. One who buys and sells goods for others. One who buys or sells on the stock exchange; a dealer in stocks, shares, or securities. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. A merchant buying and selling in job lots. In general, a middleman in the sale of goods; one who buys from a wholesaler and sells to a retailer. Person who does piecework. See also Agent; Broker; Factor; Middleman; Wholesaler.

Jocelet /jœcælat/. A little manor or farm.

Jocus /jówks/. In old English law, a game of hazard.

Jocus partitus /jówks pártædæs/. In old English practice, a divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard, as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain.
John Doe. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. The name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called "Goodtitle." So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

The name "John Doe" is, and for some centuries has been, used in legal proceedings as a fictitious name to designate a party until his real name can be ascertained. State v. Rossignol, 22 Wash.2d 19, 153 P.2d 882, 885. When "John Doe" is used in a search warrant, case report, textbook, or other legal document, it refers to an unknown or nonexistent person. Garner v. State, 220 Tenn. 680, 423 S.W.2d 480, 482.

John Doe summons. A summons used when the defendant's name is unknown and which is therefore made out to John Doe. After the true name of the defendant is known, it is substituted.

Join. To unite; to come together; to combine or unite in time, effort, action; to enter into an alliance.

Joinder. Joining or coupling together; uniting two or more constituents or elements in one; uniting with another person in some legal step or proceeding; union; concurrence.

The consent to an agreement or document by a party who has an interest in the subject matter of the agreement or document, but who is not himself an active party to the agreement or document.

Collusive joinder. The joinder of a defendant, commonly a nonresident, for purpose of removal to or conferring jurisdiction on a Federal Court. Bentley v. Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co., D.C.Tex., 174 F.2d 788, 791.

Compulsory joinder. A person must be joined in an action if complete relief cannot be afforded the parties without his joinder or if his interest is such that grave injustice will be done without him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a).

See Joinder of parties, below.

Joinder in demurrer. In common law pleading, when a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law (called a "demurrer"), the plaintiff, if he means to maintain his action, must accept it, and this acceptance of the defendant's tender, signified by the plaintiff in a set form of words, is called a "joinder in demurrer."

Joinder in issue. In common law pleading, a formula by which one of the parties to a suit joins in or accepts an issue in fact tendered by the opposite party. Also called "similiter".

Joinder in pleading. In common law pleading, accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue, in fact, by the opposite party.

Joinder of claims. Under rules practice, a party asserting a claim to relief as an original claim, counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim may join as many claims as he has against an opposing party whether they are legal or equitable. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 601.

Joinder of defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment or information if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged in one or more counts together or separately and all of the defendants need not be charged in each count. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(b).

Joinder of error. In proceedings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joinder of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It answers to a joinder of issue in an action.

Joinder of indictments or informations. The court may order two or more indictments or informations or both to be tried together if the offenses, and the defendants if there is more than one, could have been joined in a single indictment or information. The procedure shall be the same as if the prosecution were such single indictment or information. Fed.R.Crim.P. 13.

Joinder of issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it.

Joinder of offenses. Two or more offenses may be charged in the same indictment or information in a separate count for each offense if the offenses charged, whether felonies or misdemeanors or both, are of the same or similar character or are based on the same act or transaction or on two or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or plan. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(a).

Joinder of parties. The act of uniting as parties to an action all persons who have the same rights or against whom rights are claimed, as either co-plaintiffs or co-defendants. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 and 20.

Necessary and indispensable parties. Prior to 1966 the federal, and most state, courts used classifications to determine if a person should or must be joined in an action. The label "indispensable" was used if the connection to the action of the absentee party was so close that the action should be dismissed unless the party was joined. The label "necessary" was used if the party was one who ought to be joined if this was possible. These classifications proved unsatisfactory and in 1966 Fed.Rule of Civil Proc. 19 was replaced with a new Rule 19. "Joinder of Persons needed for Just Adjudication." Rule 19(a) defines the class of persons who are needed for just adjudication. If an absentee meets this test, and is subject to process, the court must require that he be joined. If the absentee is needed for just adjudication and is not subject to process, Rule 19(b) states the factors to be considered in deciding whether to proceed in his absence or to dismiss the action.

Proper parties. If a party has some relation to the action, but it is not so close as to make him a person needed for just adjudication within Rule of Civil Proc. 19(a), he is a "proper" party, and the plaintiff has an option whether to join him if the tests of Rule 20 are met.
Joinder of remedies. Whenever a claim is one theretofore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court will grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties. In particular, a plaintiff may state a claim for money and a claim to have set aside a conveyance fraudulent as to him, without first having obtained a judgment establishing the claim for money. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(b).

Misjoinder. The improper joining together of parties to a suit, as plaintiffs or defendants, or of different causes of action. Misjoinder, however, is not a ground for dismissal. The improper party is merely dropped on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21. Relief from prejudicial joinder of offenses or motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Crim.P. 14.

Misjoinder in a criminal prosecution is the charging in separate counts of separate and distinct offenses arising out of wholly different transactions having no connection or relation with each other. Optner v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 13 F.2d 11, 13.

Nonjoinder. The omission to join some person as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been so joined. An omitted party may be added on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21.

Permissive joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action. All persons (and any vessel, cargo or other property subject to admiralty process in rem) may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any questions of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded. Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities. Fed.R.Civ.P. 20(a).

Joint. United; combined; undivided; done by or against two or more unitedly; shared by or between two or more; coupled together in interest or liability.

The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons. Thus, it is one in which the obligors (being two or more in number) bind themselves jointly but not severally, and which must therefore be prosecuted in a joint action against them all; distinguished from "joint and several" obligation.

As to joint Annuity; Ballot; Committee; Contract; Covenant; Creditors; Custody; Debt; Fine; Indictment; Obligation; Obligee; Obligor; Owner; Rate; Resolution; Session; Tenancy; Tenant; Trespass; Trespasser; Trustee; Will; see those titles. As to joint-stock banks, see Bank; joint-stock company, see Company; joint-stock corporation, see Corporation.

Joint account. An account (e.g. bank or brokerage account) in two or more names. Harbour v. Harbour, 207 Ark. 551, 181 S.W.2d 805, 807.

Joint action. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See Joiner.

Joint adventure. Any association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. "Joint adventure" exists where there is a special combination of two or more persons jointly seeking to profit in some specific venture without actual partnership or corporate designation; it is an association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. Fulton v. Fulton, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 146, 155. See also Community of interest; Joint enterprise; Joint venture.

Joint and several contracts. Contracts in which the parties bind themselves both individually and as a unit (jointly).

Joint and several liability. Describes the liability of copromisors of the same performance when each of them, individually, has the duty of fully performing the obligation, and the obligee can sue all or any of them upon breach of performance. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may demand payment or sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. A joint and several bond or note is one in which the obligors or makers bind themselves both jointly and individually to the obligee or payee, so that all may be sued together for its enforcement, or the creditor may select one or more as the object of his suit.

Term also refers to the liability of joint tortfeasors (i.e., liability that an individual or business either shares with other tortfeasors or bears individually without the others). See Contribution; Indemnity; Joint liability; Joint tort-feasors; Liability.

Such liability permits the Internal Revenue Service to collect a tax from one or all of several taxpayers. A husband and wife that file a joint income tax return usually are collectively or individually liable for the full amount of the tax liability. I.R.C. § 6013.

Joint authorship. As to literary property, such exists where there is a common design to the execution of which several persons contribute. Mere alterations, additions or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work.

Joint bank account. An account in the names of two or more persons who have equal right to it, generally with the right of survivorship.

Joint cause of action. See Joiner.

Joint debtors. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness. Two or more persons jointly liable for the same debt.

Joint debtors' acts. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper". The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 168, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Joint defendants. Persons who are sued and tried together. In criminal law, persons who are indicted for the same crime and tried together. See Joiner; Trial.

Joint defense doctrine. This doctrine generally allows defendant to assert attorney-client privilege to protect his statements made in confidence not to his own lawyer, but to attorney for codefendant for common purpose related to defense of both. U.S. v. Keplinger, C.A.Ill., 776 F.2d 678, 701.

Joint enterprise. Also called "common enterprise". The joint prosecution of common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority express or implied to act for all in respect to the control, means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose. The necessary elements are: (1) an agreement among the group's members, either express or implied; (2) a common purpose that the group intends to carry out; (3) community of pecuniary interest among members of the group in that purpose; and (4) an equal right to a voice in control and direction of the enterprise which gives an equal right of control. Fredrickson v. Kluever, 82 S.D. 346, 348. See also Joint adventure; Joint venture.

Joint estate. Joint estate involves unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and joint tenants must have the same interest accruing under the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held under the same undivided possession. Mosser v. Dolsey, 132 N.J.Eq. 121, 27 A.2d 165. See also Joint tenancy.

Joint executors. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will. See also Co-executor.

Joint feasons in pari delicto /jóyt fyzərz in pɛrəy dəltˈloʊk/. Phrase means as between persons who by concert of action intentionally commit the wrong complained of; there is no right of contribution. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 210 Ark. 575, 196 S.W.2d 919, 920.

Joint indictment. See Indictment.

Joint inventions. Such as are made when two or more persons jointly work or collaborate in devising and putting into practical form the subject-matter of patent. Altoona Publix Theatres v. American Tri-Ergon Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 72 F.2d 53, 56.

Jointist. A person established in a definite place of business, for the purpose of illegally selling intoxicants. One who opens up, conducts, or maintains any place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.

Joint liability. Liability that is owed to a third party by two or more other parties together. One wherein joint obligor has right to insist that co-obligor be joined as a codefendant with him, that is, that they be sued jointly. Schram v. Perkins, D.C.Mich., 38 F.Supp. 404, 407. See Contribution; Indemnity; Jointer; Joint and several liability; Joint tort-feasors; Liability.

Joint lives. This expression is used to designate the duration of an estate or right which is granted to two or more persons to be enjoyed so long as they both (or all) shall live. As soon as one dies, the interest determines.

Jointly. Unitedly, combined or joined together in unity of interest or liability. Soderberg v. Atlantic Lighterage Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 15 F.2d 209. In a joint manner; in concert; not separately; in conjunction. To be or become liable to a joint obligation. Creighton v. Continental Roll & Steel Foundry Co., 155 Pa.Super. 165, 38 A.2d 337, 342. Participated in or used by two or more, held or shared in common.

Jointly acquired property. Property accumulated by joint industry of husband and wife during marriage. See also Community property.

Jointly and severally. See Joint and several contracts; Joint and several liability.

Jointly owned property. See Community property; Joint bank account; Tenancy.

Joint negligence. In case of "joint negligence" of several people, proximately causing accident, they act together in concert and either do something together which they should not do or fail to do something which they are together obligated to do under circumstances. Russo v. Aucoin, La.App., 7 So.2d 744, 747. See also Comparative negligence; Contribution; Joint tort-feasors; Negligence (Contributory negligence).

Joint offense. One offense committed by two or more persons jointly. Crime committed by the participation of two or more persons. See Conspiracy.

Joint ownership. See Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Joint rate. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Jointress, jointuress. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survives him.

Joint return. See Joint tax return.

Joint-stock association or company. An unincorporated business enterprise, where two or more persons owe to another a right to direct and govern the policy in connection therewith, and duty, which may be altered by agreement, to share both in profit and losses. Russell v. Klein, 33 III.App.3d 1005, 339 N.E.2d 510, 512.

A one-time grouping of two or more persons in a business undertaking. Unlike a partnership, a joint venture does not entail a continuing relationship among the parties. A joint venture is treated like a partnership for Federal income tax purposes. I.R.C. § 7701(a).

See also Community of interest; Joint adventure; Joint enterprise. Compare Corporation; Partnership.

Joint-stock company. See Joint-stock association or company.

Joint-stock insurance company. See Stock insurance company.

Joint tax return. Tax return filed for federal or state taxes by a husband and wife together, and each is individually liable. Such return includes the income of both spouses, though one spouse need not have any income. It is usually more beneficial from a tax standpoint for spouses to file a joint return than as "married filing separately".

Joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Joint through rate. Transportation charge applicable from a point on one transportation line to a point on another transportation line. Occurs when freight is to be shipped to its destination by more than one carrier.

Joint tort. Where two or more persons owe to another the same duty and by their common neglect such other is injured, the tort is "joint." See Contribution; Joint negligence; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint tort-feasors. Term refers to two or more persons jointly or severally liable in tort for the same injury to person or property. American Tobacco Co. v. Transport Corp., D.C.Va., 277 F.Supp. 457, 461. Those persons who have acted in concert in their tortious conduct and are, accordingly, jointly and severally liable. Those who act together in committing wrong, or whose acts if independent of each other, unite in causing single injury. Bowen v. Iowa Nat. Mut. Ins. Co., 270 N.C. 486, 155 S.E.2d 238, 242. Several states have adopted the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act. See also Contribution.

Joint trial. The trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses conducted within the framework of one trial. See also Jointer; Trial.

Jointure. A freehold estate in lands or tenements secured to the wife, and to take effect on the decease of the husband, and to continue during her life at the least, unless she be herself the cause of its determination.

Property provision for wife, made prior to marriage, in lieu of dower.

Joint venture. A legal entity in the nature of a partnership engaged in the joint undertaking of a particular transaction for mutual profit. Tex-Co Grain Co. v. Happy Wheat Growers, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 934, 936. An association of persons or companies jointly undertaking some commercial enterprise; generally all contribute assets and share risks. It requires a community of interest in the performance of the subject matter, a right to direct and govern the policy in connection therewith, and duty, which may be altered by agreement, to share both in profit and losses. Russell v. Klein, 33 III.App.3d 1005, 339 N.E.2d 510, 512.

A one-time grouping of two or more persons in a business undertaking. Unlike a partnership, a joint venture does not entail a continuing relationship among the parties. A joint venture is treated like a partnership for Federal income tax purposes. I.R.C. § 7701(a).

See also Community of interest; Joint adventure; Joint enterprise. Compare Corporation; Partnership.

Joint venture corporation. See Corporation.

Joint verdict. Jury verdict covering more than one party to the action and combining two or more verdicts in one. See also Verdict.

Joint will. See Will.

Joint work. In copyright law, a "joint work" is a work prepared by two or more authors with the intention that their contributions be merged into inseparable or interdependent parts of a unitary whole. Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Joker. In political usage, a clause in legislation that is ambiguous or apparently immaterial, inserted to render it inoperative or uncertain without arousing opposition at the time of passage.

Jones Act. Federal statute passed in 1920 which provides that a seaman injured in the course of his employment by the negligence of the owner, master or fellow crew members can recover damages for his injuries. 46 U.S.C.A. § 688. Similar remedies are available under the Act to the personal representative of a seaman killed in the course of his employment. See also Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Journele /ˈɔrniːli/ /ˌʒuːrənɛl/. In old English law, as much land as could be plowed in one day.

Josh. To ridicule or tease, or make fun of in a joke, to lure or tease by misrepresenting the facts.

Jouir /ʒuːr/ /ˈʒuːr/. A French word, meaning to enjoy; to have enjoyment of; or to possess.

Jour /ʒuːr/ /ˈʒuːr/. A French word, signifying "day."

Jour en banc /ʒuːr ɑ̃ baŋk/. A day in banc. Distinguished from "jour en pays" (a day in the country), otherwise called "jour en nis prius."

Jour in court /ʒuːr ɑ̃ kɔʁt/. In old practice, day in court; day to appear in court; appearance day. "Every process gives the defendant a day in court."
Joyriding. The temporary taking of an automobile without intent to deprive owner permanently of the vehicle. People v. Rivera, 185 Colo. 337, 524 P.2d 1082, 1083. Called in some jurisdictions the crime of use of motor vehicle without authority which is commonly a misdemeanor in contrast to larceny of motor vehicle. People v. Rivera, 185 Colo. 337, 524 P.2d 1082, 1083.

Journeys account. In English practice, a new writ was called a "word of direction," as distinguished from "precatory words." To assure or promise. To decree or pass a law.

Journal. A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. The place where transactions are recorded as they occur. The book of original entry.

In maritime law, the journal (otherwise called "log" or "log-book") is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double-entry bookkeeping, the journal is an account-book into which are transcribed, daily or at other intervals, the items entered upon the day-book, for more convenient posting into the ledger. In the usage of legislative bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. It is kept by the clerk, and in it are entered the appointments and actions of committees, introduction of bills, motions, votes, resolutions, etc., in the order of their occurrence.

Journal entry. A recording in an accounting journal of equal debits and credits, with, when necessary, an explanation of the transaction.

Journal entry rule. Regularity of enactment of statute may be inquired into by examining legislative journals.

Journalists' privilege. In the law of defamation, a publisher is protected in actions of defamation if the publication constitutes fair comment on the subject of public officers and employees in matters of public concern. Such privilege is qualified and hence is lost on proof of malice which, in this context, consists in publication constitutes fair comment on the subject of public officers and employees in matters of public concern. Such privilege is qualified and hence is lost on proof of malice which, in this context, consists in publishing material either knowing it to be false or heedless in the reckless disregard of whether it is true or false when, in fact, it is false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel; Shield laws.

Journeyman. A craftsman who has progressed through an apprenticeship and is qualified in his trade.

Jubere /jabiriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to order, direct, or command. The word jubeo (I order), in a will, was called a "word of direction," as distinguished from "precatory words." To assure or promise. To decree or pass a law.
In American usage, the term "judge advocate" no longer refers to any of the parties involved in a court-martial. Instead, it refers to the principal legal adviser on the staff of a military commander (usually with a more definitive title, such as Staff Judge Advocate, Post Judge Advocate, or Command Judge Advocate) or, more broadly, to any officer in the Judge Advocate General's Corps or Department (i.e., branch) of one of the U.S. armed forces. British usage is different.

Judge advocate corps. Staff of Judge Advocate General.

Judge Advocate General. Senior legal officer and chief legal advisor of the Army, Navy, and Air Force and, except when the Coast Guard is operating as a service in the Navy, the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

Judge de facto. One who holds and exercises the office of a judge under color of lawful authority and by a title valid on its face, though he has not full right to the office, as where he was appointed under an unconstitutional statute, or by an usurper of the appointing power, or has not taken the oath of office.

Judge-made law. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is perhaps more commonly used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent and decisions. Laws having their source in judicial decisions as opposed to laws having their source in statutes or administrative regulations.

Judge pro tempore. One appointed for the term or some part thereof, during which time he exercises all the functions of the regular judge. State ex rel. Hodshire v. Bingham, 218 Ind. 490, 33 N.E.2d 771. As opposed to a special judge who is appointed to act in a particular case, such judge is appointed to act during the absence of the regular judge and exercises all of the powers of the regular judge during that period. Sur vance v. State, Ind., 465 N.E.2d 1076, 1081.

Judge's minutes, or notes. Memoranda usually taken by a judge, while a trial is proceeding, of the testimony of witnesses, or documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

Judge trial. Trial conducted before a judge without a jury. Jury waived trial; bench trial; non-jury trial.

The official and authentic decision of a court of justice upon the respective rights and claims of the parties to an action or suit therein litigated and submitted to its determination. The final decision of the court resolving the dispute and determining the rights and obligations of the parties. The law's last word in a judicial controversy, it being the final determination by a court of the rights of the parties upon matters submitted to it in an action or proceeding. Towley v. King Arthur Rings, Inc., 40 N.Y.2d 129, 386 N.Y.S.2d 80, 351 N.E.2d 728, 730. Conclusion of law upon facts found or admitted by the parties or upon their default in the course of the suit. Decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein, Allegheny County v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Pa., 132 F.2d 894, 897. Decision or sentence of the law pronounced by the court and entered upon its docket, minutes or record. Determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon matters submitted to it. State ex rel. Curran v. Brookes, 142 Ohio St. 107, 50 N.E.2d 995, 998. Determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in such court, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist.

Term "judgment" under rules practice includes "de¬ cree", Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(a). Terms "decision" and "judg¬ mement are commonly used interchangeably. "Sentence" and "judgment" are synonymous in criminal action and appeal from sentence is same as appeal from judgment. People v. Spencer, 71 C.2d 933, 80 Cal.Rptr. 99, 101, 458 P.2d 43.

The term "judgment" is also used to denote the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this is more properly denominated an "opinion."

An award may be in the nature of, or equivalent of, a judgment. Holliday v. Salling, 54 Ariz. 496, 97 P.2d 221, 223. Also, an order may be a judgment. Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Baker, Tex.Civ.App., 111 S.W.2d 837, 839, 840.

See also Amendment of judgment; Decree; Entering judgments; Judgment in rem; Judgment quasi in rem; Rendition of judgment; Sentence; Simulated judgment; Vacation of judgment; Void judgment.

Specific Types of Judgments

Agreed judgment. A judgment entered on agreement of the parties, which receives the sanction of the court, and it constitutes a contract between the parties to the agreement, operates as an adjudication between them and when court gives the agreement its sanction, becomes a judgment of the court. Traveler's Ins. Co. v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 283 F.Supp. 14, 28. See also Consent Judgment, below.

Alternative judgment. One that by its terms might be satisfied by doing either of several acts at the election of the party or parties against whom the judgment is rendered and from whom performance is by the judgment required. A judgment for one thing or another which does not specifically and in a definite manner determine the rights of the parties.

Appealable judgment. One which disposes of all parties and issues in case. Chuning v. Calvert, Mo.App., 452 S.W.2d 580, 582. See also Final judgment, below.

Arrest of judgment. See Arrest of judgment.

Assets in futuro, judgment of. One against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate.

Cognovit actionem. See Cognovit actionem.

Cognovit judgment. See Cognovit judgment; also, Confes¬ sion of judgment, below.

Conditional judgment. One whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may become of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortga¬ gor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limit¬ ed.

Confession of judgment. At common law, judgment entered where defendant, instead of entering plea, con¬fessed action, or withdrew plea and confessed action. Judgment where a defendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institu¬tion of legal proceedings of any kind; voluntary submi¬ssion to court's jurisdiction. O'Hara v. Manley, 140 Pa. Super. 39, 12 A.2d 820, 822. Such agreements for confession of judgment are void in many states; e.g. Mass.G.L. c. 231, § 13A.

The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by a term authorizing a confession of judgment if the instru¬ment is not paid when due. U.C.C. § 3-112.

See also Cognovit judgment.

Consent judgment. A judgment, the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action. Matthews v. Looney, 132 Tex. 313, 123 S.W.2d 871, 872. See also Decree (Consent decree); and Agreed judgment, above.

Contradictory judgment. A judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in defense. Used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by defaul¬t.

Declaratory judgment. See Declaratory judgment.

Default and inquiry, judgment by. It establishes right of action of kind properly pleaded in complaint, determines right of plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages and costs, and precludes defendant from offering any evidence on execution of inquiry to show that plaintiff has no right of action. Such type judgment is obsolete.

or plead at the appointed time. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defense, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the cause.

Judgments rendered on defendant's default are: Judgment by default; Judgment by non sum informatus; judgment nil dicit. Judgments rendered on plaintiff's default are: Judgment of non prosp (from non prosequitur) and judgment of nonsuit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas).

Deficiency judgment. A judgment in favor of a creditor for the difference between the amount of the indebtedness and the amount derived from the judicial sale held in order to satisfy the indebtedness. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 456. See also Deficiency judgment.

De melioribus damnis. See De melioribus damnis.

Demurrer, judgment on. Such concludes party demurring, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary and relies on their insufficiency in law. See Demurrer.

Dismissal, judgment of. See Dismissal.

Domestic judgment. A judgment is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered; in other states or countries it is called foreign. See Foreign judgment, below.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied or extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment. Or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute.

Execution of judgment. See Execution of judgment or decree.

Face of judgment. See Face of judgment.

Final judgment. One which puts an end to an action at law by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments. A judgment which disposes of the subject-matter of the controversy or determines the litigation as to all parties on its merits. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. Appeals in federal courts will only lie from "final" judgments. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. See Final decision or judgment; Final decision rule.

Foreign judgment. One rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the judgment or its effect is brought in question. One pronounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U.S. 287, 11 S.Ct. 92, 34 L.Ed. 670. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act, and also the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act.
received a judgment on the merits cannot bring the same suit again. A party whose case has been dismissed without prejudice can bring the same suit again so long as the procedural errors are corrected (i.e., cured) in the later action.

For res judicata purposes is one which determines the rights and liabilities of the parties based on the ultimate fact as disclosed by the pleadings or issues presented for trial. Thompson-Hayward Chemical Co. v. Cyprus Mines Corp., 8 Kan.App.2d 487, 660 P.2d 973, 975.

Money judgment. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred. A judgment, or any part thereof, for a sum of money or property or to the effect specified in his offer, with costs then accrued. If after service of the offer the adverse party serves written notice that the offer is accepted, either party may then file the offer and notice of acceptance together with proof of service thereof and thereupon the clerk shall enter judgment. Fed.R.Civil P. 68.

Personal judgment. One imposing on the defendant a personal liability to pay it, and which may therefore be satisfied out of any of his property which is within the reach of process, as distinguished from one which may be satisfied only out of a particular fund or the proceeds of particular property. Judgments in which court has personal jurisdiction over parties. State v. Dreyer, 188 Kan. 270, 362 P.2d 55, 57.

Pro retorno habendo. A judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Quod computet. See Quod computet.

Quod partes replacitent. See Quod partes replacitent.

Quod partitio fiat. Interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

Quod recuperet. See Quod recuperet.

Relicta verificatione. See Relicta verificatione.

Repleader, judgment of. See Repleader.

Respondeat ouster. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant “do answer over,” called a judgment of respondeat ouster; it is interlocutory only.

Retraxit. See Retraxit.

Revival of judgment. See Revival.

Stet processus. See Stet processus.

Summary judgment. See Summary judgment.

Verdict, judgment on. The most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict. See also Verdict.

Warrant of attorney. See Warrant.

Judgment book. A book required to be kept by the clerk, among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. Such is called a “civil docket” or “criminal docket” in the federal and many state courts. Fed.R. Civil P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Judgment docket.

Judgment creditor. A person in whose favor a money judgment has been entered by a court of law and who has not yet been paid. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he can enforce execution. A person in whose favor a money judgment is entered or a person who becomes entitled to enforce it. Owner of an unsatisfied judgment. For purpose of Internal Revenue Code, term is used in conventional sense of judgment of court of record. U.S. v. Gilbert Associates, 345 U.S. 361, 364, 73 S.Ct. 701, 703-704, 97 L.Ed. 1071. Cf. U.C.C. 9-301(3) (lien creditor). Compare Judgment debtor. See also Attachment; Execution (Writ of execution); Judgment lien.

Judgment debt. A monetary obligation which is either evidenced by a written record, or brought about by successful legal action against the debtor. A debt, whether on simple contract or by specialty, for the recovery of which judgment has been entered, either upon a cognovit or upon a warrant of attorney or as the result of a successful action. See also Judgment debtor.

Judgment debtor. A person against whom judgment has been recovered, and which remains unsatisfied. The term has been construed to include a judgment debtor's successors in interest. Compare Judgment creditor. See also Attachment; Execution (Writ of execution); Judgment lien.

Judgment docket. A list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment book.

Judgment, estoppel by. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction. The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact. Price v. Clement, 187 Okl. 304, 102 P.2d 595, 597. It rests upon principles forbidding one to relitigate matter in dispute between parties which has been determined by competent court, on ground that record of judgment imports absolute verity. Where subsequent proceeding is on same cause of action between same parties a former adjudication is conclusive. Kimpton v. Spellman, 351 Mo. 674, 173 S.W.2d 886. Ordinarily, "estoppel" of judgment does not extend to matters not expressly adjudicated. Sonken-Galamba Corporation v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 952, 956; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an "estoppel". In re McDermott, C.C.A.III., 115 F.2d 582, 584. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; issue preclusion; Judicial estoppel; Res (Res judicata).

Judgment execution. The formal or written evidence of the judgment which commands the officer to seize the goods and property of the judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment. Procedure on execution is governed by Fed. R.Civil P. 69. See Execution.

Judgment file. The docket in which the entry of a judgment is recorded and preserved as a permanent court record. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment in personam or inter partes /jájmant in persónam/"inter partýiz/ A judgment against a particular person, as distinguished from a judgment against a thing or a right or status. See also Judgment (Personal judgment).

Judgment in rem. An adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular thing or subject matter, by a tribunal having competent authority. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666. It is founded on proceeding instituted against or on some thing or subject matter whose status or condition is to be determined, Eureka Building & Loan Ass'n v. Shultz, 139 Kan. 435, 32 P.2d 477, 480; or one brought to enforce a right in the thing itself, Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Jefferso, 229 Iowa 1054, 295 N.W. 865, 857. It operates directly upon the property. Guild v. Wallis, 150 Or. 69, 40 P.2d 737, 742. It is a solemn declaration of the status of some person or thing. Jones v. Teat, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 617, 620. It is binding upon all persons in so far as their interests in the property are concerned. See also Judgment quasi in rem.

Judgment in retraction /jájmant in rastrákot/. A judgment which is usually based upon and follows a settlement out of court, and like a judgment on the merits is a bar and estops plaintiff from again proceeding in another suit on same cause of action. Steele v. Beatty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 856, 857. See Retraction.

Judgment lien. An encumbrance that arises by law when a judgment for the recovery of money is docketed and that attaches to the debtor's real estate located in the county where the judgment is docketed. A lien binding the real estate of a judgment debtor, in favor of the holder of the judgment, and giving the latter a right directly upon the property. Guild v. Wallis, 150 Or. 69, 40 P.2d 737, 742. It is a solemn declaration of the status of the thing itself, Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Jefferso, 229 Iowa 1054, 295 N.W. 865, 857. It is binding upon all persons in so far as their interests in the property are concerned. See also Judgment quasi in rem.

Judgment note. A promissory note (also called cognovit note) embodying an authorization to an attorney, or to a designated attorney, or to the holder, or to the clerk of the court, to enter an appearance for the maker and confess a judgment against him for a sum therein named, upon default of payment of the note. Such are invalid in many states. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Judgment paper. In English practice, a sheet of paper containing an incipitur of the pleadings in an action at law, upon which final judgment is signed by the master.

Judgment proof. Descriptive of all persons against whom judgments for money recoveries are of no effect; e.g., persons who are insolvent, who do not have sufficient property within the jurisdiction of the court to satisfy the judgment, or who are protected by statutes which exemp wages and property from execution.

Judgment quasi in rem. A judgment based on the court's jurisdiction over the defendant's interest in prop-
Judicature Acts (England). The acts under which the state or profession of those officers judicature. The term judicatores. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to judge; to decide or determine judicially; to give judgment or sentence. Judicatius /jůwδsk̩t̪̊r̥̊i̝y̝/. Lat. In the civil law, judging; the pronouncing of sentence after hearing a cause. Judicatores /jůwδsk̩t̪̊r̥̊i̝y̝ juwδk̩st̪̊a(n)ri̝y̝/. The term as used designates that department of government which it was intended should interpret and administer the laws. Judicature. The state or profession of those officers who are employed in administering justice; the judiciary. A judicatory, tribunal, or court of justice. Jurisdiction; the right of judicial action; the scope or extent of jurisdiction. Judicature Acts (England). The acts under which the present system of courts in England was organized and is continued. The statutes of 36 & 37 Vict., c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict., c. 77, which went into force November 1, 1875, with amendments in 1877, 40 & 41 Vict., c. 9; 1879, 42 & 43 Vict., c. 78; and 1881, 44 & 45 Vict., c. 68, made very important changes in the organization of, and methods of procedure in, the superior courts of England, consolidating them together so as to constitute one supreme court of judicature, consisting of two divisions,—her majesty's high court of justice, having chiefly original jurisdiction; and her majesty's court of appeal, whose jurisdiction is chiefly appellate. Such acts were superseded by the Supreme Court Act of 1981. Also, the High Court was reorganized in 1970. The Court of Appeal was reorganized in 1966. By the Courts Act of 1971 the Crown Court replaces the Quarter Sessions and the courts of assize and was made a part of the Supreme Court. See also Judicature Acts.

Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiae suae /jůwδs̩i̝y̝ nǔn tən̩e̝ntər ekspr̩ɔ̝məri̝ kɔz̩om səntən̩ʃi̝i̝(y̝) səy̝ˈu̝vi̝/. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence. Judices ordinarii /jůwδs̩i̝y̝ ordənəri̝y̝/. Lat. Plural of judex ordinarius (q.v.).

Judices pedanei /jůwδs̩i̝y̝ padəni̝y̝/. Lat. Plural of judex pedanerus (q.v.).

Judices selecti /jůwδs̩i̝y̝ selektəy̝/. Lat. Plural of judex selectus (q.v.).

Judicia; judicia publica /jədɪʃə(ˈpʌblɪkə)/. In Roman law. Judicial proceedings; trials. Judicia publica, criminal trials. See also Judicium.

Judicia in curia regis non adnihilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attentum adnullentur /jədɪʃə(ˈpʌblɪkə) in kɜrɪə rɪˈɡɪs nɔn ədˈnɪhɪləntərˌ, sɛd stɛnt ɪn rəˈbɔːri siˈwʌðəʊ kwəʊsˈkwiːviː pər ərəˈrɛm ət ətənˈtəntəm ədəˈnʌləntərˌ/. Judgments in the king's court are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attainent. Judicia in deliberationibus crebro matrescunt, in accelerato processu nuncquam /jədɪʃə(ˈpʌblɪkə) ɪn dəlɪˈbrətiʃənəbəs kəˈrɛbrə mətˈrɛskənt, in əkˈsɛlərətəʊ pəsəˈresəkwəm/. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberations, never by hurried process or precipitation.

Judicial. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority. Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer. Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act. Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination. Involving the exercise of judgment or discretion; as distinguished from ministerial.

Of or pertaining or appropriate to the administration of justice, or courts of justice, or a judge thereof, or the proceedings therein; as, judicial power, judicial proceedings. State v. Freitag, 53 Idaho 726, 27 P.2d 68.

As to judicial Action; Confession; Day; Discretion; Document; Estoppel; Evidence; Factor; Mortgage; Notice; Process; Record; Sale; Sequestration; Writ, see those titles. As to Quasi judicial, see that title.

Judicial act. An act which involves exercise of discretion or judgment. It is also defined as an act by court or magistrate touching rights of parties or property brought before it or him by voluntary appearance, or by prior action of ministerial officers. An act by member of judicial department in construing law or applying it to a particular state of facts. State ex rel. Tharel v. Board of Com'n of Creek County, 188 Okl. 184, 107 P.2d 542, 549. An act of administrative board if it goes to determination of some right, protection of which is peculiar office of courts. Belk's Dept. Store v. Guilford County, 222 N.C. 441, 23 S.E.2d 897, 902. An act which imposes burdens or confers privileges according to finding of some person or body whether a general rule is applicable or according to discretionary judgment as to propriety. An act which undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation or of property as foundation on which it proceeds. The action of judge in trying a cause and rendering a decision. Application of Gleit, 178 Misc. 198, 33 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630, 631.

Rendition or pronouncement of a judgment is a judicial act and entry thereof a ministerial act. Peoples Electric Co-op. v. Broughton, 191 Okl. 229, 127 P.2d 850, 853. But if there are matters requiring exercise of court's discretion, entry of decree is judicial act. Stewart v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 3 Cal.App.2d 702, 40 P.2d 529.

For purposes of judicial immunity, an act is "judicial" if it is a function normally performed by a judge, and parties dealt with judge in his judicial capacity. Martinez v. Winner, C.A.Colo., 771 F.2d 424, 434.

See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Order.

Judicial action. An adjudication upon rights of parties who in general appear or are brought before tribunal by notice or process, and upon whose claims some decision or judgment is rendered. Action of a court upon a cause, by hearing it, and determining what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties, and with which is the right of the case.

Judicial activism. Judicial philosophy which motivates judges to depart from strict adherence to judicial precedent in favor or progressive and new social policies which are not always consistent with the restraint expected of appellate judges. It is commonly marked by decisions calling for social engineering and occasionally those decisions represent intrusions into legislative and executive matters.

Judicial acts. See Judiciary Acts.

Judicial admission. See Admission.

Judicial Article. Article III of the U.S.Const. which creates the U.S. Supreme Court; vests in Congress the right to create inferior courts; provides for life tenure for Federal Court judges; and specifies the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. See Federal Judicial Code; Judicial branch; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial authority. The power and authority appertaining to the office of a judge. Jurisdiction; the official right to hear and determine questions in controversy.

Judicial bonds. Generic term for bonds required by court for appeals, costs, attachment, injunction, etc.

Judicial branch. Branch of state and federal government whose function it is to interpret, construe, apply, and generally administer and enforce the laws. This branch, together with the executive and legislative branches forms our tripartite form of federal and state government. See U.S. Constitution, Article III. See Judicial Article; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial business. Such as involves the exercise of judicial power, or the application of the mind and authority of a court to some contested matter, or the conduct of judicial proceedings, as distinguished from such ministerial and other acts, incident to the progress of a cause, as may be performed by the parties, counsel, or officers of the court without application to the court or judge. See Judicial act; Judicial action.

Judicial cognizance. Judicial notice, or knowledge upon which a judge is bound to act without having it proved in evidence. See Judicial notice.

Judicial comity. Principle in accordance with which courts of one state or jurisdiction give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state out of deference and respect, not obligation. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Judicial council. Provision is made in 28 U.S.C.A. § 332 for the Chief Judge of each Circuit Court of Appeal to call a council of all the judges of the circuit twice each year. The primary function of the councils is to assure expeditious and effective administration of the business of the courts.

Judicial cy pres /juwdishal sly pró/. Doctrine of "judicial cy pres" is a principle of construction based on a judicial finding of donor's intention as applied to new conditions. Rohlf v. German Old People's Home, 143 Neb. 636, 10 N.W.2d 686, 691. When only minor features of a trust for charity become impossible or impracticable of performance and it cannot properly be said that general scheme of testator has failed, doctrine of "judicial cy pres" operates to avoid failure of charity. Noel v. Olds, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 155, 158 F.2d 581, 586, 587. See also Cy-pres.

Judicial decision. Application by a court or tribunal exercising judicial authority of competent jurisdiction of the law to a state of facts proved, or admitted to be true, and a declaration of the consequences which follow. In re Knofler's Estate, 73 Ohio App. 383, 52 N.E.2d 667, 668. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Opinion; Order.

Judicial department. See also Judicial branch.

Judicial dictum /juwdishal diktam/. A dictum made by a court or judge in the course of a judicial decision or opinion. Com. v. Paine, 207 Pa. 45, 56 A. 317. Expression of opinion by court on question directly involved, argued by counsel and deliberately passed on by court, which is not necessary to decision in the case. Atlantic City Casino Ass'n v. Kimmelman, 204 N.J.Super. 258, 499 A.2d 1049, 1054. See Dictum.

Judicial discretion. Term is a broad and elastic one which is equated with sound judgment of court to be exercised according to rules of law. People v. Russel, 70 Cal.Rptr. 210, 215, 448 P.2d 794. The option the trial judge has in doing or not doing a thing that cannot be Judicial function. The exercise of the judicial faculty or office. The capacity to act in the specific way which appertains to the judicial power, as one of the powers of government. The term is used to describe generally those modes of action which appertain to the judiciary as a department of organized government, and through and by means of which it accomplishes its purposes and exercises its peculiar powers. See also Judicial act; Judicial action; Judicial business.

Judicial immunity. The absolute protection from civil liability arising out of the discharge of judicial functions which every judge enjoys. Under doctrine of "judicial immunity," a judge is not subject to liability for any act committed within the exercise of his judicial function; the immunity is absolute in that it is applicable even if the actions of the judicial official are taken in bad faith. C. M. Clark Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Reed, D.C.Tex., 390 F.Supp. 1056, 1060. However, a person may be given injunctive relief and an award of attorneys' fees under the Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983, 1988). Pullum v. Allen, 466 U.S. 522, 104 S.Ct. 1970, 80 L.Ed.2d 565.

Judicial inquiry. Such inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Wilson & Co. of Oklahoma, C.C.A.Okl., 54 F.2d 596, 598.

Judicial knowledge. Knowledge of that which is so notorious that everybody, including judges, knows it, and hence need not be proved. Ex parte Ferguson, 112 Tex.Cr.R. 152, 15 S.W.2d 650, 652. See Judicial notice.

Judicial legislation. See Judge-made law.

Judicial lien. One obtained by judgment, levy, sequestration, or other legal or equitable process or proceeding. Within meaning of Bankruptcy Code lien avoidance section, is charge against or interest in property to secure payment of debt, obtained by judgment or other legal proceedings. In re Ashe, C.A.Pa., 669 F.2d 105, 108. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

Judicial notice. The act by which a court, in conducting a trial, or framing its decision, will, of its own motion or on request of a party, and without the production of evidence, recognize the existence and truth of certain facts, having a bearing on the controversy at bar, which, from their nature, are not properly the subject of testimony, or which are universally regarded as established by common notoriety, e.g., the laws of the state, international law, historical events, the constitution and course of nature, main geographical features, etc. The cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act upon without proof, because they already know them. Such notice excuses party having burden of establishing fact from necessity of producing formal proof. Hutchinson v. State, Ind., 477 N.E.2d 850, 854. Fed.Evid.Rule 201.

Judicial oath. See Oath.

Judicial office. Offices which relate to the administration of justice; and which should be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them. A general term including courts of record and courts of record.

Judicial officer. A judge or magistrate. The term, in the popular sense, applies generally to any officer of a court, but in the strictly legal sense applies only to an officer who determines causes between parties or ren-Judicial opinion. A term synonymous with what has been adjudged or decreed and final in its character. See Decision; Decree; Judgment; Opinion; Order.

Judicial order. One which involves exercise of judicial discretion and affects final result of litigation. Happy Coal Co. v. Brashear, 263 Ky. 257, 92 S.W.2d 23, 27. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Order.

Judicial power. The authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with declaration of what law is and its construction. The authority vested in courts and judges, as distinguished from the executive and legislative power. Courts have general powers to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between two persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision; and also such specific powers as contempt powers, power to control admission and disbarment of attorneys, power to adopt rules of court, etc.

A power involving exercise of judgment and discretion in determination of questions of right in specific cases affecting interests of person or property, as distinguished from ministerial power involving no discretion. Inherent authority not only to hear and determine controversies between adverse parties, but to make binding orders or judgments. Fewel v. Fewel, 23 Cal.2d 431, 144 P.2d 592, 594. Power to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before court for decision. Power that adjudicates upon and protects the rights and interests of persons or property, and to that end declares, construes and applies the law.

Judicial proceeding. Any proceeding wherein judicial action is invoked and taken. Mannix v. Portland Telegraph, 144 Or. 172, 23 P.2d 138. Any proceeding to obtain such remedy as the law allows. Any step taken in a court of justice in the prosecution or defense of an action. In general term for proceedings relating to, practiced in, or proceeding from, a court of justice; or the course prescribed to be taken in various cases for the determination of a controversy or for legal redress or relief. A proceeding in a legally constituted court. A proceeding wherein there are parties, who have opportunity to be heard, and wherein the tribunal proceeds either to a determination of facts upon evidence or of law upon proved or conceded facts. See also Trial.

Judicial question. One proper for the determination of a court of justice, as distinguished from moot questions or from such questions as belong to the decision of the legislative or executive departments of government and with which the courts will not interfere, called "political" or "legislative" questions. See also Case (Cases and controversies).
Judiciary Acts. The Judiciary Article (Art. III) of the U.S. Constitution created a Supreme Court and "such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain or establish". The First Congress established such inferior federal courts under the Judiciary Act of 1789. Subsequent major judiciary acts include the following: Act of 1875 granting federal question jurisdiction; Act of 1891 (Evarts Act) establishing circuit courts of appeals and fixing the outline of the contemporary scheme of federal appellate review; Act of 1911 enacting the Federal Judicial Code (which was recodified in 1948 and 1958); Act of 1925 (Judges' Bill), and 1988, further narrowing the scope of discretionary review by certiorari of the Supreme Court. See also Federal Judicial Code.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by one who is not the proper judge is of no force.

Judicium Dei. In old English and European law, the judgment of God; otherwise called "divinum judicium," the "divine judgment." A term particularly applied to the ordeals by fire or hot iron and water, and also to the trials by the cross, the Eucharist, and the coroned, and the duellum or trial by battle (q.v.), it being supposed that the interposition of Heaven was directly manifest, in these cases, in behalf of the innocent.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. Judgment is, as it were, a declaration of law.

Judicium non debet esse illusorium; suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory; it ought to have its proper effect.

Judicium parium. In old English law, judgment of the peers; judgment of one's peers: trial by jury.

Judicium (semper) pro veritate accipitur. A judgment is always taken for truth [that is, as long as it stands in force it cannot be contradicted].

Judicium redditur in invitum. A judgment given against one, whether he will or not.

Juge. In French law, a judge.

Juge de paix. An inferior judicial functionary, appointed to decide summarily controversies of minor importance, especially such as turn mainly on questions of fact. He has also the functions of a police magistrate.

Juge d'instruction. See Instruct.

Jugerum. An acre. As much as a yoke (ju-gum) of oxen could plow in a day.

Jugulator. In old records, a cutthroat or murderer.

Jugum. Lat. In the civil law, a yoke; a measure of land; as much land as a yoke of oxen could plow in a day.

Jugum terre. In old English law, a yoke of land; half a plow-land.

Juicio. In Spanish law, a trial or suit.

Juicio de apelo. The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.
Junior. Younger. Lower in rank, tenure, preference, or position.

Jump bail. To abscond, withdraw, leave the jurisdiction, or secrete one's self, in violation of the obligation of a bail bond. See Forfeiture of bond.

Junior. Younger. Lower in rank, tenure, preference, or position.

This has been held to be no part of a man's name, but an addition by use, and a convenient distinction between a father and son of the same name.

As to junior Barrister; Counsel; Creditor; Judgment; Partner; Security; Writ, see those titles.

Junior execution. One which was issued after the issuance of another execution, on a different judgment, against the same defendant.

Junior interest. A legal right which is subordinate to another's right as applied to property; e.g. a second mortgage is subordinate to a first mortgage. See also Creditor (Junior creditor).

Junior lien. Lien which is subordinate to prior lien. See Lien.

Junior mortgage. A mortgage which is subordinate to another mortgage, called the priority, prior, or senior mortgage. See also Mortgage.

Junior security issue. Debt or equity issue that is subordinate to another security issue in terms of interest, principal, dividends, payment on dissolution, etc. See also Security.

Junket. An arrangement or arrangements the primary purpose of which is to induce any person to gamble at a licensed casino and pursuant to which, and as consideration for which, a certain portion of the cost of transportation, food, lodging, and entertainment for said person is directly or indirectly paid by a casino licensee or employee or agent thereof.

Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituuntur /jura iyowdam mowdow dostityuwantaw kwow kanstityuwantaw/. The judgment granted for a debtor who has various creditors, or for such creditors, to the effect that their claims be satisfied according to their respective form and rank, when the debtor's estate is not sufficient to discharge them all in full.

Julian law /jwul(i)yan 16/. See Lex Julia.

Jure ecclesie /juriy aliyzyiylay/. In right of the church.

Jure emphyteutico /juriy emfatyuyuwakow/. By the right or law of emphyteusis. See Emphyteusis.

Jure gentium /juriy jenshiyow/. By the law of nations.

Jure nature aquum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem /juriy natyuryiy ilkwam est nemanam kam oltiiryiyas detramentow et anjuriyiy fazayray lowkaplyihiyow/. By the law of nature it is not just that any one should be enriched by the detriment or injury of another.

Jure representationis /juriy reprzenteyshiyow/. By right of representation; in the right of another person.

Jure uxoris /juriy eksoyos/. In right of a wife.
Juridical /jaridkal/. Relating to administration of justice, or office of a judge.

Juridical day. Day on which court is in session. Black v. National Bank of Kentucky, 226 Ky. 152, 10 S.W.2d 629, 630.

Juridicus /jaridkas/. Lat. Relating to the courts or to the administration of justice; juridical; lawful.

Juri non est consonum quod aliquid accesserius in curia regis convincatur antequam aliquid de facto fuerit attinctus /juray nón ést kónsonam kwód álskwas ákassorýyas in kýriýa ríyás kónviŋkéýtor ántiýkwam álskwas diy fýkéow fýúwarat átýŋkta/. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact.

Jurus /júras/. Lat. Of right; of law.

Jurisconsult /juriskonsult/'kánsílt/. A jurist; a person skilled in the science of law, particularly of international or public law.

Jurisconsultus /juriskonsultus/. Lat. In Roman law, an expert in juridical science; a person thoroughly versed in the laws, who was habitually resorted to, for information and advice, both by private persons as his clients, and also by the magistrates, advocates, and others employed in administering justice. Abbreviated i-citus.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi /jurásdíksikši(y)óów est páltéshás diy póblákow intródkáta, kám naséshëtítýi júras dášén-day/. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice.

Jurisdiction. A term of comprehensive import embracing every kind of judicial action. Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky. v. Crombie, 258 Ky. 383, 80 S.W.2d 39, 40. It is the power of the court to decide a matter in controversy and presupposes the existence of a duly constituted court with control over the subject matter and the parties. Pinner v. Pinner, 33 N.C.App. 204, 234 S.E.2d 636. Jurisdiction defines the powers of courts to inquire into facts, apply the law, make decisions, and declare judgment. Police Com'r of Boston v. Municipal Court of Dorchester Dist., 374 Mass. 640, 374 N.E.2d 272, 285. The legal right by which judges exercise their authority. Max Ams., Inc. v. Barker, 293 Ky. 698, 170 S.W.2d 45, 48. It exists when court has cognizance of class of cases involved, proper parties are present, and point to be decided is within powers of court. United Cemeteries Co. v. Strother, 342 Mo. 1155, 119 S.W.2d 762, 765. Power and authority of a court to hear and determine a judicial proceeding; and power to render particular judgment in question. In re De Camillis' Estate, 66 Misc.2d 882, 322 N.Y.S.2d 551, 556. The right and power of a court to adjudicate concerning the subject matter in a given case. Biddinger v. Fletcher, 224 Ga. 501, 162 S.E.2d 414, 416. The term may have different meanings in different contexts. Martin v. Luther, C.A.II., 689 F.2d 109, 114.

Areas of authority; the geographic area in which a court has power or types of cases it has power to hear.

Scope and extent of jurisdiction of federal courts is governed by 28 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq.

For Ancillary; Appellate; Concurrent; Contentious; Continuing; Coordinate; Criminal; Equity; Exclusive; Foreign; General; Legislative; Limited or special jurisdiction; Military; Pendent jurisdiction; Plenary; Primary; Probate; Special; Subject-matter; Summary; Territorial; and Voluntary jurisdiction, see those titles. See also Excess of jurisdiction; Jurisdiction in personam; Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction of the subject matter; Jurisdiction quasi in rem; Lack of jurisdiction. For original jurisdiction, see Original. For diversity jurisdiction, see Diversity of citizenship. For federal question jurisdiction, see Federal question jurisdiction. For jurisdiction over nonresidents or foreign corporations, see Long arm statutes; Minimum contacts.

Jurisdictional. Pertaining or relating to jurisdiction; conferring jurisdiction; showing or disclosing jurisdiction; defining or limiting jurisdiction; essential to jurisdiction.

Jurisdictional amount. Required amount involved in the particular case to give court jurisdiction, Shabotzky v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., D.C.N.Y., 21 F.Supp. 166, 167; sum of all claims that are properly joined, Gray v. Blight, C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 696, 700; value of the object sought to be attained in the litigation, Ronzio v. Denver & R.G.W.R. Co., C.C.A.Utah, 116 F.2d 604, 606. The jurisdiction of the trial court is commonly limited by the amount in controversy in the particular action; e.g. the requisite jurisdictional amount for diversity of citizenship jurisdiction in the federal district courts is set forth in 28 U.S.C.A. § 1332.

Jurisdictional dispute. The competing claims made to an employer by different unions that each of their members are entitled to perform certain specific work. There must be evidence of a threat of coercive action for the N.L.R.B. to conduct a hearing and make an assignment of the work.

Jurisdictional facts. Those matters of fact which must exist before the court can properly take jurisdiction of the particular case, as, that the defendant has been properly served with process, that the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Union River Logging Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 13 S.Ct. 271, 37 L.Ed. 123. See Jurisdictional statement; Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdictional limits. The constitutional or statutory parameters within which judicial power may be exercised such as limits based on the monetary value of the action. See Jurisdictional amount.

Jurisdictional plea. Form of answer addressed to the issue of whether the court has the power over the defendant or over the subject matter of the litigation; e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1), (2).

Jurisdictional statement. In some states, a statement required to set forth the amount claimed to be in controversy so as to permit a court of general jurisdiction to hear the case without remanding it to an inferior court. See also Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdiction clause. A pleading which sets forth a claim for relief, whether an original claim, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third party claim, shall contain "a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds to support it." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a).

In equity practice, that part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and tend to the injury of the complainant, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the "jurisdiction clause." See also Jurisdictional statement.

Jurisdiction in personam. Power which a court has over the defendant's person and which is required before a court can enter a personal or in personam judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 568. It may be acquired by an act of the defendant within a jurisdiction under a law by which the defendant impliedly consents to the personal jurisdiction of the court, e.g. operation of a motor vehicle on the highways of state confers jurisdiction of operator and owner on courts of state. Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352, 47 S.Ct. 632, 71 L.Ed. 1091. A judgment in personam brings about a merger of the original cause of action into the judgment and not the whole world as in the case of jurisdiction in rem. The original cause of action is not merged in the judgment as in the case of a judgment predicated on personal jurisdiction.

Juris et de jure /jūrəs e t dij yūri/. Of law and of right.

A presumption juris et de jure, or an irrebuttable presumption, is one which the law will not suffer to be rebutted by any counter-evidence, but establishes as conclusive; while a presumption juris tantum is one which holds good in the absence of evidence to the contrary, but may be rebutted.

Juris et seisinæ conjunctio /jūrəs e t sīyzənə kɔnʤəntʃiə/. The union of seisin or possession and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Bl. Comm. 199, 311.

Juris ignorancia est cum nos nostrum ignoramus /jūrəs ɪɡnəroˈnæsə ɪst kəm nɔs nɔstrəm ɪɡnərəˈmæs/. It is ignorance of the law when we do not know our own rights.

Jurisceptor /jūrəsəmpəˈtɔːr/. Lat. A student of the civil law.

Jurisperitus /jūrəspəˈrətəs/. Lat. Skilled or learned in the law.

Juris positivi /jūrəs pɔʃtəˈvivə/. Of positive law; a regulation or requirement of positive law, as distinguished from natural or divine law.

Juris praecpta sunt hæc: honeste vivere; alterum non leedere; suum cuique tribuere /jūrəs praˈsɛptə sənt ˈhɔnɛstɪ ˈvɪvəri; əltərəm nɔn leˈdɛrə; suːm kjuˈkwɛ triˈbruɛrə/. These are the precepts of the law: To live honorably; to hurt nobody; to render to every one his due.

Juris privati /jūrəs prəˈvætɪ/. Of private right; subjects of private property.

Jurisprudence. The philosophy of law, or the science which treats of the principles of positive law and legal relations.

In the proper sense of the word, "jurisprudence" is the science of law, namely, that science which has for its function to ascertain the principles on which legal rules are based, so as not only to classify those rules in their proper order, and show the relation in which they stand to one another, but also to settle the manner in which new or doubtful cases should be brought under the appropriate rules. Jurisprudence is more a formal than a material science. It has no direct concern with questions of moral or political policy, for they fall under the province of ethics and legislation; but, when a new or doubtful case arises to which two different rules seem, when taken literally, to be equally applicable, it may be, and often is, the function of jurisprudence to consider the ultimate effect which would be produced if each rule were applied to an indefinite number of similar cases, and to choose that rule which, when so applied, will produce the greatest advantage to the community.

For Comparative jurisprudence and Medical jurisprudence, see those titles. For equity jurisprudence, see Equity.

Jurisprudentiā /jurispruwdensh(i)yə/. Lat. In the civil and common law, jurisprudence, or legal science.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scientia /jūraspruwdensh(i)yə êst divinērōm ētkwiy hyūwmanērōm rīrōm nowtūsh(i)yə, jūstay ētkwiy înjástay sayēnsh(i)yə/. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of what is right and what is wrong.

Jurisprudentia legis communis anglicae est scientia socialis et copiosa /jurispruwdensh(i)yə liyjas kamyuwnas ārgliyiy êst sayēnsh(i)yə sōwes(h)iōyylas ēt kōwpıyōwə/. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science social and comprehensive.

Juris publici /jūras pbālsəsə/. Of common right; of common or public use; such things as, at least in their own use, are common to all the king's subjects; as common highways, common bridges, common rivers, and common ports.

Jurist. One who is versed or skilled in law; answering to the Latin "jurisperitus" (q.v.). A judge; a legal scholar.

The term is commonly applied to those who have distinguished themselves by their writings on legal subjects or to judges.

Juristic /jōrīstək/. Pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, jurisprudence, or a jurist, or the legal profession.

Juristic act. One designed to have a legal effect, and capable thereof. An act of a private individual directed to the origin, termination, or alteration of a right.

Juris doctor. See J.D.

Juris utrum /jūras yūwrəm/. In English law, an abolished writ which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof.

Juror. Member of jury. In addition to regular jurors, term includes special and alternate jurors.

Juror's book. A list of persons qualified to serve on juries. See also Jury-list.

Jury. A certain number of men and women selected according to law, and sworn (jurati) to inquire of certain matters of fact, and declare the truth upon evidence to be laid before them. This definition embraces the various subdivisions of juries; as grand jury, petit jury, common jury, special jury, coroner's jury, sheriff's jury (q.v.).

A jury is a body of persons temporarily selected from the citizens of a particular district, and invested with power to present or indict a person for a public offense, or to try a question of fact. See also Trier of fact.

Advisory jury. A body of jurors impanelled to hear a case in which the parties have no right to a jury trial. The judge remains solely responsible for the findings and he may accept or reject the jury's verdict. Fed.R.Civ.P. 39(c). See also Advisory jury.

Blue ribbon jury. Jury not drawn from the community at large, but one selected from unusually qualified people; an exceptional jury.

Challenge to jury. See Jury challenge.

Common jury. The ordinary kind of jury (i.e. petit jury) by which issues of fact are generally tried, as distinguished from a special jury (q.v.).

Deadlocked jury. See Hung jury, below.

Fair and impartial jury. See Fair and impartial jury.

Foreign jury. A jury obtained from a county or jurisdiction other than that in which issue was joined.

Grand jury. A jury of inquiry who are summoned and returned by the sheriff to each session of the criminal courts, and whose duty is to receive complaints and accusations in criminal cases, hear the evidence adduced on the part of the state, and find bills of indictment in cases where they are satisfied a trial ought to be had. They are first sworn, and instructed by the court. This is called a "grand jury" because it comprises a greater number of jurors than the ordinary trial jury or "petit jury." At common law, a grand jury consisted of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three men.

Body of citizens, the number of whom varies from state to state, whose duties consist in determining whether probable cause exists that a crime has been committed and whether an indictment (true bill) should be returned against one for such a crime. If the grand jury determines that probable cause does not exist, it returns a "no bill." It is an accusatory body and its function does not include a determination of guilt.

Federal grand jury. Every grand jury impaneled before any federal district court shall consist of not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-three persons. If less than sixteen of the persons summoned attend, they shall be placed on the grand jury, and the court shall order the marshal to summon, either immediately or for a day fixed, from the body of the district, and not from the bystanders, a sufficient number of persons to See also Inquest; Special grand jury.

Hung jury. A jury which is unable to agree on a verdict after a suitable period of deliberation; a deadlocked jury. The result is a mistrial of the case. See Dynamite instruction.

Impanelling of jury. See Impanel; Jury challenge.

Impartial jury. See Impartial jury.

Inquest jury. A jury of inquest is a body of persons summoned from the citizens of a particular district before the sheriff, coroner, or other ministerial officers, to inquire of particular facts. See Inquest.

Jury instructions. See Jury instructions.

Jury size. While at common law, and traditionally, a jury consisted of 12 members, there is no constitutional infirmity or deficiency in a jury of less than twelve; and it is common for state and Federal district court juries to consist of six persons for civil cases, instead of twelve (e.g. Dist. of Mass.). Colgrove v. Battin, 413 U.S. 149, 93 S.Ct. 2448, 37 L.Ed.2d 522. Also, in federal district courts, and many state courts, the parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of any number less than twelve. Fed.R.Civ.P. 48; Fed.R.Crim.P. 23. For size of federal grand jury, see Federal grand jury, above.

Petit jury. The ordinary jury for the trial of a civil or criminal action; so called to distinguish it from the grand jury.

Polling of jury. See Polling the jury.

Sequestration of jury. In some cases of great notoriety, the trial judge will order the jury to be isolated from the public (e.g. confined to area of hotel while trial not in session) for the duration of the trial to prevent tampering and exposure to trial publicity. In these cases the jurors are always in the custody of the court.

Special jury. A jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy. Called, from the manner in which it is constituted, a "struck jury." See Striking a jury.

At common law, a jury composed of persons above the rank of ordinary freeholders; usually summoned to try questions of greater importance than those usually submitted to common juries.

Traverse jury. See Traverse.

Trial jury. The jury participating in the trial of a given case; or a jury summoned and impaneled for the trial of a case, and in this sense a petit jury as distinguished from a grand jury. A body of persons returned from the citizens of a particular district before a court or officer of competent jurisdiction, and sworn to try and determine, by verdict, a question of fact.

Jury-box. The place in court (strictly an inclosed place) where the jury sits during the trial of a cause.

Jury challenge. Challenge for cause. In most jurisdictions, each party to the litigation has the right to a certain number of peremptory challenges to jurors at the time of impanelling. In addition, a party has the right to challenge a juror by furnishing a satisfactory reason why such juror should not be seated such as bias or knowledge of the case. Unlike the peremptory challenge for which no reason need be given, the party challenging a juror for cause must satisfy the trial judge that his reasons are compelling. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24. See also Challenge.

Challenge to array. A challenge to the entire jury venire based on such grounds as systematic exclusion of women, blacks, young persons, etc. in the selection process.

Peremptory challenge. A challenge to a juror at the time of impanelling for which no reason need be advanced; in most jurisdictions each party is entitled to a certain number of such challenges in addition to challenges for cause. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24.

Jury commissioner. An officer charged with the duty of selecting the names to be put into the jury wheel, or of drawing the panel of jurors for a particular term of court. Local official responsible for collecting lists of qualified prospective jurors for submission to court.

Jury instructions. A direction given by the judge to the jury concerning the law of the case; a statement made by the judge to the jury informing them of the law applicable to the case in general or some aspect of it; an exposition or the rules or principles of law applicable to the case or some branch or phase of it, which the jury are bound to accept and apply. Attorneys for both sides normally furnish judge with suggested instructions. Fed.R.Civ.P. 51; Fed.R.Crim.P. 30. Many states and federal courts have model or pattern jury instructions which are required to be used, or substantially followed, by the trial judge.

See also Allen charge; Argumentative instruction; Cautionary instruction; Charge (Charge to jury); Conversion instruction; Dynamite instruction; Formula instruction; Golden Rule argument. For request for instructions, see Request.

Additional instructions. If during the course of deliberations the jury is unclear about a particular point of law or aspect of the evidence it may request the court for additional or supplementary instructions.

Mandatory instruction. A mandatory instruction unequivocally charges the jury that if jurors find from preponderance of evidence that certain set of facts exists, jurors must find for one party and against the other. Skaggs v. Davis, 424 N.E.2d 137, 141. Mandatory instructions are those which attempt to set up a factual situation and direct jury to a certain result and they are to be distinguished from instructions which Peremptory instruction. An instruction given by a court to a jury which the latter must obey implicitly; as an instruction to return a verdict for the defendant, or for the plaintiff, as the case may be. See also Mandatory instruction, above.

Jury-list. A paper containing the names of jurors impaneled to try a cause, or the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court. See also Jury panel.

Jury of matrons. See Matrons, jury of.

Jury panel. The group of prospective jurors who are summoned to appear on a stated day and from which a grand jury or petit jury is chosen. See Impanel; Jury-list.

Jury polling. See Polling the jury.

Jury process. The process by which a jury is summoned in a cause, and by which their attendance is enforced. See also Impanel.

Jury questions. In general, term refers to questions of fact which are peculiarly within the province of the jury as contrasted with questions of law which must be decided by the judge. Term may also refer to special questions or interrogatories which the court may direct to the jury for a special verdict. Fed.R.Civil P. 49. See also Voir dire.

Jury summation. See Closing argument.

Jury trial. Trial of matter or cause before jury as opposed to trial before judge. Such right is guaranteed with respect to criminal cases by Art. III, Sec. 2, cl. 3 of U.S.Const., and with respect to "suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars" by the Seventh Amendment. Such right is also preserved by rule of court (e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 38) and by the Fifth Amendment which provides inter alia for indictment by grand jury, and the Sixth Amendment which contains further specifications respecting jury trial in criminal cases. In addition, state constitutions provide for right to jury trial and the Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees a right of jury trial in all state criminal cases which—were they to be tried in federal court—would come within the Sixth Amendment's guarantee. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 88 S.Ct. 1444, 20 L.Ed.2d 491.

The right to "jury trial" of controverted issues implies a trial by an impartial and qualified jury. Alexander v. R. D. Crier & Sons Co., 181 Md. 415, 30 A.2d 757, 759. See also Trial.

Jury wheel. Physical device or electronic system for the storage and random selection of the names or identifying numbers of prospective jurors. A machine containing the names of persons qualified to serve as grand and petit jurors, from which, in an order determined by the hazard of its revolutions, are drawn a sufficient number of such names to make up the panels for a given term of court.

Jurywoman. Member of a jury of matrons.

Jus /jʊs/. Lat. In Roman law, right; justice; law; the whole body of law; also a right. The term is used in two meanings:

1. "Jus" means "law," considered in the abstract; that is, as distinguished from any specific enactment, the science or department of learning, or quasi personified factor in human history or conduct or social development, which we call, in a general sense, "the law." Or it means the law taken as a system, an aggregate, a whole; "the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together." Or it may designate some one particular system or body of particular laws; as in the phrases "jus civile," "jus gentium," "jus praetorum."

2. In a second sense, "jus" signifies "a right;" that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand inherent in one person and incident upon another; or a capacity residing in one person of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of another. This is its meaning in the expressions "jus in rem," "jus accrescendi," "jus possessioniis."

It is thus seen to possess the same ambiguity as the words "droit," "recht," and "right" (q.v.). Within the meaning of the maxim that "ignorantia juris non excusat" (ignorance of the law is no excuse), the word "jus" is used to denote the general law or ordinary law of the land, and not a private right.

Some further meanings of the word are:

An action, or, rather, those proceedings in the Roman action which were conducted before the praetor.

Power or authority. Sui juris, in one's own power; independent. Alieni juris, under another's power.

The profession (ars) or practice of the law. Jus ponitur pro ipsa arte.

A court or judicial tribunal (locus in quo redditur jus).

Jus abstinendi /jʊs əbstinændə/. The right of renunciation; the right of an heir, under the Roman law, to renounce or decline the inheritance, as, for example, where his acceptance, in consequence of the necessity of paying the debts, would make it a burden to him.

Jus abutendi /jʊs əbytændæ/. The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to do exactly as one likes with property, or having full dominion over property.

Jus accrescendi /jʊs əkrəsəndæ/. The right of survivorship. In re Brogan's Estate, 165 Misc. 111, 300 N.Y.S. 447, 455. The right of the survivor or survivors of two or more joint tenants to the tenancy or estate, upon the death of one or more of the joint tenants. In re Capria's Estate, 89 Misc. 101, 151 N.Y.S. 385, 386.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores, pro beneficio commercii, locum non habet /jʊs əkrəsəndæ ìntær mærkətərɪz, prəw ənˈfɪʃəlɪ kəməˈmɛrəˌsi, ləˈukəm nən hýbat/. The right of survivorship has no place between merchants, for the benefit of commerce. There is no survivorship in cases of partnership, as there is in joint-tenancy.

Jus accrescendi praefurtur oneribus /jás əkrɛsɛndɛˈdɛʃ ɔnɛrɪbʊs/. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Hence no dower or curtesy can be claimed out of a joint estate.

Jus accrescendi praefurtur ultima voluntati /jás əkrɛsɛndɛˈdɛʃ ɔlˈtɪmə vəlɔntəˈtɛɪtə/. The right of survivorship is preferred to the last will. A devise of one's share of a joint estate, by will, is no severance of the jointure; for no testament takes effect till after the death of the testator, and by such death the right of the survivor (which accrued at the original creation of the estate, and has therefore a priority to the other) is already vested. 2 Bl.Comm. 186.

Jus actus /jás əkˈtəs/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person a passage for carriages, or for cattle.

Jus ad rem /jás əd ˈrɛm/. A term of the civil law, meaning "a right to a thing:" that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation incurred by another person in respect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jus in re, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all persons. Mire v. Sunray DX Oil Co., D.C.La., 285 F.Supp. 885, 889.

The disposition of writers is to use the term "jus ad rem" as descriptive of a right without possession, and "jus in re" as descriptive of a right accompanied by possession. Or, in a somewhat wider sense, the former denotes an inchoate or incomplete right to a thing; the latter, a complete and perfect right to a thing. The Carlos F. Roses, 177 U.S. 655, 20 S.Ct. 803, 44 L.Ed. 929.

In canon law, a right to a thing. An inchoate and imperfect right, such as is gained by nomination and institution; as distinguished from jus in re or complete and full right, such as is acquired by corporal possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 312.

Jus Ælianum /jás iˈliːjənəm/. A body of laws drawn up by Sextus Ælius, and consisting of three parts, wherein were explained, respectively: (1) The laws of the Twelve Tables; (2) the interpretation of and decisions upon such laws; and (3) the forms of procedure. In date, it was subsequent to the jus Flavianum (q.v.).

Jus æquum /jás əˈkwɔm/. A term used by the Romans to express the adaptation of the law to the circumstances of the individual case as opposed to jus strictum (q.v.).

Jus as necia /jás əsˈnɛʃəˈtɪʃə/. The right of primogeniture (q.v.).

Jus albinatus /jás əlˈbɪnətəs/. The droit d'aubaine (q.v.). See Albinatus jus.

Jus angaria /jás æŋˈɡɛriəˈtɪʃə/. See Angaria; Angary, right of.

Jus aqueductus /jás əkwəˈdɛktəs/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another.

Jus aquæ haustus /jás ækwəˈhɔstəs/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person a right of watering cattle on another's field, or of drawing water from another's well.

Jus banci /jás bənsəˈtɪʃə/. In old English law, the right of bench. The right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, customarily allowed only to the king's judges, who hence were said to administer high justice (summam administrant justitiam).

Jus belii /jás bəˈlɪ/. The law of war. The law of nations as applied to a state of war, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers themselves, and of neutral nations. That which may be done without injustice with regard to an enemy.

Jus bellum dicendi /jás bəˈlɪm dɪˈsɛndɪ/. The right of proclaiming war.

Jus canonicum /jás kəˈnɒnɪkəm/. The canon law.

Jus civile /jás sɪˈvɪlə/. Civil law. The system of law peculiar to one state or people. Particularly, in Roman law, the civil law of the Roman people, as distinguished from the jus gentium. The term is also applied to the body of law called, emphatically, the "civil law." See also Civil law.

The jus civile and the jus gentium are distinguished in this way. All people ruled by statutes and customs use a law partly peculiar to themselves, partly common to all men. The law each people has settled for itself is peculiar to the state itself, and is called "jus civile," as being peculiar to that very state. The law, again, that natural reason has settled among all men,—the law that is guarded among all peoples quite alike,—is called the "jus gentium," and all nations use it as if law. The Roman people, therefore, use a law that is partly peculiar to itself, partly common to all men.

But this is not the only, or even the general, use of the words. What the Roman jurists had chiefly in view, when they spoke of "jus civile," was not local as opposed to cosmopolitan law, but the old law of the city as contrasted with the newer law introduced by the praetor (*jus pretorium, jus honorarium). Largely, no doubt, the jus gentium corresponds with the jus pretorium; but the correspondence is not perfect.

Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit /jás sɪˈvɪlə ðə kɔˈsidɪtɪtʊt/. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself.

Jus civitatus /jás sɪvɪˈtætəs/. The right of citizenship; the freedom of the city of Rome. It differs from jus quiritium, which comprehended all the privileges of a free native of Rome. The difference is much the same as between "denization" and "naturalization".

Jus cloacæ /jás kləˈwɔsɛ, kləˈwɔsɛ/ *(kłɔˈwɔsɛ)/. In the civil law, the right of sewerage or drainage. An easement consisting in the right of having a sewer, or of conducting surface water, through the house or over the ground of one's neighbor.

Jus commune/jas komyuwniy/. In the Civil law, common right; the common and natural rule of right, as opposed to jus singulare (q.v.).

In English law, the common law, answering to the Saxon "folkright."

Jus constituiri oportet in his case that plurimum accident non que ex inopinato/ajas kanstityuway eks inopinato quae ex inopinato/. Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence.

Jus coronae /jas karowniy/. In English law, the right of the crown, or to the crown; the right of succession to the throne.

Jus curialitatis /jas kyuriyaelateytas/. In English law, the right of the function and prerogative of the legislative department.

Jus dare /jas daval(y)uwtam/. The right of the right of deliberating. A term granted by the proper right to the use of rivers.

Jus devolutum /jas davallyuwtam/. The right of the church of presenting a minister to a vacant parish, in case the patron shall neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law.

Jus dicere /jas dáyseriy/. To declare the law; to say what the law is. The province of a court or judge.

Jus dicere, et non jus dare /jas dáyseriy, et nôn jas dériy/. To declare the law, not to make it.

Jus disponendi /jas dispänenday/. The right of disposing. An expression used either generally to signify the right of alienation, as when we speak of depriving a married woman of the jus disponendi over her separate estate, or specially in the law relating to sales of goods, where it is often a question whether the vendor of goods has the intention of reserving to himself the jus disponendi; i.e., of preventing the ownership from passing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he (the vendor) has parted with the possession of the goods.

Jus distrahendi /jas distrahenday/. The right of sale of goods pledged in case of non-payment. See Distress; Pledge.

Jus dividendi /jas dividénday/. The right of disposing of realty by will.
Jus individuum /jas indavidyuwam/. An individual or /jas inkognatam/. An unknown law.

Jus incognitum /jas amaejanas/. In Roman law, the right /jas habenday et retanenday/. Jus habendi et retinendi Jus habendi /jas habenday/. The right to have a thing.

Jus gladii /jas glaediyay/. The right of the sword; the /jas jar&nday intar sliyows feektam nek prodesse debet/. An oath made between Jus habendi et retinendi /jas habenday et rétanénday/. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

Jus hereditatis /jas harèdstéytas/. The right of inheritance.

Jus haerendi /jas hohriyenday/. In the civil and old English law, the right of drawing water.

Jus honorarium /jas (h)onareriyam/. The body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrates, particularly the prae tors.

Jus honorum /jas (h)anoram/. In Roman law, the right of holding offices. See Jus sufragii.

Jus imaginis /jas sméjénas/. In Roman law, the right to use or display pictures or statues of ancestors; somewhat analogous to the right, in English law, to bear a coat of arms.

Jus immunitatis /jas amyùwnsteytas/. In the civil law, the law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office.

Jus incognito /jas inkògnatom/. An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws.

Jus individuum /jas indaviduwyaym/. An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division.

Jus in personam /jas in parsównam/. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

Jus in re /jas in riy/. A right in a thing. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 847. A right existing in a person with respect to an article or subject of property, inherent in his relation to it, implying complete ownership with posses sion, and available against all the world.

See Jus ad rem.

Jus in re aliena /jas in riy élyliyynat/. An easement on servitude, or right in, or arising out of, the property of another.

Jus in re in harit ossibus usufructuarii /jas in riy inhurit osbas yuwz(h)uwfraktéryiyay/. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

Jus in re propria /jas in riy prówpriya/. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jus in re aliena, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

Jus italicum /jas stálakam/. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the aggregate of rights, privileges, and franchises possessed by the cities and inhabitants of Italy, outside of the city of Rome, and afterwards extended to some of the colonies and provinces of the empire, consisting principally in the right to have a free constitution, to be exempt from the land tax, and to have the title to the land regarded as Quiritanian property.

Jus itineris /jas aytinaras/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person the right to pass over an adjoining field, on foot or horseback.

Jus jurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet: ut deus invocetur /jas jarénday fórmay várbas fírfart, riy kanvíynay; hânk iyam sénóm habíriy débat: át diáys invísíyýtay/. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense; that the deity is invoked.

Jus jurandum /jas jaréndam/. Lat. An oath.

Jus jurandum inter alios factum nec nocere nec prodesse debet /jas jaréndam intar deliyows fêtakm nèk násríy nèk prádesiay débat/. An oath made between others ought neither to hurt nor profit.

Jus Latii /jas léshiyay/. In Roman law, the right of Latium or of the Latins.

The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the praetor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites.

Jus Latium /jas lésh(ly)yam/. In Roman law, a rule of law applicable to magistrates in Latium. It was either /jas lésh(y)yam/. In Roman law, a rule of law applicable to magistrates in Latium. It was either majus Latium or minus Latium,—the majus Latium raising to the dignity of Roman citizen not only the magistrate himself, but also his wife and children; the minus Latium raising to that dignity only the magistrate himself.

Jus legitimum /jas lajitamam/. A legal right. In the civil law, a right which was receivable in the ordinary course of law.
Jus non sacrum /jús nón sekram/. In Roman law, the privilege conferred upon a woman who had three or four children.

Jus mariti /jús márstit/. The right of a husband; especially the right which a husband acquires to his wife's moveable estate by virtue of the marriage.

Jus merum /jús mýram/. In old English law, mere or bare right; the mere right of property in lands, without either possession or even the right of possession.

Jus moribus constitutum /jús móróbós könisístyúwítam/. See Jus ex non scripto.

Jus naturae /jús nátýuriy/. The law of nature. See Jus naturale.

Jus naturale /jús nátýuryly/. The natural law, or law of nature; law, or legal principles, supposed to be discoverable by the light of nature or abstract reasoning, or to be taught by nature to all nations and men alike; or law supposed to govern men and peoples in a state of nature, i.e., in advance of organized governments or enacted laws. See Natural law.

This concept originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substrate common to all systems of positive law, and hence to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed in common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, it must be a part of the "jus naturale", or derived from it. Thus the phrases "jus naturale" and "jus gentium" came to be used interchangeably.

Jus naturale est quod apud homines eandem habet potentiam /jús nátýuryly est kwó áp pod hóminiyz lýándam hýybut pôtényshiyam/. Natural right is that which has the same force among all mankind.

Jus navigandi /jús návygánday/. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea.

Jus necis /jús niýss/. In Roman law, the right of death, or of putting to death. A right which a father anciently had over his children. See Jus vitae necisque.

Jus non habenti tute non paretur /jús nón hábentay tyútay nón párytay/. One who has no right cannot be safely obeyed.

Jus non patitur ut idem bis solvatur /jús nón pátytay ut ídém biís sólytay/. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

Jus non sacrum /jús nón sekram/. In Roman law, that portion of the jús publicum which regulated the duties of magistrates.

Non-sacred law; that which dealt with the duties of civil magistrates, the preservation of public order, and the rights and duties of persons in their relation to the state. It was analogous to that which would now be called the police power.
remedy by legal action, but only by entreaty or request. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

Jus privatum /jás pravéytam/. Private law; the law regulating the rights, conduct, and affairs of individuals, as distinguished from "public" law, which relates to the constitution and functions of government and the administration of criminal justice. The right of a person acquiring title to lands under navigable waters to fill in such lands, making upland out of foreshore, and thus extinguishing jus publicum, subject to right of sovereign to make public improvements on tide water for benefit of commerce. Arnold's Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc.2d 279, 310 N.Y.S.2d 541, 547.

Also private ownership, or the right, title, or dominion of a private owner, as distinguished from "jus publicum," which denotes public ownership, or the ownership of property by the government, either as a matter of territorial sovereignty or in trust for the benefit and advantage of the general public. In this sense, a state may have a double right in given property, e.g., lands covered by navigable waters within its boundaries, including both "jus publicum," a sovereign or political title, and "jus privatum," a proprietary ownership.

Jus projiciendi /jás prajis(h)iyenday/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which consists in the right to build a projection, such as a balcony or gallery, from one's house in the open space belonging to one's neighbor, but without resting on his house.

Jus proprietas /jás própráyatétysás/. The right of property, as distinguished from the jús possessíonís or right of possession.

Jus protegendi /jás prówtajenday/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the roof or tiling of another house.

Jus pròtiméseos /jás pròwtamliyiýós/. The right of pre-emption of a landlord in case the tenant wishes to dispose of his rights as a perpetual lessee. Pactum pròtiméseos was the right of pre-emption to the seller, i.e. in case the buyer should sell, he must sell to the former seller.

Jus publicum /jás pablakam/. Public law, or the law relating to the constitution and functions of government and its officers and the administration of criminal justice. Also public ownership, or the paramount or sovereign territorial right or title of the state or government. The right shared by all to navigate on waters covering foreshore at high tide and, at low tide, to have access across foreshore to waters for fishing, bathing or any other lawful purpose. Arnold's Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc.2d 279, 310 N.Y.S.2d 541. See Jus privatum.

It implies a right in a sovereign or public capacity to be exercised for the interest or benefit of the state or the public, as distinguished from the exercise in a proprietary capacity of a right of the sovereign or a right possessed by an individual in common with the public.

Sovereign's right of jurisdiction and dominion for governmental purposes over all lands and waters within its territorial limits, including tidal waters and their bottoms, is sometimes termed "jus publicum."

Jus publicum et privatum quod ex naturaibus preceptis aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Anglice rectum esse dicitur /jás pablakam èt pravéytam kwód èks nátyaréylábás proséptas ót jésh(iy)am ót savíllábás ét kalékátam, ét kwód in júriy skriptów jás ápaélýýtar, id in lüyiy jéngliy réktam éshy disaťt/. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that which in the civil law is called "jus," in the law of England is said to be "right."

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest /jás pablakam präyatórom póktas mjuwtéytó nón pówtas/. A public law or right cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons.

Jus quæsitum /jás kwázáytam/. A right to ask or recover; for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jús quæsitum in the obligee.

Jus quiritium /jás kwérysh(iy)am/. The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jús pretorium (q.v.), or equity.

Jus recuperandi /jás rak(y)úwpórtényday/. The right of recovering [lands].

Jus representationis /jás represántéshiyównás/. The right of representing or standing in the place of another, or of being represented by another.

Jus rerum /jás rirom/. The law of things. The law regulating the rights and powers of persons over things; how property is acquired, enjoyed, and transferred.

Jus respicic aqüitatem /jás réspesat ékwatéytam/. Law regards equity.

Jus sacrum /jás sékrom/. In Roman law, that portion of the public law which was concerned with matters relating to public worship and including the regulation of sacrifices and the appointment of priests. There was a general division of the jús publicum in jús sacrum and jús non sacrum (q.v.).

Jus sanguinis /jás ságweñás/. The right of blood. The principle that a person's citizenship is determined by the citizenship of the parents. See Jus soli.

Jus scriptum /jás skriptam/. In English law, written law, or statute law, otherwise called "lex scripta," as distinguished from the common law, "lex non scripta."

1 Bl.Comm. 62.

In Roman law, all law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing.

Jus singularare /jás síngyaléry/. In the civil law, a peculiar or individual rule, differing from the jús commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason.

Jus soli /jás sówlaj/. The law of the place of one's birth as contrasted with jus sanguinis, the law of the place of one's descent or parentage. The principle that a person's citizenship is determined by place of birth rather than by the citizenship of one's parents. It is of feudal origin.

Jus spatiandi /jás spěšiý142142142142y/\. A right of way over land by the public by use merely for the purposes of recreation and instruction.

Jus stapula /jás stáypyaliy/\. In old European law, the law of staple; the right of staple. A right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets.

Jus stillicidi vel fluminis recipiendi /jás stilisídiyay vēl flýuywmanas rásipiyánday/\. In Roman law, an urban servitude giving the owner a right to project his roof over the land of another or to open a house drain upon it.

Jus strictum /jás striktsm/. Strict law; law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

Jus suffragii /jás safreyjiyay/. In Roman law, the right public rights of the Roman citizen.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori /jás-sýuwpvarviyln(i)yenka októrar akrèset sâksesôray/\. A right growing to a possessor accures to the successor.

Justa causa /jás'ta kóza/\. In the civil law, a just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind.

Just cause. A cause outside legal cause, which must be based on reasonable grounds, and there must be a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith. Dubois v. Gentry, 182 Tenn. 103, 184 S.W.2d 369, 371. Fair, adequate, reasonable cause. In re Municipal Garage in and for City of Utica, 141 Misc. 15, 252 N.Y.S. 18, 32. Legitimate cause; legal or lawful ground for action; such reasons as will suffice in law to justify the action taken. Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 310 Mass. 528, 39 N.E.2d 87, 112, 124. As used in statutory sense is that which to an ordinary intelligent person is justifiable reason for doing or not doing a particular act. Daugherty v. Admr., Bureau of Employment Services, 21 Ohio App.3d 1, 486 N.E.2d 242, 243, 21 O.B.R. 1. See Cause of action.

Under provision that no license shall be revoked without "just cause," the words imply that charges should be made and notice of hearing given and an opportunity to be heard afforded. Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110, 111.

Just cause of provocation. That which will constitute the homicide murder in the second degree, as distinguished from a lawful provocation, which will reduce it to manslaughter. State v. McCracken, 341 Mo. 697, 108 S.W.2d 372, 376.

Just compensation. Compensation which is fair to both the owner and the public when property is taken for public use through condemnation (eminent domain). Consideration is taken of such criteria as the cost of reproducing the property, its market value, and the resulting damage to the remaining property of the owner. The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that no private property shall be taken for public use, without "just compensation." Within Fifth Amendment provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, "just compensation" means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken. U. S. v. Reynolds, Ky., 397 U.S. 14, 90 S.Ct. 803, 805, 25 L.Ed.2d 12.

As regards property taken for public use, the term is comprehensive and includes all elements, Jacobs v. U. S., Ala., 290 U.S. 13, 53 S.Ct. 26, 78 L.Ed. 142; Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618, 621, but does not exceed market value. U. S. v. Waterhouse, C.C.A.Hawaii, 132 F.2d 699, 703. It means a settlement which leaves one no poorer or richer than he was before the property was taken. U. S. ex rel. Tennessee Valley Authority v. Indian Creek Marble Co., D.C.Tenn., 40 F.Supp. 811, 818, 819. Adequate compensation. State v. Hale, Tex.Civ. App., 96 S.W.2d 135, 141. Fair market value. Cameron Development Co. v. United States, C.C.A.Fla., 145 F.2d 209, 210. Full and perfect equivalent of the property taken. U. S. v. 2.4 Acres of Land, More or Less, in Lake County, Ill., C.C.A.Ill., 138 F.2d 295, 297. It is the fair market value of property taken at time of taking, Danforth v. U. S., Mo., 308 U.S. 271, 60 S.Ct. 231, 236, 84 L.Ed. 240; plus compensation for delay in payment, Kieselbach v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 317 U.S. 399, 63 S.Ct. 303, 305, 87 L.Ed. 358; or consequential damages to the owner, In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 277 N.Y. 452, 14 N.E.2d 789; or value of use of property from date of taking possession to date of judgment if possession is taken by condemnor prior to judgment. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 314, 119 P.2d 734, 736. It requires that the owner be put in as good position pecuniarily as he would otherwise have been if the property had not been taken. Almota Farmers Elevator & Warehouse Co. v. U.S., Wash., 93 S.Ct. 791, 794, 409 U.S. 470. Interest is recoverable in eminent domain proceedings as part of "just compensation" when payment is not contemporaneous with the taking. New Hampshire Water Resources Bd. v. Vera, 108 N.H. 18, 225 A.2d 774, 775, 776. Market value at time of taking; i.e. highest price for which property considered at its best and most profitable use can be sold in open market by willing seller to willing buyer, neither acting under compulsion and both exercising reasonable judgment. State Highway Commission v. American Memorial Parks, Inc., 82 S.D. 231, 144 N.W.2d 25, 27. See also Adequate compensation; Similar sales.

Just debts. As used in a will or a statute, this term means legal, valid, and incontestable obligations, not including such as are barred by the statute of limitations or voidable at the election of the party. Jones’ Ex'r v. Jones, 275 Ky. 753, 122 S.W.2d 779, 780.

Jus tertii /jás társhey/. The right of a third party. A tenant, bailee, etc., who pleads that the title is in some person other than his landlord, bailor, etc., is said to set up a just tertii. Dempsey Oil & Gas Co. v. Citizens’ Nat. Bank, 110 Okl. 39, 235 P. 1104, 1107.

Jus testamentorum pertinet ordinario /jás testamentóram pörtanat ordanériow/. The right of testamentaries belongs to the ordinary. Justice, u. To do justice, to see justice done; to summon one to do justice.

Justice, n. Title given to judges, particularly to judges of U.S. and state supreme courts, and as well to judges of appellate courts. The U.S. Supreme Court, and most state supreme courts are composed of a chief justice and several associate justices.

Proper administration of laws. In jurisprudence, the constant and perpetual disposition of legal matters or disputes to render every man his due.

Commutative justice concerns obligations as between persons (e.g., in exchange of goods) and requires proportionate equality in dealings of person to person; Distributive justice concerns obligations of the community to the individual, and requires fair disbursement of common advantages and sharing of common burdens; Social justice concerns obligations of individual to community and its end is the common good.

In Feudal law, jurisdiction; judicial cognizance of causes or offenses. High justice was the jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. Low justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

See also Miscarriage of justice; Obstructing justice.

Justice Department. One of the executive departments of the federal government, headed by the Attorney General. The chief purposes of the Department of Justice are to enforce the federal laws, to furnish legal counsel in federal cases, and to construe the laws under which other departments act. It conducts all suits in the Supreme Court in which the United States is concerned, supervises the federal penal institutions, and investigates and detects violations against federal laws. It represents the government in legal matters generally, rendering legal advice and opinions, upon request, to the President and to the heads of the executive departments. The Attorney General supervises and directs the activities of the U.S. attorneys and marshals in the various judicial districts. See Attorney General.

Justice in eyre /jástas in ér/. From the old French word “ëire,” i.e., a journey. Those justices who in ancient times were sent by commission into various counties, to hear more especially such causes as were termed “pleas of the crown,” were called “justices in eyre.” They differed from justices in oyer and terminer, inasmuch as the latter were sent to one place, and for the purpose of trying only a limited number of special causes; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the various counties, with a more indefinite and general commission. In some respects they resembled our present justices of assize, although their authority and manner of proceeding differed much from them. In England, such justices made a circuit every seven years throughout the Kingdom to try causes.

Justicements /jástasment/. An old general term for all things appertaining to justice.

Justice of the peace. A judicial magistrate (of English origin) of inferior rank having (usually) jurisdiction limited to that prescribed by statute in civil matters (e.g., performance of marriages) and jurisdiction over minor criminal offenses, committing more serious crimes to higher courts. Trend in most states has been to abolish office and courts of justice of the peace, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g. municipal or district courts. See Justice’s courts.

Justicer /jástasar/. The old form of justice.

Justice’s clerk. An amanuensis of the justice. A justice of the peace is regarded as his own clerk, and, in making entries on his docket, he acts in a ministerial capacity. State ex rel. Morris Bldg. & Inv. Co. v. Brown, 228 Mo.App. 760, 72 S.W.2d 859, 862.

Justice’s courts. Inferior tribunals, not of record, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, held by justices of the peace. The trend has been to abolish such courts, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g. municipal or district courts.

Justice seat. In old English law, the principal court of the forest, held before the chief justice in eyre, or chief itinerant judge or his deputy; to hear and determine all trespasses within the forest, and all claims of franchises, liberties, and privileges, and all pleas and causes whatsoever therein arising. 3 Bl.Comm. 72.

Justiceship. Rank or office of a justice.

Justices of assize /jástasaz av aséyz/. These justices, or, as they were sometimes called, “justices of nisi prius,” were judges of the superior English courts, who went on circuit into the various counties of England and Wales for the purpose of disposing of such causes as were ready for trial at the assizes. See Assize.
Justices of gaol delivery. In old English law, those justices who were sent with a commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to persons, who, for any offense, had been cast into gaol. Part of their authority was to punish those who let to mainprise those prisoners who were not bailable by law, and they seem formerly to have been sent into the country upon this exclusive occasion, but afterwards had the same authority given them as the justices of assize.

Justices of laborers. In old English law, justices appointed to redress the frowardness of laboring men, who would either be idle or have unreasonable wages.

Justices of nisi prius /jástasaz ov nýaysay práyəs/. In old English law, this title was usually coupled with that of justices of assize; the judges of the superior courts acting on their circuits in both these capacities. See Assise.

Justices of oyer and terminer /jástasaz ov óyər ænd tármañər/. In England, certain persons appointed by the king’s commission, among whom were usually two judges of the courts at Westminster, and who went twice in every year to every county of the kingdom (except London and Middlesex), and, at what was usually called the “assizes,” heard and determined all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. See Oyer and termer.

Justices of the bench. In England, the justices of the court of common bench or common pleas.

Justices of the forest. In old English law, officers who had jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the forest against vert or venison. The court wherein these justices sat and determined such causes was called the “justice seat of the forest.” They were also sometimes called the “justices in eyre of the forest.” See Forest Court.

Justices of the hundred. Hundredors; lords of the hundreds. In old English law, they who had the jurisdiction of hundreds and held the hundred courts. See Hundred Court.

Justices of the quorum. See Quorum.

Justices of trial-baston. See Trail-baston.

Justiciability. See Justiciable controversy.

Justiciable /jástish(i)yəbal/. Matter appropriate for court review. See Justiciable controversy.

Justiciable controversy. A controversy in which a present and fixed claim of right is asserted against one who has an interest in contesting it; rights must be declared upon existing state of facts and not upon state of facts that may or may not arise in future. A question as may properly come before a tribunal for decision. Duart Mfg. Co. v. Philad Co., D.C.Del., 30 F.Supp. 777, 779, 780. Courts will only consider a “justiciable” controversy, as distinguished from a hypothetical difference or dispute or one that is academic or moot. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 239, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463, 81 L.Ed. 617. Term refers to real and substantial controversy which is appropriate for judicial determination, as distinguished from dispute or difference of contin-gent, hypothetical or abstract character. State v. Nardini, 187 Conn. 109, 445 A.2d 304, 307. Compare Political questions. See Case; Cause of action; Controversy.

Justiciar /jástish(i)yərə/. In old English law, a judge or justice. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty. Also spelled justicer.

Justiciarii itinerantes /jástish(i)yəriyəy aytinərəntiyə/. In old English law, justices in eyre, who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were so called to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called “justicii residentes”.

Justiciarii residentes /jástish(i)yəriyəy rəzəndəntiyə/. In old English law, justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster. They were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre.

Justiciary /jástish(i)yərəy/. An old name for a judge or justice. The word is formed on the analogy of the Latin “juriciarius” and French “justicier”; and is a variant of justiciar (q.v.).

Justiciatus /jástishiyətəs/. Judicature; prerogative. The proceeding by which bail establishes the ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.

Justiciar. Fr. See Justiciar.

Justices /jástish(i)yərəy/. In old English law, a writ directed to the sheriff, empowering him, for the sake of dispatch, to try an action in his county court for a larger amount than he has the ordinary power to do. It is so called because it is a commission to the sheriff to do the party justice, the word itself meaning, “You may do justice to .”. 3 Bl.Comm. 36.

Justifiable. Rightful; defensible; warranted or sanctioned by law; that which can be shown to be sustained by law, as justifiable homicide. See Homicide; Justifiable homicide.

Justifiable cause. Justifiable cause for prosecution is well-founded belief of person of ordinary caution, prudence, and judgment in existence of facts essential to prosecution. See also Probable cause.

Justifiable homicide. Killing of another in self-defense when danger of death or serious bodily injury exists. Such homicide generally connotes only the use of force which is necessary, or which reasonably appears to be necessary, to resist other party’s misconduct; and use of excessive force destroys the justification. People v. Bates, 256 C.A.2d 935, 64 Cal.Rptr. 575, 578. An act which the law positively enjoins upon the perpetrator or positively permits him to perform, such as a capital crime execution or the prevention of a crime or escape by a proper officer. Law v. State, 21 Md.App. 13, 318 A.2d 859, 869. See Self-defense.

Justification. Just, lawful excuse or reason for act or failure to act. A maintaining or showing a sufficient reason in court why the defendant did what he is called upon to answer, particularly in an action of libel and as a defense to criminal charges of assault or homicide (e.g., self defense).
Justitia is a procedure with common-law origins by which a surety must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the court that it has sufficient ability to perform its obligations. Matthews v. IMC Mint Corp., C.A.Utah, 542 F.2d 544, 546.

Term is not widely used in torts where, instead, defenses and privilages are common.

See also Legal excuse; Necessity; Self-defense.

Justificators /jästifikskeytarz/. A kind of compurgators (q.v.), or those who by oath justified the innocence or oaths of others; as in the case of wager or law.

Justifying bail. Consists in the requirement of proving the sufficiency of bail or sureties in point of property, etc. See Bail (Bail point scale).

Justitia inmitten di /jás tigny imatenday/. In Roman law, an urban servitude which gave the right of inserting a beam into the wall of another.

Justinianist /jástin(i)yanist/. A civilian; one who studies the civil law.

Justinian's institutes /jástin(i)yaz instat(y)uwts/. See Institutes.

Justitia /jástish(i)y/. Lat. Justice. A jurisdiction, or the office of a judge.

Justitia debet esse libera, quia nihil iniquus venali justitia; plena, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et celeris, quia dilatatio est quaedam negatio /jástish(i)y/ debot éyí libéra, kwáyí náý(h)al enkñiwyäs vanélyay jástish(i)y; plýnya, kwáyí, jástish(i)y nó nób débót klódókeriy, ét seleras, kwáyí dálésh(i)yow êst kwíyém nagésh(i)yow/. Justíce ought to be free, because nothing is more iniquitous than venal justice; full, because justice ought not to halt; and speedy, because delay is a kind of denial.

Justitia est constans et perpetua voluntas jus suum cuique tribuendi /jástish(i)y/ est kónstánz et parpétýyuwa volántás jás sý(y)úwam kyuwakywyíwí tríb(y)uwénda/. Justice is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every man his due.

Justitia est duplex, viz., severe puniens et vere praveniens /jástish(i)y/ est dí(y)wpleks viz: savíryí pyúwn(i)yéns et víríyí pravíy(i)yéns/. Justice is double; punishing severely, and truly preventing.

Justitia est virtus excellens et altissimo complacens /jástish(i)y/ est vártás ékšálanz ét altísamow kamléyéns/. Justice is excellent virtue and pleasing to the most high.

Justitia firmatur solium /jástish(i)y/ fármyéters sów-lyám/. By justice the throne is established.

Justitia nemini neganda est /jástish(i)y/ némánay nagénda ést/.. Justice is to be denied to none.

Justitia non est neganda non differenda /jástish(i)y/ nó nów nó vápt pátrám nák méytrám; sówlám vêhráyetam spékát jástish(i)y/. Justice knows not father nor mother; justice looks at truth alone.

Justitia piepoudrous. Speedy justice.

Justitium /jástish(i)yam/. Lat. In the civil law, a suspension or intermission of the administration of justice in courts; vacation time.

As used in statute providing for acknowledgment of "justness" of claim to remove bar of limitations, refers to moral obligation. John W. Masury & Son v. Bisbee Lumber Co., 49 Ariz. 443, 68 P.2d 679, 693.

Jus tripetitum /jás tráypartáydam/. In Roman law, a name applied to the Roman law of wills, in the time of Justinian, on account of its three-fold derivation, viz., from the praetorian edict, from the civil law, and from the imperial constitutions.

Jus tripex est,—propietatis, possessionis, et possibilitatis /jás trípíks ést: propráyétýeys pazéshíyówn és pósáblítýeys/. Right is three-fold,—of property, of possession, and of possibility.

Jus trium liberorum /jas tryam laybaroram/. In Roman law, a right or privilege allowed to the parent of three or more children. These privileges were an exemption from the trouble of guardianship, priority in bearing offices, and a treble proportion of corn.

Jus title. By the term "just title," in cases of prescription, is meant a title which the possessor may have received from any person whom he honestly believed to be the real owner, provided the title was such as to transfer the ownership of the property. Davis v. Gaines, 104 U.S. 386, 400, 26 L.Ed. 757; B. Fernandez & Bros. v. Ayllon, 266 U.S. 144, 45 S.Ct. 52, 69 L.Ed. 209. One good against all the world. See Marketable title.

Justum non est aliquem antenatum mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habe- tur /jástám nó nó élakwam éntánéytm mórtóywam féyssary bóstárdam, kwáyí prów tówta váyta s(y)úw prów lájítáówm habíyta/. It is not just to make a bastard after his death one elder born who all his life has been accounted legitimate.

Just value. In taxation, the fair, honest, and reasonable value of property, without exaggeration or depreciation; its actual market value. See also Fair market value.

Jus utendi /jás yuwtenday/. The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi.

Jus venandi et piscandi /jás vanénday ̀t piskénday/. The right of hunting and fishing.

Jus vendit quod usus approbavit /jás vendat kwód yúwzas ėprébéyvát/. The law dispenses what use has approved.

Jus vitæ necisque /jás vaytiy nasiskwiy/. In Roman law, the right of life and death. Originally a father, or his pater-familias if he was himself in domestic subjection, could decide—not arbitrarily, but judicially—whether or not to rear his child; and while this right became subject to certain restrictions, yet when the child had grown up, the father, in the exercise of his domestic jurisdiction, might visit his son’s misconduct, both in private and public life, with such punishment as he thought fit, even banishment, slavery, or death. In the early Empire these rights became relaxed, and they disappeared in the Justinian law.

Juvenile. A young person who has not yet attained the age at which he or she should be treated as an adult for purposes of criminal law. In some states, this age is seventeen. Under the federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, a “juvenile” is a person who has not attained his eighteenth birthday. 18 U.S.C.A. § 5031. A term which may be, though not commonly is, applied to a person who has not reached his or her legal majority for purposes of contracting, marrying, etc. In law, the terms “juvenile” and “minor” are usually used in different contexts; the former used when referring to young criminal offenders, the latter to legal capacity or majority. See also Minor; Youthful offender.

Juvenile courts. A court having special jurisdiction, of a paternal nature, over delinquent, dependent, and neglected children. In juvenile court proceedings, due process requires that juveniles have right to notice of charges, to counsel, to confrontation and cross-examination of witnesses, and to privilege against self-incrimination. In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428, 18 L.Ed.2d 527.

Juvenile delinquency. Participation in illegal behavior by a minor who falls under a statutory age limit. See also Delinquent child.

Juvenile delinquent. See Delinquent child.

Juvenile offenders. See Delinquent child.

Juxta conventionem /jáksta kanvěnshiownam/. According to the covenant.

Juxta formam statuti /jáksta formam stat(y)uwtay/. According to the form of the statute.

Juxtaposition /jakstapazishan/. A placing or being placed in nearness or contiguity; or side by side; as a juxtaposition of words. Brown v. State, 126 Tex.Cr.R. 449, 72 S.W.2d 269, 270.

Juxta ratam /jáksta reytam/. At or after the rate.

Juxta tenorem sequentem /jáksta tanórm sakwéntam/. According to the tenor following. A phrase used in the old books when the very words themselves referred to were set forth.

Juzgado /huwsgadow/. In Spanish law, the judiciary; the body of judges; the judges who concur in a decree.
Kahawai /kâhâvâyî/. Hawaiian. The flowing stream. It may include the bed or channel of the stream and may, also, include the portion of such channel covered only in times of high water or of freshets.

Kalage, or kalagium /kêýâj/keyêýâj(i)yam/. A wharfage-duty.

Kalender /kêýândâr/. An account of time, exhibiting the days of the week and month, the seasons, etc. More commonly spelled "calendar."

Kalendarium /kêýândêriyam/. In the civil law, a calendar; a book of accounts, memorandum-book, or debt-book; a book in which accounts were kept of moneys loaned out on interest. So called because the Romans used to let out their money and receive the interest on the calends of each month.

Kalends /kêýândâzs/. See Calends.

Kangaroo court. Term descriptive of a sham legal proceeding in which a person's rights are totally disregarded and in which the result is a foregone conclusion because of the bias of the court or other tribunal.

Kast-geld. Contribution for a jettison; average.

Katatonia /kêytâtôwâyn/. See Insanity.

Kay. A quay, or key.

Kayage. See Cayagium.

K.B. Abbreviation for "King's Bench".

K.C. Abbreviation for "King's Counsel".

Keelage /kêylâj/. The right to demand money for the privilege of anchoring a vessel in a harbor; also the money so paid.

Keep, v. To continue. People v. Roseberry, 23 Cal. App.2d 13, 71 P.2d 944; Briggs v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 45 F.2d 479, 480. To have or retain in one's power or possession; not to lose or part with; to preserve or retain. To maintain, carry on, conduct, or manage; as, to "keep" a bawdy house, gaming table, nuisance, or the like. To maintain, tend, harbor, feed, and shelter; as, to "keep" a dangerous animal.

To maintain continuously and methodically for the purposes of a record; as, to "keep" books. Thus to "keep" records of court means, not only to preserve the manual possession of the records, books, and papers, but to correctly transcribe therein the proceedings of the court.

To maintain continuously and without stoppage or variation; as, when a vessel is said to "keep her course," that is, continue in motion in the same general direction in which she was previously sailing. The Britannia, 153 U.S. 130, 14 S.Ct. 795, 38 L.Ed. 660. To maintain, to cause to continue without essential change of condition. To take care of and to preserve from danger, harm, or loss.

Keeper. A custodian, manager, or superintendent; one who has the care, custody, or management of any thing or place; one who has or holds possession of anything. See Bailment; Custodian; Depository.

Keeper of a bawdy house or house of ill fame. A person who has control, proprietorship, or management of the house in question. State v. Weston, 235 Iowa 148, 15 N.W.2d 922, 923.

Keeper of dog. A harboree of a dog. Eldred v. White, La.App., 14 So.2d 260, 282. Any person, other than owner, harboring or having in his possession any dog. Hancock v. Finch, 126 Conn. 121, 9 A.2d 811. One who, either with or without owner's permission, undertakes to manage, control, or care for it as dog owners in general are accustomed to do.

Keeper of the forest. In old English law, an officer (called also chief warden of the forest) who had the principal government of all things relating to the forest, and the control of all officers belonging to the same.

Keeper of the great seal. In English law, a high officer of state, through whose hands pass all charters, grants, and commissions of the king under the great seal.

Keeper of the king's conscience. A name sometimes applied to the chancellor of England, as being formerly an ecclesiastic and presiding over the royal chapel.

Keeper of the privy seal. In English law, an officer through whose hands pass all charters signed by the king before they come to the great seal. He is a privy councillor, and was anciently called "clerk of the privy seal," but is now generally called the "lord privy seal."

Keeper of the touch. The master of the assay in the English mint.

Keeping a gambling house or place. A proprietor is guilty if with his knowledge, acquiescence, and consent, express or implied, gambling is carried on upon premises in his possession as owner or lessee, or under his management or control, by his associates or subordinates who are likewise guilty if they are present aiding and assisting in carrying on such gambling operations for him. Commonwealth v. Pinkenson, 138 Pa.Super. 485, 11 A.2d 176, 179. A proprietor of a place not kept for the purpose of gambling is guilty if he allows gambling to be carried on and participates in it or receives a benefit from it in some way. People v. Dubinsky, Sp.Sess., 31 N.Y.S.2d 234, 238. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1955. See also Gambling.

Keeping a gambling table or bank. If one has possession or custody of a gaming table, and authority over its use, and supervises the gaming, he is guilty of such crime.

Keeping a lookout. Being watchful of movements of driver's own vehicle, as well as other vehicles and pedestrians. See Lookout.

Keeping books. Preserving an intelligent record of a merchant's or tradesman's affairs with such reasonable accuracy and care as may properly be expected from a person in that business. See Accounting.

Keeping the peace. Avoiding a breach of the peace; dissuading or preventing others from breaking the peace. See also Articles of the peace.

Keep in repair. When a lessee is bound to keep the premises in repair, he must have them in repair at all times during the term; and, if they are at any time out of repair, he is guilty of a breach of the covenant. See Habitability.

Kefauver-Cellar Act. Federal anti-merger statute enacted in 1950 prohibiting the acquisition of assets of one company by another (generally in the same line of business) when the effect is to lessen competition. 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 21.

Keiki /kéikiy/ . Hawaiian. Popular meaning is child, but the meaning of that word in any particular instance depends on context in which it is used, and it can mean "descendant of any generation." In re Kanoa's Trust Estate, 47 Hawaii 160, 393 P.2d 753, 760; Kalakaua v. Parke, 8 Hawaii 620, 621.

Kelp-shore. The land between high and low water mark.

Kentucky Resolutions. A series of resolutions drawn up by Jefferson, and adopted by the legislature of Kentucky in 1799, protesting against the "alien and sedition laws," declaring their illegality, announcing the strict constructionist theory of the federal government, and declaring "nullification" to be "the rightful remedy."

Kentucky Rule. In the allocation of dividends by trustees as between income and principal, all dividends whether paid in cash or stock are regarded as income though in most jurisdictions accepting this rule a dividend paid in the stock of the issuing corporation is considered principal and brings about an adjustment in the basis of such stock in the portfolio.

Keogh Plan. A designation for retirement plans available to self-employed taxpayers (also referred to as H.R.10 plans). Such plans extend to the self-employed tax benefits similar to those available to employees under qualified pension and profit sharing plans. Yearly contributions to the plan (up to a certain amount) are tax deductible. See also Individual retirement account.

Kerhere. A customary cart-way; also a commutation of such goods from vessels. More commonly spelled "quay."

Keyage. A toll paid for loading and unloading of merchandise from vessels. More commonly spelled "quay."

Key number system. A standard legal research tool in which each point of law derived from reported cases is topically arranged in a digest and assigned a "key" number. Once the key number for a relevant point of law is determined, generally through a digest index, a researcher may look under that topic, in either a digest or on WESTLAW, for topically related cases. See also Digest (American Digest System).

Keyus /kiyus/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Kickback. Payment back by seller of a portion of the purchase price to buyer or public official to induce purchase or to improperly influence future purchases or leases. Such payments are not tax deductible as ordinary and necessary expenses. I.R.C. § 162.

Under federal statute kickbacks are a criminal offense in connection with a contract for construction or repair of a public building or a building financed by loans from the government. 18 U.S.C.A. § 874. Such acts are also generally prohibited by state commercial bribery statutes. See also Bribery.

Kiddie tax. A tax imposed on unearned income (in excess of a minimal amount) of a child under the age of 14. Such income is taxed at the parents' highest rate. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 instituted the "kiddie tax" in an effort to stop the shifting of income producing assets within families (i.e., from parents to minor chil-Kidnapping. At common law, the forcible abduction or stealing and carrying away of a person from own country or territory to another. 4 Bl.Comm. 219. Collier v. Vaccaro, C.C.A.Md., 61 F.2d 17, 19; State v. Berry, 200 Wash. 495, 99 P.2d 792, 787, 792. The unlawful seizure and removal of a person from own country or state against his will. In American law, the intent to send the victim out of the country does not constitute a necessary part of the offense; the unlawful taking and carrying away of a human being by force or fraud or threats or intimidation and against his will being the essential elements. State v. Roberts, 210 S.E.2d 396, 404, 286 N.C. 265. At common law kidnapping was a misdemeanor, but under modern statutes such crime is a felony. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1201.

A person is guilty of kidnapping if he unlawfully removes another from his place of residence or business, or a substantial distance from the vicinity where he is found, or if he unlawfully confines another for a substantial period in a place of isolation, with any of the following purposes: (a) to hold for ransom or reward, or as a shield or hostage; or (b) to facilitate commission of any felony or flight thereof; or (c) to inflict bodily injury on or to terrorize the victim or another; or (d) to interfere with the performance of any governmental or political function. Model Penal Code, § 212.1.

With respect to federal kidnapping act, see Lindbergh Act. See also Abduction; Hostage; Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act; Ransom.

Child-stealing. Child-stealing statutes commonly provide a penalty for any one who shall lead, take, entice or detain a child under a specified age with intent to keep or conceal it from its parent, guardian, or other person having lawful care or control thereof.

Kidnapping for ransom. One who detains another for the purpose of extorting money from him or from another person as the price of his release is guilty of the felony of kidnapping for ransom. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1201.

Simple kidnapping. Kidnapping which is not in some aggravated form, such as holding for ransom, is commonly referred to as "simple kidnapping."

Kilberg doctrine. In conflicts of law, a rule to the effect that the forum is not bound by the law of the place of the death as to the limitations on damages for wrongful death because such law is procedural and hence the law of the forum governs on this issue. Kilberg v. Northeast Airlines, Inc., 9 N.Y.2d 34, 211 N.Y.S.2d 133, 172 N.E.2d 526.

Kilketh. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry.

Kill, v. To deprive of life; to destroy the life of an animal or person. The word "homicide" expresses the killing of a human being. See also Homicide; Manslaughter; Murder.

Killing by misadventure. Accidental killing of a person where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminal carelessness or reckless conduct. Excusable homicide occurring where one engaged in doing lawful act, without intention to do harm and, with proper precaution to avoid danger, unfortunately kills another. See also Accidental killing; Manslaughter.

Kind. Class, grade, or sort. City of St. Louis v. James Braudis Coal Co., Mo.App., 137 S.W.2d 668, 670. Genus; generic class; description. See In kind; Like-kind exchange; Sample.

Kindred. See Kin or kindred; Next of kin.

King. The sovereign, ruler, or chief executive magistrate of a state or nation whose constitution is of the kind called "monarchical" is thus named if a man; if it be a woman, she is called "queen."

The word expresses the idea of one who rules singly over a whole people or has the highest executive power; but the office may be either hereditary or elective, and the sovereignty of the king may or may not be absolute, according to the constitution of the country.

King can do no wrong. This maxim means that the king is not responsible legally for aught he may please to do, or for any omission. It does not mean that everything done by the government is just and lawful, but that whatever is exceptional in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king. See Sovereign immunity; Sovereignty.

King-craft. The art of governing.

Kingdom. A country where an officer called a "king" exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. In some kingdoms, the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a "queen."

King-geld. A royal aid; an escuage (q.v.).

King's (Queen's) advocate. An English advocate who holds, in the courts in which the rules of the canon and civil law prevail, a similar position to that which the attorney general holds in the ordinary courts, i.e., he acts as counsel for the crown in ecclesiastical, admiralty, and probate cases, and advises the crown on questions of international law. In order of precedence, he ranks after the attorney general.

King's (Queen's) Bench. One of the superior courts of common law in England, being so called because the king (or queen) used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court being "coram ipso rege."

It was called the "queen's bench" in the reign of a queen, and during the protectorate of Cromwell it was styled the "upper bench." It consisted of a chief justice and three puisne justices, who were by their office the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land. It was a remnant of the aula regis, and was not originally fixed to any certain place, but might follow the king's person, though for some centuries past it usually sat at Westminster. It had a very extended jurisdiction both in criminal and civil causes; the former in what was called the "crown side" or "crown office," the latter in the "plea side," of the court.
Its civil jurisdiction was gradually enlarged until it embraced all species of personal actions. By the Judicature Act of 1873 the jurisdiction of this court was assigned to the Queens Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. See Court of King’s (Queen’s) Bench.

King’s (Queen’s) coroner and attorney. In England, an officer of the court of king’s (or queen’s) bench, usually called “the master of the crown office,” whose duty it was to file informations at the suit of a private subject by direction of the court. 4 Bl.Comm. 308, 309. The office is now merged in that of Master of the Crown Office.

King’s (Queen’s) counsel. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king’s (or queen’s) counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They could not formerly be employed in any cause against the Crown (e.g. in defending a prisoner) without special license. Now, however, by a general dispensation granted in 1920, they can appear against the Crown without such license. Called “Queen’s” counsel when a queen holds the crown.

King’s (Queen’s) evidence. When several persons are charged with a crime, and one of them gives evidence against his accomplices, on the promise of being granted a pardon, he is said to be admitted king’s or (in America) state’s evidence. Called “Queen’s” evidence when a queen holds the crown. See also State’s evidence.

King’s (Queen’s) proctor. A proctor or solicitor representing the crown in the Family Division. In petitions for dissolution of marriage, or for declarations of nullity of marriage, the king’s (or queen’s) proctor may, under the direction of the attorney general, and by leave of the court, intervene in the suit for the purpose of proving collusion between the parties. Called “Queen’s” proctor when a queen holds the crown.

King’s (Queen’s) remembrancer. An officer of the central office of the English supreme court. Formerly he was an officer of the exchequer, and had important duties to perform in protecting the rights of the crown; e.g., by instituting proceedings for the recovery of land by writs of intrusion (q.v.), and for the recovery of legacy and succession duties; but of late years administrative changes have lessened the duties of the office. He was at the head of the department which had charge of all revenue suits, and of matters pertaining to the office of sheriff. He attended as the officer of the king’s (queen’s) bench when the lord mayor made his appearance on November 9th, and was representing the old court of exchequer when the city of London did suit and service in discharge of quit-rents for certain lands anciently held under the crown. Called a “Queen’s” remembrancer when a queen holds the crown.

King’s silver. In old English practice, a fine due the king pro licentia concordandi (for leave to agree), in the process of levying a fine.

King’s widow. In feudal law, a widow of the king’s tenant in chief, who was obliged to take oath in chancery that she would not marry without the king’s leave.

Kin or kindred. Relation or relationship by blood or consanguinity. Relatives by blood; by birth. May be either lineal (ascending or descending) or collateral. Poff v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 57 F.Supp. 625, 626. See also Blood relations; Heirs; Next of kin.

Kinsfolk. Relations; those who are of the same family.

Kinship. Relationship by blood. See Kin or Kindred.

Kinsman /kɪŋzmən/. A man of the same race or family.

Kinswoman. A female relation.

Kintel, or kintle /kɪntl/. A hundred pounds in weight. See Quintal or Kintal.

Kissing the book. The ceremony of touching the lips to a copy of the Bible, used in administering oaths. It is the external symbol of the witness’ acknowledgment of the obligation of the oath.

Kist. In Hindu law, a stated payment; installment of rent.

Kiting. The wrongful practice of taking advantage of the float, the time that elapses between the deposit of a check in one bank and its collection at another. Method of drawing checks by which the drawer uses funds which are not his by drawing checks against deposits which have not yet cleared through the banks. “Kiting” consists of writing checks against a bank account where funds are insufficient to cover them, hoping that before they are presented the necessary funds will be deposited. Sutro Bros. & Co. v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, D.C.N.Y., 264 F.Supp. 273, 283. See also Float.

Kleptomania /klɛptəmənɪə/. In medical jurisprudence, a species (or symptom) of mania, consisting of an irresistible propensity to steal.

Knave /nəv/. A rascal; a false, tricky, or deceitful person. The word originally meant a boy, attendant, or servant, but long-continued usage has given it its present significance.

Knight. In English law, the next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Richard I and improved by Edward III in 1344; next follows a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV, and revived by George I; and they were so called from a ceremony of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. Other degrees of knights include Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (instituted in 1834), Knight of the Thistle (reestablished in 1703), and Knight of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire (instituted in 1917). 1 Bl.Comm. 403.

Knighthood. The rank, order, character, or dignity of a knight.
Knock down. To assign to a bidder at an auction by a knock and announce rule. This rule for execution of the of the Garter; Knight.
Knights
fee. The determinate quantity of land (held by an estate of inheritance), or of annual income therefrom, which was sufficient to maintain a knight.
Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights bachelors. In English law, the most ancient, though lowest, order of knighthood. See Knight.

Knights banneret. In English law, those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle. They rank, generally, after knights of the Garter. See Knight.

Knights of the post. A term for hireling witnesses.

Knights of the shire. In English law, members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burgesses, who represent boroughs or corporations.

Knight’s service. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight’s fees, in number above sixty thousand. For every knight’s fee, a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight’s fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary commutations, or aids; until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act of 1660. 1

Knock and announce rule. This rule for execution of arrest and search warrants requires that police knock and announce their authority and purpose before entering into home. Davenport v. State, Ind., 464 N.E.2d 1302, 1305. A peace officer, whether he arrests by virtue of warrant or by virtue of his authority to arrest without warrant on probable cause, can break door of house to effect arrest only after first stating his authority and purpose for demanding admission. Miller v. U.
S., 357 U.S. 301, 78 S.Ct. 1190, 2 L.Ed.2d 1332. The officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house, or any part of a house, or anything therein, to execute a search warrant, if, after notice of his authority and purpose, he is refused admittance or when necessary to liberate himself or a person aiding him in the execution of the warrant. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3109.

Knock down. To assign to a bidder at an auction by a knock or blow of the hammer. Property is said to be “knocked down” when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. “Knocked down” and “struck off” are synonymous terms.
attention and put person on guard and call for inquiry, Iberville Land Co. v. Amerada Petroleum Corporation, C.C.A.La., 141 F.2d 384, 389; personal cognizance or knowledge or means of knowledge, The Chickie, D.C.Pa., 54 F.Supp. 19, 20; state of being or having become aware of fact or truth, Howard v. Whittaker, 250 Ky. 836, 64 S.W.2d 173.

In commercial law, the level of a person's awareness of information at which the person actually knows the information. See U.C.C. § 1–201(25).

When knowledge of the existence of a particular fact is an element of an offense, such knowledge is established if a person is aware of a high probability of its existence, unless he actually believes that it does not exist. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

Knowledge consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions, while "belief" admits of all degrees, from the slightest suspicion to the fullest assurance. The difference between them is ordinarily merely in the degree, to be judged of by the court, when addressed to the court; by the jury, when addressed to the jury.

See also Constructive knowledge; Imputed knowledge; Knowingly; Notice; Scienter.

Actual knowledge. Positive, in contrast to imputed or inferred, knowledge of a fact. Roberts Const. Co. v. Brown, 272 Ala. 440, 131 So.2d 710, 712. For notice purposes, "actual knowledge" embraces those things of which the one sought to be charged has express information and those things which a reasonably diligent inquiry and exercise of the means of information at hand would have disclosed. Morris v. Reaves, Tex.Civ.App., 580 S.W.2d 891, 893.

Agency relationship. Unless the parties have otherwise agreed, a principal or agent, with respect to the other, should know what a person of ordinary experience and intelligence would know, and in addition, what he would know if, having the knowledge and intelligence which he has or which he purports to have, he were to use due care in the performance of his duties to the other. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 10.

Carnal knowledge. See Carnal knowledge.

Knowledge of another's peril. One has "knowledge of peril of another," within doctrine of discovered peril, whenever it reasonably appears from the known facts and circumstances that the latter is pursuing a course which will probably terminate in serious bodily injury to him, and that he probably will pursue it to the end.

Personal knowledge. Knowledge of the truth in regard to a particular fact or allegation, which is original, and does not depend on information or hearsay. Personal knowledge of an allegation in an answer is personal knowledge of its truth or falsity; and if the allegation is a negative one, this necessarily includes knowledge of the truth of falsity of the allegation denied. In the law of evidence means something which the witness actually saw or heard, as distinguished from something he learned from some other person or sources. Hidalgo v. General Fire & Cas. Co., La.App., 254 So.2d 493, 496.

Reason to know. The words "reason to know" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the actor has information from which a person of reasonable intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would infer that the fact in question exists, or that such person would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Should know. The words "should know" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that a person of reasonable prudence and intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would ascertain the fact in question in the performance of his duty to another, or would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Known. Familiar; perceived; recognized; understood; especially, when used absolutely, familiar to all; generally understood or perceived. Term may, according to context, refer to both actual and constructive knowledge.

Known heirs. In a statute relating to the sale of property of unknown heirs, it has been held to mean those persons who are known, and whose right to inherit, or the extent of whose right, to inherit, is dependent on the non-existence of other persons nearer or as near as the ancestor in the line of descent.

Kuleana /kuwleyang/. The Hawaiian term "kuleana" means a small area of land, such as were awarded in fee by the Hawaiian monarch, about the year 1850, to all Hawaiians who made application therefor.

L. This letter, as a Roman numeral, stands for the number "fifty." It is also used as an abbreviation for "law," "liber," (a book) "lord," and some other words of which it is the initial.

La. Fr. The. The definite article in the feminine gender. Occurs in some legal terms and phrases.

Label. Anything appended to a larger writing, as a codicil.

A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writ, in order to hold the appending seal.

An affixation to or marking on a manufactured article, giving information as to its nature or quality, or the contents of a material, package or container, or the name of the maker, etc. Higgins v. Keuffel, 140 U.S. 428, 11 S.Ct. 731, 35 L.Ed. 470. The informational content of such labels is often governed by federal and state laws; e.g. Fair Packaging and Labeling Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1457.

In English law, a copy of a writ in the exchequer.

Labina /labýna/. In old records, water land.

Term "labor" as used in the Clayton Act is not limited to the work of manual laborers or of mechanics, but comprises intellectual labor as well. U. S. v. National Ass’n of Real Estate Boards, D.C.D.C., 84 F.Supp. 802, 803.

A Spanish land measure, in use in Mexico and formerly in Texas, equivalent to 177½ acres.

See also Agricultural labor; Farm labor or laborer; Laborer.

Labor agreement. See Labor contract.

Labor a jury. To tamper with a jury; to endeavor to influence them in their verdict, or their verdict generally. Jury tampering is a crime. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1503, 1504.

Laborariis /léýbɑrɛriːəs/. An ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labor, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer.

Labor contract. Contract between employer and employees (i.e. union) which governs working conditions, wages, fringe benefits, and grievances. See Collective bargaining agreement; Master agreement; More favorable terms clause.

Labor dispute. Term generally includes any controversy between employers and employees concerning terms, tenure, hours, wages, fringe benefits, or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment. National Labor Relations Act, § 29.

However, not every activity of labor organization and not even every controversy in which it may become involved is "labor dispute" within National Labor Relations Act. N. L. R. B. v. International Longshoremen’s Ass’n, Md., 332 F.2d 992, 995, 996.

Laborer. The word ordinarily denotes one who subsists by physical labor. American Surety Co. of New York v. Stuart, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 886, 888. One who, as a means of livelihood, performs work and labor for another. Person who follows any legitimate employment or discharges the duties of any office. Devillier v. City of Opelousas, La.App., 247 So.2d 412, 416. See Farm labor or laborer; Labor; Work.

Laborers' lien. Species of non-possessory lien which gives preference to laborer who works on job for payment of his wages ahead of general creditors. Such liens are generally governed by state statutes. See Mechanic's lien.

Labor-management relations. Term used to describe broad spectrum of activities which concern relationship of employees to employers both union and non-union. See Fair Labor Standards Act; Labor-Management Relations Act; National Labor Relations Act; National Labor Relations Board; Wage and hour laws.

Labor-Management Relations Act. Federal statute (Taft-Hartley Act) which regulates certain union activities, permits suits against unions for proscribed acts, prohibits certain strikes and boycotts and provides machinery for settling strikes which involve national emergencies. 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

Labor organization. Any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee, group, association, or plan so engaged in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment, and any conference, general committee, joint or system board, or joint council so engaged which is subordinate to a national or international labor organization, other than a State or local central body. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(5); 29 U.S.C.A. § 152(5).

A combination of workers usually, but not necessarily, of the same trade or of several allied trades, for securing by united action, the most favorable conditions as regards wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members. See also Closed shop; Labor union; Open shop.

Labor picketing. The act of patrolling in motion at or near employer or customer entrances; usually carrying placards with a terse legend communicating the gist of the union's claims. Certain forms are prohibited. Landrum-Griffin Act, § 8(b)(7). See also Picketing.

Labor relations acts. State and federal laws that regulate relations between employers and employees; e.g. Fair Labor Standards Act; Equal Pay Act. See Labor-management relations.

Labor Relations Board. See National Labor Relations Board.

Labor union. A combination or association of workers organized for purpose of securing favorable wages, improved labor conditions, better hours of labor, etc., and righting grievances against employers. Such unions normally represent trades, crafts, and other skilled workers (e.g. plumbers, truck drivers). See also Labor organization; Union.

Lacey Act. An act of Congress, May 25, 1900, under which the states may enforce game laws against animals, birds, etc., imported from other states or countries. See 16 U.S.C.A. § 661 et seq. See also Game laws.

La chambre des estelles. The star-chamber.

Laches /læs/ /læchəz/ /lahshəz/. "Doctrine of laches," is based upon maxim that equity aids the vigilant and not those who slumber on their rights. It is defined as lack of jurisdiction. It may consist in court's exercise of jurisdiction have not been complied with, or may consist of lack of jurisdiction over subject matter or over person. See Jurisdiction.

Lack of jurisdiction. The phrase may mean lack of power of a court to act in a particular manner or to give certain kinds of relief. In re Rowe's Estate, 66 Cal. App.2d 594, 152 P.2d 765, 770. It may consist in court's total want of power to act at all, or lack of power to act in particular case because conditions essential to exercise of jurisdiction have not been complied with, or may consist of lack of jurisdiction over subject matter or over person. See Jurisdiction.

It is held for an inconvenience that any of the maxims of the law should be broken, though a private man suffer loss.

Lambard's Archaionomia /lâmbârdz árkîyànôwmyâ/. A work printed in 1568, containing the Anglo-Saxon laws, those of William the Conqueror, and of Henry I.

Lambard's Eirenarcha /lâmbârdz áyranârka/. A work upon the office of a justice of the peace, which, having gone through two editions, one in 1579, the other in 1581, was reprinted in English in 1599.

Lambeth degree /lâmbeth dargrîy/. In English law, a degree conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury, in prejudice of the universities.

Lame duck. An elected officeholder who is to be succeeded by another, between the time of the election and the date that his successor is to take office. A speculator in stock who has overbought and cannot meet his commitments.

Lame Duck Amendment. Twentieth Amendment to U. S. Constitution, abolishing the short congressional term.

Lame duck session. Legislative session conducted after election of new members but before they are installed and hence one in which some participants are voting for the last time as elected officials because of failure to become reelected or voluntary retirement.

Lammas lands /lâmâs ländâ/. Lands over which there is a right of pasturage by persons other than the owner from about Lammas, or reaping time, until sowing time.

Land. In the most general sense, comprehends any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; including fields, meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, and rock. State v. Coffee, 556 P.2d 1185, 1193, 97 Idaho 905. In its more limited sense, "land" denotes the quantity and character of the interest or estate which a person may own in land. Holmes v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 53 F.2d 960, 963. "Land" may include any estate or interest in lands, either legal or equitable, as well as easements and incorporeal hereditaments. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 297. The land is one thing, and the estate in land is another thing, for an estate in land is a time in land or land for a time.

Technically land signifies everything which may be held; and the term is defined as comprehending all things of a permanent and substantial nature, and even of an unsubstantial, provided they be permanent. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 296. Ordinarily, the term is used as descriptive of the subject of ownership and not the ownership. Southern Pac. Co. v. Riverside County, 35 Cal.App.2d 380, 95 P.2d 688, 692.

Land is the material of the earth, whatever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other substance, and includes free or occupied space for an indefinite distance upwards as well as downwards, subject to limitations upon the use of airspace imposed, and rights in the use of airspace granted, by law. Calif.Civil Code, § 659. See Air rights.

The term "land" may be used interchangeably with "property"; it may include anything that may be classed as real estate or real property. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 297.

Landagende, landhlaford, or landrica /lándêyjônd/lándlîrd/land(h)lëvar/lândrak/. In Saxon law, a proprietor of land; lord of the soil.

Land bank. A federally created bank under the Federal Farm Loan Act and organized to make loans on farm security at low interest rates. May also describe program in which land is retired from agricultural production for use in conservation or in tree cultivation and as such is sometimes called a Soil Bank. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

Landboc /lândbûk/. In Saxon law, a charter or deed by which lands or tenements were given or held.

Land boundaries. Limits of land holdings described by linear measurements of the borders, or by points of the compass, or by stationary markers. See Boundaries; Forty; Landmark; Land measure; Legal description; Lot line; Metes and bounds; Plat map; Section.
LAND BOUNDARIES

Land certificate. An obligation of government entitling owner to secure designated quantity of land by following the requirements of law. State v. Balli, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 522, 538. It contains a description of the land as it appears on the register and the name and address of the proprietor, and is prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein set forth. See also Land warrant.

Landcheap. In old English law, an ancient customary fine, paid either in money or cattle, at every alienation of land lying within some manor, or within the liberty of some borough.

Land contract See Land sale contract.

Land cop. The sale of land which was evidenced in early English law by the transfer of a rod or festuca (q.v.) as a symbol of possession which was handed by the seller to the reeve and by the reeve to the purchaser. The conveyance was made in court, it is supposed, for securing better evidence of it, and barring the claims of expectant heirs.

Land court. In Massachusetts such court has exclusive original jurisdiction of all applications for registration of title to land within Commonwealth, and power to hear and determine all questions arising upon such applications. It has exclusive original jurisdiction over writs of entry and various petitions for clearing title to real estate; of petitions for determining validity and extent of municipal zoning ordinances, by-laws and regulations; original concurrent general equity jurisdiction in matters relating to land except in cases of specific performance of contracts relating to same; exclusive original jurisdiction of proceedings for foreclosure of and redemption from tax titles; and it has original jurisdiction, concurrent with Supreme Judicial, superior and probate courts, of declaratory judgment proceedings.

Land damages. See Damages.

Land department. See Bureau of Land Management; Interior Department.

Land descriptions. See Land boundaries.

Land district. A division of a state or territory, created by federal authority, in which is located a United States land office, with a "register of the land office" and a "receiver of public money," for the disposition of the public lands within the district.

Landed. Consisting in real estate or land; having an estate in land.

Landed estate or property. A colloquial or popular phrase to denote real property. Landed estate ordinarily means an interest in and pertaining to lands. Real estate in general, or sometimes, by local usage, suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate situated in a city.

Landed estates court. In English law, tribunals established by statute for the purpose of disposing more promptly and easily than could be done through the ordinary judicial machinery, of incumbered real estate. These courts were first established in Ireland by the act of 11 & 12 Vict., c. 48, which being defective was followed by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 77. The purpose of these was to enable the owner, or a lessee for any less than 63 years unexpired, of land subject to incumbrance, to apply to commissioners who constituted a court of record to direct a sale. This court was called the Incumbered Estates Court. A new tribunal called the Landed Estates Court was created by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 72, which abolished the former court and established a permanent tribunal.

Landed securities. Mortgages or other encumbrances affecting land.

Landfricus /larındfràykas/. A landlord; a lord of the soil.

Landegandman. In old English law, a kind of customary tenant or inferior tenant of a manor.

Land gabel. A tax or rent issuing out of land.

Land grant. A donation of public lands to a subordinate government, a corporation, or an individual; as, from the United States to a state, or to a railroad company to aid in the construction of its road. See also Land patent under Patent.

Landhlaflord /ländflöord/. In old English law, a proprietor of land; lord of the soil.

Land improvements. See Improvement.

Landing. A place on a river or other navigable water for loading and unloading of goods, or for the reception and delivery of passengers or pleasure boats. The terminus of a road on a river or other navigable water for these purposes. Act or process of coming back to land after voyage or flight. See also Port.

Landirecta /ländrektás/. In Saxon law, services and duties laid upon all that held land, including the three obligations called "trinoda necessitas," (q.v.) quasi land rights.

Land, law of. See Law of the land.

Landlocked. An expression applied to a piece of land belonging to one person and surrounded by land belonging to other persons, so that it cannot be approached except over their land. Access to such land will normally be via an easement from surrounding landowner.

Landlord. He of whom lands or tenements are held. The owner of an estate in land, or a rental property, who has leased it to another person, called the "tenant." Also called "lessor."

Landlord and tenant relationship. A phrase used to denote the familiar legal relation existing between lessor and lessee of real estate. The relation is contractual. Smith v. Royal Ins. Co., C.C.A.Cal., 111 F.2d 667, 670, 671. A lease (or agreement therefor) of lands for a term of years, from year to year, for life, or at will creates the relation. The relation exists where one person occupies premises of another in subordination to other's title or rights and with his permission or consent. There must be reversion in landlord, an estate in tenant, transfer of possession and control of premises, and, generally, a contract, express or implied. Coggins v. Gregorio, C.C.A.N.M., 97 F.2d 948, 950, 951. See also Lease.

Landlord's warrant. A distress warrant; a warrant from a landlord to levy upon the tenant's goods and chattels, and sell the same at public sale, to compel payment of the rent or the observance of some other stipulation in the lease. See Distraint; Distress. See also Habitability (Warranty of habitability).

Land management. See Bureau of Land Management.

Landmark. A feature of the land, monument, marker, or other erection set up on the boundary line of two adjoining estates, to fix such boundary. The removing of a landmark is a wrong for which an action lies. Building or site having historical significance. See also Monument.

Landmark decision. A decision of the Supreme Court that significantly changes existing law. See e.g., Brown decision; Miranda Rule.

Land measure.
1 mile—80 chains, 320 rods, 1,760 yards or 5,280 feet.
16½ feet—1 rod, perch or pole.
1 chain—66 feet, 100 links or 4 rods.
1 link—7.92 inches.
25 links—1 rod.
4 rods—1 chain.
144 square inches—1 square foot.
9 square feet—1 square yard.
30¾ square yards—1 square rod.
160 square rods—1 acre.
10,000 square links—1 square chain.
10 square chains—1 acre.
1 acre—208.708 feet by 208.708 feet.
1 acre—43,560 square feet.
1 acre—4,840 square yards.
1 acre—160 square rods.
640 acres—1 square mile or section.
36 square miles or sections—1 township.
See also Land boundaries; Survey.

Land offices. Government offices, administered by Bureau of Land Management, established principally in the Western States, for the transaction of local business relating to the survey, location, settlement, pre-emption, and sale of the public lands. A former primary function of these offices was to administer land grants.

Land patent. An instrument conveying a grant of public land; also, the land so conveyed. See also Patent.

Land-poor. Term used to describe person that owns a substantial amount of land, but is nonetheless short of cash to pay bills because, for example, land is unproductive, market for crops depressed, etc.

Land-reeve. In old English law, a person whose business it was to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge-timber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, driftways, and water-courses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others; and to report the same to the manager or land steward.

Land revenues. This term denotes income derived from crown lands in Great Britain. These lands have been so largely granted away to subjects that they are now contracted within very narrow limits.

Landrum-Griffin Act. Federal statute enacted in 1959, known as the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, designed to curb corruption in union leadership and undemocratic conduct of internal union affairs as well as to outlaw certain types of secondary boycotts and “hot cargo” provisions in collective bargaining agreements. 29 U.S.C.A. § 401 et seq.

Lands. This term, the plural of “land,” is said, at common law, to be a word of less extensive signification than either “tenements” or “hereditaments.” But in some of the states it has been provided by statute that it shall include both those terms. See also Land.

Land sale contract. Contract for the purchase and sale of land upon execution of which title is transferred. Term commonly refers to an installment contract for the sale of land whereby purchaser (vendee) receives the deed from the owner (vendor) upon payment of final installment. The vendor retains legal title to the property (deed) as security for payment of contract price. May also be called “contract for deed”, or “installment land contract”.

Lands, public. See Public lands.

Lands, tenements, and hereditaments. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as “goods and chattels” is of personality. The term refers to property in land. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846. Under ancient law, the words comprehended only freehold estate and did not apply to easements or other incorporeal hereditaments. Hester v. Sawyers, 41 N.M. 497, 71 P.2d 646, 649.

Land tenant. The person actually in possession of land.
Land Titles and Transfer Act. An English statute (38 & 39 Vict., c. 87) providing for the establishment of a registry for titles to real property, and making sundry provisions for the transfer of lands and the recording of the evidences thereof. It presents some analogies to the recording laws of the American states; e.g. Registry of Deeds office in many states. This Act was superceded by a system of title registration in 1925.

Land trust. Property ownership arrangement whereby, pursuant to statute, trustee holds legal and equitable title to trust, and beneficiary, who has personal property interest, retains power of direction over trustee and power to manage and receive income from trust property. Pepper Pot II, Inc. v. Imperial Realty Co., 1 Dist., 133 Ill.App.3d 951, 88 Ill.Dec. 929, 931, 479 N.E.2d 949, 951. A land trust (also called Illinois Land Trust) is a trust in which corpus consists of real estate and in which deed to trustee appears to confer upon him full powers to deal with real estate and complete legal and equitable title to trust property. So far as public records are concerned, trustee's powers are complete. Such powers, however, are in fact restricted by a trust agreement mentioned in the deed in trust. Such trust agreements typically vest in beneficiary full powers of management and control. However, beneficiary cannot deal with property as if no trust existed. Such trusts generally continue for a definite term. Unlike trustees under classical testamentary or inter vivos trust, trustees under land trust may be personally liable. Taylor v. Richmond's New Approach Assoc., Inc., Fla.App., 351 So.2d 1094.

Land trust certificate. Instrument granting participation in benefits of ownership of property, while trustee retains title. See Land Trust.

Land use planning. Generic term used to describe activities such as zoning, control of real estate developments and use, environmental impact studies and the like. Many states have land use planning laws which are implemented by local zoning and land use laws and ordinances. See also Master plan; Planned unit development (PUD); Zoning.

Land waiter. In English law, an officer of the custom-house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof.

Land warrant. A warrant issued at the local land offices of the United States to purchasers of public lands, on the surrender of which at the general land office at Washington, they receive a conveyance from the general government. See Land certificate.

The evidence which the state, on good consideration, gives that the person therein named is entitled to the quantity of land therein specified, the bounds and description of which the owner of the warrant may fix by entry and survey, in the section of country set apart for its location and satisfaction.

Langeman. A lord of a manor.

Langemanni. The lords of manors.
In the law of wills, the failure of a testamentary gift. Gredig v. Sterling, C.C.A. Tex., 47 F.2d 832, 834.

See also Anti-lapse statute.

Lapsed devise. See Devises.

Lapsed legacy. See Legacy.

Lapsed policy. Insurance policy on which there has been default in payment of premiums. Policy remaining in force according to statutory provisions after such default (normally a 30 or 31 day grace period on non-payment of premiums is provided).

Lapse patent. A patent for land issued in substitution for an earlier patent to the same land, which was issued to another party, but has lapsed in consequence of his neglect to avail himself of it.

Lapse statutes. Those state statutory enactments which prevent the lapse or passing into the residue or by intestacy of legacies and devises when the legatee or devisee predeceases the testator, and which commonly provide that, if the legatee or devisee is a child or other relation of the testator, the legacy or devise passes to the issue of such legatee or devisee.

Larcenous /lär’sənəs/. Having the character of larceny; as a "larcenous taking." Contemplating or intending larceny; as a "larcenous purpose."

Larcenous intent. A larcenous intent exists where a man knowingly takes and carries away the goods of another without any claim or pretense of right, with intent wholly to deprive the owner of them or convert them to his own use.

Larceny /lär’sənə/. Felonious stealing, taking and carrying, leading, riding, or driving away another's personal property, with intent to convert it or to deprive owner thereof. The unlawful taking and carrying away of property of another with intent to appropriate it to use inconsistent with latter's rights. U. S. v. Johnson, 140 U.S.App.D.C. 54, 433 F.2d 1160, 1163. The essential elements of a "larceny" are an actual or constructive taking away of the goods or property of another without the consent and against the will of the owner or possessor and with a felonious intent to convert the property to the use of someone other than the owner. U. S. v. Waronek, 582 F.2d 1158.

Obtaining possession of property by fraud, trick or device with preconceived design or intent to appropriate, convert or steal is "larceny." John v. United States, 65 U.S.App.D.C. 11, 79 F.2d 136; People v. Cook, 10 Cal. App. 2d 54, 51 P.2d 169, 170.

Common-law distinctions between obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement, and larceny no longer exist in many states; all such crimes being embraced within general definition of "larceny." Some states classify larceny as either grand or petit, depending on the property's value.

See also Burglary; Robbery; Shoplifting; Stolen; Theft.

Compound larceny. Larceny or theft accomplished by taking the thing stolen either from one's person or from his house; otherwise called "mixed" larceny, and distinguished from "simple" or "plain" larceny, in which the theft is not aggravated by such an intrusion either upon the person or the dwelling. Sometimes referred to as larceny from the person.

Constructive larceny. One where the felonious intent to appropriate the goods to his own use, at the time of the asportation, is made out by construction from the defendant's conduct, although, originally, the taking was not apparently felonious.

False pretenses and larceny distinguished. See False pretenses.

Grand larceny. Taking and carrying away the personal property of another to a value in excess of $100.00 (or whatever the cut-off amount may be in a given jurisdiction) with the intent to feloniously deprive the owner or possessor of it permanently. Distinguished from petit larceny (q.v.) only by the value of the property stolen.

In England, simple larceny, was originally divided into two sorts,—grand larceny, where the value of the goods stolen was above twelve pence, and petit larceny, where their value was equal to or below that sum. 4 Bl.Comm. 229. The distinction was abolished in England by St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 29, and is not generally recognized in the United States, although in a few states there is a statutory offense of grand larceny, one essential element of which is the value of the goods stolen, which value varies.

Larceny by bailee. The crime of larceny committed where any person, being a bailee of any property, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or to the use of any other person except the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment.

Larceny by extortion. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by threatening to: (1) inflict bodily injury on anyone or commit any other criminal offense; or (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute; or (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action; or (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act; or (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense; or (7) inflict any other harm which would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code, § 223.4. See also Extortion.

Larceny by fraud or deception. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by deception. A person deceives if he purposely: (1) creates or reinforces a false impression, including false impressions as to law, value, intention or other state of mind; but deception as to a person's intention from the act alone that he did not subsequently perform the promise; or (2) prevents another from acquiring information which would affect his judgment of a transaction; or (3) fails to correct a false impression which the deceiver previously created or reinforced, or which the deceiver knows to be influencing another to whom he stands in a fiduciary or confidential relationship; or (4) fails to disclose a known lien, adverse claim or other legal impediment to the enjoyment of property which he transfers or encumbers in consideration for the property obtained, whether such impediment is or is not valid, or is or is not a matter of official record. Model Penal Code, § 223.3.

Larceny by trick. See Larceny by fraud or deception, above.

Larceny from the person. Act of taking property from the person by merely lifting it from the person or pocket. State v. Stanton, Mo., 68 S.W.2d 811, 812.
Larceny committed where the property stolen is on the person or in the immediate charge or custody of the person from whom the theft is made, but without such circumstances of force or violence as would constitute robbery, including pocket-picking and such like crimes.

Larceny of auto. See Auto theft.

Larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake.
A person who comes into control of property of another that he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the nature or amount of the property or the identity of the recipient is guilty of theft if, with purpose to deprive the owner thereof, he fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to a person entitled to have it. Model Penal Code, § 223.5.

Mixed larceny. Otherwise called "compound" or "comlicated larceny;" that which is attended with circumstances of aggravation or violence to the person, or taking from a house.

Petit (Petty) larceny. Larceny of things or goods whose value is below a statutorily set amount (e.g. $100). The value at common law was twelve pence. Compare Grand larceny, above.

Simple larceny. Felonious or wrongful taking and carrying away of personal goods of another with intent to steal, unattended by acts of violence. Larceny which is not complicated or aggravated with acts of violence.
Larceny from the person, or with force and violence, is called "compound" larceny.

Larger parcel. A term used in eminent domain proceedings, signifying that the parcel taken is not a complete parcel but part of a "larger parcel"; the owner, therefore, is entitled to damages from the severance as well as the value of the parcel taken. Unity of ownership, use, and contiguity must be present, although federal courts and some states do not require contiguity where there is a strong unity of use.

Larons /léranz/. In old English law, thieves.

Lascivious /las-iv/i-as/. Tending to excite lust; lewd; indecent; obscene; sexual impurity; tending to deprave the morals in respect to sexual relations; licentious.
See Swearingen v. U. S., 161 U.S. 446, 16 S.Ct. 562, 40
L.Ed. 765; People on Complaint of Sumner v. Dial Press,
182 Misc. 416, 48 N.Y.S.2d 480, 481; Dunlop v. U. S., 165
U.S. 486, 17 S.Ct. 375, 41 L.Ed. 799. Conduct which is wanton, lewd, and lustful, and tending to produce voluptuous or lewd emotions. See Lewd; Obscene.

Lascivious cohabitation. The offense committed by two persons (not married to each other) who live together in one habitation as man and wife and practice sexual intercourse. Such offense, where it still exists, is seldom enforced.

Last, n. In old English law, signifies a burden; also a measure of weight used for certain commodities of the bulkier sort.

Last, adj. Latest; ultimate; final; most recent.

Last antecedent rule. A canon of statutory construction that relative or qualifying words or phrases are to be applied to the words or phrases immediately preceding, and as not extending to or including other words, phrases, or clauses more remote, unless such extension or inclusion is clearly required by the intent and meaning of the context, or disclosed by an examination of the entire act.

Last clear chance doctrine. This doctrine permits a plaintiff in a negligence action to recover, notwithstanding his own negligence, on a showing that the defendant had the last clear chance to avoid the accident. Jarrett
v. Madifari, 67 A.D.2d 396, 415 N.Y.S.2d 644, 649. Under the doctrine of last clear chance (or "discovered peril" doctrine), as applied in automobile law, a plaintiff may recover from a defendant motorist for injuries or damages suffered, notwithstanding his own contributory negligence, where, as stated in terms of the essential elements of the doctrine, plaintiff was in a place of peril of which he was unaware or from which he was unable to extricate himself, the motorist discovered or had the opportunity to avoid the accident through the exercise of reasonable care. The last clear chance doctrine is not recognized in every jurisdiction and is subject to limitations in others. There are many variant forms and applications of this doctrine in the jurisdictions which apply it.

Doctrines impose upon person duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to another who has negligently put himself in position of peril, and who he can reasonably apprehend is unconscious of or inattentive to peril or unable to avoid imminent harm. Vernon v. Crist, 28 of doctrine are: (1) plaintiff was contributorily negligent by placing herself in a position of immediate peril, (2) plaintiff was unable to remove herself from such peril by the exercise of reasonable care, (3) defendant discovered or should have discovered plaintiff's dangerous situation in time so that by exercising reasonable care defendant could have prevented the accident, (4) defendant failed to exercise any reasonable care, and (5) defendant had the last clear chance to prevent the accident. Shanahan v. Patterson, Colo.App., 539 P.2d 1289, 1290.

See also Discovered peril doctrine.
Last heir. In English law, he to whom lands come by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases, the lord of whom the lands were held; in others, the sovereign.

Last-in, first-out (LIFO). A method of accounting which assumes that the most recent purchases are sold first. In times of inflation, the LIFO method results in a lower net income figure and lower inventory valuation than the FIFO method. This is due to the current costs being matched against current revenues and older costs and dollars which remain in inventory.

A method of identifying and valuing inventories which assumes that last goods purchased are the first ones sold and therefore the goods left in inventory at the end of the year are assumed to be those first purchased. L. S. Ayres & Co. v. U. S., C.A.Ind., 285 F.2d 113, 114. Compare FIFO.

Last resort, court of. A court from which there is no further appeal is called the “court of last resort.” For example, the United States Supreme Court.

Last sickness. See Last illness.

Last will. Term used alone or with “and testament” to designate the instrument which ultimately fixes the disposition of real and personal property at death. Usually used in reference to most recent will of deceased. See Will.

Lata culpa dolo equiparatur /léyta kólpo dówlo iykwsparéytar/. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Latching. An underground survey.

Late. Defunct; existing recently, but now dead. Formerly; recently; lately.

Latens /leytenz/. Lat. Latent; hidden; not apparent. See Ambiguitas.

Latent. Hidden; concealed; dormant; that which does not appear upon the face of a thing; as, a latent ambiguity or defect.

Latent ambiguity. A defect which does not appear on the face of language used or an instrument being considered. It arises when language is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic fact or some extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice between two or more possible meanings. Conkle v. Conkle, 31 Ohio App.2d 44, 285 N.E.2d 883, 887.

That species of uncertainty or ambiguity in an instrument which is not apparent from a reading of it but which is revealed when the terms of the instrument are applied or made operative; e.g. in a bill of lading goods are to be delivered at “Essex Railroad Wharf”, and there are two such wharfs with the same name. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the intention of the party drawing the instrument.

Parol evidence may be admitted to explain terms of contract, but not to contradict. See U.C.C. § 2-202. See also Ambiguity. Compare Patent ambiguity.

Latent deed. A deed kept for twenty years or more in a strongbox or other secret place.

Latent defect. A hidden or concealed defect. One which could not be discovered by reasonable and customary observation or inspection; one not apparent on face of goods, product, document, etc.

Defect of which owner has no knowledge, or which, in exercise of reasonable care, he should have had no knowledge. Bichl v. Poinier, 71 Wash.2d 492, 429 P.2d 228, 231. One which cannot be discovered by observation or inspection made with ordinary care. U.S. v. Lembke Const. Co., Inc., C.A. Ariz., 786 F.2d 1386, 1387. A latent defect in the title of a vendor of land is one not discoverable by inspection made with ordinary care, even though a matter of public record.

Latent equity. See Equity.

Lateral railroad. A lateral road is one which proceeds from some point on the main trunk between its terminal. It is but another name for a branch road, both being a part of the main road. An offshoot from main line of railroad. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Anderson, 167 Or. 687, 120 P.2d 578, 588.

Lateral support. The right of lateral and subjacent support is the right to have land supported by the adjoining land or the soil beneath. The right of a landowner to the natural support of his land by adjoining land. The adjoining owner has the duty not to change his land (such as lowering it) so as to cause this support to be weakened or removed.

Lateraré /làetaréy/. To lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways; used in descriptions of lands.

Latifundium /làetsfandiyam/. Lat. In the civil law, great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fundus), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire.

Latifundus /làetsfandos/. A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones.

Latin. The language of the ancient Romans. There are three sorts of law Latin: (1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers; (2) false or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs, though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc.; (3) words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called “Lawyers’ Latin.”

Latinarius /làetanéryas/. An interpreter of Latin.

Latinjani /làstéanyi júwniyéyánay/. Lat. In Roman law, a class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, “Cives Romani” and “Deditici.”

Latitat /làtetat/. In old English practice, a writ which issued in personal actions, on the return of non est inventus to a bill of Middlesex; so called from the emphatic word in its recital, in which it was "testified that the defendant lurks [latitatus] and wanders about" in the county. 3 Bl.Comm. 286. Abolished by St. 2, Wm. IV, c. 39.

Latitatio /lættəˈteɪʃən/ Lat. In the civil law and old English practice, a lying-hid; lurking, or concealment of the person.

Lator /ləˈtɔːr/. Lat. In the civil law, a bearer; a messenger. Also a maker or giver of laws.

Latro /lətrəʊ/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a robber; a thief.

Latrocination /lætrəˈsənəʃən/. The act of robbing; a depredation.

Latrinium /lætrəˈnjuːm/. The prerogative of adjudging and executing thieves; also larceny; theft; a thing stolen.

Latrocinia /lætrəˈsəniə/. The practice which prevails in our trials of calling persons to speak to a prisoner's character. The least number of laudatores among the Romans was ten.

Laudator /ləˈdətər/. Lat. An arbitrator; a witness to character.

Laudementum /ləˈdəmentəm/. In Civil law, the finding or award of a jury. 2 Bl. Comm. 285.

Laudatio /ləˈdoʊʃən/. The act of launching a vessel; the movement of a vessel from the land into the water, especially the sliding on ways from the stocks on which it is built. An open boat of large size used in any service; a lighter.

Laundering. Term used to describe investment or other transfer of money flowing from racketeering, drug transactions, and other illegal sources into legitimate channels so that its original source cannot be traced. Money laundering is a federal crime. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1956. Laundered also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.

Laurels /ˈloʊrəlz/. Pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king's head laureated; hence the name. See Jacobus.

Laus Deo /ləs ˈdiːəʊ/. Lat. Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange.

Law. That which is laid down, ordained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co-exist or follow each other. Law, in its generic sense, is a body of rules of action or conduct prescribed by controlling authority, and having binding legal force. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Guenther, 281 U.S. 34, 50 S.Ct. 165, 74 L.Ed. 683. That which must be obeyed and followed by citizens subject to sanctions or legal consequences is a law. Law is a solemn expression of the will of the supreme power of the State. Calif.Civil Code, § 22.

The "law" of a state is to be found in its statutory and constitutional enactments, as interpreted by its courts, and, in absence of statute law, in rulings of its courts. Dauer's Estate v. Zabel, 9 Mich.App. 176, 176 N.W.2d 34, 37.

Word "law" generally contemplates both statutory and case law. Matter of Estate of Perlberg, Tenn.App., 691 S.W.2d 304, 308.

In old English jurisprudence, "law" is used to signify an oath, or the privilege of being sworn; as in the phrases "to wage one's law," "to lose one's law."

The term is also used in opposition to "fact." Thus questions of law are to be decided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to resolve questions of fact.

The word may mean or embrace: body of principles, standards and rules promulgated by government, State ex rel. Conway v. Superior Court within and for Greenlee County, 60 Ariz. 69, 131 P.2d 983, 986; command which obliges a person or persons and obliges generally to acts or forbearances of a class; constitution or constitutional provision. Wickham v. Grand River Dam Authority, 189 Okl. 540, 118 P.2d 640, 645; county ordinance, People v. Zizady, 8 Cal.2d 149, 64 P.2d 425, 430; distinct and complete act of positive law; doctrine or procedure of the common law, from which equity is a departure; enrolled bill attested by presiding officers of two branches of General Assembly, Shannon v. Dean, 279 Ky. 279, 130 S.W.2d 812, 815; general rule of human action, taking cognizance only of external acts, enforced by a determinate authority, which authority is human, and among human authorities is that which is paramount in a political society; grant by Legislature, City of Los Angeles v. Pacific Land Corporation, 41 Cal.App.2d 223, 106 P.2d 242, 244; administrative agency rules and regulations, Columbia Broadcasting System v. United States, 316 U.S. 907, 62 S.Ct. 1194, 1200, 86 L.Ed. 1563; judicial decisions, judgments or decrees, West v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 311 U.S. 223, 61 S.Ct. 179, 183, 85 L.Ed. 139; law of the state; legislation by initiative method, Opinion of the Justices, 309 Mass. 676, 35 N.E.2d 676, 680; local rules of deci-

A concurrent or joint resolution of legislature is not "a law", Koenig v. Flynn, 258 N.Y. 292, 179 N.E. 705, 707; Ward v. State, 176 Okl. 368, 56 P.2d 136, 137; a resolution of the house of representatives is not a "law", State ex rel. Todd v. Yelle, 7 Wash.2d 443, 110 P.2d 162, 165; an unconstitutional statute is not a "law", Flournoy v. First Nat. Bank of Shreveport, 197 La. 1067, 3 So.2d 244, 248.

With reference to its origin, "law" is derived either from judicial precedents, from legislation, or from custom.

As to the different kinds of law, or law regarded in its different aspects, see Absolute law; Adjective law; Administrative law; Arms, law of; Bankruptcy Code; Canon (Canon law); Case law; Citations, law of; Civil law; Commercial law; Common law; Conclusion of law; Conflicts of laws; Constitutional law; Criminal law; Custom and usage; Ecclesiastical law; Edict; Enabling statute; Equity; Evidence, law of; Flag, law of; Foreign laws; Forest law; General law; International law; Local law; Maritime; Maritime law; Marque, law of; Martial law; Mercantile law; Military law; Moral law; Municipal law; Natural law; Oleron, laws of; Ordinance; Organic law; Parliamentary law; Penal laws; Positive law; Private law; Probate; Procedural law; Prospective law; Public law; Remedial laws and statutes; Retrospective law; Revenue law or measure; Road (Law of the road); Roman law; Special law; Staple (Law of the staple); Statute; Substantive law; Unwritten law; War; Wisby, laws of; Written law.

For "facts" and "law" as distinguishable, see Fact. For practice of law, see Practice.

Law arbitrary. Opposed to immutable, a law not founded in the nature of things, but imposed by the mere will of the legislature.

Law court of appeals. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

Law enforcement officer. Those whose duty it is to preserve the peace. Frazier v. Elmore, 180 Tenn. 232, 173 S.W.2d 563, 565. See also Police officer; Sheriff.

Law French. The Norman French language, introduced into England by William the Conqueror. For several centuries, it was, in an emphatic sense, the language of the English law. It is called by Blackstone a "barbarous dialect," and the later specimens of it fully warrant the appellation, but at the time of its introduction it was, as has been observed, the best form of the language spoken in Normandy.

Lawful. Legal; warranted or authorized by the law; having the qualifications prescribed by law; not contrary to nor forbidden by the law; not illegal.

The principal distinction between the terms "lawful" and "legal" is that the former contemplates the substance of law, the latter the form of law. To say of an act that it is "lawful" implies that it is authorized, sanctioned, or at any rate not forbidden, by law. To say that it is "legal" implies that it is done or performed in accordance with the forms and usages of law, or in a technical manner. In this sense "illegal" approaches the meaning of "invalid." For example, a contract or will, executed without the required formalities, might be said to be invalid or illegal, but could not be described as unlawful. Further, the word "lawful" more clearly implies an ethical content than does "legal." The latter goes no further than to denote compliance, with positive, technical, or formal rules; while the former usually imports a moral substance or ethical permissibility. A further distinction is that the word "legal" is used as the synonym of "constructive," which "lawful" is not. Thus "legal fraud" is fraud implied or inferred by law, or made out by construction. "Lawful fraud" would be a contradiction of terms. Again, "legal" is used as the antithesis of "equitable." Thus, we speak of "legal assets," "legal estate," etc., but not of "lawful assets," or "lawful estate." But there are some connections in which the two words are used as exact equivalents. Thus, a "lawful" writ, warrant, or process is the same as a "legal" writ, warrant, or process.

See also Legal; Legitimate; Valid.

Lawful age. Full age, legal age, majority; generally 18 years of age, though the "lawful age" for certain acts (e.g. drinking, driving motor vehicle, etc.) may vary from state to state. See also Capacity; Legal age.

Lawful arrest. The taking of a person into legal custody either under a valid warrant or on probable cause for believing that he has committed a crime or under civil process which permits his arrest; e.g. capias for arrest of debtor. Term is used in connection with right to search a person and his immediate surroundings without a warrant as an incident of the arrest. Chime1 v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034, 23 L.Ed.2d 685. See Arrest; Probable cause; Search; Search-warrant.

Lawful authorities. Those persons who have right to exercise public power, to require obedience to their lawful commands, to command or act in the public name; e.g. police.

Lawful cause. Legitimate reason for acting, based on the law or on the evidence in a particular case as contrasted with acting on a whim or out of prejudice, or for a reason not recognized by the law. See also Cause of action.

Lawful dependents. Term generally associated with allowances or benefits from public (e.g. Social Security benefits) or private funds to those who qualify as dependents and whose dependency is within the terms of the law which govern the distribution. Term is also used with respect to tax exemptions for dependents. See also Dependent; Legal dependent.

Lawful discharge. Such a discharge in insolvency as exonerates the debtor from his debts; e.g. discharge pursuant to bankruptcy proceeding.

Lawful entry. An entry on real estate, by one out of possession, under claim or color of right and without force or fraud. An entry of premises pursuant to a search warrant. See Ejection; Eviction; Process (Summary process); Search Warrant.

Law of the case. Term "law of the case," as generally used, designates the principle that if an appellate court has passed on a legal question and remanded the cause to the court below for further proceedings, the legal question thus determined by the appellate court will not be differently determined on a subsequent appeal in the same case where the facts remain the same. Allen v. Michigan Bell Tel. Co., 61 Mich.App. 62, 232 N.W.2d 302, 303. Doctrine which provides that an appellate court’s determination on a legal issue is binding on both the trial court on remand and an appellate court on a subsequent appeal given the same case and substantially the same facts. Hinds v. McNair, Ind.App., 413 N.E.2d 586, 607.

Doctrine is that principle under which determination of questions of law will generally be held to govern case throughout all its subsequent stages where such determination has already been made on a prior appeal to a court of last resort. Transport Ins. Co. v. Employers Cas. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 470 S.W.2d 757, 762. The doctrine expresses practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided. White v. Higgins, C.C.A. Mass., 116 F.2d 312, 317, 318; Fleming v. Campbell, 148 Kan. 516, 83 P.2d 708, 709. It expresses the rule that final judgment of highest court is final determination of parties’ rights.

Doctrine of "law of the case" is one of policy only and will be disregarded when compelling circumstances call for a redetermination of the determination of point of law on prior appeal, and this is particularly true where intervening or contemporaneous change in law has occurred by overruling former decisions or establishment of new precedent by controlling authority. Ryan v. Mike-Ron Corp., Cal.App., 63 Cal.Rptr. 601, 605. Doctrine is merely a rule of procedure and does not go to the power of the court, and will not be adhered to where its application will result in an unjust decision. People v. Medina, Cal., 99 Cal.Rptr. 630, 635, 492 P.2d 686.

Jury instructions. It has been held that jury instructions are the "law of the case" where appealing defendant accepted instructions as correct, Etna Life Ins. Co. v. McAdoo, C.C.A.Ark., 115 F.2d 369, 370; where such were approved on former appeal and given at second trial, Whitehead v. Stith, 279 Ky. 556, 131 S.W.2d 455, 460; where instructions were not challenged in any manner or in any particular, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Stone, C.C.A.Mass., 80 F.2d 614, 616; Codd v. New York Underwriters Ins. Co., 19 Wash.2d 671, 144 P.2d 234, 237; where no objections or exceptions taken, Miller v. Mohr, 198 Wash. 619, 89 P.2d 807, 814.

See also Collateral estoppel; Res judicata.

Law of the flag. See Flag, law of.

Law of the land. Due process of law (q.v.). Body of law consisting of court decisions, statutes, and treaties. See U.S. Const., Art. VI, § 2. By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. Dupuy v. Tedora, 294 La. 569, 15 So.2d 886, 891. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of general rules which govern society. See also Due process of law; Law.

Law of the road. See Road (Law of the road).

Law questions. Issues or questions in a case which do not require findings of fact but are addressed to the judge for application of the law. In those instances wherein the law depends on the facts, the factual questions are first decided and then the law is applied to the facts as found by the judge or jury. Compare Fact question.

Law reporters or reports. Published volumes containing the decisions and opinions of state and federal courts; e.g. National Reporter System. Commonly such decisions are first published in advance sheets and thereafter in bound reports or reporter volumes. Law reports or reporters may be either official (published by the state or federal government) or unofficial (published by private publisher). See e.g. Federal Reporter.

Law review. A periodic publication of most law schools containing lead articles on topical subjects by law professors, judges or attorneys, and case summaries by law review member-students. Normally only honor or top law students are members of the law review staff.

Laws. Rules promulgated by government as a means to order an ordered society. Strictly speaking, session laws or statutes and not decisions of court; though in common usage refers to both legislative and court made law, as well as to administrative rules, regulations and ordinances. See also Law.

Lay people. Jurymen.

Lay system. As applied to fishing vessels, exists where the fish caught are sold at auction and from the proceeds is deducted charges for supplies furnished and balance distributed to the master and the crew.

Lay witness. Person called to give testimony who does not possess any expertise in the matters about which he testifies. Used in contrast to expert witness who may render an opinion based on his expert knowledge if proper foundation is laid. Generally, such non-expert testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness (i.e. first-hand knowledge or observation) and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact at issue. Fed.Evid.R. 701. See Opinion evidence or testimony. Compare Expert witness.

Lazzi. A Saxon term for persons of a servile condition.

L.C. An abbreviation which may stand either for "Lord Chancellor," "Lower Canada," or "Leading Cases."

LEAA. Law Enforcement Assistance Act.

Lead counsel. The counsel on either side of a litigated action who is charged with the principal management and direction of the party's case, as distinguished from his juniors or subordinates, is said to "lead in the cause," and is termed the "leading counsel" on that side. May also refer to chief or primary attorney in class action or multi-district litigation.

Leading a use. In common law, where a deed was executed before the levy of a fine of land, for the purpose of specifying to whose use the fine should inure, it was said to "lead" the use. If executed after the fine, it was said to "declare" the use. 2 Bl.Comm. 363.

Leading case. Among the various cases that are argued and determined in the courts, some, from their important character, have demanded more than usual attention from the judges, and from this circumstance are frequently looked upon as having settled or determined the law upon all points involved in such cases, and as guides for subsequent decisions, and from the importance they thus acquire are familiarly termed "leading cases." See e.g. Marbury v. Madison.

Leading object rule. If the leading object or main purpose of a person's promise to answer for the debt of another is the promisor's own benefit, such promise need not be in writing as required by the statute of frauds; sometimes known as the "main purpose" doctrine.

Leading question. One which instructs witness how to answer or puts into his mouth words to be echoed back,
People v. Hamilton, Gen.Sess., 30 N.Y.S.2d 155, 158; one which suggests to witness answer desired, or a question admitting of being answered by a simple "yes" or "no". Boone v. State, 223 A.2d 476, 492.

Leading questions are usually deemed improper on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop the witnesses’ testimony. Ordinarily leading questions are permitted on cross-examination. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions. Fed.Evid.R. 611(c).

Even on direct examination, leading questions may be permitted if the witness is very young, mentally disabled, or unfamiliar with the language spoken. And may, in certain circumstances, also be permitted to facilitate a witness’s introduction of subject of inquiry; e.g., police officer may be led as to activities leading up to events in dispute in order to save time.

Agreement under which owner gives up possession and use of his property for valuable consideration and for definite term and at end of term owner has absolute right to retake, control and use property. Transamerica Leasing Corp. v. Bureau of Revenue, App., 80 N.M. 48, 450 P.2d 934, 937.

When used with reference to tangible personal property, word “lease” means a contract by which one owning such property grants to another the right to possess, use and enjoy it for specified period of time in exchange for periodic payment of a stipulated price, referred to as rent. Undercofler v. Whiteway Neon Ad, Inc., 114 Ga. App. 644, 152 S.E.2d 616, 618.

The Federal Consumer Leasing Act provides for certain disclosure requirements in consumer leases. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1667 et seq. In addition, certain states require that consumer (e.g. residential) leases be written in “plain language.” See McKinney’s (N.Y.) Consol.Laws, Gen Obl., § 5-702. See also U.C.C. Article 2A with respect to consumer leases.

The person who conveys is termed the “lessor,” and the person to whom conveyed, the “lessee,” and when the lessor conveys lands or tenements to a lessee, he is said to lease, demise, or let them. The word when used as verb, means to transfer for term specified therein from lessor to lessee property therein demised, also to let, to farm out, to rent.

See also Assignable lease; Community lease; Consumer lease; Demise; Finance lease; Graduated lease; Ground lease; Mining lease; Net lease; Operating lease; Percentage lease; Sale and leaseback; Sandwich lease; Underlease. For Extension of lease, see Extension. Compare License.

Concurrent lease. One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises made to another person; or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitled the lessee to all the rents accruing on the previous lease after the date of his lease and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant.

Graduated lease. Lease that takes into consideration future increases in operating expenses. In a graduated lease there must be a base year on which an increase is judged. With inflation and continuing increases in taxes, energy costs, and other expenses, this type lease has become more popular than the fixed-straight lease.

Gross lease. Lease in which lessee pays a flat sum for rent out of which the lessor is required to pay all expenses such as taxes, water, utilities, insurance, etc.

Index lease. A lease arrangement that provides for increases in rent according to increases in the consumer price index. See also Graduated lease.
Lease

Lease and release. A species of conveyance much used in England, said to have been invented by Serjeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the Statute of Uses. It is thus contrived: A lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him. The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Bl.Comm. 339. By the Law of Property Act of 1925 all lands and all interests therein now lie in grant only.

Long term lease. See Ground rent.

Master lease. A main lease controlling subsequent leases or subleases.

Mineral lease. Lease in which the lessee acquires the right to work a mine of oil or gas, etc. The rent is commonly based on the amount or value of the mineral withdrawn.

Mining lease. See Mining.

Month to month lease. Tenancy where no lease is involved, rent being paid monthly. Statutes often require one month’s notice to landlord of intent to terminate such tenancy.

Net lease. Lease which requires the tenant to pay, in addition to rent, the expenses of the leased property, e.g. taxes, insurance, maintenance, etc.

Net-net-net lease. Lease in which the lessee pays all the expenses including mortgage interest and amortization leaving the lessor with an amount free of all claims.

Parol lease. A lease of real estate not evidenced by writing, but resting in an oral agreement.

Percentage lease. A percentage lease is one in which the amount of rent is based upon a percentage of the gross or net profits of the lessee’s business, or of his gross sales, with a stipulated minimum rent. Such leases are mainly used where location of the property is an important part of its value (e.g. in shopping center).

Perpetual lease. A lease of lands which may last without limitation as to time; a grant of lands in fee with the reservation of a rent in fee; a fee-farm.

Proprietary lease. Lease used in cooperative form of ownership in which lessee acquires right to possession.

Sublease, or underlease. One executed by the lessee to a third person, conveying the same estate for a shorter term than that for which the lessee holds it. See also Sublease.

Top lease. A lease granted on property already subject to an oil and gas lease. Generally, a top lease grants rights if and when the existing lease expires. Shown v. Getty Oil Co., Tex.App., 645 S.W.2d 555.

Leaseback. Transaction whereby transferor sells property and later leases it back. In a sale-leaseback situation, for example, R would sell property to S and subsequently lease such property from S. Thus, R becomes the lessee and S the lessor.

Leasehold. An estate in real property held by lessee/tenant under a lease. The four principal types of leasehold estates are the estate for years, periodic tenancy, tenancy at will, and tenancy at sufferance. The asset representing the right of the lessee to use leased property.

Leasehold improvements. Improvements made by lessee to leased property such as parking lot or driveway. The term is used in condemnation proceedings to determine the portion of the award to which the lessee is entitled.

Leasehold interest. The interest of the lessor or the lessee under a lease contract. U.C.C. § 2A-103. The interest which the lessee has in the value of the lease itself in condemnation award determination. The difference between the total remaining rent under the lease, and the rent lessee would currently pay for similar space for the same time period. See also Leasehold value; No bonus clause.

Leasehold mortgage. See Mortgage.

Leasehold mortgage bond. See Bond.

Leasehold value. The value of a leasehold interest. Usually applies to a long term lease when market rental for similar space is higher than rent paid under the lease. Some states allow the lessee to claim the leasehold value against the landlord in eminent domain proceedings, unless specifically prohibited by the lease itself. Other states, by statute, do not allow for such a claim. See also Leasehold interest; No bonus clause.

Lease with option to purchase. A lease under which the lessee has the right to purchase the property. The price and terms of the purchase must be set forth for the option to be valid. The option may run for the length of the lease period.

Leave /l(ˈeɪv/ . L. Fr. Legality; sufficiency in law.

Leave, v. To give. To allow or cause to remain; to let remain, unmoved or undone; to refrain from or neglect taking, doing, or changing; to let stay or continue; to let be without interference; to suffer to remain subject to another’s action, control, or the like; to suffer to be undisturbed in action. To give or dispose of by will; to bequeath or devise. To put, place, deposit, deliver, or the like.

Leave, n. Permission or authorization to do something.

Willful departure with intent to remain away, and not temporary absence with intention of returning. See also Desertion.
Leave and license. A defense to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

Leave no issue. Not survived by a child or children or their descendants. A spouse of a deceased child is not "issue" (q.v.). In re Vigil’s Estate, 38 N.M. 383, 34 P.2d 667, 668.

Leave of absence. Temporary absence from employment or duty with intention to return during which time remuneration and seniority are not normally affected. State ex rel. McGaughey v. Grayston, 349 Mo. 700, 163 S.W.2d 335, 341. See also Furlough; Sick leave.

Leave of court. Permission obtained from a court to take some action which, without such permission, would not be allowable; as, to receive an extension of time to answer complaint. Fed.R.Civil P. 6.

Leccator /lakéytar/. A debauched person.

Lecherwite, lairwite, or legerwite /lécharwáyt/ /léjárwáyt/. At common law, a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors.

Le contrat fait la loi /lø kontrá féy la lwá/. The contract makes the law.

Ledger /léjar/. A book of accounts, often referred to as a general ledger, in which a business records transactions; there being two parallel columns in each account, one for the debit entries, the other for the credits. Into this book are posted the items from the books of original entry or journals. The principal book of accounts of a business establishment in which all the transactions of each day are entered under appropriate headings so as to show at a glance the debits and credits of each account. Foothill Ditch Co. v. Wallace Ranch Water Co., 25 Cal. App.2d 555, 78 P.2d 215, 220. See also Journal.

Ledo /lədydəw/. The rising water or increase of the sea.

Leet. In English law, the name of a court of criminal jurisdiction, formerly of much importance, but latterly fallen into disuse. See Court-Leet.

Left. To let remain or have remaining at death; to transmit, bequeath or give by will. Grimes v. Crouch, 175 Va. 126, 7 S.E.2d 115, 117. See also Bequest; Devise; Leave; Legacy.

Legabils /lægəbils/. In old English law, that which may be bequeathed.

Legacy. A disposition of personalty by will. A bequest.

In a technical sense and strictly construed, "legacy" is a gift or bequest by will of personal property, whereas a "devise" is a testamentary disposition of real estate, but such distinction will not be permitted to defeat the intent of a testator, and such terms may be construed interchangeably or applied indifferently to either personalty or real estate if the context of the will shows that such was the intention of the testator. Festorazzi v. First Nat. Bank of Mobile, 288 Ala. 645, 264 So.2d 496, 505.

See also Ademption; Bequest; Cumulative legacies; Devise; Legatee; Vested legacy.

Absolute legacy. One given without condition and intended to vest immediately.

Accumulative legacy. A second, double, or additional legacy; a legacy given in addition to another given by the same instrument, or by another instrument.

Additional legacy. One given to the same legatee in addition to (and not in lieu of) another legacy given before by the same will or in a codicil thereto.

Alternate legacy. One by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

Conditional legacy. One which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event.

Contingent legacy. A legacy given to a person at a future uncertain time, that may or may not arrive; as "at his age of twenty-one," or "if" or "when he attains twenty-one." A legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event. A legacy which has not vested.

Cumulative legacies. These are legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construction of testamentary instruments, the question often arises whether, where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only to one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered as a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, i.e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails.

Demonstrative legacy. A bequest of a certain sum of money, with a direction that it shall be paid out of a particular fund. It differs from a specific legacy in this respect: that, if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it is nevertheless entitled to come on the estate as a general legacy. And it differs from a general legacy in this: that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies. Kenaday v. Sinnott, 179 U.S. 606, 21 S.Ct. 233, 45 L.Ed. 339. A bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or other property, payable out of a particular fund of property or security, but it can neither amount to a gift of the corpus nor serve the purpose of releasing the estate from liability in event a particular fund or property should fail. In re Jeffcott’s Estate, Fla.App., 186 So.2d 80, 83. A legacy of quantity is ordinarily a general legacy; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a “demonstrative legacy,” and it is so far general and differs so much in effect from one properly specific that, if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy is so far specific that it... will not be liable to abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets.

General legacy. A pecuniary legacy which is payable out of general assets of estate of testator, being bequest of money or other thing in quantity and not separated or distinguished from others of the same kind. Shamberger v. Dessel, 240 Md. 650, 215 A.2d 177, 179, 15 A.L.R.3d 1029. One so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or particular money of the testator, distinguished from others of the same kind; one of quantity merely, not specific. Compare Specific legacy, below.

Indefinite legacy. One which passes property by a general or collective term, without enumeration of number or quantity; as, a bequest of "all" the testator's "goods," or his "bank stock."

Lapsed legacy. Where the legatee dies before the testator, or before the legacy is payable, the bequest is said to lapse. Such legacy then falls into residue unless there is an anti-lapse statute in which case the legacy passes to the issue of the legatee. See Lapse statutes.

Modal legacy. A bequest accompanied by directions as to the mode or manner in which it shall be applied for the legatee's benefit, e.g., a legacy to A. to buy him a house.

Pecuniary legacy. A bequest of a sum of money, or of an annuity. It may or may not specify the fund from which it is to be drawn. It is none the less a pecuniary legacy if it comprises the specific pieces of money in a designated receptacle, as a purse or chest.

Residuary legacy. A bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will. A bequest of "all the rest, residue, and remainder" of the personal property after payment of debts and satisfaction of the particular legacies. Legacy containing assets after other legacies and estate debts and costs of administration have been paid. Alston v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 349 F.2d 87, 89.

Special legacy. A "specific legacy" (q.v.) is sometimes so called.

Specific legacy. One which operates on property particularly designated. A legacy or gift by will of a particular specified thing, as of a horse, a piece of furniture, a term of years, and the like. In a strict sense, a legacy of a particular chattel, which is specified and distinguished from all other chattels of the testator of the same kind; as of a horse of a certain color. A legacy of a quantity of chattels described collectively; as a gift of all the testator's pictures. A legacy is specific, when it is limited to a particular thing, subject, or chose in action, so identified as to render the bequest inapplicable to any other; as the bequest of a horse, a picture, or jewel, or a debt due from a person named, and, in special cases, even of a sum of money. Compare General legacy, above.

Trust legacy. A bequest of personal property to trustees to be held upon trust; as, to pay the annual income to a beneficiary for life.

Universal legacy. In the civil law, a testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease.

Void legacy. Term formerly used to describe legacy given to one who died before execution of will. Now, such legacy is considered a lapsed legacy and is treated as such. See Legacy (Lapsed legacy).

Legacy duty. A duty formerly imposed in England upon personal property (other than leasesholds) devolving under any will or intestacy.

Legacy or succession tax. An excise on privilege of taking property by will or inheritance or by succession on death of owner. In re Rosing's Estate, 337 Mo. 544, 85 S.W.2d 495, 496; State Tax Commission v. Backman, 88 Utah 424, 55 P.2d 171, 174. See also Inheritance tax.

Legal. 1. Conforming to the law; according to law; required or permitted by law; not forbidden or dis¬countenanced by law; good and effectual in law; of or pertaining to the law; lawful. Freeman v. Fowler Packing Co., 135 Kan. 378, 11 P.2d 276, 277. See Lawful; Valid.

2. Proper or sufficient to be recognized by the law; cognizable in the courts; competent or adequate to fulfill the requirements of the law.

3. Cognizable in courts of law, as distinguished from courts of equity; construed or governed by the rules and principles of law, in contradistinction to rules of equity. With the merger in most states of law and equity courts, this distinction generally no longer exists. Fed.R.Civ. Proc. 2.

4. Posited by the courts as the inference or imputation of the law, as a matter of construction, rather than established by actual proof; e.g., legal malice.

5. Created by law.

As to legal Consideration; Damages; Day; Debt; Defense; Demand; Disability; Discretion; Estate; Incapacity; Irregularity; Memory; Mortgage; Process; Relevancy; Remedy; Reversion, and Tender, see those titles.

Legal acumen. The doctrine of legal acumen is that if a defect in, or invalidity of, a claim to land is such as to require legal acumen to discover it, whether it appears upon the face of the record or proceedings, or is to be proved aliunde, then the powers or jurisdiction of a court of equity may be invoked to remove the cloud created by such defect or invalidity. Legal age. The age at which the person acquires full capacity to make his own contracts and deeds and transact business generally (age of majority) or to enter into some particular contract or relation, as the "legal age of consent" to marriage. The age at which a person may enter into binding contracts or commit other legal acts. In most states a minor reaches legal age or majority (i.e., becomes of age) at age 18; though for certain acts (e.g., drinking) it may be higher, and for others (e.g. driving) it may be lower. See also Capacity; Majority.
Legal conclusion. A statement of legal duty without stating fact from which duty arises. Burton-Lingo Co. v. Morton, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 727, 733. A particular statement which would be considered a statement of fact in everyday conversation might, nevertheless, be considered a "legal conclusion" when used in connection with a legal proceeding if the truth of the fact stated is one of the ultimate issues to be determined in such proceeding. Cortner v. National Cash Register Co., 25

Legal entity. Legal existence. An entity, other than a natural person, who has sufficient existence in legal contemplation that it can function legally, be sued or Ohio Misc. 156, 262 N.E.2d 586, 588. See also Decision; Judgment.

Legal cruelty. Such as will warrant the granting of a divorce to the injured party, as distinguished from such kinds or degrees of cruelty as do not. Such conduct on the part of a spouse as will endanger the life, person, or health (bodily or mental) of his or her spouse, or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily or mental hurt; such acts as render cohabitation unsafe, or are likely to be attended with injury to the person or to the health of the spouse. See also Cruelty; Mental cruelty.

Legal custodian. Custodian of or responsibility for a person according to law, such as a guardian's authority over the person or property, or both, of his ward. See also Commitment; Custody; Guardian; Ward.

Legal death. See Brain death; Civil death.

Legal dependent. Dependent according to law. The term imports right to invoke aid of law to require support. See Dependent; Lawful dependents; Support; Ward.

Legal description. A description of real property by government survey, metes and bounds, or lot numbers of a recorded plat including a description of any portion thereof subject to an easement or reservation, if any. Such must be complete enough that a particular parcel of land can be located and identified. See Land boundaries; Metes and bounds.

Legal detriment. Legal detriment to promisee means that promisee changed his legal position, or assumed duties or liabilities not theretofore imposed on him on reliance of actions of promisor. State ex rel. Kansas City v. State Highway Commission, 349 Mo. 865, 163 S.W.2d 948, 953. Term refers to giving up something which immediately prior thereto the promisee was privileged to retain, or doing or refraining from doing something which he was then privileged not to do, or not to refrain from doing. See also Consideration; Detriment.

Legal discretion. See Discretion.

Legal distributees. As used in will, term is construed to mean persons who would be entitled to take under the law.

Legal duty. An obligation arising from contract of the parties or the operation of the law; e.g. legal duty of parents to support children. Ferrell v. Hass, 136 Ga. App. 274, 220 S.E.2d 771, 773. That which the law requires to be done or forborne to a determinate person or the public at large, correlative to a vested and coextensive right in such person or the public, and the breach of which constitutes negligence. An obligation recognized by law which requires an actor to conform to a certain standard of conduct for the protection of others against unreasonable risk. Swartz v. Huffmaster Alarms Systems, Inc., 145 Mich.App. 431, 377 N.W.2d 393, 395. See also Legal obligation; Support.

Legal existence. An entity, other than a natural person, who has sufficient existence in legal contemplation that it can function legally, be sued or sue and make decisions through agents as in the case of corporations.

Legal estoppel. Estoppel by deed or record, as distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. It excludes evidence of the truth and the equity of the particular case to support a strict rule of law on grounds of public policy. See also Estoppel.

Legal ethics. Usages and customs among members of the legal profession, involving their moral and professional duties toward one another, toward clients, and toward the courts. That branch of moral science which treats of the duties which a member of the legal profession owes to the public, to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client. Most states have adopted the Model Rules of Professional Conduct of the American Bar Association. See also Canon.

Legal evidence. A broad general term meaning all admissible evidence, including both oral and documentary, but with a further implication that it must be of such a character as tends reasonably and substantially to prove the point, not to raise a mere suspicion or conjecture. See also Admissible; Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Legal excuse. Doctrine by which one seeks to avoid the consequences of his own conduct by showing justification for acts which would otherwise be considered negligent or criminal; e.g., killing of another in self defense. Gibbs v. Wilmeth, 261 Iowa 1015, 157 N.W.2d 93, 96. See also Excusable; Justification; Legal impossibility; Self-defense.

Legal fiction. Assumption of fact made by court as basis for deciding a legal question. A situation contrived by the law to permit a court to dispose of a matter, though it need not be created improperly; e.g., fiction of lost grant as basis for title by adverse possession.

Legal fraud. Contracts or acts as, though not originating in actual evil design to perpetrate fraud, yet by their tendency to mislead others or to violate confidence, are prohibited by law. Ruedy v. Toledo Factories Co., 61 Ohio App. 21, 22 N.E.2d 293, 297, 15 O.O. 56. Breach of some legal or equitable duty which, irrespective of moral guilt, the law declares fraudulent because of its tendency to deceive others, to violate confidence, or to injure public interests. Capitol Rod & Gun Club v. Lower Colorado River Authority, Tex.App., 622 S.W.2d 887, 892. Misrepresentation of a material fact made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted on by the opposite party to his damages constitutes "legal fraud." Coffey v. Wining er, 156 Ind.App. 233, 296 N.E.2d 154, 160.

Synonymous with "constructive fraud." Purcell v. Robertson, 122 W.Va. 287, 8 S.E.2d 881, 883; Tom Reed Gold Mines Co. v. United Eastern Mining Co., 39 Ariz. 533, 8 P.2d 449, 451. For definition of Constructive fraud, see Fraud.

Legal holiday. A day designated by law as exempt from judicial proceedings, service of process, demand and protest of commercial paper, etc. A day designated by legislative enactment for purpose within meaning of term "holiday." Vidal v. Backs, 218 Cal. 99, 21 P.2d 952. Fed.R.Civ.P. 6(a), 77(c).

The legal or practical effect of a day being a "legal holiday" varies from state to state. A "holiday" may in some states be a day on which service of process is invalid, on which all or only some businesses are closed, on which state offices may or may not be closed. The statutes should be consulted in individual cases, as well as local custom, to determine if a “holiday” affects some particular contemplated action. See also Holiday.

Legal impossibility. As defense to criminal charge, occurs when the actions which the defendant performs or sets in motion, even if fully carried out as he desired, would not constitute a crime, whereas "factual impossibility" occurs when the objective of the defendant is proscribed by the criminal law but a circumstance unknown to the actor prevents him from bringing about that objective. U.S. v. Oviedo, C.A.Tex., 525 F.2d 881, 883. Defense of "legal impossibility" may be established only where a defendant's actions, if fully performed, would not constitute a crime, while "factual impossibility" can serve as a defense only where circumstances unknown to the actor prevent his commission of an offense. U. S. v. Johnston, C.A.Ark., 543 F.2d 55, 58. See also Impossibility.

Legal insanity. See Insanity.

Legal interest. A rate of interest fixed by statute as either the maximum rate of interest permitted to be charged by law, or a rate of interest to be applied when the parties to a contract intend an interest rate to be paid but do not fix the rate in the contract. Even in the latter case, frequently this rate is the same as the statutory maximum rate permitted. Term may also be used to distinguish interest in property or in claim cognizable at law in contrast to equitable interest. See also Legal owner; Usury.

Legal investments. Those investments sometimes called "legal lists" in which banks and other financial institutions may invest. State statutes often provide that trust funds be invested only in high grade, "legal list," securities. See also Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Legalis homo /lʊgɛyːləs ˈhɒmwəʊ/. Lat. A lawful man; a person who stands rectus in curia; a person not outlawed, excommunicated, or infamous. It occurs in the phrase, "probi et legales homines" (good and lawful men, competent jurors), and "legality" designates the condition of such a man.

Legalis moneta anglica /lagéylas maniyta āngliyiy/. Lawful money of England.

Legal issue. When used in will and unexplained by context, means descendants. In proper context, may refer to legal question which is at the foundation of a case and which requires decision by court. See issue; Legal heirs.

Legality, or legalness. Lawfulness.

Legalization. The act of legalizing or making legal or lawful.

Legalize. To make legal or lawful. Wight v. New Jersey Racing Commission, 128 N.J.L. 517, 26 A.2d 709, 712. To confirm or validate what was before void or unlawful. To add the sanction and authority of law to that which before was without or against law. See also Legitimated.

Legализ монета англии. Lawful money of England.

Legalized nuisance. A structure, erection, or other thing which would constitute a nuisance at common law, but which cannot be objected to by private persons because constructed or maintained under direct and sufficient legislative authority. Such, for example, are hospitals or recreational areas maintained by cities.

Legal jeopardy. A person is in "legal jeopardy" when he is put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been "charged with his deliverance," and a jury is thus charged when they have been impaneled and sworn. State v. Whitman, 93 Utah 557, 74 P.2d 696, 697. See also Jeopardy.

Legal liability. A liability which courts recognize and enforce as between parties litigant. See also Legally liable; Liability; Strict liability.

Legal life estate. Interest in real or personal property for the life of the holder and enforceable at law in contrast to equitable life estate.

Legal list. A list of investments selected by various states in which certain institutions and fiduciaries, such as insurance companies and banks, may invest. Legal lists are often restricted to high quality securities meeting certain specifications. See also Legal investments; Prudent Man Rule.

Legally. Lawfully; according to law.

Legally adopted. Adopted in accordance with laws of state.

Legally committed. Refers to accused who has been committed by magistrate who has jurisdiction to hold examination and who has actually heard evidence and determined probable cause exists for holding defendant. People v. Dal Porto, 17 Cal.App.2d 755, 63 P.2d 1199, 1200. See also Commitment.

Legally competent. Words "legally competent" in statute prescribing qualifications of executor mean fit or qualified to act according to judicial standards essential to proper course of justice. In re Haefele's Estate, 145 Neb. 809, 18 N.W.2d 228, 231. See also Capacity.

Legally constituted court. One known to and recognized by law. See Constitutional court.

Legally determined. Determined by process of law. Black Diamond S. S. Corporation v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, D.C.Md., 33 F.2d 767, 769.

Legally operating automobile. As used in liability policy, means operating automobile by right or by lawful authority. Universal Automobile Ins. Co. v. Benoit, C.C.A.Ariz., 67 F.2d 52, 53; Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co. v. Thompson, C.C.A.Cal., 49 F.2d 860, 861.

Legally reside. Domicile. Mitchell v. Kinney, 242 Ala. 196, 5 So.2d 788, 793. See Domicile; Legal residence; Residence.

Legally sufficient consideration. Consideration which the law recognizes as legally adequate to support a valid contract. See Consideration.

Legally sufficient evidence. Competent, pertinent evidence coming from a legal source. Evidence is "legally sufficient to sustain finding", if supported by substantial evidence, and record as whole does not clearly, convincingly, or even, possibly, indisputably require contrary conclusion. Tracey v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 53 F.2d 575, 579. See Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Legally sufficient tender. A tender made under circumstances that fulfill obligations assumed by vendors. Kolling v. Martin, 109 Ind.App. 184, 33 N.E.2d 808, 815. See Legal tender.

Legally using automobile. See Legally operating automobile, supra.

Legal malice. Such consists of either an express intent to kill or inflict great bodily harm, or of a wickedness of disposition, hardness of heart, cruelty, recklessness of consequences and a mind regardless of social duty which indicates an unjustified disregard for the likelihood of death or great bodily harm and an extreme indifference to the value of human life. Cmwlth. v. Coleman, 455 Pa. 508, 318 A.2d 716, 717.

An expression used as the equivalent of "constructive malice," or "malice in law." Inference of malice which can be reasonably drawn from wrongful act. Chrisean v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 237 Mo.App. 181, 157 S.W.2d 230, 235. Intentional doing of a wrongful act...
Legal Malice. Generally, when applied by testator to personality, signifies "executors and administrators" and when applied to reality those upon whom law casts real estate immediately upon death of ancestor. Hogate v. Hogate, 132 N.J. Eq. 480, 28 A.2d 769, 771. As respects delivery of deposit on behalf of deceased seaman, means the public administrator, or executor or administrator appointed in state where seaman resided. See Legal representative.

Legal possessor. One who, but for the reservation of strict legal title in conditional vendor, or the giving of a strict legal title in a conditional vendor, or the giving of a strict legal title to a chattel mortgagee, would have the status of a full and unqualified owner. One who has the legal right to possession of property as contrasted with the owner of such property who has legal title. See Legal owner.

Legal prejudice. Legal prejudice which will defeat plaintiff's motion to dismiss is such as deprives defendant of substantive rights of property, or concerns his defense, which will not be available or may be endangered in a second suit. General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Baker, 161 Misc. 238, 291 N.Y.S. 1015.

Legal presumption. For presumption of law, see Presumption.

Legal privity. "Legal privity", within rule that defense of usury is personal to debtor and those in legal privity with him, means those upon whom title or interest is cast by law. An agent and his principal are in legal privity to each other. See also Privity.

Legal proceedings. Term includes all proceedings authorized or sanctioned by law, and brought or instituted in a court or legal tribunal, for the acquiring of a right or the enforcement of a remedy.

Legal rate of interest. See Legal interest; Usury.

Legal representative. The term in its broadest sense, means one who stands in place of, and represents the interests of, another. A person who oversees the legal affairs of another. Examples include the executor or administrator of an estate and a court appointed guardian of a minor or incompetent person.

Term "legal representative," which is almost always held to be synonymous with term "personal representative," means, in accident cases, member of family entitled to benefits under wrongful death statute. Unsatisfied Claim and Judgment Fund v. Hamilton, 256 Md. 56, 259 A.2d 303, 306.

Legal rescission. Rescission by act of parties. Aron v. Mid-Continent Co., 141 Neb. 806, 4 N.W.2d 884, 886. See also Rescind; Rescission of contract; Void; Voidable.

Legal reserve. Liquid assets which life insurance companies are required by statute to set aside and maintain to assure payment of claims and benefits. Lubin v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 326 Ill.App. 358, 61 N.E.2d 753, 754; Old Surety Life Ins. Co. of Alva, Okl., v. Morrow, 195 Okl. 442, 158 P.2d 715, 717. In banking, that amount of percentage of bank deposits which must by law be maintained in cash or equally liquid assets to meet the demands of depositors.

Legal residence. The place of domicile or permanent abode, as distinguished from temporary residence. Permanent fixed place of abode which person intends to be his residence and to which he intends to return despite temporary residences elsewhere or despite temporary absences. U. S. v. Calhoun, C.A.Fla., 666 F.2d 969, 973. Place recognized by law as residence of person. See also Domicile; Residence.

Legal right. Natural rights, rights existing as result of contract, and rights created or recognized by law. Fine v. Pratt, Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 308, 311.

Legal secretary. An employee of an attorney or law office whose responsibilities include the typing of legal documents, memoranda and correspondence, the keeping of records and files, giving and receiving notices, and such other duties as required by her or his employer in the practice of law.

Legal separation. A court order arranging the terms (custody, support, etc.) under which a married couple will live separately. See also Divorce (divorce a mensa et thoro); Separate maintenance; Separation of spouses.

Legal Services Corporation. The Legal Services Corporation was established by the Legal Services Corporation Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C.A. § 2996) to provide financial support for legal assistance in noncriminal proceedings to persons financially unable to afford legal services. The Corporation provides financial assistance to qualified programs furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients and makes grants to and contracts with individuals, firms, corporations, organizations, and State and local governments for the purpose of providing legal assistance to these clients.

Legal subdivisions. Divisions of land which result from application of ordinary methods used in making of a government survey.

Legal tender. All coins and currencies of the United States (including Federal Reserve notes and circulating notes of Federal Reserve banks and national banking associations), regardless of when coined or issued, are legal tender for all debts, public and private, public charges, taxes, duties, and dues. 31 U.S.C.A. § 392. Seller of goods may demand payment by legal tender but he is required to give an extension of time reasonably necessary to procure it. U.C.C. § 2-511(2).

Legal title. One cognizable or enforceable in a court of law, or one which is complete and perfect so far as regards the apparent right of ownership and possession, but which carries no beneficial interest in the property, another person being equitably entitled thereto; in either case, the antithesis of "equitable title." It may also mean appearance of title as distinguished from complete title. Southern Carbon Co. v. State, 171 Misc. 566, 13 N.Y.S.2d 7, 9; full and absolute title or apparent right of ownership with beneficial or equitable title in another; not necessarily record title. Barnes v. Boyd, D.C.W.Va., 8 F.Supp. 584, 597. A tax title, which is prima facie valid, is a "legal title." Murray v. Holland, 108 Ind. App. 236, 27 N.E.2d 128, 128. See Title.

Legal usufruct /liygal yuwafrækt/]. Usufructs established by operation of law are legal usufructs, Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Abdalla, 203 La. 999, 14 So.2d 815; e.g., the usufruct collated for surviving spouse in necessitous circumstances. See also Usufruct.

Legal willfulness. Intentional disregard of known duty necessary to safety of person or property of another and entire absence of care for life, person or property of others. Bartolucci v. Falleti, 314 Ill.App. 551, 41 N.E.2d 777, 780.

Legantine constitutions /léгантан kónstat(y)úwshan/. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Pope Gregory IX, and Clement IV, in the reign of Henry III, about the years 1220 and 1288.

Legare /lægér/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to bequeath; to leave or give by will; to give in anticipation of death.

Legatarius /lēgatēriyəs/. Lat. In the civil law, one to whom a thing is bequeathed; a legatee or legatory. In old European law, a legate, messenger, or envoy.

Legatary /lēgatāriy/. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

Legatee /lēgätə/. The person to whom a legacy in a will is given. The term may be used to denominate those who take under will without any distinction between realty and personality, Broker v. Broker, Tex. Civ.App., 76 S.W.2d 180, 183; though commonly it refers to one who takes personal property under a will. See Legacy.

Residuary legatee. The person to whom a testator bequeaths the residue of his personal estate, after the payment of such other legacies as are specifically mentioned in the will.

Legates /légata/. Nuncios, deputies, or extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to be his representatives and to exercise his jurisdiction in countries where the Roman Catholic Church is established by law.

Legation. An embassy; a diplomatic minister and his suite. The persons commissioned by one government to exercise diplomatic functions at the court of another, including the minister, secretaries, attachés, interpreters, etc., are collectively styled the "legation" of their government. The word also denotes the official residence of a foreign minister.

Legator /lágétyar/. One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Legatory /lágatori/. In old English law, the third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est /lágétyows váyálélyi kóntra jás jénsheeiy(ý)am ést/. It is contrary to the law of nations to injure ambassadors.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola /lágétyam mortiy vayvows tradishiyowniy sowla/. A legacy is confirmed by the death of a testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone.

Legatum optionis /lágétyam őpéshiýównás/. In Roman law, a legacy to A. B. of any article or articles that A. B. liked to choose or select out of the testator's estate. If A. B. died after the testator, but before making the selection, his representative could not, prior to Justinian, make the selection for him, but the legacy failed altogether. Justinian, however, made the legacy good, and enabled the representative to chose.

Legatus regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur et honorandus est sicut ille culces vicem gerit /lágétyas riyiy váýsyi fánʃʃar éy kwów déstánéytor ét ónerándés ét síkst ílí kyúywj váýsám jéhrat/. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills.

Legem /líiyjam/. Lat. Accusative of lex, law. Occurring in various legal phrases, as follows:

Legem amittere /líiyjam amíityor/. To lose one's law; that is, to lose one's privilege of being admitted to take an oath.

Legem facere /líiyjam féysariy/. In old English law, to make law or oath.

Legem ferre /líiyjam féhríy/. In Roman law, to propose a law to the people for their adoption.

Legem habere /líiyjam háhríy/. To be capable of giving evidence upon oath. Witnesses who had been convicted of crime were incapable of giving evidence, until 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

Legem jubere /líiyjam jahbríy/. In Roman law, to give consent and authority to a proposed law; to make or pass it.

Legem pone /líiyjam pówniy/. To propound or lay down the law. By an extremely obscure derivation or analogy, this term was formerly used as a slang equivalent for payment in cash or in ready money.

Legem sciscere /líiyjam sísary/. To give consent and authority to a proposed law; applied to the consent of the people.

Legem terrae amittentes, perpetuum infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt /líiyjam téhríy əmäténtiyész pépetpétyúwam infémyiyi núwotam iñdíy méhratow inkahrant/. Those who lose the law of the land, then justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy.

Legem vadiare /líiyjam vádziyério/. In old English law, to wage law; to offer or to give pledge to make defense, by oath, with compurgators.

Legenita. A fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Legruta.

Leges /líiyjíyz/. Lat. Laws. At Rome, the laws (the decrees of the people in a strict sense) were laws which were proposed by a magistrate presiding in the senate, and adopted by the Roman people in the comitia centurionata.

Leges Anglie /líiyjíyz ənglíyíy/. The laws of England, as distinguished from the civil law and other foreign systems.

Leges Anglie sunt tripartite. —Jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum /líiyjíyz ənglíyíyíy szánt tráypártatíy, jás kaméyúniy, kónswat(y)úwdáníy, ák dákriyta kámishiyóram/. The laws of England are threefold,—common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges barbarorum /líiyjíyz báhrbarorám/. A class name for the codes of mediæval European law.

Leges Edwardi confessoris /líiyjíyz édwárdaý konfésórós/. A name used for a legal treatise written from 1130 to 1135, which presents the law in force toward the end of Henry I. Its authority is said to be undeserved.

Leges et consuetudini regni /líiyjíyz ét kónswat(y)úwdányn régnay/. The accepted name for the common law from an early time; since the latter half of the 12th century at least.

Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima /líiyjíyz fajenday ét réfajenday kónswat(y)úwdow ét parik(y)álwéyishiyam/. The practice of fixing and re-Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. A book written between 1114 and 1118 containing Anglo-Saxon and Norman law. It is said to be an invaluable source of knowledge of the period preceding the full development of the Norman law.

Leges humane nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. Human laws are born, live, and die.

Leges Julii. Laws enacted during the reign of Augustus or of Julius Caesar which, with the lex abuilia, effectively abolished the legis actiones.

Leges naturae perfectissimae sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of man is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die.

Leges non scriptae. In English law, unwritten or customary laws, including those ancient acts of parliament which were made before time of memory.

Leges non verbis, sed rebus, sunt impositae. Laws are imposed, not on words, but things.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. Later laws abrogate prior laws that are contrary to them.

Leges sacrae. All solemn compacts between the plebeians and patricians were so called.

Leges scriptae. In English law, written laws; statute laws, or acts of parliament which are originally reduced into writing before they are enacted, or receive any binding power.

Leges sub graviore lege. Laws under a weightier law. Laws should bind their own maker.

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege natureae, utendum est. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam. The interpretation of law does no injury.

Legis interpretatio legis vix obtains. The interpretation of law obtains the force of law.

Legislation. The act of giving or enacting laws; the power to make laws; the act of legislating; preparation and enactment of laws; the making of laws via legislation, in contrast to court-made laws. Formulation of rule for the future. Laws enacted by lawmaking body (e.g. by Congress or state legislature). Oklahoma City, Okl. v. Dolese, C.C.A.Okl., 48 F.2d 734, 738. See also Act (Legislative act); Bill; Class legislation; Statute.

Legislative. Making or giving laws; pertaining to the function of law-making or to the process of enactment of laws. Actions which relate to subjects of permanent or general character are "legislative". Keigley v. Bench, 97 Utah 69, 89 P.2d 480, 484, 485. Making or having the power to make a law or laws.

Legislative act. Enactment of laws. Law (i.e. statute) passed by legislature in contrast to court-made law. One which prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under its provisions. Forstner v. City and County of San Francisco, 52 Cal.Rptr. 621, 626, 243 C.A.2d 625, 67 C.2d 666. See Statute.

Legislative apportionment. Amend. XIV, § 2, of U.S. Const. provides that representatives to congress "shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state." Equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution requires the allocation of representatives on a population basis and a justiciable issue is presented when a claim is made that states are denying right of representation to its citizens. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Apportionment; Reapportionment.

Legislative council. A legislative agency used in some states which is composed of legislators and other selected officials who study legislative problems and plan legislative strategy between regular legislative sessions.

Legislative counsel. A person or agency specially charged with assisting legislators in fulfilling their legislative tasks. Legislative counsel handles problems of research, drafting bills, legislative hearings, and other technical legislative details.

Legislative courts. Courts created by legislature in contrast to those created by constitution (e.g. Art. III of...
U.S. Const.). In many states almost all courts are created by Legislature, though court of last resort is commonly creature of its constitution. Compare Constitutional court.

Legislative department. That department of government (i.e., Congress, consisting of Senate and House of Representatives; Art. I of U.S. Const.) whose appropriate function is the making or enactment of laws, as distinguished from the judicial department (Article III), which interprets and applies the laws, and the executive department (Article II), which carries them into execution and effect. See also Legislature.

Legislative history. The background and events, in leading up to enactment of a law. Such history is important to courts when they are required to determine the legislative intent of a particular statute. Legislative histories of major statutes are published in U.S. Code, Congressional and Administrative News.

Legislative immunity. The Constitution grants two immunities to Congressmen, first, that except for treason, felony, and a breach of the peace, they are "privileged from arrest during their Attendance" at sessions of their body, and, second, that "for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." (Art. I, § 6, cl. 1). The first immunity is of little practical value, for its exceptions withdraw all criminal offenses and arrests therefrom from the privilege, and it does not apply to the service of any process in a civil or criminal matter. The second immunity is liberally construed and includes not only opinion, speeches, debates, or other oral matter, but also voting, making a written report or presenting a resolution, and in general to whatever a congressman feels necessary to transact the legislative functions and business. Even a claim of a bad motive does not destroy the immunity, for it is the public good which is thereby served. E.g., United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 12 S.Ct. 507, 36 L.Ed. 321; United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6, 52 S.Ct. 475, 76 L.Ed. 954.

Legislative investigations. Legislatures are empowered to make investigations as an incident of their legislative authority; included are powers of subpoena, cross examination, etc. Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 161, 75 S.Ct. 668, 99 L.Ed. 964.

Legislative jurisdiction. The sphere of authority of a legislative body to enact laws and to conduct all business incidental to its law-making function. Art. I of U.S. Constitution.

Legislative officer. A member of the legislative body or department of a state or municipal corporation. One of those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures. These officers are confined in their duties by the constitution generally to make laws, though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachment.

Legislative power. The lawmaking powers of a legislative body, whose functions include the power to make, alter, amend and repeal laws. In essence, the legislature has the power to make laws and such power is reposed exclusively in such body though it may delegate rule making and regulatory powers to departments in the executive branch. It may not, however, delegate its law making powers nor is the judicial branch permitted to obstruct into its legislative powers. The enumerated powers of Congress are provided for in Article I of the U.S. Constitution.

Legislative rule. A rule issued by an administrative agency pursuant to statutory authority implementing statute that has force and effect of law. American Medical Ass'n v. Heckler, D.C. Ind., 606 F.Supp. 1422, 1439. Those rules that are promulgated pursuant to congressional delegation of power to issue rules and regulations that have force of law and are binding on courts because they are source of law that court and agency must enforce. American Trucking Ass'n, Inc. v. U.S., C.A.11, 688 F.2d 1337, 1341.

Legislator. One who makes laws; a member of a federal, state or municipal lawmaking body; senator, representative, assemblyman.

Legislaturum est viva vox, rebus et non verbis legem imponere /léjislistor/im est vávya vôks, rlyba ét nón várbo liyjam impówarnari/. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on things, and not on words.

Legislature. The department, assembly, or body of persons that makes statutory laws for a state or nation. At the federal level, and in most states, the legislature is bicameral in structure, usually consisting of two branches; i.e., upper house (Senate) and lower house (House of Representatives or Assembly). Legislative bodies at the local levels are variously called city councils, boards of Legitimus /lajitamas/. Lawful; legitimate.

Legitimi haeredes /lajitamay hariydiyz/. Lat. In Roman law, legitimate heirs; the agnate relations of the estate-leaver; so called because the inheritance was given to them by a law of the Twelve Tables.

Legitimus /lajitomas/. Lawful; legitimate. Legitimus hæres et filius est quem nuptiae demonstrant, a lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage points out to be lawful.

Legit vel non? /liyjat vél nón/. In Old English practice, this was the formal question propounded to the ordinary when a prisoner claimed the benefit of clergy,—does he read or not? If the ordinary found that the prisoner was entitled to clergy, his formal answer was, "Legit ut clericus," he reads like a clerk.

Leggunta. In old records, a fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Legenita.

Legis minister non tenetur in executione officii sui, fugere aut retrocedere /liyjas manisitri nōn tānītyar in ēksakurywshiyényni afis(h)iyay s(y)ουway fywaryari ọt rētrasiyarı/. The minister of the law is bound, in the execution of his office, not to fly nor to retreat.

Legisperitus /liyjasprāytəs/. Lat. A person skilled or learned in the law; a lawyer or advocate.

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium /lajitameyshan pər səbelekiwzon mətrəməwn(ə)yzəm/. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents.

Legitimation. The making legitimate or lawful that which was not originally so; especially the statutory procedure of legalizing (legitimating) the status of an illegitimate child. Such is usually necessary to assure inheritance rights to child.

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium /lajitameyshan pər səbelekiwzon mətrəməwn(ə)yzəm/. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents.

Legitimi hæredes /lajitamay hariydiyz/. Lat. In Roman law, legitimate heirs; the agnate relations of the estate-leaver; so called because the inheritance was given to them by a law of the Twelve Tables.

Legitimus /lajitomas/. Lawful; legitimate. Legitimus hæres et filius est quem nuptiae demonstrant, a lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage points out to be lawful.

Legit vel non? /liyjat vél nón/. In Old English practice, this was the formal question propounded to the ordinary when a prisoner claimed the benefit of clergy,—does he read or not? If the ordinary found that the prisoner was entitled to clergy, his formal answer was, "Legit ut clericus," he reads like a clerk.

Leggunta. In old records, a fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Legenita.

Le lend de la mer /li giydoyn da la mér/. The title of a French work on marine insurance, by an unknown author, dating back, probably, to the sixteenth century, and said to have been prepared for the merchants of Rouen. It is noteworthy as being the earliest treatise on that subject now extant.

Leguleius /lêgyaliyəs/. A person skilled in law (in legibus versatus); one versed in the forms of law.

Lehurecht. The German feudal law.

Leidgrave /lêydrəgvə/. An officer under the Saxon government, who had jurisdiction over a lath.

Leipsa /lîyapa/. In Old English law, a fugitive or runaway.

Le ley de dieu et ley de terre sont tout un; et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land.

Le ley est le plus haut enheritance que le roy ad, car per le ley il mesme et tous ses sujets sont rules; et, si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul enheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses, for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and, if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Lemon laws. Laws enacted in many states governing rights of purchasers of new and used motor vehicles which do not function properly and which have to repeatedly be returned to the dealer for repairs. Such laws give redress to purchasers and permit refund of purchase price after certain steps are taken and opportunity has been given dealer to correct defects.

Le mort saisit le vif. Doctrine of "le mort saisit le vif" requires that there can be no gap in seisin, and on death of de cujus, legal title immediately vests in heirs of deceased, and that is not to say that doctrine is so narrow as to exclude unknown heirs or absent heirs at date of death. Kuchenig v. California Co., C.A.La., 410 F.2d 222, 230, 230.

Lend. To give or put out for hire or compensation. To part with a thing of value to another for a time fixed or indefinite, yet to have some time in ending, to be used or enjoyed by that other; the thing itself or the equivalent of it to be given back at the time fixed, or when lawfully asked for, with or without compensation for the use as may be agreed upon. Term "lend" when used in a will means to "give" or "devise." To provide money to another for a period of time, usually with interest charge to be incurred by borrower. See also Loan.

Lender. He from whom a thing or money is borrowed. The bailor of an article loaned. A bank or other lending institution.

Lending or loaning money or credit. Transactions creating customary relation of borrower and lender, in which money is borrowed for fixed time on borrower's promise to repay amount borrowed at stated time in future with interest at fixed rate. Bannock County v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co., 53 Idaho 159, 22 P.2d 674.
LENITY RULE

Lenity Rule. This rule provides that where there is ambiguity in the language of a statute concerning multiple punishment, ambiguity should be resolved in favor of lenity in sentencing. U.S. v. Barrington, C.A.Va., 662 F.2d 1046, 1054.

Lent. In Ecclesiastical law, the quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ash Wednesday to Easter.

Leod. People; a people; a nation.

Leodes. In old European law, a vassal, or leige man; service; a were or weregild.

Leonina societas. Lat. An attempted partnership, in which one party was to bear all the losses, and have no share in the profits. This was a void partnership in Roman law; and, apparently, it would also be void as a partnership in English law, as being inherently inconsistent with the notion of partnership.

Leproso amovendo. An ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or lazar, who thrust himself into the company of his neighbors in any parish, either in the church or at other public meetings, to their annoyance.

Le roi, or roy. The old law-French words for "the king".

Le roi veut en delibérer. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the king of the French used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly.

Le roy (or la reine) le veut. The king (or the queen) wills it. The form of the royal assent to public bills in parliament.

Le roy (or la reine) remercie ses loyal sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veut. The king (or the queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and therefore wills it to be so. The form of the royal assent to a bill of supply.

Le roy (or la reine) s'aviserà. The king (or queen) will advise upon it. The form of words used to express the refusal of the royal assent to public bills in parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 184. This is supposed to correspond to the judicial phrase "curia advisari vult" (q.v.).

Le salut du peuple est la supreme loi. The safety of the people is the highest law.

Leschewes. Trees fallen by chance or windfalls.

Les majesty. The old English and Scotch translation of "lasa majestas," or high treason.

Les fictions naissent de la loi, et non la loi des fictions. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

Lesion. Damage; injury; detriment; sore; wound. Gasperino v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, Mo.App., 107 S.W.2d 819, 827. Hurt, loss, or injury.

Lessor. He who grants a lease. One who rents property to another. In the case of real estate, the lessor is also known as the landlord. One who has leased land for a

Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Sevier, C.C.A.Mo., 121 F.2d 650, 654. Any change in the structure of an organ due to injury or disease, whether apparent or diagnosed as the cause of a functional irregularity or disturbance.

In the civil law, the injury suffered by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract. Inequality in contracts.

Les lois ne se chargent de punir que les actions exterieures. Laws do not undertake to punish other than outward actions.

Lessee. One who rents property from another. In the case of real estate, the lessee is also known as the tenant. He to whom a lease is made. He who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. One who has been given possession of land which is exclusive even of the landlord, except as the lease permits his entry, and except right to enter to demand rent or to make repairs. Seabloom v. Krier, 219 Minn. 962, 18 N.W.2d 88, 91. See also Tenant.

A person who acquires the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublessee. U.C.C. § 2A-103.

Lessee's interest. The appraised value of a lessee's interest in order to determine its worth for assignment or sale. In appraising the value of a potential sublease or assignment (sale) of the lease, the value is the market value of the property, less the interest of the lessor. The lessor's interest would be largely determined by the ratio of the return on the lease to the market value without the lease.

Lesser included offense. One which is composed of some, but not all elements of a greater offense and which does not have any element not included in a greater offense so that it is impossible to commit greater offense without necessarily committing the lesser offense. State v. Garcia, App., 100 N.M. 120, 666 P.2d 1267, 1272. One that does not require proof of any additional element beyond those required by the greater offense. Government of Virgin Islands v. Bedford, C.A. Virgin Islands, 671 F.2d 758, 765. One which must necessarily be included in the greater offense. State v. Etzweiler, 125 N.H. 57, 480 A.2d 870, 876. One which includes some of the elements of the crime charged in the information without the addition of any element irrelevant to the original charge. State v. Johnsen, 197 Neb. 216, 247 N.W.2d 638, 640. When it is impossible to commit a particular crime without concomitantly committing, by the same conduct, another offense of lesser grade or degree, the latter is, with respect to the former, a "lesser included offense." In any case in which it is legally possible to attempt to commit a crime, such attempt constitutes a lesser included offense with respect thereto. The defendant may be found guilty of an offense necessarily included in the offense charged. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31. See also Necessarily included offense.

Lessor. He who grants a lease. One who rents property to another. In the case of real estate, the lessor is also known as the landlord. One who has leased land for a definite or indefinite period, by a written or parol lease, irrespective of whether a statute of fraud requires the lease to be in writing. City of Tyler v. Ingram, 139 Tex. 600, 164 S.W.2d 516, 520. See also Landlord.

A person who transfers the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublessor. U.C.C. § 2A-103.

Lessor of the plaintiff. In the common law action of ejectment, this was the party who really and in effect prosecuted the action and was interested in its result. The reason of his having been so called arose from the circumstance of the action having been carried on in the name of a nominal plaintiff (John Doe), to whom the real plaintiff had granted a fictitious lease, and thus had become his lessor.

Lessor's interest. The present value of the future income under the lease, plus the present value of the property after the lease expires (reversion).

Let, v. Contracts. To award to one of several persons, who have submitted proposals (bids) therefor, the contract for erecting public works or doing some part of the work connected therewith, or rendering some other service to government for a stipulated compensation. Letting the contract is the choosing one from among the number of bidders, and the formal making of the contract with him. The letting, or putting out, is a different thing from the invitation to make proposals; the letting is subsequent to the invitation. It is the act of awarding the contract to the proposer, after the proposals have been received and considered.

Conveyancing. To demise or lease a certain property. See Lease.

Judicial orders and decrees. The word "let" (in the imperative) imports a positive direction or command. Thus the phrase "let the writ issue as prayed" is equivalent to "it is hereby ordered that the writ issue," etc.

Practice. To deliver. "To let to bail" is to deliver to bail on arrest.

Let, n. In old conveyancing, hindrance; obstruction; interruption.

Lethal weapon. A deadly weapon (q.v.).

Letter. One of the arbitrary marks or characters constituting the alphabet, and used in written language as the representatives of sounds or articulations of the human organs of speech.

A dispatch or epistle; a written or printed message; a communication in writing from one person to another at a distance. In the imperial law of Rome, "letter" or "epistle" was the name of the answer returned by the emperor to a question of law submitted to him by the magistrates.

A commission, patent, or written instrument containing or attesting the grant of some power, authority, or right.

The word appears in this generic sense in many compound phrases known to commercial law and jurisprudence; e.g., letter of attorney, letter missive, letter of credit, letters patent. The plural is frequently used.

Metaphorically, the verbal expression; the strict literal meaning. The letter of a statute, as distinguished from its spirit, means the strict and exact force of the language employed, as distinguished from the general purpose and policy of the law.

As to letters of Administration; Advice; Attorney; Credit; Recommendation, see those titles. As to Letters patent, see Patent.

Letter-book. A book in which a merchant or trader keeps copies of letters sent by him to his correspondents.

Letter missive. In old English law, a letter from the king or queen to a dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect as bishop. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament against whom a bill has been filed desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. In civil-law practice, the phrase "letters missive," or "letters dimissory," is sometimes used to denote the papers sent up on an appeal by the judge or court below to the superior tribunal, otherwise called the "apostles" (q.v.).

Letter of administration. See Letters of administration.

Letter of advice. Drawer's communication to the drawee that a described draft has been drawn. U.C.C. § 3-701(1).

Letter of attornment. A letter from a grantor to a tenant, stating that the property has been sold, and directing rent to be paid to the grantee (new owner).

Letter of comment. Letters of comment are sent out by the S.E.C. in most cases as a means of informing registrants of securities offerings of the respects in which a registration statement is deemed not to meet the disclosure and other requirements of the Securities Exchange Act and the forms and regulations thereunder. A letter of comment may not be sent out, however, where the circumstances are such that an investigatory or stop order proceeding is deemed more appropriate.

Letter of credence. In international law, the document which accredits an ambassador, minister, or envoy to the courts or government to which he is sent; i.e., certifies to his appointment and qualification, and speaks credit for his official actions and representations.

Letter of credit. An engagement by a bank or other person made at the request of a customer that the issuer will honor drafts or other demands for payment upon compliance with the conditions specified in the credit. A credit may be either revocable or irrevocable. The engagement may be either an agreement to honor or a statement that the bank or other person is authorized to honor. U.C.C. § 5-103. Letters of credit are intended generally to facilitate purchase and sale of goods by providing assurance to the seller of prompt payment upon compliance with specified conditions or presentation of stipulated documents without the sellers having to rely upon the solvency and good faith of the buyer. Lustrelon, Inc. v. Prutscher, 178 N.J.Super. 128, 428 A.2d 518, 523.
LETTER OF CREDIT

See also Advice of credit.

Commercial letter. Type of letter of credit used by buyer of merchandise who sends it to bank in district in which he is to buy and seller then presents his bill of sale, etc. to obtain payment. See also Commercial credit.

Confirmed letter. Type of letter of credit in which local bank gives its guarantee that seller’s draft will be honored if the bank which issued letter fails to honor it.

Export letter. Type of letter of credit forwarded to seller or exporter advising him that a credit has been established in his favor by a foreign bank and further consenting to honor the seller’s or exporter’s draft for the goods.

General and special. A general letter of credit is one addressed to any and all persons, without naming any one in particular, while a special letter of credit is addressed to a particular individual, firm, or corporation by name.

Import letter. Type of letter of credit issued by a foreign bank to a local seller permitting him to draw draft on the foreign bank against shipment of the merchandise.

Irrevocable letter. Type of letter of credit in which issuing bank guarantees that it will not withdraw the credit or cancel the letter before the expiration date. A letter of credit which cannot be modified or revoked as regards the customer or the beneficiary without his or her consent.

Open credit. See Open letter of credit.

Revocable letter. Letter of credit in which the issuing bank reserves the right to cancel and withdraw from the transaction upon appropriate notice.

Revolving credit. See Revolving credit.

Standby letter. A letter of credit which commits the issuer to honor the credit not upon evidence of performance by the beneficiary, as by presenting evidence of the shipment of goods to the customer, but upon evidence or a mere declaration of the customer’s default in the underlying transaction with the beneficiary.

Straight credit. A letter of credit that does not run in favor of purchasers of drafts drawn thereunder.

Time credit. A letter of credit that is duly honored by the issuer accepting drafts drawn thereunder. Essentially synonymous with “usance credit” and “acceptance credit.”

Transferable credit. A letter of credit that authorizes the beneficiary to assign the right to draw thereunder.

Traveler’s letter. Type of letter of credit used by one traveling abroad in which the issuing bank authorizes payment of funds to holder in the local currency by a local bank. The holder signs a check on the issuing bank and the local bank forwards it to the issuing bank for its credit.

Letter of exchange. A bill of exchange (q.v.)

Letter of intent. A letter of intent is customarily employed to reduce to writing a preliminary understanding of parties who intend to enter into contract, Garner v. Boyd, D.C.Tex., 330 F.Supp. 22, 25, or who intend to take some other action such as merger of companies.

Letter of license. In English law, a written instrument by name.

Letter of the law. Expression used to denote the exact, strict interpretation of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or law.

Letter of intent.

Letter of intent is customarily employed to reduce to writing a preliminary understanding of parties who intend to enter into contract, Garner v. Boyd, D.C.Tex., 330 F.Supp. 22, 25, or who intend to take some other action such as merger of companies.

Letter of license.

In English law, a written instrument by name.

Letter of the law.

Expression used to denote the exact, strict interpretation of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or law.

Letter of patent. See Letters patent.

Letter ruling. A written statement which is issued to a taxpayer by Office of Assistant Commissioner of I.R.S. in which interpretations of tax laws are made and applied to a specific set of facts. Tax Analysts and Advocates v. Internal Revenue Service, D.C.D.C., 362 F.Supp. 1298, 1301. Such is issued in response to request for ruling by a private party of tax implications of a particular transaction.

Letters. In probate practice, includes letters testamentary, letters of guardianship, letters of administration, and Letters ad colligendum bona defuncti /léťarz ěd kólaĵéndam bówna dafar)/. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe custody. Bl.Comm. 505.

Letters close. In English law, close letters are grants of Absolvatory letters, used in for¬Letters of absolution. Absolvatory letters, used in former times, when an abbot released any of his brethren ab omnia subjectione et obedientia, etc., and made them capable of entering into some other order of religion.

Letters of administration. Formal document issued by probate court appointing one an administrator of an estate.

Letters of administration C.T.A. Document issued by probate court appointing one administrator cum testamento annexo (with the will annexed) by reason of the failure of the named executor to qualify.

Letters of administration D.B.N. Document issued by probate court appointing one administrator de bonis non (concerning goods—not already administered) because of failure of named executor to complete the probate of the estate.

Letters of administration D.B.N. C.T.A. Document issued by probate court to one who is thereby authorized to administer estate in place of named executor in accordance with will of testator. See Letters of Administration C.T.A.; Letters of Administration D.B.N.

Letters of guardianship. A commission placing ward's property in the care of officer of court as custodian.

Letters of safe conduct. No subject of a nation at war with England can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized, unless he has letters of safe conduct. By divers old statutes these must be granted under the great seal, and enrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect; the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms. But passports or licenses from the ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity.

Letters of slains, or slanes. In England, letters subscribed by the relatives of a person who had been slain, declaring that they had received an assytement, and concurring in an application to the crown for a pardon to the offender. These or other evidences of their concurrence were necessary to found the application.

Letters patent /léťarz pěytont/ /pætnt/. An instrument issued by a government to the patentee, granting or confirming a right to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of land, or of a new invention or discovery. See also Land patent; Patent.

Letters rogatory /léťarz rógat(o)riy/. A request by one court of another court in an independent jurisdiction, that a witness be examined upon interrogatories sent with the request. The medium whereby one country, speaking through one of its courts, requests another country, acting through its own courts and by methods of court procedure peculiar thereto and entirely within the latter's control, to assist the administration of justice in the former country. The Signe, D.C.La., 37 F.Supp. 819, 820.

A formal communication in writing, sent by a court in which an action is pending to a court or judge of a foreign country, requesting that the testimony of a witness resident within the jurisdiction of the latter court may be there formally taken under its direction and transmitted to the first court for use in the pending action. Fed.R.Civil P. 28; 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1781, 1782.

This process was also in use, at an early period, between the several states of the Union. The request rests entirely upon the comity of courts towards each other.

Letters testamentary. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor. It corresponds to letters of administration granted to an administrator.

Letter stock. Stock not registered under the Securities Act of 1933, where the buyer gives the seller a letter stating the buyer intends to hold for investment purposes and does not contemplate reoffering the stock to others. Securities and Exchange Commission v. Continental Tobacco Co. of S.C., C.A.Fla., 463 F.2d 137, 150.

Letting. Leasing or awarding. City and County of San Francisco v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 106 F.2d 569, 576. See also Lease: Let.

Letting out. The act of leasing property or awarding a contract. See Let.

Lettre /léťr/. Fr. In French law, a letter. It is used, like our English "letter," for a formal instrument giving authority.

Lettres de cachet /léťr de kâshĕy/. Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person. Under them, persons were imprisoned for life or for a long period on the most frivolous pretexts, for the gratification of private pique or revenge, and without any reason being assigned for such punishment. They were also granted by the king for the purpose of shielding his favorites or their friends from the consequences of their crimes; and thus were as pernicious in their operation as the protection afforded by the church.
to criminals in a former age. Abolished during the Revolution of 1789.

Leuca /l(y)âwka/ In old French law. A league, consisting of fifteen hundred paces.

In old English law, a league or mile of a thousand paces. A privileged space around a monastery of a league or mile in circuit.

Levanda navis causa /lavándiy nêyvâs koâzâ/. Lat. For the sake of lightening the ship; denotes a purpose of throwing overboard goods, which renders them subjects of general average.

Levant et couchant /lévânt eˈ kwâchant/ L. Fr. Rising up and lying down. A term applied to trespassing cattle which have remained long enough upon land to have lain down to rest and risen up to feed; generally the space of a night and a day, or, at least, one night.

Levari facias /lavérây féy(ɔ)(h)i(y)âs/. Lat. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment. Also a writ to the bishop of the diocese, commanding him to enter into the benefit of a judgment debtor, and take and sequester the same into his possession, and hold the same until he shall have levied the amount of the judgment out of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof.

Levari facias damna de disseistoribus /lavérây féy(ɔ)(h)i(y)âs dámnâ diɔ dâsjużatórabas/. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff for the levying of damages, which a disseisor had been condemned to pay to the disseisee.

Levari facias quando vicecomes returnavit quod non habuit emptores /lavérây féy(ɔ)(h)i(y)âs kwôdodó vâsjużkômîzây rûtârânvîyât kwôd nôn hâbywuat ēm(ɔ)pôrîrîyâ/. An old writ commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of a debtor which he had already taken, and had returned that he could not sell them; and as much more of the debtor's goods as would satisfy the whole debt.

Levari facias residuum debiti /lavérây féy(ɔ)(h)i(y)âs râsîduwâm dêbatâyâ/. An old writ directed to the sheriff for levying the remnant of a partly-satisfied debt upon the lands and tenements or chattels of the debtor.

Levato velo /lavéytow vílow/. Lat. An expression used in the Roman law, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentatores disagree about the origin of the expression; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes were to be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require dispatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice.

Levee /lâvî/. An embankment or artificial mound of earth constructed along the margin of a river, to confine the stream to its natural channel or prevent inundation or overflow. Also, a landing place on a river or lake; a place on a river or other navigable water for lading and unlading goods and for the reception and discharge of passengers to and from vessels lying in the contiguous waters, which may be either a wharf or pier or the natural bank.

Levee district. A municipal subdivision of a state (which may or may not be a public corporation) organized for the purpose, and charged with the duty, of constructing and maintaining such levees within its territorial limits as are to be built and kept up at public expense and for the general public benefit.

Level rate, legal reserve policy. Insurance which seeks to build up a reserve which will equal face value of policy at the end of insured's life.

Leverage. The ability to finance an investment with a small amount of one's own funds, such as a down payment, with the balance consisting of borrowed funds. The use of a smaller investment to generate a larger rate of return through borrowing.

The amount of money borrowed by party in business in excess of money or assets invested personally in the business. Community Bank v. Jones, 278 Or. 647, 566 P.2d 470, 475. Term refers to the advantages that may accrue to a business through the use of debt obtained from third persons (e.g. banks or outside investors) in lieu of contributed capital. Such debt improves the earnings allocable to contributed capital if the business earns more on each dollar invested than the interest cost of borrowing funds.

The effect on common stockholders of the requirements to pay bond interest and preferred stock dividends before payment of common stock dividends.

Leveraged buyout. Method of purchasing outstanding stock of publicly held corporation by management or outside investors, with financing consisting primarily of funds borrowed from investment bankers or brokers. The initial and subsequent long term capital used for the buyout is usually secured by the target company's assets with repayment generated from the company's retained or future earnings, sales of certain of its assets, and the like. For a type of employee buyout method, see Employee Stock Ownership Plan. See also Going private.

Leveraged lease. A type of financial lease in which the lessor borrows a high percentage of the cost of the leased asset on a nonrecourse basis from lenders. This is also sometimes called a third-party equity lease or a tax lease.

Leviable /lêviyabal/. That which may be levied. That which is a proper or permissible subject for a levy; as, a "leviable interest" in land.

Levir /lîvâr/lêvar/. In Roman law, a husband’s brother; a wife’s brother-in-law.

Levis /lîvâs/. Lat. Light; slight; trifling. Levis culpa, slight fault or neglect. Levisima culpa, the slightest neglect. Levis nota, a slight mark or brand.
Levy, n. A seizure. The obtaining of money by legal process through seizure and sale of property; the raising of a sum of money on an execution.

The process whereby a sheriff or other state official empowered by writ or other judicial directive actually seizes, or otherwise brings within her control, a judgment debtor's property which is taken to secure or satisfy the judgment.

In reference to taxation, the word may mean the legislative function and declaration of the subject and rate or amount of taxation, People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal.2d 729, 91 P.2d 1029; or the rate of taxation rather than the physical act of applying the rate to the property, Lowden v. Texas County Excise Board, 187 Okl. 365, 103 P.2d 98, 100; or the formal order, by proper authority declaring property subject to taxation at fixed rate at its assessed valuation, State v. Davis, 335 Mo. 159, 73 S.W.2d 406, 407; or the ministerial function of assessing, listing and extending taxes, City of Plankinton v. Kieffer, 70 S.D. 329, 17 N.W.2d 494, 496, 498; or the extension of the tax, Day v. Inland Steel Co., 185 Minn. 53, 239 N.W. 776, 777; or the doing of whatever is necessary in order to authorize the collecting collector to collect the tax, Syracuse Trust Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Oneida County, 13 N.Y.S.2d 390, 394. When used in connection with authority to tax, denotes exercise of legislative function, whether state or local, determining that a tax shall be imposed and fixing amount, purpose and subject of the tax. Zile, 180 App.Div. 414, 167 N.Y.S. 874, 876.

Lewd /l(y)uwd/. Obscene, lustful, indecent, lascivious, lecherous. The term imports a lascivious intent. It signifies that form of immorality which has relation to moral impurity, United States v. Barlow, D.C.Utah, 56 F.Supp. 795-797; or that which is carried on in a wanton manner. Lewd person. One who is lawless, bad, vicious, unchaste, indecent, obscene, lascivious. State v. Harlowe, 174 Wash. 227, 24 P.2d 601.

Lewd /l(y)uwd/. Obscene, lustful, indecent, lascivious, lecherous. The term imports a lascivious intent. It signifies that form of immorality which has relation to moral impurity, United States v. Barlow, D.C.Utah, 56 F.Supp. 795-797; or that which is carried on in a wanton manner. Lewd person. One who is lawless, bad, vicious, unchaste, indecent, obscene, lascivious. State v. Lex judicat de rebus necessario faciendis quasi re ipsa facta /léks jûwdakay diy riybas nësasëriyow Lex Julia /leks jwul(i)yajy/. Several statutes bore this name, being distinguished by the addition of words descriptive of their subject matter.

The "lex Julia de adulteris" related to marriage, dowry, and kindred subjects. The lex Julia de ambitu was a law to repress illegal methods of seeking office. The lex Julia de annona was designed to repress combinations for heightening the price of provisions. The "lex Julia de cessione bonorum" related to bankruptcies. The lex Julia de majestate inflicted the punishment of death on all who attempted anything against the emperor or state. The lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus forbade senators and their children to intermarry with freedmen or infames, and freedmen to intermarry in infames. The lex Julia de peculatu punished those who had stolen public money or property or anything sacred or religious. Magistrates and those who had aided them in stealing public money during their administration were punished capitally; other persons were deported. As to lex Julia et Papia Poppea, see Lex Papia Poppea.

Lex Julia majestatis /leks jwul(i)yajy majsctstytas/. The Julian law of majesty. A law promulgated by Julius Caesar, and again published with additions by Augustus, comprehending all the laws before enacted to punish transgressors against the state.

Lex Junia Norbana /leks jwun(i)yajy norbeyna/. The law conferring legal freedom on all such freedmen as were tutitone pratorisi. See Latini juniani.

Lex Junia Velleja conferred the same right on posthumous children born in the lifetime of the testator, but born after the death of the testator.

Lex Junia Velleja /leks jwun(i)yajy valiya/. A law providing that descendants who became sui heredes of the testator otherwise than by birth, as by the death of their father, must be disinherited or instituted heirs in the same way as posthumous children.

Lex Kantia /leks kensctiyiy/. The body of customs prevailing in Kent during the time of Edward I. A written statement of these customs was sanctioned by the king's justices in eyre. They were mainly concerned with the maintenance of a form of land tenure known as gavelkind (q.v.).

Lex loci /leks lwsyas/. The law of the place. This may be of several descriptions but, in general, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus (q.v.).

The "lex loci" furnishes the standard of conduct, Russ v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 220 N.C. 715, 18 S.E.2d 130, 131; it governs as to all matters going to the basis of the right of action itself, State of Maryland, for Use of Joynes, v. Coard, 175 Va. 571, 9 S.E.2d 454, 458. The substantive rights of parties to action are governed by "lex loci" or law of place where rights were acquired or liabilities incurred. Gray v. Blight, C.C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 696, 699. Compare Lex fori.

Lex loci actu /leks lwsyas dktas/. The law of the place where the act was done.

Lex loci celebrationis /leks lwsyas selbrsyhiyonnas/. The law of the place where a contract is made.

Lex loci contractus /leks lwsyas kantraksyas/. Used sometimes to denote the law of the place where the contract was made, and at other times to denote the law by which the contract is to be governed (i.e. place of its performance), which may or may not be the same as that of the place where it was made. The earlier cases do not regard this distinction. Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U.S. 124, 1 S.Ct. 102, 27 L.Ed. 104; Hayward v. LeBaron, 4 Fla. 404; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 23 L.Ed. 245.

Lex loci delicti /leks lwsyas dlikti/. The law of the place where the crime or wrong took place. The "lex loci delicti", or "place of the wrong", is the state where the last event necessary to make an actor liable for an alleged tort takes place. Sestito v. Knop, C.A.Wis., 297 F.2d 33, 34. More fully expressed by the words lex loci delicti commissi (law of the place where a tort is committed), usually written more briefly as lex loci delicti, or, sometimes, simply lex delicti.

Lex loci domicilii /leks lwsyas dmosiliyay/. The law of the place of domicile.

Lex loci rei site /leks lwsyas riay saytay/. The law of the place where a thing or subject-matter is situated. The title to realty or question of real estate law can be affected only by the law of the place where the realty is situated. Colden v. Alexander, 141 Tex. 134, 171 S.W.2d 328, 335; United States v. Becktold Co., C.C.A.Mo., 129 F.2d 473, 477.

Lex loci solutionis /leks lwsyas sl(y)uwshiyownnas/. The law of the place of solution; the law of the place where payment or performance of a contract is to be made.

Lex longobardorum /leks lsgabardoram/. The law of the Lombards. The name of an ancient code of laws among that people, framed, probably, between the fifth and eighth centuries. It continued in force after the incorporation of Lombardy into the empire of Charlemagne, and traces of its laws and institutions are said to be still discoverable in some parts of Italy.

Lex manifesta /leks mnsfstya/. Manifest or open law; the trial by duel or ordeal.

Lex mercatoria /leks mrtktoriya/. The law-merchant; commercial law. That system of laws which is adopted by all commercial nations, and constitutes a part of the law of the land. It is part of the common law.

The law which exempted from tutelage women who had three children. It is usually considered with the Lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus as one law.

Lex patriae /léks pàtrìyiyà/. National law.

Lex Petronia /léks pàstròwnîyìa/. The law forbidding masters to expose their slaves to contests with wild beasts.

Lex Platoria /léks plàtróyiya/. A law designed for the protection of minors against frauds and allowing them in certain cases to apply for the appointment of a guardian.

Lex plus laudatur quando ratione probatur /léks plès lòdèyêtàr kwëndôw rëyshìyôwnîyì pràbèyûtàr/. The law is the more praised when it is approved by reason.

Lex Poetelia /léks pòtiyliyìa/. The law abolishing the right of a creditor to sell or kill his debtor.

Lex Pompeia de parricidiis /léks pómpìyìa diy pàrsày diyà/. The law which inflicted a punishment on one who had caused the death of a parent or child. The offender was by this law to be sewn up in a sack with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thrown into the sea or a river, so that even in his lifetime he might begin to be deprived of the use of the elements; that the air might be denied him whilst he lived and the earth when he died.

Lex posterior derogat priori /léks pàstèrëyìr dëràngwat prìyòrày/. A later statute takes away the effect of a prior one. But the later statute must either expressly repeal, or be manifestly repugnant to, the earlier one.

Lex pratoria /léks pràtroyiya/. The praeatorian law. A law by which every freedman who made a will was commanded to leave a moiety to his patron. The term has been applied to the rules that govern in a court of equity.

Lex prospecit, non respicit /léks pròwkspsàt, nôn rëpspsàt/. The law looks forward, not backward.

Lex Publilia /léks pûwblîylìa/. The law providing that the plebscista should bind the whole people. The lex Publilia de sponde allowed sponsores, unless reimbursed within six months, to recover from their principal by a special actio what they had paid.
Lex punit mendacium /léks pyúwnat mandéys(h)-/ (iyam/). The law punishes falsehood.

Lex regia /léks riyiyya/. The royal or imperial law. A law enacted (or supposed or claimed to have been enacted) by the Roman people, constituting the emperor a source of law, conferring the legislative power upon him, and according the force and obligation of law upon him to the expression of his mere will or pleasure.

Lex rei sitae /léks riyay saytiy/. The law of the place of situation of the thing. It is said to be an inexact mode of expression; lex situs, or lex loci rei sitae are better.

Lex regia /léks riyajiys/. The royal or imperial law. A law enacted (or supposed or claimed to have been enacted) by the Roman people, constituting the emperor a source of law, conferring the legislative power upon him, and according the force and obligation of law upon him to the expression of his mere will or pleasure.

Lex reprobat moram /léks pyuwnat menday/. The law dislikes delay.

Joint liability. Liability for which more than one person is responsible. See also Contribution; Joint liability; Joint tort-feasors.

Liability bond. See Bond.

Primary liability. A liability for which a person is directly responsible as contrasted with one which is contingent or secondary.

Secondary liability. A liability in the nature of a contingent claim such as the liability of a guarantor as contrasted with that of a strict surety or co-maker. A guarantor's liability does not arise until the principal debtor has failed to pay the creditor.

Liability created by statute. One depending for its existence on the enactment of a statute, and not on the contract of the parties. One which would not exist but for the statute. Cannon v. Miller, 22 Wash.2d 227, 155 P.2d 500, 507, 508.

Liability for damages. Liability for an amount to be ascertained by trial of the facts in particular cases.

Liability in solido. Liability in solido, whether emanating from tort or contract, means that either of the debtors may be required to discharge obligation in full at creditor's election. Cunningham v. Hardware Mut. Cas. Co., La.App., 228 So.2d 700, 705.
Liability insurance. Contract by which one party promises on consideration to compensate or reimburse other if he shall suffer loss from specified cause or to guaranty or indemnify or secure him against loss from that cause. Fidelity General Ins. Co. v. Nelsen Steel & Wire Co., 132 Ill.App.2d 635, 270 N.E.2d 616, 620. That type of insurance protection which indemnifies one from liability to third persons as contrasted with insurance coverage for losses sustained by the insured. See also Insurance.

Liability limits. The sum beyond which a liability insurance company does not protect the insured on a particular policy. Most policies covering liability for bodily injury have two limits, a limit of liability to any one person, and, subject to the personal limit, another and usually higher limit for any single accident, where more than one person is involved.

Liable. Bound or obliged in law or equity; responsible; chargeable; answerable; compilable to make satisfaction, compensation, or restitution. Homan v. Employers Reinsurance Corporation, 345 Mo. 650, 136 S.W.2d 289, 298. Obligated; accountable for or chargeable with. Condition of being bound to respond because a wrong has occurred. Condition out of which a legal liability might arise. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. Justly or legally responsible or answerable.

Exposed or subject to a given contingency, risk, or casualty, which is more or less probable. Exposed, as to damage, penalty, expense, burden, or anything unpleasant or dangerous. See also Liability.

Future possible or probable happening which may not actually occur, and relates to an occurrence within the range of possibility. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. In all probability. Neely v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., Mo.App., 14 S.W.2d 972, 978. See also Contingency; Contingent.

Libel /lí bál/. A method of defamation expressed by print, writing, pictures, or signs. In its most general sense, any publication that is injurious to the reputation of another. A false and unprivileged publication in writing of defamatory material. Bright v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist., 51 Cal.App.3d 852, 124 Cal.Rptr. 598, 604. A maliciously written or printed publication which tends to blacken a person's reputation or to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to injure him in his business or profession. Corabi v. Curtis Pub. Co., 441 Pa. 432, 273 A.2d 899, 904.

Accusation in writing or printing against the character of a person which affects his reputation, in that it tends to hold him up to ridicule, contempt, shame, disgrace, or obloquy, to degrade him in the estimation of the community, to induce an evil opinion of him in the minds of righthinking persons, to make him an object of reproach, to diminish his respectability or abridge his comforts, to change his position in society for the worse, to dishonor or discredit him in the estimation of the public, or his friends and acquaintances, or to deprive him of friendly intercourse in society, or cause him to be shunned or avoided, or where it is charged that one has violated his public duty as a public officer. Almost any language which upon its face has a natural tendency to injure a man's reputation, either generally or with respect to his occupation. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 P.2d 297, 300.

States are free to fashion their own law of defamation of a private person so long as they do not impose liability without fault. Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 347, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3010, 41 L.Ed.2d 789.

There can be no presumption of malice or bad faith consistent with freedom of the press under First Amend., U.S.Const. if plaintiff is a public figure. Malice must be proved on a showing that defendant published material either knowing it to be false or recklessly without regard as to whether it is true or false. N. Y. Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 1 L.Ed.2d 686.

See also Actionable per quod; Actionable per se; Criminal (Criminal libel); Defamation; False implication libel; False light privacy; Innocent construction rule; Innuendo; Libelous per quod; Libelous per se; Malice; Obscene libel; Privilege; Publication; Seditious libel; Single publication rule; Trade libel. Compare Slander.

Constitutional privilege. Prior to New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 1 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964), media comment on the conduct of public officials or public figures was free from liability for libel only in certain limited circumstances, usually difficult to prove at trial. If a statement of fact was involved, it had to be substantially true; if a comment or opinion was involved, it had to be based on true facts which fully and fairly justified the comment or opinion. The United States Supreme Court, however, in a series of decisions beginning with New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, imposed constitutional limitations on State libel laws, based upon the First Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and press. In New York Times, the Supreme Court eroded the prior common law libel standard of strict liability, holding that misstatements of fact or unjustified comments or opinions published by the media about the conduct of public officials were constitutionally privileged, unless the false or unjustified material was published with "actual malice," i.e., with actual knowledge of falsity or with reckless disregard of probable falsity. By requiring a public official plaintiff to prove actual malice on the part of defendant, the burden of proving that the material was false was shifted to plaintiff, contrary to the common law rule which presumed falsity.

Group libel. The holding up of a group to ridicule, scorn or contempt to a respectable and considerable part of the community. The plaintiff must prove that he is a member of the group.

Pleadings. Formerly, the initiatory pleading in an admiralty action, corresponding to the declaration, bill or complaint. Since 1966 the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Supp. Admiralty Rules have governed admiralty actions and as such, admiralty actions are now commenced by complaint.

Libelant /laybalant/. Formerly, the complainant or party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions at law. See Libel (Pleadings).

Libellee /laybaliy/. Formerly, a party against whom a libel has been filed in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in actions at law. See Libel (Pleadings).

Libellus /labëlos/. Lat. In the civil law, a little book.

Feudal law. An instrument of alienation or conveyance, as of a fief, or a part of it.

Libellus supplex. A petition, especially to the emperor, all petitions to whom must be in writing. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. Libellum agere, to assist or counsel the emperor in regard to such petitions. Libellus accusatorius, an information and accusation of a crime. Libellus divoriti, a writing of divorcement. Libellus rumen, an inventory. Libellus or oratio consultoria, a message by which emperors laid matters before the senate. Libellus appellatorius, an appeal.

Libellus conventionis /labëlos kanvëniyëwnas/. In the civil law, the statement of a plaintiff’s claim in a petition presented to the magistrate, who directed an officer to deliver it to the defendant.

Libellus famosus /labëlos famowa/. In the civil law, a defamatory publication; a publication injuriously affecting character; a libel.

Libel of review. New proceeding instituted to attack final decree after expiration of term and right to appeal. The Astorian, C.C.A.Cal., 57 F.2d 85, 87.

Libelous /layblas/. Expressions "libelous per quod" are such as require that their injurious character or effect be established by allegation and proof. They are those expressions which are not actionable upon their face, but which become so by reason of the peculiar situation or occasion upon which the words are written. Publications which are susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, one of which is defamatory and the other is not, or publications which are not obviously defamatory, but which become so when considered in connection with innuendo, colloquium, and explanatory circumstances. Compare Actionable per quod.

Libelous per se /layblas par siy/. A publication is libelous per se when the words are of such a character that an action may be brought upon them without the necessity of showing any special damage, the imputation being such that the law will presume that any one so slandered must have suffered damage. Robinson v. Nationwide Ins. Co., 273 N.C. 391, 159 S.E.2d 896, 898. To render words "libelous per se," the words must be of such character that a presumption of law will arise therefrom that the plaintiff has been degraded in the estimation of his friends or of the public or has suffered some other loss either in his property, character, reputation, or business or in his domestic or social relations. When a publication is "libelous per se," that is, defamatory on its face, it is actionable per se; i.e. one need not prove that he received any injury as a result of the publication in order to recover damages, and in such a case general damages for loss of personal or business reputation are recoverable and no averments or proof of special damages are necessary. Rosenbloom v. Metromedia, Inc., D.C.Pa., 289 F.Supp. 737, 743. Compare Actionable per se.

Liber, adj. /lìybor/. Lat. Free; open and accessible, as applied to courts, places, etc.; of the state or condition of a freeman, as applied to persons. Exempt from the service or jurisdiction of another.

Liber, n. /lìybor/. Lat. A book, of whatever material composed; a main division or unit of a literary or professional work.

Libera /lib(a)ra/. Lat. (Feminine of liber, adj.) Free; at liberty; exempt; not subject to toll or charge.

Libera batella /lib(a)ra batela/. In old records, a free boat; the right of having a boat to fish in a certain water; a species of free fishery.

Libera chaea habenda /lib(a)ra chëys(h)iya habënda/. In old English law, a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor after proof made by inquiry of a jury that the same of right belongs to him.

Libera eleemosyna /lib(a)ra iyamôysa/. In old English law, free alms, frankalmoigne.

Libera falsa /lib(a)ra fóla/. In old English law, frank fold; free fold; free foldage.

Liberal /lib(a)ral/. Free in giving; generous; not restrained or narrow-minded; not literal or strict.

Liberal construction or interpretation /lib(a)ral kanstrakshan/"antarprateyshan/ See Construction.

Libera lex /lib(a)ra léks/. In old English law, free law; frank law; the law of the land. The law enjoyed by free and lawful men, as distinguished from such men as have lost the benefit and protection of the law in consequence of crime. Hence this term denoted the status of a man who stood guiltless before the law, and was free, in the sense of being entitled to its full protection and benefit. Amittere liberam legem (to lose one’s free law) was to fall from that status by crime or infamy.

Liberam legem amittere /libram liyöm amidariy/. To lose one’s free law (called the villainous judgment), to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one's body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment.

Libera piscaria /lib(a)ra paskériya/. In old English law, a free fishery.

Liberare /libéréry/. Lat. In old English law, to deliver, transfer, or hand over. Applied to writs, panels of jurors, etc.

   In the civil law, to free or set free; to liberate; to give one his liberty.

Liber assistarum /láybar aszáyéram/. The Book of Assessors or pleas of the crown. A collection of cases that arose on assessors and other trials in the country. It was the fourth volume of the reports of the reign of Edward III.

Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem /libarátya pokýuwn(iy)a nón libarat òfòrentam/. Money being restored does not set free the party offering.

Liberate /libérétyi/. In old English practice, an original writ issuing out of chancery to the treasurer, chamberlains, and barons of the exchequer, for the payment of any annual pension, or other sum.

   A writ issued to a sheriff, for the delivery of any lands or goods taken upon forfeits of recognizance. A writ issued to a gaoler for the delivery of a prisoner that had put in bail for his appearance. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent and in the sheriff's return thereo.

   To set free, as from bondage, slavery, oppression, or enemy control.

Liberatio /libéréysh(iy)yow/. In old English law, livery; money paid for the delivery or use of a thing.

Liberation /libéréyshon/. In civil law, the extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Synonymous with payment.

Liber authenticorum /láybar òthéntskóram/. The authentic collection of the novels of Justinian, so called to distinguish them from the Epitome Juliani.

Libera warrena /lib(x)a ra wóhrana/. In old English law, free warren (q.v.).

Liber bancus /láybar báéxkas/. In old English law, free bench.

Liber et legalis homo /láybar èt lágyélas hówmow/. In old English law, a free and lawful man. A term applied to a juror, or to one worthy of being a jurymen, from the earliest period.

Liber feudorum /láybar fyuuwdóram/. See Feudorum liber.

Liber homo /láybar hówmow/. See Homo liber.

Liberi /libaráy/. In Saxon law, freemen; the possessors of allodial lands.

   In the civil law, children. The term included "grand-children."

Liber niger /láybar náýjor/. Black book or register in the exchequer. Chartularies of abbeys, cathedrals, etc. A name given to several ancient records.

Liber niger domus regis /láybar náýjor dòwmas ríyjas/. The black book of the king's household.

Liber ruber scaccarii /láybar rúwbar skákeriyay/. The red book of the exchequer.

Libertas /libórtáy/. Lat. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

Libertas ecclesiastica /libótáy aklíyziyáyóká/. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur /libartaes èst nátyyraérlas fókalátas lýyas kwéd kíuywákwyíkwíi fóéíryáb kýabó, náýyas kwéd díy júríy oót váy prów(h)abiytar/. Liberty is that natural faculty which permits every one to do (or the natural power of doing) anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.

Libertas inestimabilis res est /libótáy inèstaméybalas ríyj èst/. Liberty is an inestimable thing; a thing above price.

Libertas non recipit assationem /libótáy nón rézopat èstaméyshiyównam/. Freedom does not admit of valuation.

Libertas omnibus rebus favorabilior est /libótáy omnabas ríybas fèyvórbíyliyár èst/. Liberty is more favored than all things [anything].

Libertas regales ad coronam spectantes ex concessione regum à coroná exierunt /libarítyátiyj séká synténtiuyj èks kásséshiyównyi ríygam èy kárówna ègyéiránt/. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings.

Libertatibus allocandis /libártytátabas ålakándás/. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed.

Libertatibus exigendis in itinere /libártytátabas égza-jéngás in aytínyarí/. An ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit an attorney for the defense of another's liberty.

Liberi /libórtay/, Libertini /libártyáynay/. Lat. In Roman law, freedmen. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. There seems to have been some difference in the use of these two words; the former denoting the manumitted slaves considered in their relations with their former master, who was now called their "patron;" the latter term applying to them in their status in the general social economy of Rome subsequent to manumission.

Liberticide /lábártásayd/ /libór/. A destroyer of liberty.

Liberties /lībartya/. Privileged districts exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction; as, "gaol liberties." See Gaol.

In colonial times, laws, or legal rights resting upon them. The early colonial ordinances in Massachusetts were termed laws and liberties, and the code of 1641 the "Body of Liberties."

Formerly, political subdivisions of Philadelphia; as, Northern Liberties.

Libertinum ingratum leges civiles in pristinam servi-tutem redigunt; sed leges Angliae semel manumis-sum semper libera judicant /libortaysm ingreytam liyjyz sivaliyz in pristanam sàrvatyjywert redôvjant, sed liyjyz ēgôllyiy sémal ménývwsmisôm sémôp liyjyz jâwdskânt/. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free.

Liberty. Freedom from all restraints except such as are justly imposed by law. Freedom from restraint, under conditions essential to the equal enjoyment of this same right by others; freedom regulated by law. The absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community. Brazo v. Connecticut Real Estate Commission, 177 Conn. 518, 418 A.2d 883, 890.

The "liberty" guaranteed and protected by constitutional provisions denotes not only freedom from unauthorized physical restraint, but embraces also the freedom of an individual to use and enjoy his faculties in all lawful ways, acquire useful knowledge, marry, establish a home, and bring up children, worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, live and work where he chooses, engage in any of the common and lawful occupations of life, enter into all contracts which may be proper and essential to carrying out successfully the foregoing purposes, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free people. See also Liberty interest, below.

The "personal liberty" guaranteed by Thirteenth Amend., U.S.Const., consists in the power of locomotion without imprisonment or restraint unless by due course of law, except those restraints imposed to prevent commission of threatened crime or in punishment of crime committed, those in punishment of contempts of courts or legislative bodies or to render their jurisdiction effectual, and those necessary to enforce the duty citizens owe in defense of the state to protect community against acts of those who by reason of mental infirmity are incapable of self-control. Ex parte Hudgins, 86 W.Va. 526, 103 S.E. 327, 329.

Also, a franchise or personal privilege, being some part of the sovereign power, vested in an individual, either by grant or prescription.

The term is used in the expression, rights, liberties, and franchises, as a word of the same general class and meaning with those words and privileges. This use of the term is said to have been strictly conformable to its sense as used in Magna Charta and in English declarations of rights, statutes, grants, etc.

In a derivative sense, the place, district, or boundaries within which a special franchise is enjoyed, an immunity claimed, or a jurisdiction exercised. In this sense, the term is commonly used in the plural; as the "liberties of the city."

Civil liberty. The liberty of a member of society, being a man's natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws (and no further) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public. 1 Bl.Comm. 125. The power of doing whatever the laws permit. 1 Bl.Comm. 6. The greatest amount of absolute liberty which can, in the nature of things, be equally possessed by every citizen in a state. Guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection. See Civil rights.

Liberty interest. An interest recognized as protected by the due process clauses of state and federal constitutions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14. Generally included are liberties guaranteed by the first eight amendments of the United States Constitution, as well as interests created when states either legislatively or administratively impose limitations on their discretion and require that a specific standard prevail in decision making. Adams v. Wainwright, D.C.Fla., 512 F.Supp. 948, 956.

Liberty of a port. In marine insurance, a license or permission incorporated in a marine policy allowing the vessel to touch and trade at a designated port other than the principal port of destination.

Liberty of conscience. Liberty for each individual to decide for himself what is to him religious. Gobitis v. Minersville School Dist., D.C.Pa., 21 F.Supp. 581, 584. See, also, Religious liberty, as defined below.

Liberty of contract. The ability at will, to make or abstain from making, a binding obligation enforced by the sanctions at the law. The right to contract about one's affairs, including the right to make contracts of employment, and to obtain the best terms one can as the result of private bargaining. Adkins v. Children's Hospital of District of Columbia, 261 U.S. 525, 63 S.Ct. 394, 396, 67 L.Ed. 785. It includes the corresponding right to accept a contract proposed. There is, however, no absolute freedom of contract. The government may regulate or forbid any contract reasonably calculated to affect injuriously public interest. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U.S. 186, 31 S.Ct. 164, 55 L.Ed. 167. It means freedom from arbitrary or unreasonable restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulation to safeguard public interest; or the right to make contracts with competent persons on a plane of relative parity or freedom of choice and within the limits allowed or not in Constitution, "freedom of speech" means freedom of any censorship or restrictions of government. As used in Constitution, "freedom of speech" means freedom of speech as it was understood by the common law when the Constitution was adopted. State v. Boloff, 138 Or. 568, 7 P.2d 775, 781. See however Clear and present danger doctrine. See also Symbolic speech.

Liberty of the globe. In marine insurance, a license or permission incorporated in a marine policy authorizing the vessel to go to any part of the world, instead of being confined to a particular port of destination.

Liberty of religion. Freedom accorded by the Constitution (First Amendment of U.S. Const.) or laws to express opinions and facts by word of mouth, uncontrolled by any censorship or restrictions of government. As used in Constitution, "freedom of religion" means freedom of speech for so doing except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offense, or as by their falsehood and malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals. Immunity from previous restraints or [from] censorship. Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660; Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357. See Censor; Censorship; Prior restraint.

Liberty to hold pleas. The liberty of having a court of one's own. Thus certain lords had the privilege of holding pleas within their own manors.

Natural liberty. The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. The right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consistent with their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature, and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. 1 Bl.Comm. 125.

Personal liberty. The right or power of locomotion; of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 3 S.Ct. 42, 27 L.Ed. 835.

Political liberty. Liberty of the citizen to participate in the operations of government, and particularly in the making and administration of the laws.

Religious liberty. Freedom, as guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution, from constraint, or control in matters affecting the conscience, religious beliefs, and the practice of religion. Freedom to entertain and express any or no system of religious opinions, and to engage in or refrain from any form of religious observance or public or private religious worship, not inconsistent with the peace and good order of society and the general welfare. See also Freedom of religion; Religion.

Librum corpus nullam recipit aestimationem /liboram körpás násam ráéspot étaméyshiyówam/. The body of a freeman does not admit of valuation.

Librum est cuique apud se explorare et expediat sibi consilium /liboram ést kiyuwyájkkwy épad sîy ekspéreri àñn sképydlyiat sîbày kansiliyáyum/. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interest.

Librum maritagium /liboram mártástiyáyum/. In old English law, frank-marriage.

Librum servitium /liboram svarishiyáyum/. Free service. Service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called "servitium liberum armorum." See also Servitium librum. Service not unbecoming the character of a freeman and a soldier to perform; as to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl.Comm. 60.

Librum socagium /liboram sokéyjiyáyum/. In old English law, free socage.

Librum tenamentum /liboram ténéméntum/. In common law pleading, a plea of freehold. A plea by the defendant in an action of trespass to real property that the locus in quo is his freehold, or that of a third person, under whom he acted.

In realty law, freehold. Frank-tenement.

Liblac /liblák/. In Saxon law, witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philters. Sometimes occurring in the Latinized form liblacum /labléykom/.

Libra /láybrs/. In old English law, a pound; also a sum of money equal to a pound sterling.

Libra arsa /láybrs ársá/. A pound burned; that is, melted, or assayed by melting, to test its purity. Libræ arsæ et pesatae, pounds burned and weighed. A frequent expression in Domesday, to denote the purer coin in which rents were paid.

Libra numerata /láybrs nýyúumóréyta/. A pound of money counted instead of being weighed.

Libra pensa /láybrs pénșa/. A pound of money by weight.

Libripens /libripenz/. In Roman law, a weigher or balance-holder. The person who held a brazen balance in the ceremony of emancipation, per aes et libram. A neutral person or balance holder, who was present at a conveyance of real property. He held in his hand the symbolic balance, which was struck by the purchaser with a piece of bronze as a sign of the completion of the conveyance. The bronze was then transferred to the seller as a sign of the purchase money.

License. A personal privilege to do some particular act or series of acts on land without possessing any estate or interest therein, and is ordinarily revocable at the will of the licensor and is not assignable. Lehman v. Williamson, 35 Colo.App. 372, 533 P.2d 63, 65. The permission by competent authority to do an act which, without such permission, would be illegal, a trespass, a tort, or otherwise not allowable. People v. Henderson, 391 Mich. 612, 218 N.W.2d 2, 4. Certificate or the document itself which gives permission. Leave to do thing which licensor could prevent. Western Electric Co. v. Patent Reproducer Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 42 F.2d 116, 118. Permission to do a particular thing, to exercise a certain privilege or to carry on a particular business or to pursue a certain occupation. Blatz Brewing Co. v. Collins, 88 Cal.App.2d 639, 160 P.2d 37, 39, 40.

A permit, granted by an appropriate governmental body, generally for a consideration, to a person, firm, or corporation to pursue some occupation or to carry on some business subject to regulation under the police power. A license is not a contract between the state and the licensee, but is a mere personal permit. Rosenblatt v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 69 Cal.App.2d 69, 188 P.2d 199, 203. Neither is it property or a property right. American States Water Service Co. of California v. Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 606, 88 P.2d 770, 774.

See also Bare or mere license; Certificate; Compulsory license; Exclusive license; Franchise; Letter of license; Licensee; Marriage license; Permit.

Executed license. That which exists when the licensed act has been done.

Exe cutory license. That which exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

Express license. One which is granted in direct terms.

Implied license. One which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

License bond. See Bond.

Patents. A written authority granted by the owner of a patent to another person empowering the latter to make or use the patented article for a limited period or in a limited territory. A permission to make, use or sell articles embodying invention. De Forest Radio Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Radio Corporation of America, D.C.Del., 9 F.2d 150, 151. A transfer which does not affect the monopoly, except by stopping licensor from exercising his prohibitory powers in derogation of privileges conferred upon licensee. L. L. Brown Paper Co. v. Hydrolloid, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 32 F.Supp. 857, 867, 868. An assignment by the patentee to another of rights less in degree than the patent itself. Any right to make, use, or sell the patented invention, which is less than an undivided part interest in the patent itself. Any transfer of patent rights short of assignment. Language used by owner of patent, or any conduct on his part exhibited to another, from which that other may properly infer that owner consents to his use of patent, on which the other acts, constitutes a license. General Motors Corporation v. Dailey, C.C.A.Mich., 93 F.2d 938, 941; Finley v. Asphalt Paving Co. of St. Louis, C.C.A.Mo., 69 F.2d 498, 504. Transfer of exclusive right to do merely two of the three rights under patent to make, use, and vend invention. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 59 F.2d 998, 1000. See also Patent.

Pleading. The defense of justification to an action of trespass that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the land to commit the trespass complained of. License is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by defendant. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(c).

Real property. A license is ordinarily considered to be a mere personal or revocable privilege to perform an act or series of acts on the land of another. Hennebont Co. v. Kroger Co., 221 Pa.Super. 65, 289 A.2d 229, 231. A privilege to go on premises for a certain purpose, but does not operate to confer on, or vest in, licensee any title, interest, or estate in such property. Timmons v. Cropper, 40 Del.Ch. 29, 172 A.2d 757, 759. Such privilege is unassignable.

A license is distinguished from an "easement," which implies an interest in the land, and a "lease," or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often, is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. National Memorial Park v. C. I. R., C.C.A.4, 145 F.2d 1068, 1015.

Simple license. One revocable at the will of the grantor; i.e., one not coupled with a grant.

Streets and highways. A permit to use street is a mere license revocable at pleasure. Lanham v. Forney, 196 Wash. 62, 81 P.2d 777, 779. The privilege of using the streets and highways by the operation thereon of motor carriers for hire can be acquired only by permission or license from the state or its political subdivisions.

Trade, business or calling. Authority or permission to do or carry on some trade or business which would otherwise be unlawful. Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) v. State Board of Equalization, 110 Mont. 5, 99 P.2d 229, 234. Permission conferred by proper authority to pursue certain trade, profession, or calling. Lloyd's of Texas v. Bobbitt, Tex.Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 897, 901. A license confers upon licensee neither contractual nor vested rights. Rosenblatt v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 69 Cal.App.2d 69, 158 P.2d 199, 203. Nor does it create a property right. See also Franchise.

Trademark. Permission to use a trademark in an area where the purported owner's goods have not become known and identified by his use of mark is a naked license. E. F. Prichard Co. v. Consumers Brewing Co., C.C.A.Ky., 136 F.2d 512, 521. See Trademark.

License cases. The name given to the group of cases including Peirce v. New Hampshire, 46 U.S. (5 How.) 504, 12 L.Ed. 256, decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1847, to the effect that state laws requiring a license or the payment of a tax for the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors were not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce, even as applied to liquors imported from another state and remaining in the original and unbroken packages. This decision was overruled in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U.S. 100, 10 S.Ct. 681, 34 L.Ed. 128, which in turn was overturned by the act of Congress of August 8, 1890, commonly called the "Wilson law."

Licensee. A person who has a privilege to enter upon land arising from the permission or consent, express or implied, of the possessor of land but who goes on the land for his own purpose rather than for any purpose or interest of the possessor. Reddington v. Beefeaters Tables, Inc., 187 Kan. 448, 357 P.2d 748, 751. For person to whom a license has been granted.

Formerly, the duty owed to a licensee was that of refraining from wilful, wanton and reckless conduct. This rule has been changed and now, in most jurisdictions, the occupier of land owes the licensee the duty of reasonable or due care. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

See also Exclusive licensee; Invitee.

Licensee by invitation. A person who goes upon the lands of another with express or implied invitation to transact business with the owner or occupant or do some act to his advantage or to the mutual advantage of both the licensee and the owner or occupant. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O’Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812. An invitee.

Licensee by permission. One who, for his own convenience, curiosity, or entertainment, goes upon the premises of another by the owner’s or occupant’s permission or sufferance. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O’Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812, 817.

License fee or tax. Charge imposed by governmental body for the granting of a privilege. Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board v. Pubblicker Commercial Alcohol Co., 347 Pa. 555, 32 A.2d 914, 917. Charge or fee imposed primarily for the discouragement of dangerous occupations, the protection of the safety of the public, or the regulation of relative rights, privileges, or duties as between individuals. Conard v. State, Del.Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. Price paid to governmental or municipal authority for a license to engage in and pursue a particular calling or occupation. Tax on privilege of exercising corporate franchise. City Investments v. Johnson, 6 Cal.2d 150, 56 P.2d 939, 940. The term "license tax" includes both charge imposed under police power for privilege of obtaining license to conduct particular business, and tax imposed upon business for sole purpose of raising revenue; "license tax" being defined as sum exacted for privilege of carrying on particular occupation. Where a fee is exacted and something is required or permitted in addition to the payment of the sum, either to be done by the licensee, or by some regulation or restriction imposed on him, then the fee is a "license fee". Conard v. State, Del.Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. A license fee is charge made primarily for regulation, with the fee to cover cost and expenses of supervision or regulation. State v. Jackman, 60 Wis.2d 700, 211 N.W.2d 480, 487. See also Franchise tax.

License in amortization. A license authorizing a conveyance of property which, without it, would be invalid under the statutes of mortmain.

License tax. See License fee or tax.

Licensing. The sale of a license permitting the use of patents, trademarks, or other technology to another firm. See also Cross-licensing.

Licensing involves the many procedures administrative agencies perform in conjunction with issuance of various types of licenses. Westland Convalescent Center v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Michigan, 414 Mich. 247, 324 N.W.2d 851, 859.

Licensing power. The authority in a governmental body to grant a license to pursue a particular activity; e.g. license to sell liquor.

Licensor /láysansar/. The person who gives or grants a license.

Licentia /lsénsi(ə)ə/. Lat. License; leave; permission.

Licentia concordandi /lsénsi(ə)ə kopk̓ərd̓əndə/. In old practice and conveyancing, license or leave to agree; one of the proceedings on levying a fine of lands. 2 Bl.Comm. 350.

Licentia loquendi /lsénsi(ə)ə lakw̓əndə/. In old practice, leave to speak (i.e., with the plaintiff); an imparlance; or rather leave to imparl. 3 Bl.Comm. 299.

Licentia surgendi /lsénsi(ə)ə sərj̓əndə/. In old English practice, license to arise; permission given by the court to a tenant in a real action, who had cast an essoin de malo lecti, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default.

Licentiate /lsénsi(ə)ət/laysnsi(ə)əj̓ərt/. One who has license to practice any art or faculty.

Licentiousness /lsénsi(ə)ənsəs/. The indulgence of the arbitrary will of the individual, without regard to ethics or law, or respect for the rights of others. Also, lewdness or lasciviousness.

Licere /lsəriə/. Lat. To be lawful; to be allowed or permitted by law.

Licere, liceri /lsəriə/ləsəriə/. Lat. In Roman law, to offer a price for a thing; to bid for it.

Licet /láysət/ləsət/. Lat. From the verb "licere" (q.v.). It is allowed; it is permissible; it is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis, tamen potest fieri declaratio precedens que sortitam effectum, interveniente novo actu /láysət dispəziʃ(ə)ədiətə diəntənənə əvələtə siə nələtəsətə sit inəliəliəsiələ, təmən poʃeit fiəri dəklərətə ədərənənə əvələtə əvənəntə nəvo əkətlə /láysət dispəziʃ(ə)ədiətə diəntənənə əvələtə siə inəliəliəsiələ, təmən poʃeit fiəri dəklərətə ədərənənə əvələtə əvənəntə nəvo əkətlə.
Liege homage. Homage which, although the grant of a future interest be inoperative, yet a declaration precedent may be made, which may take effect provided a new act intervene.

Licita bene miscenetur, formula nisi juris obstet. In Roman law, a bidder at a sale; to bid; to bid often; to make several bids, one above another.

Licitation. In the civil law, an offering for sale to the highest bidder, or to him who will give most for a thing. An act by which co-heirs or other co-proprietors of a thing in common and undivided between them put it to bid between them, to be adjudged and to belong to the highest and last bidder, upon condition that he pay to each of his co-proprietors a part in the price equal to the undivided part which each of the said co-proprietors had in the estate licited, before the adjudication.

Licitator. In Roman law, a bidder at a sale.

Licking of thumbs. An ancient formality by which bargains were completed.

Lidford law. A sort of lynch law, whereby a person was first punished and then tried.

Lie, n. A falsehood uttered for the purpose of deception; an intentional statement of an untruth designed to mislead another; anything which misleads or deceives; it means an untruth deliberately told; the uttering or acting of that which is false for the purpose of deceiving; intentional misstatement. Ward v. University of South. See Perjury.

Lie, v. To subsist; to exist; to be sustainable; to be proper or available. Thus the phrase “an action will not lie” means that an action cannot be sustained, or that there is no ground upon which to found the action.

Lie detector. See Polygraph.

Liege. In feudal law, bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior. The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. So lieges are the king’s subjects.

In old records, full; absolute; perfect; pure. Liege widowhood was pure widowhood. Ligius was also used; e.g. ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal.

Liege homage. Homage which, when performed by one sovereign prince to another, included fealty and services, as opposed to simple homage, which was a mere acknowledgment of tenure.

Liege lord. A sovereign; a superior lord.

Liegeman. He that owed allegiance.

Lieger, or leger. A resident ambassador.

Lieges, or liege people. Subjects.

Lie in franchise. Property is said to “lie in franchise” when it is of such a nature that the persons entitled thereto may seize it without the aid of a court; e.g., wrecks, waifs, estrays.

Lie in grant. Incorporeal hereditaments are said to “lie in grant;” that is, they pass by force of the grant (deed or charter) without livery.

Lie in livery. A common law term applied to corporeal hereditaments, freeholds, etc., signifying that they pass by livery, not by the mere force of the grant.

Lie in wait. See Lying in wait.

Lien. A claim, encumbrance, or charge on property for payment of some debt, obligation or duty. Sullins v. Sullins, 65 Wash.2d 283, 390 P.2d 886, 888. Qualified right of property which a creditor has in or over specific property of his debtor, as security for the debt or charge or for performance of some act. Right or claim against some interest in property created by law as an incident of contract. Right to enforce charge upon property of another for payment or satisfaction of debt or claim. Vaughan v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 189, 190. Right to retain property for payment of debt or demand. Bell v. Dennis, 43 N.M. 350, 93 P.2d 1003, 1006. Security for a debt, duty or other obligation. Hurley v. Boston R. Holding Co., 315 Mass. 591, 54 N.E.2d 183, 193. Tie that binds property to a debt or claim for its satisfaction. United States v. 1364.76875 Wine Gallons, More or Less, of Spirituous Liquors, D.C.Mo., 60 F.Supp. 389, 392. Liens are “property rights.” In re Pennsylvania Central Brewing Co., C.C.A.Pa., 114 F.2d 1010, 1013. The word “lien” is a generic term and, standing alone, includes liens acquired by contract or by operation of law. Egyptian Supply Co. v. Boyd, C.C.A.Ky., 117 F.2d 608, 612. A change against or interest in property to secure payment of a debt or performance of an obligation. Bankruptcy Code § 101. Lien by operation of law. Where the law itself, without the stipulation of the parties, raises a lien, as an implication or legal consequence from the relation of the parties or the circumstances of their dealings. Liens of this species may arise either under the rules of common law or of equity or under a statute. In the first case they are called “common-law liens;” in the second, “equitable liens;” in the third, “statutory liens.”

Roman or Civil law. The peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law and equity, are termed “liens,” are embraced under the head of “mortgage and privilege.”

See also Agent’s lien; Architect’s lien; Artisan’s lien; Attorney’s lien; Banker’s lien; Charging Lien; Chattel lien.
Lien account. Such statement of claims as fairly apprises property owner and public of nature and amount of demand asserted as lien. Hanenkamp v. Hagedorn, Mo.App., 110 S.W.2d 826, 829.

Lien creditor. One whose debt or claim is secured by a lien on particular property, as distinguished from a "general" creditor, who has no such security. A creditor who has acquired a lien on the property involved, by attachment, levy or the like, and includes an assignee for benefit of creditors from the time of assignment, and a trustee in bankruptcy from the date of the filing of the petition, or a receiver in equity from the time of appointment. U.C.C. § 9-301(3). See also Creditor.

Lienlee /lynny/. One whose property is subject to a lien.

Lien of a covenant. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenantees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several.

Lien of attachment. An encumbrance on property seized through the pre-judgment remedy of attachment that is inchoate when it first arises, usually upon the sheriff's levy of the property, and that becomes final and perfected upon judgment for the attaching creditor in the action who caused attachment to issue. For purposes of priority against third parties' claims to the property, a lien of attachment perfected by judgment dates from the time the lien first arose. See Attachment.

Lien of execution. An encumbrance that attaches by operation of law to a judgment debtor's real and personal property when the property is subjected to execution process and that gives the execution creditor a priority over subsequent transferees of the property and also over prior unrecorded conveyances of interests in the property. See Attachment; Execution.

Lien of factor at common law. Lien not created through statutory enactment, but lien of ordinary factor as known to common law.

Lien of garnishment. Encumbrance on property of a debtor held by a garnishee that attaches in favor of the garnishing creditor when garnishment summons is served upon the garnishee and that also impounds credits owed by the garnishee to the debtor so that they must be paid to the garnishing creditor. See Garnishment.

Lienor /ly(3)nar/. The person having or owning a lien; one who has a right of lien upon property of another.

Lien waiver. A waiver of mechanic's lien rights, signed by subcontractors so that the owner or general contractor can receive a draw on a construction loan.

Lie to. To adjoin.

Lieu conus /lyu(w)konyuw/. L. Fr. In old pleading, a known place; a place well known and generally taken notice of by those who dwell about it, as a castle, a manor, etc.

Lieu lands. A term used to indicate public lands within the indemnity limits granted in lieu of those lost within place limits. Weyerhaeuser v. Hoyt, 219 U.S. 380, 31 S.Ct. 300, 55 L.Ed. 268.

Lieu tax. A lieu tax means instead of or a substitute for, and it is not an additional tax. Lebeck v. State, 62 Ariz. 171, 156 P.2d 720, 721.

Lieutenancy, commission of. See Commission of array.

Lieutenant /lyuwtént/léftént/. A deputy; substitute; an officer who supplies the place of another; one acting by vicarious authority. Etymologically, one who holds the post or office of another, in the place and stead of the latter.

The word is used in composition as part of the title of several civil and military officers, who are subordinate to others, and especially where the duties and powers of the higher officer may, in certain contingencies, devolve upon the lower; as lieutenant governor, lieutenant colonel, etc. (see infra).

In the army, a lieutenant is a commissioned officer, ranking next below a captain. In the United States navy, he is an officer whose rank is intermediate between that of an ensign and that of a lieutenant commander. In the British navy, his rank is next below that of a commander.

Lieutenant colonel. An officer of the army whose rank is above that of a major and below that of a colonel.

Lieutenant commander. A commissioned officer of the United States navy, whose rank is above that of lieutenant and below that of commander.

Lieutenant general. An officer in the army, whose rank is above that of Major General and below that of a Full General or Four Star General which is below a General of the Army or Five Star General.

Lieutenant governor. An elected officer of a state, sometimes charged with special duties, but chiefly important as the deputy or substitute of the governor, acting in the place of the governor upon the latter's death, resignation, or disability.

Life. That state of animals, humans, and plants or of an organized being, in which its natural functions and motions are performed, or in which its organs are capable of performing their functions. The interval between birth and death. The sum of the forces by which death is resisted.

Life insurance trust. Type of trust, the res of which consists in whole or in part of life insurance policies owned by the trustees and payable to the trust on the death of the insured. A device commonly used in estate planning.

Life interest. A claim or interest in real or personal property, not amounting to ownership, and limited by a term of life, either that of the person in whom the right is vested or that of another. See also Life estate.

Life-land, or life-hold. Land held on a lease for lives.

Life of a writ. The period during which a writ (execution, etc.) remains effective and can lawfully be served or levied, terminating with the day on which, by law or by its own terms, it is to be returned into court.

Life or limb. The phrase "life or limb" within constitutional provision that no person shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb is not construed strictly but applies to any criminal penalty. Fifth Amend., U.S.Const. Claws v. Rives, 70 U.S.App.D.C. 107, 104 F.2d 240, 242.

Life peerage. Letters patent, conferring the dignity of baron for life only, do not enable the grantee to sit and vote in the house of lords, not even with the usual writ of summons to the house.

Life policy. See Insurance (Life insurance).

Life sentence. See Sentence.

Life sustaining procedures. Such procedures which may be suspended on a court order or pursuant to a living will in case of, for example, a comatose and terminally ill individual, are medical procedures which utilize mechanical or other artificial means to sustain, restore, or supplant a vital function, which serve only or primarily to prolong the moment of death, and where, in the judgment of the attending and consulting physicians, as reflected in the patient's medical records, death is imminent if such procedures are not utilized. John F. Kennedy Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Bludworth, Fla.App. 4 Dist., 432 So.2d 611, 619. See also Right to die laws; Will (Living will).

Life tables. Statistical (i.e. actuarial) tables exhibiting the probable proration of persons who will live to reach different ages. Such tables are used for many purposes, such as the computation of the present value of annuities, dower rights, etc.; and for the computation of damages resulting from injuries which destroy the earning capacity of a person, or those resulting from the death of a person to those who are dependent upon him. See also Actuarial tables.

Life tenancy. An estate in real property in which the tenant has a freehold interest for his life or for the life of another (pur autre vie).

Life tenant. One who holds an estate in lands for the period of his own life or that of another certain person.

LIFO. See last-in, first-out.

Lift. To raise; to take up. To "lift" a promissory note is to discharge its obligation by paying its amount or substituting another evidence of debt. To "lift the bar" of the statute of limitations, or of an estoppel, is to remove the obstruction which it interposes, by some sufficient act or acknowledgment.

Liga /līγa/. In old European law, a league or confederation.

Ligan, lagan /lāγan/lēγan/. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of "jetsam," "flotsam," and "ligan."

Ligare /lāγeriy/. To tie or bind. To enter into a league or treaty.

Ligeantia /liyj(iy)as/. In old records, a liege. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, reined by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

Ligeantia est quasi legis essentia; est vinculum fidei /liyj(iy)as/. Allegiance is, as it were, the solemn tie or engagement; used to express the relation of a subject to a sovereign. See also Liege.

Ligea /lij(y)as/. In old English law, a liege-woman; a female subject.

Ligeance /liyjan(t)s/. Allegiance; the faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. Also, derivatively, the territory of a state or sovereignty.

Ligeantia /liyj(iy)as/. Lat. Ligeance; allegiance.

Ligeantia naturalis nullis claustris coercetur, nullis finibus premitur /liyj(iy)as nabs klostras kowarsatar, nabs fīnisbās prēmatar/. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, reined by no bounds, compressed by no limits.

Ligas /liyj(iy)as/. In old records, a liege.

Light, right to. A privilege or easement to have light admitted into one's building by the openings made for that purpose, without obstruction or obscurcation by the walls of adjacent or neighboring structures. Santos v. Dondero, 11 CaLApp.2d 720, 54 F.2d 764, 766.

Lighterage. The business of transferring, loading, and unloading, merchandise to and from vessels by means of lighters; also the compensation or price demanded for such service. The loading, unloading and transfer of freight between a car and a ship's side. Hoboken Manufacturers' R. Co. v. United States, D.C.N.J., 47 F.Supp. 779, 782.

Lighterman /lāγdarm/. The master or owner of a lighter. He is liable as a common carrier.

Lights, ancient. English doctrine under which a landowner acquired, by uninterrupted use for 20 years, an easement or right by prescription over adjoining land for the unobstructed passage of light and air.

Ligius /liyjiyas/. A person bound to another by a solemn tie or engagement; used to express the relation of a subject to a sovereign. See also Liege.

Lignagium /līγēj(iy)am/. A right of cutting fuel in woods; also a tribute or payment due for the same.

Ligula /līγula/. In old English law, a copy, exemplification, or transcript of a court roll or deed.

Like benefits. Similar in salient features.

Like-kind exchange. An exchange of property held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment (except inventory and stocks and bonds) for other investment or trade or business property. Unless cash is received, the exchange is nontaxable. I.R.C. § 1031. Test for determining whether exchanged properties are of "like kind," such that gain from the exchange is not recognized for federal income tax purposes, is whether the property is of the same nature or character and a mere difference in grade or quality does not disqualify the exchange. California Federal Life Ins. Co. v. C.I.R., C.A. 9, 680 F.2d 85, 87. See also Boot.

Like-kind property. See Like-kind exchange.

Likelihood of confusion. Touchstone of trademark infringement under Lanham Trade-Mark Act is "likelihood of confusion," or whether substantial number of ordinarily prudent purchasers are likely to be misled or confused as to source of different product. Mushroom Makers, Inc., v. R.G. Barry Corp., D.C.N.Y., 441 F.Supp. 1220, 1225. Factors to be considered in determining "likelihood of confusion" are the degree of resemblance between the marks in appearance, pronunciation, translation and suggestiveness, the intent of the second user in adopting the allegedly infringing mark, similarity of circumstances and conditions surrounding the purchase of the goods involved and the degree of care likely to be exercised by purchasers. Schmid Laboratories v. Youngs Drug Products Corp., D.C.N.J., 482 F.Supp. 14, 17.

Likely. Probable. Horning v. Gerlach, 139 Cal.App. 470, 34 P.2d 504, 505. In all probability. Neely v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., Mo.App., 14 S.W.2d 972, 978. Likely is word of general usage and common understanding, broadly defined as of such nature or so circumstantial as to make something probable and having better chance of existing or occurring than not. People v. Randall, Colo., 711 P.2d 689, 692.

Limmenarcha /limonarka/. In Roman law, an officer who had charge of a harbor or port.
Limine. See Motion in limine.

Limit, v. To abridge, confine, restrain, and restrict. To mark out; to define; to fix the extent of. Thus, to limit an estate means to mark out or to define the period of its duration, and the words employed in deeds for this purpose are thence termed "words of limitation," and the act itself is termed "limiting the estate."

Limit, n. A bound; a restriction; a restraint; a circumscription. Boundary, border, or outer line of thing. Extent of power, right or authority conferred.

Limitation. Restriction or circumspection; settling an estate or property. A certain time allowed by a statute for bringing litigation (see Statute of limitations, below). The provisions of state constitution are not a "grant" but a "limitation" of legislative power. Ellerbe v. David, 193 S.C. 332, 8 S.E.2d 518, 520; Mulholland v. Ayers, 109 Mont. 558, 99 P.2d 234, 239. See also Proviso.

Corporations. Under statute providing that all corporations expiring by their own "limitation" shall for certain purposes be continued as bodies corporate for a term of three years, the word "limitation" is an act of limiting, a restriction of power, a qualification. Porter v. Tempa Min. & Mill. Co., 59 Nev. 332, 93 P.2d 741, 743.

Estates. The restriction or circumscription of an estate, in the conveyance by which it is granted, in respect to the interest of the grantee or its duration. The specific curtailment or confinement of an estate, by the terms of the grant, so that it cannot endure beyond a certain period or a designated contingency. A "limitation" on a grant determines an estate upon the happening of the event itself without the necessity of doing any act to regain the estate, such as re-entry. Gulf Production Co. v. Continental Oil Co., Tex., 132 S.W.2d 553, 563. A limitation, whether made by the express words of the party or existing in intendment of law, circumscribes the continuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, and by positive and certain terms, or by reference to some event which possibly may happen, marks the period at which the time of enjoyment shall end.

Collateral limitation. One which gives an interest in an estate for a specified period, but makes the right of enjoyment to depend on some collateral event, as an estate to A. till B. shall go to Rome.

Conditional limitation. A condition followed by a limitation over to a third person in case the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. Between conditional limitations and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference: that in the former the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach.

A conveyance of an estate in fee, subject to this limitation, passes the grantor's whole interest at once and creates an estate to arise and vest in a third person on contingency at a future uncertain time. Roadcap v. County School Bd. of Rockingham County, 194 Va. 201, 72 S.E.2d 250, 254.

In landlord and tenant law, a provision in a lease which gives a landlord added protection by enabling the landlord to end the term before its natural expiration date. Varela v. Miller, 204 Misc. 88, 120 N.Y.2d 688, 690. Such exists, for example, when lease provides that it shall terminate upon the happening of an event without any further election, entry, or re-entry. Pisarek v. Sikora, 29 Misc.2d 457, 216 N.Y.2d 202, 203.

Contingent limitation. When a remainder in fee is limited upon any estate which would by the common law be adjudged a fee tail, such a remainder is valid as a contingent limitation upon a fee, and vests in possession on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of his death.

Limitation in law. A limitation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be holden only during the continuance of the condition under which it was granted, upon the determination of which the estate vests immediately in him in expectancy.

Limitation over. This term includes any estate in the same property created or contemplated by the conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate granted expires or is exhausted. Lane v. Citizens & Southern Nat. Bank, 195 Ga. 828, 25 S.E.2d 800, 802, 803. Thus, in a gift to A. for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the remainder is a "limitation over" to such heirs.

Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipso facto in a given event, without action, entry, or claim, before it would, or might, otherwise expire by force of, or according to, the general limitation.

Title by limitation. A prescriptive title; one which is indefeasible because of the expiration of the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the bringing of actions to test or defeat it.

Words of limitation. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed "words of limitation." Thus, in a grant to A. and his heirs, the words "and his heirs" are words of limitation, because they show that A. is to take an estate in fee-simple and do not give his heirs anything. Summit v. Yount, 109 Ind. 506, 9 N.E. 582.

Limitation of actions. See Statute of limitations, below.
Limitation of assize. In old practice, a certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seized of lands sued for by a writ of assize.

Statute of limitations. Statutes of the federal government and various states setting maximum time periods during which certain actions can be brought or rights enforced. After the time period set out in the applicable statute of limitations has run, no legal action can be brought regardless of whether any cause of action ever existed.

A statute prescribing limitations to the right of action on certain described causes of action or criminal prosecutions; that is, declaring that no suit shall be maintained on such causes of action, nor any criminal charge be made, unless brought within a specified period of time after the right accrued. See e.g., 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2401, 2501 (statutes of limitation for actions against U.S. government). In criminal cases, however, a statute of limitation is an act of grace, a surrendering by sovereign of its right to prosecute. See e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 3281 et seq. (statutes of limitations for federal criminal prosecutions). See also Laches; Statute of limitations.

Statute of repose compared. While statutes of limitation are sometimes called "statutes of repose," the former bars right of action unless it is filed within a specified period of time after injury occurs, while "statute of repose" terminates any right of action after a specific time has elapsed, regardless of whether there has as yet been an injury. Hanson v. Williams County, N.D., 389 N.W.2d 319, 321. See also Statute of limitations.

Words of limitation. Words that limit or define the interest in land that a grantee receives such as "and his heirs." Language in a deed indicating how long the estate granted is to endure.

Limitation of liability acts. State and federal statutes that limit liability for certain types of damages (e.g., pain and suffering) or limit liability of certain persons or groups (e.g., liability of corporate directors for acts of corporation), or limit time period in which action can be maintained (see Limitation of liability acts).

Limited administration. An administration of a temporary character, granted for a particular period, or for a special or particular purpose.

Limited admissibility. In law of evidence, testimony or things may be admitted into evidence for a restricted purpose, and the trial judge should so instruct the jury at the time of its admission; e.g., prior contradictory statements are admissible to impeach but not admissible for the truth of the statements. However, if the evidence has multiple purposes, one being in violation of a constitutional protection for a criminal defendant, such evidence should not be admitted. Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476.

Similarly, evidence may frequently be competent as against one party, but not as against another, in which event the practice is to admit the evidence, with an instruction, if requested, that the jury are to consider it only as to the party against whom it is competent. Fed.Evid.R. 105.

Limited appeal. An appeal from only adverse portions of a decree; such is limited to the particular portions of the decree appealed from. Fox v. River Heights, 22 Tenn.App. 166, 118 S.W.2d 1104, 1114. See also Interlocutory appeals; Interlocutory Appeals Act.

Limited court. Where special authority, in derogation of common law, is conferred by statute on a court of general jurisdiction, it becomes an "inferior or limited court." For example, a probate court is a court of limited jurisdiction. Partlow v. Partlow, 246 Ala. 259, 20 So.2d 517, 518. See Limited or special jurisdiction.

Limited divorce. A divorce decree or judgment may be restricted to a dissolution of the marriage with no provision for support. In another sense, term refers to a divorce a mensa et thoro (from bed and board) with no right to remarry.

Limited executor. An executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter whereon, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute, i.e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time.

Limited guaranty. A limited guaranty is ordinarily one restricted in its application to a single transaction. Cooling v. Springer, 3 Terry 228, 30 A.2d 466, 469.

Limited liability. See Limitation of liability acts.

Limited or special jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of court which is confined to particular types of cases or actions, or which can be exercised only under the limitations and circumstances prescribed by the statute. A court's power over an action is governed generally by statute and some courts have limited authority or power and the limitation is in terms of the nature of the case (e.g., probate courts), or the amount in controversy (e.g., small claims court), or the type of crime with which the Limited owner. A tenant for life, or by the curtesy, or other person not having absolute ownership.

Limited partner. A person who has been admitted to a limited partnership as a limited partner in accordance with the partnership agreement. Uniform Partnership Act, § 101. A partner whose liability to third party creditors of the partnership is limited to the amount invested by such partner in the partnership. See Limited partnership. Compare General partner.

Limited partnership. Type of partnership comprised of one or more general partners who manage business and who are personally liable for partnership debts, and one or more limited partners who contribute capital and share in profits but who take no part in running business and incur no liability with respect to partnership obligations beyond contribution. Evans v. Galardi, 16 Cal.3d 300, 128 Cal.Rptr. 175, 546 P.2d 311.

A partnership formed by two or more persons under the provisions of the Uniform Limited Partnership Act, having as members one or more general partners and one or more limited partners. The limited partners, as such, are not bound by the obligations of the partnership. Uniform Limited Partnership Act § 101(7). Most all states have adopted the Uniform Limited Partnership Act.

See also General partner; Limited partner.

Master limited partnership. A standard limited partnership in which its interests are publicly traded. “Master” merely refers to the two tier form often employed to meet state law requirements as to limited liability.

Limited payment plan. A policy upon a “limited payment plan” is a paid-up policy, and insurance upon which no further premium is to be paid. Bankers Life & Loan Ass’n v. Chase, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 374, 376.

Limited power of appointment. Power of appointment is limited when it is exercisable only in favor of persons or a class of persons designated in the instrument creating the power. Johnstone v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 76 F.2d 55, 57. See also Power of appointment.

Limited publication. Copyrighted material loses its protected status if it is published without notice of copyright; an exception to such doctrine exists for material whose publication can be characterized as “limited,” but to qualify as a “limited publication,” the publication must communicate the contents of a manuscript to a definitely selected group and for a limited purpose without the right of diffusion, reproduction, distribution or sale. Rexnord, Inc. v. Modern Handling Systems, Inc., D.C.Del., 379 F.Supp. 1190, 1197. Circulation must be restricted both as to persons and purpose or it cannot be called a private or limited publication. Conner v. Mark I, Inc., D.C.Ill., 509 F.Supp. 1179, 1180.

Limit order. Requests by customers to purchase or sell securities at the market price existing when the order reaches the exchange floor. A restriction on the sale or purchase of a security placed by a customer with a broker, limiting the price at which the customer is willing to buy or sell.

Lincoln’s Inn. An inn of court. See Inns of Court.

Lindbergh Act. Federal law which punishes kidnapping for ransom or reward when the victim is transported from one state to another or to a foreign country. The failure to release the victim within 24 hours creates a rebuttable presumption that such person has been transported in interstate or foreign commerce. 18 U.S.C. A. § 1201.

Line. A demarcation, border, or limit. The boundary or line of division between two estates. Person's trade, occupation or business. Carrier's route.

Building line. See Building line.

Collateral line. See Descent.

Descent. See Descent.

Direct line. See Descent.

Line by line budget. A detailed itemization of all expenditures by budget line. Block v. Sprague, Sup., 24 N.Y.S.2d 245, 247.

Line of an intersection. A straight line substantially at right angles to bounds of highway at a point where, to the reasonable perception of a driver, the highway starts to widen as the result of the outcurving of its bounds to form the junction. Beck v. Sosnowitz, 125 Conn. 553, 7 A.2d 389, 391.

Line of credit. A margin or fixed limit of credit granted by one to another, typically from bank, retailer, or credit card issuer to customer, to the full extent of which the latter may avail himself in his dealings with the former, but which he must not exceed; usually intended to cover a series of transactions, in which case, when the customer's line of credit is nearly or quite exhausted, he is expected to reduce his indebtedness by payments before drawing upon it further. Modoc Meat & Cattle Co. v. First State Bank of Oregon, 271 Or. 276, 532 P.2d 21, 25. The maximum borrowing power (i.e. credit limit) of a person from a financial institution, credit card issuer, or the like. Agreement with bank or number of banks for short-term borrowings on demand.

Line of duty. In military law and usage, an act is said to be done, or an injury sustained, “in the line of duty,” when done or suffered in the performance or discharge of a duty incumbent upon the individual in his character as a member of the military or naval forces. An injury suffered or disease contracted by a sailor is considered to have been in “line of duty” unless actually caused by something for which sailor is responsible which inter-

Line of ordinary high tide. Ordinary high tide may, for practical purposes, within a restricted area, be conceived as a level plane; the "line of ordinary high tide" is the intersection of said plane with the surface of the land. Linea /liinya/. Lat. A line; line of descent. See Descendent.

Lineage /lin(i)ya/. Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending. Line of descent from an ancestor, hence, family, race, stock. See also Descendent.

Lineal /liniyl/. That which comes in a line; especially a direct line, as from father to son. Collateral relationship is not called "lineal," though the expression "collateral line," is not unusual. Proceeding in direct or unbroken line, hereditary, unbroken in course; distinguished from collateral, as lineal descent, lineal succession, having an ancestral basis or right. See also Descendent.

Lineal consanguinity /liniyl konsangwınädiy/. That kind of consanguinity which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other; as between a particular person and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward, in the direct ascending line; or between the same person and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. See Descendent.

Lineal descendent. A person in the direct line of descent such as a child or grandchild as contrasted with a collateral descendent such as a niece.

Lineal descent. See Descendent.

Lineal heir /liinyyl ę(y)sr/. One who inherits in a line either ascending or descending from a common source as distinguished from a collateral heir. Ferraro v. Augustine, 45 Ill.App.2d 295, 196 N.E.2d 16, 19. The words "lineal heirs" like "heirs of the body" mean all lineal descendants to the remotest posterity and are words of "inheritance" and not of "purchase," unless the instrument clearly shows that they were used in a restricted sense to denote "children". Sims v. Clayton, 193 S.C. 98, 7 S.E.2d 724, 727. See also Heirs.

Lineal warranty. A warranty by an ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to the heir.

As a unit of land measurement, see Land measure.

Link-in-chain. The 5th Amendment (U.S.Const.) privilege against self incrimination protects a witness not only from the requirement of answering questions which might call for directly incriminating answers but also from answers which might tie or link the defendant to criminal activity in the chain of evidence. Estes v. Potter, C.A.Tex., 183 F.2d 865. Immunity also protects one from such result. State v. Buchanan, Fla.App., 207 So.2d 711, 717.

Liquere /lokwiriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to be clear, evident, or satisfactory. When a judex was in doubt how to decide a case, he represented to the praetor, under oath, sibi non liquere (that it was not clear to him), and was thereupon discharged.

Liquet /likwt/. It is clear or apparent; it appears. Satis liquet, it sufficiently appears.

Liquid. Said of a business with a substantial amount (the amount is unspecified) of working capital, especially quick assets. See also Liquidity.

Liquid assets. Cash, or assets readily convertible to cash.

Liquidate. To pay and settle. To convert assets to cash. Farmers State Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 137 Tex. 39, 152 S.W.2d 729, 732; Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631. To adjust or settle a debt. Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163. To ascertain the amount, or the several amounts, of the liabilities of the debtor and apportion the assets toward discharge of the indebtedness, Farmers State Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 137 Tex. 39, 152 S.W.2d 729, 732; to ascertain the balance due and to whom payable, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; to assemble and mobilize the assets, settle with the creditors and the debtors and apportion the remaining assets, if any, among the stockholders or owners, United States v. Metcalf, C.C.A.Cal., 131 F.2d 677, 679; to clear up, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., La., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631; to determine by agreement or litigation precise amount of indebtedness, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to discharge, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to extinguish an indebtedness, Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163; to gather in the assets, convert them into cash and distribute them according to the legal rights of the parties interested; to lessen, Fleckner v. Bank of U. S., La., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631; to make amount of indebtedness clear and certain, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to reduce to precision in amount and to satisfy, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; to sell, Esser v. Chimeil, 27 Del.Ch. 69, 30 A.2d 685, 687; to “wind up” affairs of a business. See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Liquidation; Settle; Settlement.

Liquidated account. An account whereof the amount is certain and fixed, either by the act and agreement of the parties or by operation of law. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okt. 457, 43 P.2d 467, 471; Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775.

Liquidated claim. Claim, amount of which has been agreed on by parties to action or is fixed by operation of law. Tapp v. Tapp’s Trustee, 299 Ky. 345, 185 S.W.2d 534, 535; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. American Bldg. Maintenance Co. of Los Angeles, 7 Cal. App.2d 683, 46 P.2d 984, 985. A claim which can be determined with exactness from parties’ agreement or by arithmetical process or application of definite rules of law, without reliance on opinion or discretion. Lester N. Johnson Co., Inc. v. City of Spokane, 22 Wash.App. 265, 588 P.2d 1214, 1221. Claim for debt or damages is “liquidated” in character if amount thereof is fixed, has been agreed upon, or is capable of ascertainmment by mathematical computation or operation of law. Robinson v. Loyola Foundation, Inc., Fla.App., 236 So.2d 154, 157.

Liquidated damages. See Damages.

Liquidated debt. A debt is liquidated when it is certain what is due and how much is due. That which has been made certain as to amount due by agreement of parties or by operation of law. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okt. 457, 43 P.2d 467, 471. Compare Unliquidated debt.

Liquidated demand. A demand the amount of which has been ascertained or settled by agreement of the parties, or otherwise. Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775. Amount claimed is a “liquidated demand” if it is susceptible of being made certain in amount by mathematical calculations from factors which are or ought to be in possession or knowledge of party to be charged. Rifkin v. Safenovitz, 131 Conn. 411, 40 A.2d 188, 189.

Liquidating distribution. A distribution by a partnership or corporation that is in complete liquidation of the entity’s trade or business activities. Typically, such distributions generate capital gain or loss to the investors without regard, for instance, to the earnings and profits of the corporation or to the partnership’s basis in the distributed property. They can, however, lead to recognized gain or loss at the corporate level. See also Liquidating dividend; Liquidation.

Liquidating dividend. A distribution of assets in the form of a dividend from a corporation that is reducing capital or going out of business. Such a payment may arise, for example, when management decides to sell off certain company assets and distribute the proceeds to the shareholders. Such a distribution may not be from current or retained earnings. See also Liquidating distribution.

Liquidating partner. The partner who upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts.

Liquidating trust. A trust, the object of which is liquidation as soon as possible. Helvering v. Washburn, C.C.A. Minn., 99 F.2d 478.

Liquidation. The act or process of settling or making clear, fixed, and determinate that which before was uncertain or unascertained. Payment, satisfaction, or collection; realization on assets and discharge of liabilities. To clear away (to lessen) a debt. Craddock-Terry Co. v. Powell, 180 Va. 242, 22 S.E.2d 30, 34. To pay or settle. In re Klink's Estate, 310 Ill. App. 609, 35 N.E.2d 684, 687. To take over for collection. Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163. Winding up or settling with creditors and debtors. Wilson v. Superior Court in and for Santa Clara County, 2 Cal.2d 632, 43 P.2d 286, 288.

With respect to winding up of affairs of corporation, is process of reducing assets to cash, discharging liabilities and dividing surplus or loss. Occurs when a corporation distributes its net assets to its shareholders and ceases its legal existence.

The settling of financial affairs of a business or individual, usually by liquidating (turning to cash) all assets for distribution to creditors, heirs, etc. It is to be distinguished from dissolution which is the end of the legal existence of a corporation. Liquidation may precede or follow dissolution, depending upon statutes.

See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Distressed sale; Distribution in liquidation; Liquidate; Liquidated; Receivership.

One month liquidation. A special election available to certain shareholders of a corporation which determines how the distributions received in liquidation by the electing shareholders will be treated for Federal income tax purposes. In order to qualify for the election, the corporation must be completely liquidated within the time span of any one calendar month. I.R.C. § 333.

Partial liquidation. A partial liquidation occurs when some of the corporation's assets are distributed to its shareholders (usually on a pro rata basis) and the corporation continues doing business in a contracted form. Distributions of cash or property beyond the amount of earned surplus of a corporation is a partial liquidation.

Tax implications. In a complete or partial liquidation of a corporation, amounts received by the shareholders in exchange for their stock are usually treated as a sale or exchange of the stock resulting in capital gain or loss treatment. Special rules apply to one month liquidations, twelve month liquidations, and the liquidation of a subsidiary.

Twelve-month liquidation. A provision of the Internal Revenue Code that requires a corporation selling property within the 12-month period from the adoption of a plan of liquidation to its complete liquidation to recognize no gain or loss on such sales. Generally, inventory is not included within the definition unless a bulk sale occurs. See I.R.C. § 337.

Liquidation dividend. Act or operation in winding up affairs of firm or corporation, a settling with its debtors and creditors, and an appropriation and distribution to its stockholders ratably of the amount of profit and loss. Hellman v. Helvering, 63 App.D.C. 18, 68 F.2d 763, 765. See also Liquidating dividend.

Liquidation price. A price paid for property sold to liquidate a debt. Usually less than market value since there is pressure to sell or a forced sale, either of which does not usually bring the highest price. Compare Going concern value.

Liquidator. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company. In England and Canada, a receiver who liquidates a corporation on dissolution.

Liquid debt /likwad dét/. A debt immediately and unconditionally due. See Liquidated debt.

Liquidity. The status or condition of a person or a business in terms of its or his ability to convert assets into cash. The degree to which an asset can be acquired or disposed of without danger of intervening loss in nominal value. Money is the most liquid asset.

With respect to securities markets, refers to the market characteristic of a security or commodity with enough units outstanding and traded to allow large transactions to occur without a substantial variation in price. Most shares traded at the New York Stock Exchange have liquidity.

Liquor. Alcoholic beverage made by distillation; to be contrasted with wines which are made by fermentation. See also Alcoholic liquors; Intoxicating liquor.

Liquor offenses. Generic term describing crimes connected with the use, sale or abuse of intoxicating liquor or the absence of a license to sell liquor (e.g., federal liquor traffic offenses, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1261 et seq.). See Dram Shop Acts; Driving while intoxicated.

Lis /lis/. Lat. A controversy or dispute; a suit or action at law.

Lis alibi pendens /lis alibi pendenz/. A suit pending elsewheere. The fact that proceedings are pending between a plaintiff and defendant in one court in respect to a given matter is a ground for preventing the plaintiff from taking proceedings in another court against the same defendant for the same object arising out of the same cause of action.
Lis mota /lis móta/. A controversy moved or begun. By this term is meant a dispute which has arisen upon a point or question which afterwards forms the issue upon which legal proceedings are instituted. After such controversy has arisen (post litum motam), it is held, declarations as to pedigree, made by members of the family since deceased, are not admissible.

Lis pendens /lis péndenz/. A pending suit. Jurisdiction, power, or control which courts acquire over property in litigation pending action and until final judgment.

A common-law doctrine, now codified in many states so as to condition its effect on the filing of a notice, that binds a purchaser or encumbrancer of property to the results of any pending lawsuit which may affect the title to, any lien on, or possession of the property. Purpose of "lis pendens" is to notify prospective purchasers and encumbrancers that any interest acquired by them in property in litigation is subject to decision of court and it is simply a notice of pending litigation the effect thereof on the owner of property is constraining. Beefy King Intern., Inc., v. Veigle, C.A.Fla., 464 F.2d 1102, 1104.

Notice of lis pendens. A notice filed on public records for the purpose of warning all persons that the title to certain property is in litigation, and that they are in danger of being bound by an adverse judgment. The notice is for the purpose of preserving rights pending litigation. Mitchell v. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, 206 Ark. 253, 174 S.W.2d 671, 674. This is termed a "notice of pendency" in New York. CPLR § 6501.

List. A docket or calendar of cases ready for trial or argument, or of motions ready for hearing. Entering in an official list or schedule; as, to list property for taxation, to put into a list or catalogue, to register, to list a property with a real estate broker. Official registry of voters. See also Docket; Listing.

Listed. Included in a list; put on a list; e.g. on a list of taxable persons or property. See Listing.

Listed security. A security of a company that has met the registration requirements of the SEC and has been accepted for trading on a securities exchange, having complied with the rules of the stock exchange on which it is traded. Such requirements include submitting periodic financial reports and consenting to certain supervision. "Unlisted" securities are traded on the over-the-counter markets. See also Listing (Securities); Offering.

Dual listing. Listing of a security on more than one security exchange.

Listed security exchanges. Organized secondary security markets that operate at designated places of business. The New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) is an example of a listed security exchange.

Listers. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables.

Listing. Real estate. An agreement between an owner of real property and a real estate agent, whereby the agent agrees to attempt to secure a buyer or tenant for specific property at a certain price and terms in return for a fee or commission. The various types of real estate listings are as follows:

An open or general listing is the right to sell that may be given to more than one agent at a time. An exclusive agency listing is the right of one agent to be the only one other than the owner who may sell the property during a period of time. An exclusive authorization to sell listing is a written contract that gives one agent the sole right to sell the property during a time period. This means that even if the owner finds the buyer, the agent will get a commission. Multiple listing occurs when an agent with an exclusive listing shares information about the property sale with many members of a real estate association and shares the sale commission with an agent who finds the buyer. A net listing is an arrangement in which the seller sets a minimum price he or she will take for the property and the agent’s commission is the amount the property sells for over that minimum selling price. Nonexclusive listing exists when the real estate broker has an exclusive listing as opposed to other agents, but the owner may sell the property without using an agent, and not be liable to pay a commission. Also called an agency agreement. An open listing obligates a seller to pay a commission when a specified broker makes a sale, but which reserves the right of the seller to sell his own property without paying a commission. Such listings may be given to any number of brokers on the same property.

See also Brokerage listing; Multiple listing; Open listing. Securities. In securities, the contract between a firm and a stock exchange covering the trading of that firm’s securities on the stock exchange. See also Listed security; Offering.

Taxation. "Listing property for taxation" is the making of a schedule or inventory of such property, whereby owner makes statement of property in response to assessor’s inquiries. Templing v. Bennett, 156 Kan. 68, 131 P.2d 904, 907. The word listing ordinarily implies an official listing of the persons and property to be taxed, and a valuation of the property of each person as a basis of apportionment.

Listing agent. The broker’s representative who obtains a listing agreement with the seller, as opposed to the selling agent who may represent another broker.

List of creditors. Documentation in the form of a list with names and addresses and amounts owed to creditors, required as a schedule in bankruptcy proceedings.

List price. The published or advertised price of goods which may change after negotiation and be reduced by a discount or rebate for prompt payment or volume purchase.

Litem denunciare /láytam donánsiyér/y/. Lat. In the civil law, to cast the burden of a suit upon another; particularly used with reference to a purchaser of property who, being sued in respect to it by a third person, gives notice to his vendor and demands his aid in its defense.

Litēm suam facere /līytaim s(y)u̯wam fəssary/. Lat. To make a suit his own. Where a judex, from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties, he was said litēm suam facere.

Līte pendente /līyti pendently/. Lat. Pending the suit.

Lītera /lītəry/. Lat. A letter. The letter of a law, as distinguished from its spirit. See Letter.

Līteracy. Term as generally defined requires both ability to read and ability to write a language. Castro v. State, 2 C.3d 223, 85 Cal.Rptr. 20, 21, 466 P.2d 244.

Līteracy test. Test required in certain states as a precondition to right to vote. Such tests are unconstitutional if invidiously discriminatory. Lassiter v. Northampton Election Bd., 360 U.S. 45, 79 S.Ct. 985, 3 L.Ed.2d 1072. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 suspended such tests in states where less than half the adult population were registered or had voted in the previous election.

Līterē /lītəri/. Letters. A term applied in old English law to various instruments in writing, public and private.

Līterē dimissoriae /lītəri diməsəriyəy/. Dimissory letters (q.v.).

Līterē mortuae /lītəri mərtyuyiỳ/. Dead letters; fulfilling words of a statute.

Līterē patentes /lītəri potəniytəy/. Letters patent; literally, open letters.

Līterē patentes regis non erunt vacuae /lītəri potəntiytəy riyor nən ərant vəkuywiỳ/. The king's letters patent shall not be void.

Līterē procuratoriae /lītəri prəkyərətoriəyəy/. In old English law, letters procuratory; letters of procurement; letters of attorney.

Līterē recognitionis /lītəri rəkəgnisiyəyənəs/. In maritime law, a bill of lading.

Līterē scriptae manent /lītəri skriptiəi mənənt/. Written words last.

Līterē sigillatae /lītəri sɨjlədyiỳə/. In old English law, sealed letters. The return of a sheriff was so called.

Līteral /lītarəl/. According to language; following expression in words. A literal construction of a document adheres closely to its words, without making differences for extrinsic circumstances; a literal performance of a condition is one which complies exactly with its terms.

Līteral construction. The interpretation of a document according to its words alone without any consideration of the intent of the parties who drafted or signed it beyond the fact that they used such language.

Līteral contract. In Roman law, a species of written contract, in which the formal act by which an obligation was superinduced on the convention was an entry of the sum due, where it should be specifically ascertained, on the debit side of a ledger. A contract, the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration.

Līteral proof. In the civil law, written evidence.

Līterary /lītəriəərəy/. Pertaining to literature; connected with authors and the study or use of books and writings.

Līterary composition. An original result of mental production, developed in a series of written or printed words, arranged for an intelligent purpose, in an orderly succession of expressive combinations. See also Literary work.

Līterary property. The right which entitles an author and his assigns to all the use and profit of his composition, to which no independent right is, through any act or omission on his or their part, vested in another person. The exclusive right of owner to possess, use and dispose of intellectual productions. The term denotes the corporal property in which an intellectual production is embodied; and it may consist of letters, lectures, sermons or addresses. Carpenter Foundation v. Oakes, 26 Cal.App.3d 784, 103 Cal.Rptr. 368, 375. See also Copyright; Literary work.

Līterary work. Under Copyright Act, "literary works" are works, other than audiovisual works, expressed in words, numbers, or other verbal or numerical symbols or indicia, regardless of the nature of the material objects, such as books, periodicals, manuscripts, phonorecords, film, tapes, disks, or cards in which they are embodied. 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Līterate. A person is literate if he can read and write a language. Knowledgable and educated.

Lītēratura /lītəritəyθ(y)uro/. "Ad literaturam ponere" means to put children to school. This liberty was anciently denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord's consent. The prohibition against the education of sons arose from the fear that the son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father.

Līteris obligatio /lītəris əbləgyəsh(y)əwə/. In Roman law, the contract of nomen, which was constituted by writing (scriptūrā). It was of two kinds, viz.: (1) A re in personam, when a transaction was transferred from the daybook (adversaria) into the ledger (codex) in the form of a debt under the name or heading of the purchaser or debtor (nomen); and (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen or heading was transferred in the usual course of novatio from that nomen to another and substituted nomen. By reason of this transferring, these obligations were called "nomina transcripta." No money was, in fact, paid to constitute the contract. If ever money was paid, then the nomen was arcarium (i.e., a real contract, re contractus), and not a nomen proprium.
Litigant. A party to a lawsuit (i.e. plaintiff or defendant); one engaged in litigation; usually spoken of active parties, not of nominal ones.

Litigare /litigéry/. Lat. To litigate; to carry on a suit (litem agere), either as plaintiff or defendant; to claim or dispute by action; to test or try the validity of a claim by action.

Litigate /litageyt/. To dispute or contend in form of law; to settle a dispute or seek relief in a court of law; to carry on a lawsuit. To bring into or engage in litigation; the act of carrying on a suit in a law court; a judicial contest; hence, any controversy that must be decided upon evidence in a court of law. To make the subject of a lawsuit; to contest in law; to prosecute or defend by pleadings, evidence, and debate in a court. Valley Exp., Inc. v. U.S., D.C.Wis., 264 F.Supp. 1006, 1009. See also Adjudge; Adjudication.

Litigation /litigéshyan/. A lawsuit. Legal action, including all proceedings therein. Contest in a court of law for the purpose of enforcing a right or seeking a remedy. A judicial contest, a judicial controversy, a suit at law.

Litigious /latiğas/. That which is the subject of a lawsuit or action; that which is contested in a court of law. In another sense, "litigious" signifies fond of litigation; prone to engage in suits.

Litigious right /latiğos ráyt/. In the civil law, a right which cannot be exercised without undergoing a lawsuit. Civil Code La. art. 3556, par. 18.

A right, to be considered "litigious" under Louisiana law, must be in litigation at time of the sale thereof, and ceases to be litigious if at time of the sale judgment has become final. Saucier v. Crichton, C.C.A.La., 147 P.2d 430, 435.

Litis aestimatio /laytas èstâméshiyow/. Lat. The measure of damages.

Litis contestatio /laytas kōntéståshiyow/. Lat. Civil and Canon Law. Contestation of suit; the process of contesting a suit by the opposing statements of the respective parties; the process of coming to an issue; the attainment of an issue; the issue itself.

Ecclesiastical Courts. The general answer made by the defendant, in which he denied the matter charged against him in the libel.

Litis denunciatio /laytas dànñsiyéshiyow/. Lat. In old civil law, the process by which a purchaser of property, who is sued for its possession or recovery by a third person, falls back upon his vendor's covenant of warranty, by giving the latter notice of the action and demanding his aid in defending it.

Litis dominium /laytas damñniyam/. Lat. In old civil law, ownership, control, or direction of a suit. A fiction of law by which the employment of an attorney or proctor (procurator) in a suit was authorized or justified, he being supposed to become, by the appointment of his principal (dominus) or client, the dominus litis.

Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, sive in rem, sive in personam sit /laytas nówmn ómnam ākšhiyómn sagnifika, sávyi in rém, sávyi in parsównam sit/. A lawsuit signifies every action, whether it be in rem or in personam.

Litispendence /laytaspēándans/. An obsolete term for the time during which a lawsuit is going on.

Litre /lytár/. Fr. A measure of capacity in the metric system, being a cubic decimetre, equal to 61.022 cubic inches, or 2.113 American pints, or 1.76 English pints.

Littering. Littering is dumping, throwing, placing, depositing or leaving, or causing to be dumped, thrown, deposited or left any refuse of any kind or any object or substance which tends to pollute, mar or deface, into, upon or about: (a) Any public street, highway, alley, road, right-of-way, park or other public place, or any lake, stream, watercourse, or other body of water, except by direction of some public officer or employee authorized by law to direct or permit such acts; or (b) Any private property without the consent of the owner or occupant of such property.

Littoral land. Land bordering ocean, sea, or lake.

Littoral rights. Rights concerning properties abutting an ocean, sea or lake rather than a river or stream (riparian). Littoral rights are usually concerned with the use and enjoyment of the shore. See Water rights (Water rights).

Litura /lir(y)ura/. Lat. In the civil law, an obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument.

Litus /laytas/. In civil law, the bank of a stream or shore of the sea; the coast.

In old European law, a kind of servant; one who surrendered himself into another's power.

Litus est quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit /laytas est kwóskwi mákmsas fláktas éy márøy parviyñat/. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached.

Litus maris /laytas márás/. The sea-shore.

Live, adj. Having or possessing life. See also Alive; Life.

Live, v. To live in a place, is to reside there, to abide there, to occupy as one's home. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626. See also Domicile; Living; Residence.

Live and cohabit together as husband and wife. As applied to common-law marriages, means a living together, claiming to be married, in the relationship of husband and wife. Drummond v. Benson, Tex.Civ.App., 133 S.W.2d 154, 159.

Livelihood. Means of support or subsistence.

Livelode. Maintenance; support.

Livery /lir(v)eriy/. In old English law, delivery of possession of their lands to the king's tenants in capite or tenants by knight's service. A writ which could be sued out by a ward in chivalry, on reaching his majority, to obtain delivery of the possession of his lands out of the hands of the guardian.

Act of delivering legal possession of property. See Livery of seisin.

A particular dress or garb appropriate or peculiar to certain persons, as the members of a guild, or, more particularly, the servants of a nobleman or gentleman.

The privilege of a particular guild or company of persons, the members thereof being called "livery-men."

A contract of hiring out of work-beasts, particularly horses, to the use of the hirer. It is commonly used in the compound, "livery-stable." Feeding, stabling, and care of horses for pay. Rental of vehicles, boats, etc. Word "livery" as used in automobile policy excluding coverage for automobile while being used as a livery conveyance means the hiring out of horses and carriages or a concern offering vehicles of various kinds for rent.

Gagnard v. Thibodeaux, La.App., 336 So.2d 1069, 1070.

Livery conveyance. A vehicle used indiscriminately in conveying the public, without limitation to certain persons or particular occasions or without being governed by special terms. Elliott v. Behner, 150 Kan. 876, 96 P.2d 852, 857.

Livery in chivalry. In feudal law, the delivery of the lands of a ward in chivalry out of the guardian’s hands, upon the heir’s attaining the requisite age,—twenty-one for males, sixteen for females. 2 Bl.Comm. 68.

Livery office. An office appointed for the delivery of lands.

Livery of seisin /liv(ə)riˈəv siyzən/. The appropriate ceremony, at common law, for transferring the corporal possession of lands or tenements by a grantor to his grantee. It was livery in deed where the parties went together upon the land, and there a twig, clod, key, or other symbol was delivered in the name of the whole. Livery in law was where the same ceremony was performed, not upon the land itself, but in sight of it. 2 Bl.Comm. 315, 316.

Living in being. As used in rule against perpetuities, means any lives in being at any time future interest is created, regardless of personal interest therein.

Livestock insurance. See Insurance.

Live storage. As applied to storage of automobiles in garages, "dead storage" is where cars not in use are deposited or put away, sometimes for the season, and "live storage" is the storage of cars in active daily use. Hogan v. O’Brien, 123 Misc. 865, 206 N.Y.S. 831, 832, affirmed 212 App.Div. 193, 208 N.Y.S. 477. The extent of responsibility of a garage keeper for cars put in his garage sometimes depends on whether they are in "dead storage" or "live storage."

Living. Existing, surviving, or continuing in operation. Also means to abide, to dwell, to reside and literally signifies the pecuniary resources by means of which one exists. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626. See also Alive; Domicile; Life; Residence; Viable.

Living apart. To live in a separate abode. McDaniel v. McDaniel, 292 Ky. 56, 165 S.W.2d 966, 967. See also Living separate and apart.

Living at time of another’s death. Remaining in life after such other person’s death (e.g. surviving spouse). Sabit v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 184 Md. 24, 40 A.2d 231, 238. See Survivor.

Living in open and notorious adultery. To constitute, parties must dwell together openly and notoriously as if conjugal relation existed between them. People v. Potter, 319 Ill.App. 409, 49 N.E.2d 307, 309. The parties must reside together in face of society as if conjugal relations existed between them, and fact of their so living and that they are not husband and wife must be known in community in which they reside. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267.

Living issue. Living children.

Living separate and apart. Exists where the spouses have come to a parting of the ways and have no present intention of resuming marital relations and taking up life together under the same roof, not where they are residing temporarily in different places for economic or social reasons. Woodall v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 105 F.2d 474, 477. This is a no-fault ground for divorce in many states when the spouses have lived apart for the statutorily prescribed period.

Living together. As respects court’s right to allow suit money to wife in divorce action, means dwelling together in same house, eating at same table, the two parties holding themselves out to world and conducting themselves toward each other as husband and wife. Lipp v. Lipp, Mo.App., 117 S.W.2d 364-366.

Living trust. Trust which is operative during life of settlor; an active or inter vivos trust.

Living will. See Will.

Living with husband. Means to dwell, to reside, to make one’s abiding place or home with him, and may also mean to cohabit. Living together as husband and wife in ordinary acceptance of words in common understanding; maintaining a home and living together in same household or actually cohabiting under conditions which would be regarded as constituting a family relation. McPadden v. Morris, 126 Conn. 654, 13 A.2d 679, 680.

L.J. An abbreviation for "Law Judge;" also for "Law Journal."
LL. The reduplicated form of the abbreviation "L." for "law," used as a plural. It is generally used in citing old collections of statute law; as "LL. Hen. I."

LL. (Also L.Lat.) and L.F. (also L.Fr.) are used as abbreviations of the terms "Law Latin" and "Law French."

LL.B., LL.M., and LL.D. Abbreviations used to denote, respectively, the three academic degrees in law,—bachelor, master, and doctor of laws; the latter commonly being an honorary degree. See also J.D.

Lloyd's association. See Lloyd's underwriters.

Lloyd's bonds. The name of a class of evidences of debt, used in England; being acknowledgments, by a borrowing company made under its seal, of a debt incurred and actually due by the company to a contractor or other person for work done, goods supplied, or otherwise, as the case may be, with a covenant for payment of the principal and interest at a future time, as distinct from a security for a present advance; thus its issuance does not depend on the borrowing power of the company.

Lloyd's insurance. Under this type of insurance, insurers are such as individuals and not as a corporate insurance company and the liability for loss is several and not joint. Jones v. Hollywood Style Shop, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 167. The "Lloyd's Plan," contemplates individual liability of the several underwriters. Harris v. Prince, 132 Tex. 231, 121 S.W.2d 983, 986. See also Lloyd's of London; Lloyd's underwriters; London Lloyds.

Lloyd's of London. An association in the city of London, originally for the transaction of marine insurance, the members of which underwrite one another's policies. An insurance mart in London at which individual underwriters gather to quote rates and write insurance on the widest variety of risks. See also London Lloyds.

Lloyd's underwriters. Any aggregation of individuals, who under a common name engage in the business of insurance for profit through an attorney-in-fact having authority to obligate the underwriters severally, within such limits as may be lawfully specified in the power of attorney, on contracts of insurance made or issued by such attorney-in-fact, in the name of such aggregation of individuals, to and with any person or persons insured.

Load line. The depth to which a ship will sink in salt water when loaded. A design, painted on each side of vessel, intended as a guide to determine safe loading depth under various conditions. The Indien, C.C.A.Cal., 71 F.2d 752, 759.

Loadmanship. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way.

Loan. To spend time in idleness, to lounge or loiter about or along. City of Olathe v. Leuck, 156 Kan. 637, 135 P.2d 549, 551. See also Malinge.

Loan. A lending. Delivery by one party to and receipt by another party of sum of money upon agreement, express or implied, to repay it with or without interest. Boerner v. Colwell Co., 21 Cal.3d 37, 145 Cal.Rptr. 380, 384, 577 P.2d 200. Anything furnished for temporary use to a person at his request, on condition that it shall be returned, or its equivalent in kind, with or without compensation for its use. Liberty Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co., 58 Misc.2d 443, 295 N.Y. S.2d 983, 986.

Bailment without reward, consisting of the delivery of an article by the owner to another person, to be used by the latter gratuitously, and returned either in specie or in kind. A borrowing of money or other personal property by a person who promises to return it.

"Loan" includes: (1) the creation of debt by the lender's payment of or agreement to pay money to the debtor or to a third party for the account of the debtor; (2) the creation of debt by a credit to an account with the lender upon which the debtor is entitled to draw immediately; (3) the creation of debt pursuant to a lender credit card or similar arrangement; and (4) the forbearance of debt arising from a loan. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 3-106.

See also Conventional loan; Equity loan; Fixed rate loan; Morning loan; Participation loan. For term loan, see Term.

Amortized loan. One which calls for periodic payments which are applied first to interest and then to principal as provided by the terms of the note.

Bridge loan. Short term loan needed to cover down payment and costs associated with purchase or construction of new home pending sale of existing home. See Bridge loan; also Construction loan, below.

Call loan. One which is payable on demand or call by the lender.

Collateral loan. One which is secured by property or securities. See Secured loan.

Commercial loan. Generally a short term loan for 30 to 90 days given by financial institutions.
Commodity loan. One which is secured by a commodity such as cotton or wool in the form of a warehouse receipt or other negotiable instrument.

Consolidation loan. A borrowing in which the proceeds of the loan are used to pay off other individual loans and create a more manageable debt.

Construction loan. Short-term interim loan for financing cost of building construction. Payments are made periodically as work is completed with repayment usually made from permanent mortgage funds secured by completed structure. Also referred to as bridge loan, above.

Consumer loan. One which is made or extended to a natural person for family, household, personal or agricultural purposes and generally governed by truth-in-lending statutes and regulations.

Day loan. One made to a broker on a day to day basis to finance his daily transactions.

Demand loan. One on which the lender may make demand or call at any time for repayment. See also Call loan, above.

Equity loan. See that topic.

Installment loan. One which is repaid according to its terms over a period of time in installments.

Non-performing loan. An outstanding loan that is not being repaid, i.e. neither payments on interest or principal are being made.

Non-recourse loan. Loans made to farmers by a government organization in exchange for a particular commodity; e.g. wheat or corn. They are called nonrecourse because the government can never demand payment for their services have been loaned. Danek v. Meldrum Mfg. and Engineering Co., Inc., Minn., 252 N.W.2d 255, 258. In order for employee to be a "loaned servant", it is not essential that general employer relinquish full control over his employee, or that special employee be completely subservient to borrower. U. S. v. N. A. Degerstrom, Inc., C.A.Wash., 408 F.2d 1130, 1138.

Personal loan. One which is generally for a short period of time for personal as contrasted with commercial purposes. It may be secured or unsecured. See also Consumer loan, above.

Secured loan. One which is secured by property or securities. See also Collateral loan, above.

Short-term loan. One which runs for a period of less than a year and which is commonly evidenced by a note or other negotiable instrument.

Time loan. One which is made for a fixed period of time and which generally may not be repaid before the expiration of such time (without penalty) as distinguished from a call or demand loan.

Loan association. See Building and loan association.

Loan certificates. Certificates issued by a clearing-house to the associated banks to a specified percent. of the value of the collaterals deposited by the borrowing banks with the loan committee of the clearing-house. Documents issued by a borrower to evidence participation in a loan for an extended term; formerly used by municipalities. These have been replaced, in the main, by coupon bonds. See also Certificate of indebtedness.

Loan commitment. Commitment to borrower by lending institution that it will loan a specific amount at a certain rate on a particular piece of real estate. Such commitment is usually limited to a specified time period (e.g. four months), which is commonly based on the estimated time that it will take the borrower to construct or purchase the home contemplated by the loan. See also Mortgage commitment.

Loaned employee or servant. Loaned servant is an employee who is loaned or hired out to another employer for some specific service or particular transaction and who is under exclusive control of that employer who may then be held vicariously liable for acts of employee under ordinary principles of respondent superior. Kiefer Concrete, Inc. v. Hoffman, Colo., 562 P.2d 745, 746. Whether an employee should be regarded as a "loaned employee" in the service of a special employer, or whether he should be regarded as remaining in the service of his general employer, depends upon in whose work the employee was engaged at the time of injury. Owen v. St. Louis Spring Co., 175 Tenn. 543, 136 S.W.2d 498-500.

Loaned servant doctrine. Under the "loaned servant doctrine", when one lends his employee to another for a particular employment, employee, for anything done in that employment, must be dealt with as employee of one to whom he is lent. Blair v. Durham, C.C.A.Tenn., 134 F.2d 729, 732. This doctrine provides that if employer loans employee to another for performance of some special service, then that employee, with respect to that special service, may become employee of party to whom his services have been loaned. Danek v. Meldrum Mfg. and Engineering Co., Inc., Minn., 252 N.W.2d 255, 258. In order for employee to be a "loaned servant", it is not essential that general employer relinquish full control over his employee, or that special employee be completely subservient to borrower. U. S. v. N. A. Degerstrom, Inc., C.A.Wash., 408 F.2d 1130, 1138.

Loan for consumption. An agreement by which one person delivers to another a certain quantity of things which are consumed by the borrower, with the obligation to return as much of the same kind and quality. See also Loan for use.

Loan for exchange. A loan for exchange is a contract by which one delivers personal property to another; and the latter agrees to return to the lender a similar thing at a future time, without reward for its use. Cal.Civil Code § 1902.

Loan for use. The loan for use is an agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another, to use it according to its natural destination, or according to the agreement, under the obligation on the part of the borrower, to return it after he shall be done using it. Civ.Code La. art. 2893. A loan for use is a contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of personal property, and the latter agrees to return the same thing to him at a future time, without reward for its use. Slack v. Bryan, 299 Ky. 132, 184 S.W.2d 873, 876. Cal.Civil Code, § 1884. A loan for use is the gratuitous grant of an article to another for use, to be returned in specie, and may be either for a certain time or indefinitely, and at the will of the grantor.

Loan for use (called "commodatum" in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called "mutuum" in the civil law), in this: that the commodatum must be specifically returned; the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

Loan participation. Loan provided by a group of lenders to a single borrower, which spreads the default risk of the loan among all lenders in the group.

Loan ratio. The ratio, expressed as a percentage, of the amount of a loan to the value or selling price of real property. Usually, the higher the percentage, the greater the interest charged. Maximum percentages for banks, savings and loan, or government insured loans, is set by statute. See also Loan-to-value ratio.

Loansharking. Practice of lending money at excessive and usurious interest rates, with the threat or employment of extortionate means to enforce repayment of the loan. Such activities are termed "extortionate credit transactions" under Federal Criminal Code. 18 U.S.C.A. § 891 et seq.

Loan societies. In English law, a kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes.

Loan-to-value ratio. The percentage of purchase price to be financed with a mortgage. Common ratios are 80 and 90 percent. A down payment covers the rest of the purchase price.

Loan value. The maximum amount which can be safely lent on property or life insurance consistent with the lender's rights to protection in the event of the borrower's default.

Lobbying. All attempts including personal solicitation to induce legislators to vote in a certain way or to introduce legislation. It includes scrutiny of all pending bills which affect one's interest or the interests of one's clients, with a view towards influencing the passage or defeat of such legislation. Thiles v. County Board of Sarpy County, 189 Neb. 1, 200 N.W.2d 13, 18. Federal, and most state, statutes require that lobbyists be registered. See Lobbying acts.

Lobbying acts. Federal and state statutes governing conduct of lobbyists; e.g. Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act requires that lobbyists register with House and Senate and file quarterly reports of amount and source of payments received for lobbying activities. See 12 U.S.C.A. § 261 et seq.

Lobbyist. One who makes it a business to procure the passage or defeat of bills pending before a legislative body. See also Lobbying; Lobbying acts.

L‘obligation sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet /lówbli-gasyówn són kózw, úw sór (y)úwn fóws kózw, úw sór kózw lilišyt na pyúwt øwvár owkyúwn sáféy/. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect.

Local. Relating to place, expressive of place; belonging or confined to a particular place. Distinguished from "general," "personal," "widespread" and "transitory." As to local Allegiance; Customs; Government; Tax and Venue, see those titles.

Local act. See Local law.

Local actions. Term embraces all actions in which the subject or thing sought to be recovered is in its nature local. Action which must be brought in jurisdiction of act or subject matter, as opposed to transitory action. Actions are "local" when the transactions on which they are based could not occur except in some particular place. One wherein all principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature; as where possession of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste affecting land, because in such case the cause of action relates to some particular locality, which usually also constitutes the venue of the action. A "transitory action" may be brought in any court of general jurisdiction in any district wherein defendant can be found and served with process, whereas in a "local action" the plaintiff must bring suit in the court designated, if not statutorily required to do otherwise. Moreland v. Rucker Pharmacal Co., D.C.La., 59 F.R.D. 537, 540. Compare Transitory action.

Local affairs. The "local affairs" over which regulation, management and control are delegated to cities are affairs within the jurisdiction of the city by the law of its being. Robia Holding Corporation v. Walker, 136 Misc. 358, 239 N.Y.S. 659, 662.

Local agent. An agent at a given place or within a definite district. Sharp & Dohme v. Waybourne, Tex. Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 413. An agent may be a general agent as to his powers, although he represents the company only in a particular locality or within a limited territory, and in the latter aspect is called a "local agent". Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Jenkins, 290 Ky. 802, 162 S.W.2d 791, 795. An agent placed in charge of corporation's local business for purpose of winding it up. One appointed to act as the representative of a corporation and transact its business generally (or business of a particular character) at a given place or within a defined district. One who represents corporation in promotion of business for which it was incorporated, in county in which suit is filed. National Hardware & Stove Co. v. Walters, Tex.Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 146. One who stands in shoes of corporation in relation to particular matters committed to his care and represents corporation in its business in either a general or limited capacity. A "local agent" to receive and collect money means an agent residing either permanently or temporarily within the state for purpose of his agency. McDonald Service Co. v. Peoples Nat. Bank of Rock Hill, S.C., 218 N.C. 533, 11 S.E.2d 556, 558. By statute or court rule in most states, service of process on a foreign corporation may be made on a local agent of such corporation. See Fed.R.Civil P. 4; New York C.P.L.R. §§ 308, 318.

Local and special legislation. Term applies to special or particular places or special and particular person, and is distinguished from general statute in operation and relation to classes of persons or subjects. Madison County Board of Education v. Smith, 250 Ky. 455, 63 S.W.2d 620.

Local assessment. A charge in the nature of tax, levied to pay the whole or part of the cost of local improvements (e.g., sewers, sidewalks) and assessed upon the various parcels of property specially benefited thereby. See also Local improvement assessment.

Local chattel. A thing is local that is fixed to the freehold.

Local concern. An activity is of “local concern” if it is exercised by the municipality in its proprietary capacity. Luhrs v. City of Phoenix, 52 Ariz. 438, 83 P.2d 283, 285.

Local courts. Courts whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular territory or district. The expression usually signifies the courts of the state, in opposition to the United States courts, or to municipal or county courts in contrast to courts with state-wide jurisdiction.

Local government. City, county, or other governing body at a level smaller than a state. Local government has the greatest control over real property, zoning, and other local matters.

Local improvement. A public improvement made in a particular locality, by which the real property adjoining or near such locality is specially benefited. Floyd v. Parker Water & Sewer Sub-District, 203 S.C. 276, 17 S.E.2d 223, 227.

Local improvement assessment. A charge placed upon lands within a given district to pay the benefits which the respective parcels of land derive from the improvement. Wells v. Union Oil Co. of California, 25 Cal. App.2d 165, 76 P.2d 696, 697. An assessment for construction of improvement; e.g. sewers. University Nat. Co. v. Grays Harbor County, 12 Wash.2d 549, 122 P.2d 501, 502.

Locality of a lawsuit. Place where judicial authority may be exercised. Neirbo Co. v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 308 U.S. 165, 60 S.Ct. 153, 154, 84 L.Ed. 167. See also Venue.

Local law. A local law is one which relates or operates over a particular locality instead of over the whole territory of the state. Ulrich v. Beatty, 139 Ind.App. 174, 216 N.E.2d 737, 746. One which relates to particular persons or things or to particular persons or things of a class or which operates on or over a portion of a class instead of all of the class. In re Annexation of Reno Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation to Independent School Dist. No. 34, Canadian County, Okl., 180 Okl. 274, 69 P.2d 659, 662.

The law of a particular jurisdiction as contrasted with the law of a foreign state. Term is used in conflicts to describe the power of the forum to determine questions of procedure while acknowledging the law of the situs to govern substantive questions. As used in the Restatement of this subject, the “local law” of a state is the body of standards, principles and rules, exclusive of its rules of conflict of laws, which the courts of that state apply in the decision of controversies brought before them. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 4(1).

Local option. An option of self-determination available to a municipality or other governmental unit to determine a particular course of action without specific approval from state officials. Local option is often used in local elections to determine whether the selling and consumption of alcoholic beverages will be permitted in local areas. Such is also used in many states to permit home rule elections for determining the structures of local governmental units. See also Home rule.

Local rules. Those promulgated in view of local physical conditions in the state, the character of the people, their peculiar customs, usages, and beliefs. Term may also refer to court rules adopted by individual U.S. district courts which supplement Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed.R.Civil P. 83.

Local statute. See Local law.

Local usage. A practice or method of dealing regularly observed in a particular place and such that it may be considered by the court under certain circumstances in interpreting a document. See U.C.C. § 1-205(2), (3). See also Custom and usage.

Locare /lok'ar/. To let for hire; to deliver or bail a thing for a certain reward or compensation.

Locarium /lok'ar-i-am/. In old European law, the price of letting; money paid for the hire of a thing; rent.

Locataire /lok-ta-tir/. In French law, a lessee, tenant, or renter.

Locatarius /lok-ta-t'r/. Lat. A depositee.

Locate. To find. To discover by survey. Guardian Trust Co. of Houston, Tex. v. Jefferson Lake Oil Co., C.C.A.La., 85 F.2d 465, 467. Also means to ascertain place in which something belongs. To ascertain and fix the position of something, the place of which was before uncertain or not manifest, as to locate the calls in a deed. To decide upon the place or direction to be occupied by something not yet in being, as to locate a road. To define location or limits, Delaware, L. & W. R.
LOCATE

Co. v. Chiara, C.C.A.N.J., 95 F.2d 663, 668; or designate site or place, Union Pac. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 53 Cal.App.2d 825, 128 P.2d 408, 410. To settle or become situated or established.

Located. Having a physical presence or existence in a place.

Locatio /lówkéəsh(i)yəw/. Lat. In the civil law, letting for hire.

Locatio-conductio /lówkéəsh(i)yəw-kændəksh(i)yəw/. In the civil law a compound word used to denote the contract of bailment for hire, expressing the action of both parties, viz., a letting by the one and a hiring by the other.

Locatio custodiae /lówkéəsh(i)yəw kástəwdiəyə/. A letting to keep; a bailment or deposit of goods for hire. According to the classification of bailments at civil law, a "locatio custodiae" is the hiring of care and services to be bestowed on the thing delivered.

Locational /lówkéətəl/. Having a site or place.

Location. Site or place where something is or may be located. Act of locating. See also Situs.

Mining law. The act of appropriating a mining claim (parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock) according to certain established rules. It usually consists in placing on the ground, in a conspicuous position, a notice setting forth the name of the locator, the fact that it is thus taken or located, with the requisite description of the extent and boundaries of the parcel. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 649, 26 L.Ed. 875; Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 40 S.Ct. 321, 326, 64 L.Ed. 567. In a secondary sense, the mining claim covered by a single act of appropriation or location. The act or series of acts whereby the boundaries of the claim are marked, etc., but it confers no right in the absence of discovery, both being essential to a valid claim. United States v. Mobley, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 407, 410. See also Mining claim; Mining location.

Real property. The designation of the boundaries of a particular piece of land, either upon record or on the land itself. The finding, surveying and marking out the bounds of a particular tract of land or mining claims. See Locative calls.

Locatio operis /lówkéəsh(i)yəw ə(w)pərəs/. In the civil law, the contract of hiring work, i.e., labor and services. It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, which he who gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it.

Locatio operis faciendi /lówkéəsh(i)yəw ə(w)pərəs fəshiivəndəi/. A letting out of work to be done; a bailment of a thing for the purpose of having some work and labor or care and pains bestowed on it for pecuniary recompense.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarem /lówkéəsh(i)yəw ə(w)pərəs mɜr(ˈk)ɪəm vɨ(ˈh)əndərəm/. A letting of work to be done in the carrying of goods; a contract of bailment by which goods are delivered to a person to carry for hire.

Locatio rei /lówkéəsh(i)yəw ˈrɪəj/. A letting of a thing to hire. The bailment or letting of a thing to be used by the bailee for a compensation to be paid by him.

Locative calls. In a deed, patent, or other instrument containing a description of land, locative calls are specific calls, descriptions, or marks of location, referring to landmarks, physical objects, or other points by which the land can be exactly located and identified.

In harmonizing conflicting calls in a deed or survey of public lands, courts will ascertain which calls are locative and which are merely directory, and conform the lines to the locative calls; "directory calls" being those which merely direct the neighborhood where the different calls may be found, whereas "locative calls" are those which serve to fix boundaries.

Locator /lówkéətər/ /laksətər/. One who locates land, or sets the boundaries of a mining claim, or intends or is entitled to locate. See Finder; Location.

Locaturn /laksətəm/. A hiring. See Bailment.

Locked in. A predicament of one who has profits on securities which he owns but which he is unwilling to sell because of the liability for capital gains. A fixed rate of return on an investment or savings instrument, or an interest rate on a loan, rate is assured for a specified period of time.

Lockout. Employer's withholding of work from employees in order to gain concession from them; it is employer's counterpart of employee's strike. Smith v. Michigan Employment Sec. Commission, 410 Mich. 231, 301 N.W.2d 285, 291. Refusal by employer to furnish available work to its regular employees, whether refusal is motivated by employer's desire to protect itself against economic injury, by its desire to protect itself at bargaining table, or by both. Laclede Gas Co. v. N.L.R.B., 421 F.2d 610, 615.

Lockup. A place of detention in a police station, court or other facility used for persons awaiting trial.

In corporate law, a slang term that refers to the setting aside of securities for purchase by friendly interests in order to defeat or make more difficult a takeover attempt. A lockup option is a takeover defensive measure permitting a friendly suitor to purchase divisions of a corporation for a set price when any person or group acquires a certain percentage of corporation's shares. To be legal, such agreement must advance or stimulate the bidding process, so as to best serve the interests of the shareholders through encouraged competition. MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings, Inc. v. Revlon, Inc., Del. Ch., 501 A.2d 1239, 1250. See also Poison pill; Porcupine provisions; White knight.
Lococession. The act of giving place.

Loco parentis /lówkas  pórentás/. See in loco parentis.

Locum tenens /lówkas týnyanz/"ten"/. Lat. Holding the place, a deputy, substitute, lieutenant, or representative.

Locuples /lókyaplyyz/. Lat. In the civil law, able to respond in an action; good for the amount which the plaintiff might recover.

Locus /lówkas/. A place; the place where a thing is done.

Locus contractus /lówkas kantráktas/. The place of a contract; the place where a contract is made. The place where the last act is performed which makes an agreement a binding contract. Grain Dealers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Van Buskirk, 241 Md. 58, 215 A.2d 467, 471.

Locus contractus regit actum /lówkas kantráktas ríyját áktam/. The place of the contract governs the act.

Locus in quo /lówkas in kwów/. The place in which.

Locus criminis /lówkas krímanas/. The locality of a crime; the place where a crime was committed.

Locus delicti /lówkas daliktaý/. The place of the offense; the place where an offense was committed. State where last event necessary to make actor liable occurs. Hunter v. Derby Foods, C.C.A.N.Y., 110 F.2d 970, 972.

Locus partitus /lówkas partáytas/. In old English law, a place divided. A division made between two towns or counties to make out in which the land or place in question lies.

Locus penitentiae /lówkas pénsténshiyiy/. A place for repentance; an opportunity for changing one's mind; an opportunity to undo what one has done; a chance to withdraw from a contemplated bargain or contract before it results in a definite contractual liability; a right to withdraw from an incompletely executed transaction. Morris v. Johnson, 219 Ga. 81, 132 S.E.2d 45, 51. Also, used of a chance afforded to a person, by the circumstances, of relinquishing the intention which he has formed to commit a crime, before the perpetration thereof.

Locus pro solutione redivius aut pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandum /lówkas prów saleyúshiyióni rédatas őt pokúwúniyi sakándom kendishiyównam dámiss(h)-iýównas őt oblagéshiyównás és ét striktly obosvándas/. The place for the payment of rent or money, according to the condition of a lease or bond, is to be strictly observed.

Locus publicus /lówkas póblakas/. In the public law, a public place.

Locus regit actum /lówkas ríyját áktam/. In private international law, the rule that, when a legal transaction complies with the formalities required by the law of the country where it is done, it is also valid in the country where it is to be given effect, although by the law of that country other formalities are required.

Locus situs /lówkas réiy iyá sáýtıy/"sítsy". The place where a thing is situated. In proceedings in rem, or the real actions of the civil law, the proper forum is the locus rei situs.

Locus standi /lówkas stánday/"stán/díy/. A place of standing; standing in court. A right of appearance in a court of justice, or before a legislative body, on a given question.

Lodemanage /lówdmányay/. The hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another.

Lodestar Rule. In determining amount of statutorily authorized attorneys' fees, "lodestar" is equal to number of hours reasonably expended multiplied by prevailing hourly rate in community for similar work and is then adjusted to reflect other factors such as contingent nature of suit and quality of representation. Cooper Liquor, Inc. v. Adolph Coors Co., C.A.Tex., 684 F.2d 1087, 1092. See also Equal Access to Justice Act; Fee.

Lodger has been defined as a tenant of part of another's house, one who for time being has his home at his lodging place, one who has leave to inhabit another man's house, one who inhabits portion of a house of which another has general possession and custody, one who lives at board or in a hired room or who has a bed in another's house, one who lives in a hired room or rooms in house of another, one who occupies hired apartments in another's house. The term is also defined as a person who lives and sleeps in a place, a person whose occupancy is a part of a house and subordinate to and in some degree under the control of a landlord or his representative. The term is used to indicate a personal relationship of some one lodging somewhere with somebody. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 955, 955, 959.

Lodging house. A house where lodgings are let; houses containing furnished apartments which are let out by the week or by the month, without meals, or with limited meals. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 955.

Lodging place. A place of rest for a night or a residence for a time; a temporary habitation.
Loiter /löytsər/. To be dilatory; to be slow in movement; a mutation or alienation fine.

Log rolling. A legislative practice of embracing in one statute or constitutional amendment more than one proposition, inducing voters to vote for all, notwithstanding they might not have voted for all if amendments or statutes had been submitted separately.

Log book. A ship's or aircraft's journal containing a detailed account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage.

Logia /loj(i)yə/. A small house, lodge, or cottage.

Logical relevancy. Existence of such a relationship in logic between the fact of which evidence is offered and a fact in issue that the existence of the former renders probable or improbable the existence of the latter.

Logium /lojium/. In old records, a lodge, hovel, or outhouse.

Logographus /lōgagrafəs/. In Roman law, a public clerk, register, or book-keeper; one who wrote or kept books of accounts.

Log rolling. A legislative practice of embracing in one bill several distinct matters, none of which, perhaps, could singly obtain the assent of the legislature, and then procuring its passage by a combination of the minorities in favor of each of the measures into a majority that will adopt them all.

Practice of including in one statute or constitutional amendment more than one proposition, inducing voters to vote for all, notwithstanding they might not have voted for all if amendments or statutes had been submitted separately.

Loiter /löytaar/. To be dilatory; to be slow in movement; to stand around or move slowly about; to stand idly around; to lag behind; to linger or spend time idly. Traditionally includes acts constituting vagrancy and as such, many ordinances have been struck as unconstitutionally vague. See Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156, 92 S.Ct. 839, 31 L.Ed.2d 119. See also Vagrancy.

Term as used in statute prohibiting loitering or prowling upon the private property of another, means to be slow in moving, to delay, to linger, to saunter, to lag behind. State ex rel. Purcell v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 111 Ariz. 582, 535 P.2d 1299, 1301.

Lombardian law. See Lex longobardorum.

Lombards. A name given to the merchants of Italy, numbers of whom, during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, were established as merchants and bankers in the principal cities of Europe.

London Lloyds. Voluntary association of merchants, shipowners, underwriters, and brokers, which writes no policies, but, when broker for one wishing insurance posts particulars of risk, underwriting members wishing to so subscribe name and share of total that each wishes to take, and policy is issued when total is reached containing names of underwriters bound thereby and name of attorney in fact who handles insurance affairs of the group. See Lloyd's of London.

Long. In various compound legal terms (see infra) this word carries a meaning not essentially different from its signification in the vernacular.

Long account. An account involving numerous separate items or charges, on one side or both, or the statement of various complex transactions, such as a court of equity will refer to a master, referee or commissioner.

Longa patientia trahitur ad consensum /lōnga pāshiyēnsh(y)ə trēkhātər ēd kānsēnson/. Long suffering is construed as consent.

Longa possessio est pacis jus /lōnga pāzēsh(y)əw ēst pēysses jəs/. Long possession is the law of peace.

Longa possessio jus parit /lōnga pāzēsh(y)əw jəs pərət/. Long possession begets right.

Longa possessio parit jus possessidem, et tollit actionem vero domino /lōnga pāzēsh(y)əw pərət jəs pəshidīəndəj, ēt tōlt jēkšiōynəms viro dōmnəw/. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action.

Long arm statutes. Various state legislative acts which provide for personal jurisdiction, via substituted service of process, over persons or corporations which are non-residents of the state and which voluntarily go into the state, directly or by agent, or communicate with persons in the state, for limited purposes, in actions which concern claims relating to the performance or execution of those purposes, e.g., transacting business in the state, contracting to supply services or goods in the state, or selling goods outside the state when the seller knows that the goods will be used or consumed in the state. See International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95. E.g. in New York, as to a cause of action arising from any of the following acts, the court may exercise personal jurisdiction over any nondomiciliary, or his executor or administrator, who in person or through agent: (1) Transacts any business within state; (2) commits tortious act other than defamation within state; (3) commits tortious act, other than defamation, outside state causing injury to person or property within state, if such nondomiciliary... regularly does or solicits business, or engages in any other persistent course of conduct, or derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered within state; or (4) owns, uses, or possesses real property within state. N.Y. Consol. Laws, CPLR § 302. See also Mass. G.L. A. c. 223A. See also Minimum contacts; Service (Service of process).

Long parliament. The name usually given to the parliament which met in November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. This name is also given to the parliament which met in 1661, after the restoration of the monarchy, and was dissolved on the 30th of December, 1678. This latter parliament is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "long parliament of Charles II."

Long position. The status of one who owns securities which he holds in expectation of a rise in the market or for income as contrasted with one who goes in and out of the market on a short point spread.

In the language of the stock exchange, a broker or speculator is said to be "long" on stock, or as to a particular security, when he has in his possession or control an abundant supply of it, or a supply exceeding the amount which he has contracted to deliver, or, more particularly, when he has bought a supply of such stock or other security for future delivery, speculating on a considerable future advance in the market price. A trader is said to be "long" on the market when he takes the full price risk; i.e., gains if the market price goes up, and loses if it goes down. Valley Waste Mills v. Page, C.C.A.Ga., 115 F.2d 466, 467.

Long robe. A metaphorical expression designating the practice of profession of the law; as, in the phrase "gentlemen of the long robe."

Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. Federal Act (33 U.S.C.A. § 901 et seq.) designed to provide workers' compensation benefits to employees, other than seamen, or private employers any of whose employees work in maritime employment upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any adjoining pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by an employer in loading, unloading, repairing, or building a vessel). The principal employments subject to the Act are stevedoring and ship service operations. The Act is administered by the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs.

Longshoreman. A maritime laborer, such as a stevedore or loader, who works about wharves of a port. Duke v. Helena-Glendale Ferry Co., 203 Ark. 965, 159 S.W.2d 74, 77. Person who loads and unloads ships.

For federal compensation act covering seamen, see Jones Act.

Long term capital gain. See Capital (Capital gain).

Long term capital loss. See Capital (Capital loss).

Long term debt. Term generally refers to debt with a maturity date beyond one year.

Long term financing. A mortgage or deed of trust for a term of one year or more, as distinguished from construction, interim, or other short term loans.

Long ton. A measure of weight equivalent to 20 hundred-weight of 112 pounds each, or 2,240 pounds, as distinguished from the "short" ton of 2,000 pounds.

Longum tempus et longus usus qui excedit memoria hominum sufficit pro jure /longum tempus et longus usus qui excedit memoria hominum sufficit pro jure/. Long time and long use, exceeding the memory of men, suffices for right.

Look and listen. The requirement that a man shall "look and listen" before crossing street railroad track means only that he shall observe and estimate with reasonable accuracy his distance from the car and the speed of its oncoming, and then make calculation and comparison of the time it will take the car to come and the time it will take to cross the track. Kansas City Public Service Co. v. Knight, C.C.A. Kan., 116 F.2d 233, 234.

Lookout. The exercise of ordinary diligence requires that the driver of a motor vehicle be on the lookout for other travelers so that he may avoid placing himself or them in peril. As variously expressed, the rule requires that a motorist maintain a reasonable and proper lookout, which implies being watchful of the movements of the driver's own vehicle as well as of the movements of other traffic; a careful lookout; an efficient lookout; a vigilant watch ahead. A lookout must be made from the most effective place reasonably possible. The failure of a motorist to exercise ordinary care with respect to lookout, proximately resulting in injury or damage, may constitute negligence. Picquet v. Travelers Indem. Co., C.A.Wis., 283 F.2d 835. That watchfulness which prudent and reasonable person must maintain for his own safety and safety of others taking into consideration circumstances with which he is immediately concerned or confronted. Cobb v. Atkins, 239 Ark. 151, 388 S.W.2d 8, 11.

Generally, a "lookout" is a person, other than pilot, who has duty of observing sounds, lights, echoes and obstructions to navigation and he is generally stationed on the bow of the vessel. Clary Towing Co., Inc. v. Port Arthur Towing Co., D.C. Tex., 367 F.Supp. 6, 12.

See also Proper lookout.

Loophole. In taxation, a provision in the tax code by which a taxpayer may legally avoid or reduce his income taxes. For example, prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986, a tax shelter was an effective loophole in reducing an individual's taxes; however, with the change in the law, the advantages of such shelters have been substantially reduced.
Lord. A feudal superior or proprietor; one who granted

Loquela /lokwîyla/. Lat. A colloquy; talk. In old

Loquendum ut vulgus; sentiendum ut docti

Lord. A feudal superior or proprietor; one who granted a feudal estate in land to a tenant; one of whom a fee or estate is held.

A title of honor or nobility belonging properly to the degree of baron, but applied also to the whole peerage, as in the expression “the House of Lords.” 1 Bl.Comm. 396-400. See House (House of Lords).

Lord mayors. See Law.

Lord chief baron. The chief judge of the English court of exchequer, prior to the judicature acts.

Lord chief justice. See Justice.

Lord high chanceller. See Chancellor.

Lord high steward. In England, when a person was impeached, or when a peer was tried on indictment for treason or felony before the house of lords, one of the lords was appointed lord high steward, and acted as speaker pro tempore. The privilege of peerage in criminal proceedings was abolished in 1948.

Lord high treasurer. An officer formerly existing in England, who had the charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury.

Lord in gross. In feudal law, he who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. "Very lord" is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and "very tenant," he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant.

Lord keeper. Originally another name for the lord chancellor. After Henry II's reign they were sometimes divided, but now there cannot be a lord chancellor and lord keeper at the same time, for by St. 5 Eliz. c. 18, they are declared to be the same office.

Lord lieutenant. In English law, the viceroy of the crown in Ireland. The principal military officer of a county, originally appointed for the purpose of mustering the inhabitants for the defense of the country.

Lord mayor. The chief officer of the corporation of the city of London was formerly so called. The origin of the appellation of "lord," which the mayor of London enjoyed was attributed to the fourth charter of Edward III, which conferred on that officer the honor of having maces, the same as royalty, carried before him by the sergeants.

Lord mayor's court. In English law, this was a court of record, of law and equity, and was the chief court of justice within the corporation of London. Such was abolished by the Courts Act of 1971.

Lord of a manor. The grantee or owner of a manor.

Lord paramount. A term applied to the King of England as the chief feudal proprietor, the theory of the feudal system being that all lands in the realm were held mediately or immediately from him.

Lord's day. A name sometimes given to Sunday.

Lords justices of appeal. In English law, the title of the ordinary judges of the court of appeal, by Jud.Act 1877, § 4. Prior to the judicature acts, there were two "lords justices of appeal in chancery," to whom an appeal lay from a vice-chancellor, by 14 & 15 Vict., c. 83.

Lords of appeal. Those members of the house of lords of whom at least three must be present for the hearing and determination of appeals. They are the lord chancellor, the lords of appeal in ordinary, and such peers of parliament as hold, or have held, high judicial offices, such as ex-chancellors and judges of the superior courts in Great Britain and Ireland.

Lords of appeal in ordinary. These are appointed to aid the house of lords in the hearing of appeals. They rank as barons for life, but sit and vote in the house of lords during the tenure of their office only.

Lords of parliament. Those who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords ordinaries. Lords appointed in 1312, in the reign of Edward II, for the control of the sovereign and the court party, and for the general reform and better government of the country.

Lords spiritual. The archbishops and bishops who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords temporal. Those lay peers who have seats in the house of lords.

Lord Campbell Act. An act which fixes the maximum amount recoverable for wrongful death. Most states have such statutes. See Wrongful death statutes.

In England, also refers to the Libel Act of 1843 which permits the defendant in a libel action to assert the defense of truth and that the publication was made for the benefit of the public.

Lord Mansfield's Rule. Such rule renders inadmissible testimony by either spouse on the question of whether the husband had access to the wife at time of conception.
This Rule has been abandoned by several states as having outlived its original policy foundations. Serafin v. Serafin, 401 Mich. 629, 258 N.W.2d 461.

Lords. In English law, dominion, manor, seignory, domain; also a title of honor used to a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titulary appellation of the judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

Lose. To bring to destruction; to ruin; to destroy; to lose an eye. Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655. See also Lost; Mislay.

Loss. Loss is a generic and relative term. It signifies the act of losing or the thing lost; it is not a word of limited, hard and fast meaning and has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, "damage", "damages", "deprivation", "detriment", "injury", and "privation". Mason v. City of Albertville, 276 Ala. 68, 158 So.2d 924, 927.

It may mean expenses exceeding costs; actual losses, N. L. R. B. v. Cowell Portland Cement Co., C.C.A.9, 148 F.2d 237, 246; and bad and uncollectible accounts, damage, Wilbur v. U. S. ex rel. C. L. Wold Co., 59 App.D.C. 347, 30 F.2d 530, 534, 535; a decrease in value of resources or increase in liabilities; depletion or depreciation or destruction of value; privation; destruction, Wells v. Thomas W. Garland, Inc., Mo.App., 39 S.W.2d 409, 411; detriment, United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 538; failure to keep that which one has or thinks he has; injury, United Service Automobile Ass'n v. Miles, 139 Tex. 138, 161 S.W.2d 1048; privation, United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 538; ruin, Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655; shrinkage in value of estate or property; state or fact of being lost or destroyed, Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655; that which is gone and cannot be recovered or that which is withheld or that of which a party is dispossessed, Walker v. Thomas, 64 App.D.C. 148, 75 F.2d 667, 669; Surety Co., 60 S.D. 100, 243 N.W. 664, 666; unintentional parting with something of value, Providence Journal Co. v. Broderick, C.C.A.R.I., 104 F.2d 614, 616.

As to loss of consortium, see Consortium; salvage loss, see Salvage; proof of loss, see Proof. Compare Profit.

Disability benefits. State workers' compensation laws, social security, and disability insurance contracts pro-
LOSS OF EARNING CAPACITY

Loss of earning capacity. Damage to one's ability to earn wages in the future and recoverable as element of damage in tort actions. It is not the same as loss of earnings though loss of actual earnings is competent evidence of loss of earning capacity. A person unemployed at the time of the accident has an earning capacity though he has no earnings.

Loss payable clause. A clause in a fire insurance policy, listing the priority of claims in the event of destruction of the property insured. Generally, a mortgagee, or beneficiary under a deed of trust, is the party appearing in the clause, being paid to the amount owing under the mortgage or deed of trust before the owner is paid. A provision in property insurance contracts that authorizes payments to persons other than the insured to the extent that they have an insurable interest in the property.

Loss payee. Person named in insurance policy to be paid in event of loss or damage to property insured.

Loss ratio. In insurance, the proportion between premiums collected and loss payments made. In finance, loan losses of a bank or the receivable losses of a business compared to the assets of that class.

Loss reserve. That portion of insurance company's assets set aside for payment of losses which will probably arise or which have arisen but have not been paid.

Lost. An article is "lost" when the owner has lost the possession or custody of it, involuntarily and by any means, but more particularly by accident or his own negligence or forgetfulness, and when he is ignorant of its whereabouts or cannot recover it by an ordinarily diligent search. See also Lost property.

As applied to ships and vessels, the term means "lost at sea," and a vessel lost is one that has totally gone from the owners against their will, so that they know nothing of it, whether it still exists or not, or one which they know is no longer within their use and control, either in consequence of capture by enemies or pirates, or an unknown foundering, or sinking by a known storm, or collision, or destruction by shipwreck.

Lost corner. A point of survey whose position cannot be determined beyond reasonable doubt either from traces of the original marks or from acceptable evidence, and whose location can be restored only by reference to one or more independent corners. Finley v. Yuba County Water Dist., 99 C.A.3d 691, 160 Cal.Rptr. 423, 426. See Corner.

Lost or not lost. A phrase sometimes inserted in policies of marine insurance. It signifies that the contract is meant to relate back to the beginning of a voyage now in progress, or to some other antecedent time, and to be valid and effectual even if, at the moment of executing the policy, the vessel should have already perished by some of the perils insured against, provided that neither party has knowledge of that fact or any advantage over the other in the way of superior means of information. Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U.S. 528, 25 L.Ed. 219; Insurance Co. v. Folsom, 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 237, 21 L.Ed. 827.

Lost papers. Papers which have been so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search.

Lost property. Property which the owner has involuntarily parted with, through neglect, carelessness or inadvertence, and does not know where to find or recover it, not including property which he has intentionally concealed or deposited in a secret place for safe-keeping. Distinguishable from mislaid property which has been deliberately placed somewhere and forgotten. The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act. Compare Property (Mislaid property).

A person who comes into control of property of another that he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the nature or amount of the property or the identity of the recipient is guilty of theft, if, with purpose to deprive the owner thereof, he fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to a person entitled to have it. Model Penal Code § 223.5.

Lost will. A will which was once executed but cannot be found at death of testator. The contents can be proved by parol in many jurisdictions, though in some states there is a rebuttable presumption that a will once in existence has been revoked if it cannot be found at testator's death.

Real estate. A share; one of several parcels into which property is divided. Any portion, piece, division or parcel of land. Fractional part or subdivision of block, according to plat or survey, Mawson-Peterson Lumber Co. v. Sprinkle, 59 Wyo. 334, 140 P.2d 588, 591; portion of platted territory measured and set apart for individual and private use and occupancy, Hunter v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Los Angeles and San Diego Corporation Sole, 128 Cal.App. 90, 16 P.2d 1048, 1049.

A lot is commonly one of several other contiguous parcels of land making up a block. Real property is typically described by reference to lot and block numbers on recorded maps and plats.

Local zoning laws commonly require minimum lot sizes for residential and commercial building.

See also Minimum lot; Nonconforming lot; Parcel.

Sales. In sales, a parcel or single article which is the subject matter of a separate sale or delivery whether or not it is sufficient to perform the contract. U.C.C. § 2-105(5).

Securities. In securities and commodities market, a specified number of shares or specific quantity of a commodity designated for trading. See Odd lot; Odd lot doctrine.

Lot and scot. In English law, certain duties which formerly had to be paid by those who claimed to exercise the elective franchise within certain cities and boroughs, before they were entitled to vote.

Lottery /lɔtərɪ/. A chance for a prize for a price. A scheme for the distribution of a prize or prizes by lot or chance, the number and value of which is determined by the operator of the lottery. U.S. v. Baker, C.A.Pa., 364 F.2d 107, 111. Essential elements of a lottery are consideration, prize and chance and any scheme or device by which a person for a consideration is permitted to receive a prize or nothing as may be determined predominantly by chance. State v. Wassick, W.Va., 191 S.E.2d 283, 288.

An unlawful gambling scheme in which (a) the players agree to pay something of value for chances, represented and differentiated by numbers or by combinations of numbers or by some other media, one or more of which chances are to be designated the winning ones; and (b) the winning chances are to be determined by a drawing or by some other method based upon the element of chance; and (c) the holders of the willing chances are to receive something of value. New Jersey Criminal Code, § 2C:37-1.

Also defined as device whereby anything of value is for a consideration allotted by lot or chance. State ex Inf. McKittrick v. Globe-Democrat Pub. Co., 341 Mo. 862, 110 S.W.2d 705, 713, 714, 717, 718. Game by which a person paying money becomes entitled to money or other thing of value on certain contingencies, determinable by lot cast in a particular way by the manager of the game; game of hazard in which small sums of money are ventured for chance of obtaining a larger value in money or other articles; State v. Jones, 44 N.M. 623, 107 P.2d 324, 326; gaming contract by which for a valuable consideration one may by favor of the lot obtain a prize of value superior to the amount or value of that which he risks, Troy Amusement Co. v. Attenweiler, 64 Ohio App. 405, 28 N.E.2d 483, 488. Scheme by which result is reached by some action or means taken, and in which result man's choice or will has no part nor can human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design enable him to know or determine such result until the same has been accomplished, State v. Schwemler, 154 Or. 533, 60 P.2d 938, 940; scheme for distribution of prizes or things of value by lot or chance, Engle v. State, 593 Ariz. 458, 90 P.2d 988, 992, 993; scheme for raising money by selling chances in distribution of prizes. Scheme where money is paid for chance of receiving money or a prize in return. People v. Plassis, Mag.Ct.N.Y., 12 N.Y. S.2d 796, 797, 798, 799. Scheme whereby one on paying money or other valuable thing to another becomes entitled to receive from him such a return in value or nothing as some formula of chance may determine. Scheme which, played or operated once, destroys the value of ticket provided as the prizes are distributed. Scheme which tends to induce one to pay or agree to pay a valuable consideration for a chance to draw a prize.

A number of states, by statute, provide for state-run lotteries (e.g. Mass.G.L. Ch. 10, § 22 et seq.).

The advertising and sending of lottery tickets through the mails and by other instrumentalities of interstate commerce is prohibited by federal law. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1301 et seq., 1953. Though most states also have similar laws prohibiting such activities, these federal laws do not apply to state-run lotteries. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1307.

See also Dutch lottery; Gambling; Game of chance; Sweepstakes.

Louage /luwáz/. Fr. This is the contract of hiring and letting in French law, and may be either of things or of labor. The varieties of each are the following: 1. Letting of things,—bail à loyer being the letting of houses; bail à ferme being the letting of lands. 2. Letting of labor, em loger being the letting of personal services; bail à cheptel being the letting of animals.

L'ou le ley done chose, la ceo done remedie a vener a cee /luw la léy dów shówz, là sów dów rémadly à vanéy à sów/. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover.

Love and affection. Such is a sufficient consideration when a gift is contemplated, but is not considered "valuable" consideration where such is required. See Nudum pactum.

Love-day. In old English law, the day on which any dispute was amicably settled between neighbors; or a day on which one neighbor helps another without hire.

Lowbote. In old English law, a recompense for the death of a man killed in a tumult.

Lower of cost or market. A basis for inventory valuation where the inventory value is set at the lower of acquisition cost or current replacement cost (market).

Lower. Fr. In French maritime law, wages.

Lowest responsible bidder. Bidder who not only has lowest price which conforms with the specifications, but also is financially able and competent to complete work as evidenced by prior performance.

Low justice. In old European law, jurisdiction of petty offenses, as distinguished from "high justice" (q.v.).

Low-water mark. Line on the shore marking the lowest ebb of the tide. See also Water-mark.

Loyal. Legal; authorized by or conforming to law. Also faithful in one's political relations; giving faithful support and allegiance to one's prince or sovereign or to the existing government. Faithful support to cause, ideal, office, or person.

Loyalty. Adherence to law. Faithfulness to one's office or sovereign or to the existing government.

Loyalty oath. An oath whereby an individual declares his allegiance to his government and its institutions and disclaims any support of foreign ideologies or associations. Such oaths as are required of various classifications of public officials and persons working in "sensitive" government positions. See e.g. Art. II, § 1, cl. 7; Art. VI, cl. 3, U.S.Const. However, oaths too vague to specify clearly what constitutes seditious acts and utterances have been declared unconstitutional. Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb, 414 U.S. 441, 94 S.Ct. 656, 38 L.Ed.2d 635. See also Oath.

L.S. An abbreviation for "Locus sigillii." the place where a seal is to be affixed, or a scroll which stands instead of a seal. See Locus sigilli.

LSAT. Law School Admission Test. This test is given to law school applicants. The LSAT is a half-day multiple choice test designed to measure certain basic reasoning abilities important in the study of law, general academic ability and command of written English. It provides two scores: an LSAT score and a writing ability (WA) score. The LSAT portion measures the ability to understand and reason with a variety of verbal, quantitative, and symbolic materials. The writing ability portion measures the use of standard English to express ideas clearly and precisely. The test is intended to supplement the undergraduate record and other information about the student in the assessment of potential for law school work. It covers a broad range of disciplines, measures skills acquired over a long period of time, and gives no advantage to students with particular specializations.

Ltd. Limited.

Lubricum linum non facile trahendum est in poenam /luwbrakam lingwiy nön fásaliy trohèndam èst in piyman/. A slip of the tongue ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment.

Lucid. Easily understood; clear; rational; sane.

Lucid interval. A temporary cure; temporary restoration to sanity. Intervals occurring in the mental life of an insane person during which he is completely restored to the use of his reason, or so far restored that he has sufficient intelligence, judgment, and will to enter into contractual relations, or perform other legal acts, without disqualification by reason of his disease. Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. Lay, 175 Okl. 75, 51 P.2d 580, 583. With respect to marriage, refers to period of time during which person had sufficient mental capacity to know and understand nature and consequence of marriage relation, and the reciprocal and mutual duties and obligations thereof. Carter v. Bacle, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 817, 819. In connection with wills, a period of time within which an insane person enjoys the restoration of his faculties sufficiently to enable him to judge his act. In re Cook's Estate, 231 Or. 133, 372 P.2d 520, 522. See also insanity.

Lucre nuptialia /luwkrak nàpsihiyéyi/lyya/. Lat. In Roman law, a term including everything which a husband or wife, as such, acquires from the estate of the other, either before the marriage, or on agreeing to it, or during its continuance, or after its dissolution, and whether the acquisition is by pure gift, or by virtue of the marriage contract, or against the will of the other party by law or statute.

Lucrativa causa /luywkratáyv koža/. Lat. In Roman law, a consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. It was opposed to onerosa causa, which denoted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucrative causes could not concur in the same person as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeathed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over.

Lucrativa usucapio /luywkratáyv yúwz(y)uwkzépiyow/. Lat. This species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only in the case of persons taking possession of property upon the decease of its late owner, and in exclusion or deforcement of the heir, whence it was called "usucapio pro herede." The adjective "lucrativa" denoted that property was acquired by this usucapio without any consideration or payment for it by way of purchase; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a mala fide possessor, his acquisition, or usucapio, was called also "improba" (i.e., dishonest); but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the heres to take possession, in order that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further incentive to the heres, this usucapio was complete in one year.

LUCRATIVE. Yielding gain or profit; profitable; bearing or yielding a revenue or salary.

LUCRATIVE bailment. See Bailment.

LUCRATIVE office. One which yields a revenue (in the form of fees or otherwise) or a fixed salary to the incumbent. According to some authorities, one which yields a compensation supposed to be adequate to the services rendered and in excess of the expenses incidental to the office. One the pay of which is affixed to performance of duties of office.

Lucre /luywkar/. Gain in money or goods; profit, usually in an ill sense, or with the sense of something base or unworthy.

Lucr causa /luywkray köža/. Lat. In criminal law, a term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny, the phrase meaning "for the sake of lucre" or gain.

Lucrum /luwkrakm/. A small slip or parcel of land.

Lucrum cessans /luywkrakm sésèn/. Lat. A ceasing to yield a compensation supposed to be adequate to the services rendered and in excess of the expenses incidental to the office. The one the pay of which is affixed to performance of duties of office.

Lucrum facere ex pupilli tutela tutor non debet /luywkrakm féysaryi èks p(y)apílay t(y)atlyla tyútar nön déb/. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward.

Luctuosa hereditas /laktyuwówse haryðatás/. A mournful inheritance. See Hereditas luctuosa.
Luctus /läktəs/. In Roman law, mourning. See Annus luctus.

Luminare /l(y)uwmənəri/. A lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, etc.

Lumping sale. As applied to judicial sales, this term means a sale in mass, as where several distinct parcels of real estate, or several articles of personal property, are sold together for a “lump” or single gross sum. See Bulk sale.

Lump-sum alimony. Settlement or payment of money or property in divorce action made in single payment instead of installments. Sometimes called “alimony in gross.” See Alimony.

Lump-sum distribution. Single payment of the entire amount due at one time rather than in installments. Such distributions often occur from qualified pension or profit-sharing plans upon the retirement or death of a covered employee.

Lump-sum payment. A single payment in contrast to installments; e.g. single premium payment for life insurance; a single lump sum divorce settlement; or single worker’s compensation payment in lieu of future monthly installment payments. See also Alimony.

Lunacy. See Insanity.

Lunar. Belonging to or measured by the revolutions of the moon.

Lunar month. See Month.

Lunatic. See Insanity.

Lushborow /lɔʃbɔrɔw/ /lɔʃbərɔ/. In old English law, a base sort of money, coined beyond sea in the likeness of English coin, and introduced into England in the reign of Edward III. Prohibited by St. 25 Edw. III, c. 4.

Luxury tax. Generic term for excise imposed on purchase of items which are not necessaries; e.g. tax on liquor or cigarettes.

Lying by. A person who, by his presence and silence at a transaction which affects his interests, may be fairly supposed to acquiesce in it, if he afterwards propose to disturb the arrangement, is said to be prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by. See also Estoppel.

Lying in franchise. A term descriptive of waifs, wrecks, strays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action.

Lying in grant. A phrase applied to incorporeal rights, incapable of manual tradition, and which must pass by mere delivery of a deed.

Lying in wait. Lying in ambush; lying hidden or concealed for the purpose of making a sudden and unexpected attack upon a person when he shall arrive at the scene. For purposes of aggravating circumstance, elements necessary to constitute “lying in wait” are watching, waiting and concealment from person killed with intent to kill or inflict bodily injury upon that person. Davis v. State, Ind., 477 N.E.2d 889, 896. In some jurisdictions, where there are several degrees of murder, lying in wait is made evidence of that deliberation and premeditated intent which is necessary to characterize murder in the first degree.

Lynch law. A term descriptive of the action of unofficial persons, organized bands, or mobs, who seize persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or take them out of the custody of the law, and inflict summary punishment upon them, without legal trial, and without the warrant or authority of law.

Lyndhurst’s (Lord) Act /lɔrd lɪndhʌrsts ækt/. This English statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

Lyte /läti/. In old Roman law, a name given to students of the civil law in the fourth year of their course, from their being supposed capable of solving any difficulty in law.
M. This letter, used as a Roman numeral, stands for one thousand.

It was also, in old English law, a brand or stigma impressed upon the brawn of the thumb of a person convicted of manslaughter and admitted to the benefit of clergy.

This letter was sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signified that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. U. S. v. Hardyman, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 176, 10 L.Ed. 113.

Mace. A large staff, made of the precious metals, and highly ornamented. It is used as an emblem of authority, and carried before certain public functionaries by a mace-bearer. In many legislative bodies, the mace is employed as a visible symbol of the dignity and collective authority of the house. In the house of lords and house of commons of the British parliament, it is laid upon the table when the house is in session. In the United States House of Representatives, it is borne upright by the sergeant-at-arms on extraordinary occasions, as when it is necessary to quell a disturbance or bring refractory members to order.

Chemical liquid which, when sprayed in face of person, causes dizziness and immobilization.

Macedonian decree. In Roman law, this was the Senatus-consultum Macedonianum, a decree of the Roman senate, first given under Claudius, and renewed under Vespasian by which it was declared that no action should be maintained to recover a loan of money made to a child who was under the patria potestas. It was intended to strike at the practice of usurers in making loans, on unconscionable terms, to family heirs who would mortgage their future expectations from the paternal estate. The law is said to have derived its name from that of a notorious usurer.

Mace-greff. In old English law, one who buys stolen goods, particularly food, knowing it to have been stolen.

Mace-proof. Secure against arrest.

Machination. The act of planning or contriving a scheme for executing some purpose, particularly an evil purpose; an artful design formed with deliberation. See also Artifice; Scheme.

Mactator. L. Lat. In old European law, a murderer.

Maculare. In old European law, to wound.

Made known. Where a process or other legal paper has been actually served upon a defendant, the proper return is that its contents have been "made known" to him. A crime is "made known" to an officer when facts which come to knowledge of the officer are such as to indicate to him that it is his official duty to act or to see that an investigation of the alleged crime is instituted within his jurisdiction. See also Notice.

Madman. This is not a technical term either of medicine or the law, and because of this it is incapable of being applied with scientific precision; as such, is no longer in use. See Insanity.

Mad Parliament. Henry III, in 1258, at the desire of the Great Council in Parliament, consented to the appointment of a committee of twenty-four, of whom twelve were appointed by the Barons and twelve by the King, in a parliament which was stigmatized as the "Mad Parliament." Unlimited power was given to it to carry out all necessary reforms. It drew up the Provisions of Oxford.

Mace-burgh. In Saxon law, kindred; family.

Mæg. A kinsman.

Mægbote. In Saxon law, a recompense or satisfaction for the slaying or murder of a kinsman.

Magic. In English statutes, witch-craft and sorcery.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against, the law, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned "to assign all offices" will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable.

Magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.
Magister. Lat. Civil law. A title of several offices under the Roman Empire.

English law. A master or ruler; a person who has attained to some eminent degree in science.

Magister ad facultates. In English ecclesiastical law, the title of an officer who grants dispensations; as to marry, to eat meat on days prohibited and the like.

Magister bonorum vendendorum. In Roman law, a person appointed by judicial authority to inventory, collect, and sell the property of an absent or absconding debtor for the benefit of his creditors. He was generally one of the creditors, and his functions corresponded generally to those of a receiver or an assignee for the benefit of creditors under modern bankruptcy practice.

Magister cancellarie. In old English law, master of the chancery; master in chancery. These officers were said to be called "magistri," because they were priests.

Magisterial. Relating or pertaining to the character, office, powers, or duties of a magistrate or of the magistracy.

Magisterial precinct. In some American states, a local subdivision of a county, defining the territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace and constables; also called magisterial district.

Magister libellorum. Master of requests. A title of office under the Roman Empire.

Magister litis. Master of the suit; the master of the litis; magistratus litis. In the civil law, the master or manager of a partnership; a managing partner or general agent; a manager specially chosen by a firm to administer the affairs of the partnership.

Magister rerum usus. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things.

Magister rerum usus; magistra rerum experientia. Use is a principal guide in practice.

Magistracy. This term may have a more or less extensive signification according to the use and connection in which it occurs. In its widest sense it includes the whole body of public functionaries, whether their offices be legislative, judicial, executive, or administrative.

In a more restricted (and more usual) meaning, it denotes the class of officers who are charged with the application and execution of the laws. In a still more confined use, it designates the body of judicial officers of the lowest rank, and more especially those who have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of petty misdemeanors or the preliminary steps of a criminal prosecution, such as police judges and justices of the peace. The term also denotes the office of a magistrate. Golden v. Golden, 41 N.M. 356, 68 P.2d 928, 930. See also Magistrate.

Magistralia brevia. In old English law, master of the chancery; master in chancery. These officers were said to be called "magistri," because they were priests.

Magistrate. A public civil officer, possessing such power—legislative, executive, or judicial—as the government appointing him may ordain. In a narrower sense, an inferior judicial officer, such as a justice of the peace. Shadwick v. City of Tampa, 407 U.S. 345, 348, 92 S.Ct. 2119, 2122, 32 L.Ed.2d 783.

U.S. (Federal) Magistrates. A judicial officer, appointed by judges of federal district courts, having many but not all of the powers of a judge. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 631-639. Generally exercising duties formerly performed by U.S. Commissioners, magistrates may be designated to hear a wide variety of motions and other pretrial matters in both criminal and civil cases.with the consent of the parties, they may conduct civil or misdemeanor criminal trials. However, magistrates may not preside over felony trials or over jury selection in felony cases. Gomez v. United States, 109 S.Ct. 2237, 104 L.Ed.2d 923.

For Chief magistrate; Committing magistrate; Police magistrate; and Stipendiary magistrates, see those titles.

Magistrate's courts. The jurisdiction of these courts of limited jurisdiction differs from state to state. Such may be divisions of courts of general jurisdiction, and may have concurrent jurisdiction with other courts. Commonly their jurisdiction is restricted to the handling of minor offenses, small claims or preliminary hearings.

Magistratus. Lat. In the civil law, a magistrate. A judicial officer who had the power of hearing and determining causes, but whose office properly was to inquire into matters of law, as distinguished from fact.

Magna assisa. In old English law, the grand assize.

Magna assisa eligenda. In ancient writ to summon four lawful knights before the justices of assize, there to choose twelve others, with themselves to constitute the grand assize or great jury, to try the matter of right. The trial by grand assize was instituted by Henry II, in parliament, as an alternative to the dual in a writ of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Magna Carta. The great charter. The name of a charter (or constitutional enactment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional liberty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the administration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the personal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxation, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Carta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly by reason of its own transcendent importance.

Magna Carta
Magna Carta

Magna centum /mægna sëntam/. The great hundred, or six score.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sont appelées les "deux grandes charters" /mægna kárta ê kárta di fœrësta sîwnt apéley lëy dyùw grënd chàrtært/. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the "two great charters."

Magna componere parvis /mægna kampōwnary pârvas/. To compare great things with small things.

Magna culpa /mægna kólpa/. Great fault; gross negligence.

Magna negotiamenta /mægna negbjensh(i)yä/. In the civil law, great or gross negligence.

Magna negotiamenta culpa est; magna culpa dolus est /mægna negbjensh(i)yä kólpa êst; mægna kólpa dowlä est/. Gross negligence is fault; gross fault is fraud.

Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act. Federal statute (15 U.S.C.A. § 2301 et seq.) requiring that written warranties as to consumer products must fully and conspicuously disclose in simple and readily understood language the terms and conditions of such warranty, including whether the warranty is a full or limited warranty according to standards set forth in the Act.

Magnus rotulus actorum /mægns rô(t)yälas stê-tyuw tôräm/. The great statute roll. The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Charta, and ending with Edward III.

Maiden. A young unmarried woman. In an indictment for adultery, not necessarily a virgin.

Maiden assize /mïydän säzk/. In English law, originally an assize at which no person was condemned to die; later a session of a criminal court at which there were no prisoners to be tried.

Maiden rents. In old English law, a fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant.

Maim /mï(h)am/. See Maim; Mayhem.

Maihematus /mï(h)ameytas/. Maimed or wounded.

Maihemium /mï(h)emï(i)yam/. In old English law, mayhem (q.v.).

Maihemium est homicidium inchoatum /mï(h)emï(i)yam êst hïmæsaid(i)yam inkowïyïtâm/. Mayhem is incipient homicide.

Maihemium est inter crimina majora minimum, et inter minora maximum /mï(h)emï(i)yam êst inter krimäna mjëra mynëmam, êt inter minora mjërsamam/. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small.

Maihemium est membre mutilatto, et dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliqua parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnandum /mï(h)emï(i)yam êst mjëmräy myëwdxelësh(i)cow, êt dîawy pôtarot, yùwby bëkwi in yëkwa pârtyi suyëw kôrparas sëftës sît inyûwdalas âd pûnaendam/>. Mayhem is the mutilation of a member, and can be said to take place when a man is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in fight.

Mail. See Mailed; Registered mail.

Mailable. Suitable or admissible for transmission by the mail; belonging to the classes of articles which, by the laws and postal regulations, may be sent by mail.

Mailbox rule. In contract law, unless otherwise agreed or provided by law, acceptance of offer is effective when deposited in mail if properly addressed. See Liquorama Inc. v. American Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 86 Ill.App.3d 974, 41 Ill.Dec. 951, 953, 408 N.E.2d 373, 375.

Mailed. A letter, package, or other mailable matter is "mailed" when it is properly addressed, stamped with the proper postage, and deposited in a proper place for receipt of mail. Texas Cas. Ins. Co. v. McDonald, Tex. Civ.App., 269 S.W.2d 456, 457.

Under rules practice in some jurisdictions, an action is deemed commenced when the complaint and appropriate entry fee is deposited in the mails under either certified or registered mail procedure; e.g. Mass.R.Civ.P. 3.

Mail fraud. The use of the mails to defraud is a federal offense requiring the government to prove a knowing use of the mails to execute the fraudulent scheme. U. S. v. Dondich (C.A.Cal.), 506 F.2d 1009. Elements of "mail fraud" are a scheme to defraud and the mailing of a letter for the purpose of executing the scheme. U. S. v. Scoblick, D.C.Pa., 124 F.Supp. 881, 887. See 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1341, 1342. See Using mail to defraud.

Mail order divorce. Divorce obtained by parties who are not physically present nor domiciled in the jurisdiction which purports to grant divorce (e.g. Mexican divorce). Such divorces are not recognized because of the complete absence of the usual bases for divorce jurisdiction. Unruh v. Industrial Commission, 81 Ariz. 118, 301 P.2d 1029.

Maim. To cripple or mutilate in any way. To inflict upon a person any injury which deprives him of the use of any limb or member of the body, or renders him lame or defective in bodily vigor. To inflict bodily injury; to seriously wound or disfigure; disable. State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693. See also Mayhem.
At common law, to deprive a person of a member or part of the body, the loss of which renders him less capable of fighting, or of defending himself; to commit mayhem (q.v.).

Main. Principal, leading, primary, chief. Most important in size, extent, rank, importance, strength or utility.

Mainad /méynd/. In old English law, a false oath; perjury. Probably from Sax. "manath" or "mainath" a false or deceitful oath.

Main-a-main. Immediately.

Main channel. The main channel of a river is that bed over which the principal volume of water flows. The deeper or more navigable channel of river.

Maine-port. In old English law, a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes.

Mainly. Principally, chiefly, in the main.

Mainour /méynaur/. An article stolen, when found in the hands of the thief. A thief caught with the stolen goods in his possession is said to be taken "with the mainour," that is, with the property in manu, in his hands. 4 Bl.Comm. 307.

Mainovre, or mainœuvre /man(y)uwr/. A trespass committed by hand.

Mainpernable /meynpårnsvbal/. Capable of being bailed; bailable; admissible to bail on giving surety by mainpernors.

Mainpernor /meynpårnsv/. In old practice, a surety for the appearance of a person under arrest, who is delivered out of custody into the hands of his bail.

Mainprise. In old English law, the delivery of a person into the custody of mainpernors (q.v.). Also the name of a writ (now obsolete) commanding the sheriff to take the security of mainpernors and set the party at liberty.

"Mainpernors" differ from "bail" in that a man’s bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are barelv sureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 3 Bl.Comm. 128. Other distinctions are made in the old books.

Main purpose doctrine. The Statute of Frauds requires contracts to answer for the debt, default or misdoing of another to be in writing to be enforceable. However, if the main purpose of the promisor’s undertaking is his own benefit or protection, such promise need not be in writing. MacDonald v. Stack, 345 Mass. 709, 189 N.E.2d 221. The “main purpose rule” is that whenever the main purpose and object of promisor is not to answer for another but to subserve some purpose of his own, his promise is not within statute of frauds, although it may be in form a promise to pay debt of another and although performance of promise may incidentally have effect of extinguishing liability of another. Cooper Petroleum v. La Gloria Oil & Gas Co., Tex.Civ.App., 423 S.W.2d 645, 655.

Main-rent. Vassalage.

Main sea. See Sea.

Maintain. The term is variously defined as acts of repairs and other acts to prevent a decline, lapse or cessation from existing state or condition; bear the expense of; carry on; commence; continue; furnish means for subsistence or existence of; hold; hold or keep in an existing state or condition; hold or preserve in any particular state or condition; keep from change; keep from falling, declining, or ceasing; keep in existence or continuance; keep in force; keep in good order; keep in proper condition; keep in repair; keep up; preserve; preserve from lapse, decline, failure, or cessation; provide for; rebuild; repair; replace; supply with means of support; supply with what is needed; support; sustain; uphold. Negatively stated, it is defined as not to lose or surrender; not to suffer or fail or decline. El Paso County Water Imp. Dist. No. 1 v. City of El Paso, D.C.Tex., 243 F.2d 927, 931.

To “maintain” an action is to uphold, continue on foot, and keep from collapse a suit already begun, or to prosecute a suit with effect. George Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose, Ga., 289 U.S. 373, 53 S.Ct. 620, 77 L.Ed. 1285. To maintain an action or suit may mean to commence or institute it; the term imports the existence of a cause of action. Maintain, however, is usually applied to actions already brought, but not yet reduced to judgment. Smallwood v. Gallardo, 275 U.S. 56, 48 S.Ct. 23, 72 L.Ed. 152. In this connection it means to continue or preserve in or with; to carry on.

The words “maintains” and “maintaining” in statutes prohibiting maintenance of a liquor nuisance denote continuous or recurrent acts approaching permanence. The term “maintaining government” means providing money to enable government to perform duties which it is required by law to perform.

See also Maintenance; Repair.

Maintained. Carried on; kept possession and care of; kept effectively; commenced and continued.

Maintainor. In criminal law, one who maintains or seconds a cause pending in litigation between others, either by disbursing money or otherwise giving assistance. One who is guilty of maintenance (q.v.).

Maintenance. The upkeep or preservation of condition of property, including cost of ordinary repairs necessary and proper from time to time for that purpose. Bogan v. Postlewait, 265 N.E.2d 195, 197. See also Maintain.

Sustenance; support; assistance; aid. The furnishing by one person to another, for his or her support, of the means of living, or food, clothing, shelter, etc., particularly where the legal relation of the parties is such that one is bound to support the other, as between father and child, or husband and wife. State ex rel. Blume v. State Board of Education of Montana, 97 Mont. 371, 34 P.2d 515, 519. The supplying of the necessities of life. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. Miller, 184 Ark. 415, 42 S.W.2d 564, 566. While term primarily means food, clothing and shelter, it has also been held to include such items as reasonable and necessary transportation or automobile expenses, medical and drug expenses, utilities and household expenses. Hughes v. Hughes, La.App., 303 So.2d 766, 769. See also Separate maintenance; Support.

Assets. Expenditures undertaken to preserve an asset’s service potential for its originally-intended life; these expenditures are treated as periodic expenses or product costs. Contrast with Improvement. See also Maintain; Repair.

Lawsuits. An officious intermeddling in a lawsuit by a non-party by maintaining, supporting or assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend the litigation. Schnabei v. Taft Broadcasting Co., Inc., Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 819, 823. The offense committed by a maintainer (q.v.). See also Champerty.

Seamen. See Maintenance and cure.

Maintenance and cure. Contractual form of compensation given by general maritime law to seaman who falls ill while in service of his vessel. McCorpen v. Central Gulf S. S. Corp., C.A.Tex., 396 F.2d 547, 548. Seaman is entitled to maintenance and cure if he is injured or becomes ill in service or vessel, without regard to negligence of his employer or to unseaworthiness of ship; and “maintenance” is a per diem living allowance for food and lodging and “cure” is payment for medical, therapeutic and hospital expenses; and employer’s duty to pay maintenance and cure continues until seaman has reached “maximum cure.” Kratzer v. Capital Marine Supply, Inc., D.C.La., 490 F.Supp. 222, 229. Pacific S.S. Co. v. Peterson, 278 U.S. 130, 49 S.Ct. 75, 73 L.Ed. 220. See also Cure.

Maintenance call. See Margin call.

Maintenance or assessment fee. A monthly charge for maintaining and repairing the commonly owned areas in a condominium subdivision or planned unit development.

Major /mējyor/. An old form of “mayor.”

Maister /mēystar/. An old form of “master.”

Maitre /mētré/. Fr. In French maritime law, master; the master or captain of a vessel.

Majestas /mājestās/. Lat. In Roman law, the majesty, sovereign authority, or supreme prerogative of the state or prince. Also a shorter form of the expression “crimen majestatis,” or “crimen læse majestatis,” an offense against sovereignty, or against the safety or organic life of the Roman people; i.e., high treason.

Majesty. Royal dignity. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor.

Major. A person of full age; one who is no longer a minor; one who has attained the management of his own concerns and the enjoyment of his civic rights. See also Adult; Legal age; Majority.

Military law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

Major and minor fault rule. Vessel guilty of gross fault has burden of showing that other vessel committed a plain fault. General Seafoods Corporation v. J. S. Packard Dredging Co., C.C.A.Mass., 120 F.2d 117, 119, 120. Where fault on part of one vessel is established by uncontested testimony and such fault is, of itself, sufficient to account for the disaster, it is not enough for such vessel to raise a doubt with regard to management of other vessel and any reasonable doubt with regard to propriety of conduct of such other vessel should be resolved in its favor. Intagliata v. Shippers & Merchants Towboat Co., 26 Cal.2d 365, 159 P.2d 1, 10.

Major annus /mējjar ānōs/. The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days.

Majora regalia /mājōr rāgēlējīōs/. The king’s dignity, power, and royal prerogative, as opposed to his revenue, which is comprised in the minora regalia.

Major crimes. A loose classification of serious crimes such as murder, rape, armed robbery, etc.

Major (or minor) dispute. Major disputes within Railway Labor Act are those concerned with formation of collective bargaining agreements or with efforts to secure such agreements and look to acquisition of rights of future rather than to rights which vested in past; and, “minor disputes” are those arising where there is existing agreement and there has been no effort to bring about formal change in terms or to create new agreement and there has been no effort to bring about formal change in terms or to create new agreement but dispute relates to application of particular provision. Railway Exp. Agency, Inc. v. Gulf Dept., Dist. Bd. of Adjustment, Broth. of Ry., Airline and S. S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exp. and Station Emp., D.C. Ga., 306 F.Supp. 1243, 1246. Compare Minor dispute.

Majore pena affectus quam legibus statuta est, non est infamis /majōrēē piñēs akēfēkēs kwārm liyēbas stātyūwāē ēst, nōn ēst ānfēmys/. One affected with an infamous punishment than is provided by law is not infamous.

Majoress /mājōřēz/. In old English law, greater persons; persons of higher condition or estate.

In Roman law and genealogical tables, the male ascendants beyond the sixth degree.

Major general. An officer next in rank above a brigadier general, and next below a lieutenant general, and who usually commands a division or an army corps.
Major hæreditæs venit uniculque nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus /mëjjar hærédætas víynst ýúwnýkwýjíkwýjí nóstrám éy júrií ét líjybas kwám éy pórentásas/. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than from parents.

Majority. Full age; legal age; age at which a person is no longer a minor. The age at which, by law, a person is capable of being legally responsible for all his or her acts (e.g., contractual obligations), and is entitled to the management of his or her own affairs and to the enjoyment of civic rights (e.g., right to vote). The opposite of minority. Also the status of a person who is a major in age. See Adult; Capacity; Legal age.

The greater number. The number greater than half of any total.

Majority of qualified electors. Refers to those who actually vote on election day. Harris v. Baden, 154 Fla. 373, 17 So.2d 608, 609. See Majority rule; Majority vote.

Majority opinion. The opinion of an appellate court in which the majority of its members join. May also refer to a view of a legal principle in which most jurisdictions concur. See also Opinion.

Majority stockholder. One who owns or controls more than 50 percent of the stock of a corporation, though effective control may be maintained with far less than 50 percent if most of the stock is widely held. In close corporation, majority shareholders may owe fiduciary, partner-like duties to minority shareholders. See Donahue v. Rodd Electrotype Co. of N.E., Inc., 367 Mass. 578, 50 percent if most of the stock is widely held. In close corporation, majority shareholders may owe fiduciary, partner-like duties to minority shareholders. See Donahue v. Rodd Electrotype Co. of N.E., Inc., 367 Mass. 578, 328 N.E.2d 508.

Majority vote. Vote by more than half of voters for candidate or other matter on ballot. When there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined.

As regards voting by stockholders, means majority per capita when the right to vote is per capita, and a majority of stock when each share of stock is entitled to a vote, each particular case being determined by provisions of charter regulating voting. Simon Borg & Co. v. New Orleans City R. Co., D.C.La., 244 F. 617, 619.

Major numerus in se continet minorem /mëjjar n(y)úwmos in sîy kóntanat móorám/. The greater number contains in itself the less.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum /mëjjar dignam tréy(h)xod ád sîy máynas dignam/. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.

Majus est delictum seipsum occidere quam alium /mëjjar est délìktam siyipsam oksídiary kwám éy líyym/. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another. See Suicide.

Majus jus /mëjjar jás/. In old practice, greater right or more right. A plea in the old real actions. Majus jus merum, more mere right.

A writ proceeding in some customary manors to try a right to land.

Majus Latium /mëjjar léysh(i)yam/. See Jus Latium.

Make. To cause to exist. United States v. Giles, 300 U.S. 41, 57 S.Ct. 340, 344, 81 L.Ed. 493. To form, fashion, or produce. To do, perform, or execute; as to make an issue, to make oath, to make a presentment. To do in form of law; to perform with due formalities; to execute in legal form; as to make answer, to make a return or report.

To execute as one's act or obligation; to prepare and sign; to issue; to sign, execute, and deliver; as to make a conveyance, to make a note. To conclude, determine upon, agree to, or execute; as to make a contract. To cause to happen by one's neglect or omission; as to make default. To make acquisition of; to procure; to collect; as to make the money on an execution or to make a loan. To have authority or influence; to support or sustain; as in the phrase, "This precedent makes for the plaintiff."

Make a contract. To agree upon, and conclude or adopt, a contract. In case of a written contract, to reduce it to writing, execute it in due form, and deliver it as binding.

Make an award. To form and publish a judgment on the facts.

Make default. To fail or be wanting in some legal duty; particularly to omit the entering of an appearance when duly summoned in an action at law or other judicial proceeding. To neglect to obey the command of a subpoena, etc. See also Default.

Maker. One who makes, frames, executes, or ordains; as a "lawmaker," or the "maker" of a promissory note. One who signs a note to borrow and, as such, assumes obligation to pay note when due. The person who creates or executes a note, that is, issues it, and in signing the instrument makes the promise of payment contained therein. One who signs a check; in this context, synonymous with drawer. U.C.C. § 3-413(1). One who issues a promissory note or certificate of deposit (i.e., one who promises to pay a certain sum to the holder of the note or CD). See Draft; Drawer.

Accommodation maker. See Accommodation.

Making law. In old practice, the formality of denying a plaintiff's charge under oath, in open court, with purgators. One of the ancient methods of trial, frequently, though inaccurately, termed "waging law," or "wager of law." 3 BLComm. 341.

Term may also refer to a court decision that establishes new law on a particular matter or subject.
Making record. The preparation of an appellate record. May also refer to the process of trying a case with a view towards an eventual appeal in which the record of the trial is important. In the later instance care is taken during trial to make all appropriate objections so that such become part of the record on appeal.

Mal. A prefix meaning bad, wrong, fraudulent; as maladministration, malpractice, malversation, etc.

Mala /mäla/. Lat. Bad; evil; wrongful.

Maladministration /mäladministрейshan/. This term is used interchangeably with misadministration, and both words mean "wrong administration."

Mala fides /mäla fädiyaz/. Bad faith. The opposite of bona fides (q.v.). Malõ fidei possesor, a possessor in bad faith.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam. Sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est /mäla grämatäka nön višiyat kärtam sëd in ekspäzishingiowyñi instrumëntorm mâla grämatäka kwöwäd fäyäray pösat évätända sít/. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed. But in the exposition of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided.

Mala in se /mäla in sýy/. Wrongs in themselves; acts morally wrong; offenses against conscience.

Malandrinus /mälandráyns/. In old English law, a thief or pirate.

Malapportionment. An improper or unconstitutional apportionment of legislative districts. See Gerrymander; Legislative apportionment.

Mala praxis /mäla präkss/. Malpractice; unskillful management or treatment. Particularly applied to the neglect or unskillful management of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary. See Malpractice.

Mala prohibita /mäla prähibita/. Prohibited wrongs or offenses; acts which are made offenses by positive laws, and prohibited as such. Acts or omissions which are made criminal by statute but which, of themselves, are not criminal. Generally, no criminal intent or mens rea is required and the mere accomplishment of the act or omission is sufficient for criminal liability. Term is used in contrast to mala in se which are acts which are wrongs in themselves such as robbery.

Malconduct /mälkõndåkt/. Ill conduct, especially dishonest conduct, maladministration, or, as applied to officers, official misconduct. See Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Male /mëyl/. Of the masculine sex.

Male creditus /mäly krêdâs/. In old English law, unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit.

Maledicta est expositio que corruptit textum /mäladiktö est ekspäzishingiyow kwïy karömpot téks-tam/. That is a cursed interpretation which corrupts the text.

Malediction /mäladikshan/. A curse, which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches or religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

Malefaction /mälsfekshan/. A crime; an offense.

Malefactor /mälsfektor/. He who is guilty, or has been convicted, of some crime or offense.

Maleficia non debent remanerem impunita; et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti /mälsfishiyä nön dëbant rìmyäniliry impüdyäntä; ëd impüdyäntäês kontiñyuôw sfêktam tribyuôw délañkwëntay/. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished; and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent.

Maleficia proposita distinguishatur /mälsfishiyäprôpôstätâ distinguishántar/. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes, or by their purposes.

Maleficium /mälsfishiyäm/. In the civil law, waste; damage; tort; injury.

Maleson, or malison /mälsôñ/ /zon/. A curse.

Malesworm, or malsworm /mälylsworm/. Forsworn.

Malfeasance /mälfishyan(t)s/. Evil doing; ill conduct. The commission of some act which is positively unlawful; the doing of an act which is wholly wrongful and unlawful; the doing of an act which person ought not to do at all or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right or which he had contracted not to do. Comprehensive term including any wrongful conduct that affects, interrupts or interferes with the performance of official duties. State ex rel. Knabb v. Frater, 198 Wash. 675, 59 P.2d 1046, 1048. Malfeasance is a wrongful act which the actor has no legal right to do, or any wrongful conduct which affects, interrupts, or interferes with performance of official duty, or an act for which there is no authority or warrant of law or which a person ought not to do at all, or the unjust performance of some act, which party performing it has no right, or has contracted not, to do. Daugherty v. Ellis, 142 W.Va. 340, 97 S.E.2d 33, 42. It differs from "misfeasance" and "non-feasance" (q.v.).

Mal gree /mäl griy/. L. Fr. Against the will; without the consent. Hence the single word "malgre," and more modern "maugre" (q.v.).

Malice. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse, with an intent to inflict an injury or under circumstances that the law will imply an evil intent. A condition of mind which prompts a person to do a wrongful act willfully, that is, on purpose, to the injury of another, or to do intentionally a wrongful act toward another without justification or excuse. A conscious violation of the law (or the prompting of the mind to commit it) which operates to the prejudice of another person. A condition of the mind showing a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Cockrell v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 218, 117 S.W.2d 1105, 1109, 1110. Malice in law is not necessarily personal hate or ill will, but it is that state of mind which is reckless of law and of the legal rights of the citizen.

In murder, that condition of mind which prompts one to take the life of another without just cause, legal justification, or provocation. A willful or corrupt intention of the mind. It includes not only anger, hatred and revenge, but also every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. People v. Aaron, 299 N.W.2d 304, 326.

As requirement to sustain award of punitive damages is wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. Malik v. Apex Intern. Alloys, Inc., C.A.Okl., 762 F.2d 77, 80.

As used in Bankruptcy Code (§ 523(a)(6)) provision excepting from discharge liabilities for willful and malicious injuries to another entity or property of another entity does not require personal hatred or ill will, but requires that debtor know his act will harm another and proceed in face of such knowledge. Matter of Chambers, Bkrtcy.Wisc., 23 B.R. 206, 210.

In libel and slander, as to privileged communications, "malice" involves an evil intent or motive arising from spite or ill will; personal hatred or ill will; or culpable recklessness or a willful and wanton disregard of the rights and interests of the person defamed. In a libel case it consists in intentionally publishing, without justifiable cause, any written or printed matter which is injurious to the character of another. Becker v. Brinkop, 230 Mo.App. 871, 78 S.W.2d 538, 541. Malice may be defined, in so far as defamation is concerned, as acting in bad faith and with knowledge of falsity of statements. Rice v. Winkelman Bros. Apparel, Inc., 13 Mich.App. 281, 164 N.W.2d 417, 420. In the context of a libel suit brought by a public figure, it consists in publishing the false defamation knowing it to be false or with a reckless disregard of whether it is true or false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel; Slander.

In the law of malicious prosecution, it means that the prosecution was instituted primarily because of a purpose other than that of bringing an offender to justice. Brown v. Kisner, 192 Miss. 746, 6 So.2d 611, 617. It is the intentional doing of a wrongful act without legal justification, and may be inferred from the absence of probable cause; it does not necessarily involve hatred or ill will. Palermo v. Cottom, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 758, 765. See also Malicious prosecution.

Actual malice. Express malice, or malice in fact. Eteenpain Co-op. Soc. v. Lillback, C.C.A.Mass., 18 F.2d 912, 917. In libel law, "actual malice" can be established either by proving the publication was made with the knowledge of its falsity of its contents or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. Hepps v. Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc., 506 Pa. 304, 485 A.2d 374, 389. Such will be found where an intent to inflict harm through falsehood is established. Cochran v. Indianapolis Newspapers, Inc., 175 Ind.App. 548, 372 N.E.2d 1211, 1219. See also Malice in fact.

Constructive malice. Implied malice; malice inferred from acts; malice imputed by law; malice which is not shown by direct proof of an intention to do injury (express malice), but which is inferentially established by the necessarily injurious results of the acts shown to have been committed. See also Implied malice, below.

Express malice. Actual malice; malice in fact; ill will or wrongful motive. A deliberate intention to commit an injury, evidenced by external circumstances. Sparf v. U.S., 156 U.S. 51, 15 S.Ct. 273, 39 L.Ed. 343. See also Express malice; Malice in fact.

Implied malice. Malice inferred by legal reasoning and necessary deduction from the res gestae or the conduct of the party. Malice inferred from any deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. What is called "general malice" is often thus inferred. Sparf v. U. S., 156 U.S. 51, 15 S.Ct. 273, 39 L.Ed. 343. See also Constructive malice, above; and Malice in law.

Legal malice. See Legal malice; Malice in law.

Particular malice. Malice directed against a particular individual. Ill will; a grudge; a desire to be revenged on a particular person. See also Special malice, below.

Preconceived malice. Malice prepense or aforethought. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Premeditated malice. An intention to kill unlawfully, deliberately formed in the mind as the result of a determination meditated upon and fixed before the act. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Special malice. Particular or personal malice; that is, hatred, ill will, or a vindictive disposition against a particular individual.

Universal malice. By this term is not meant a malicious purpose to take the life of all persons, but it is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

Malice aforethought. A predetermination to commit an act without legal justification or excuse. Harrison v. Commonwealth, 279 Ky. 510, 131 S.W.2d 454, 455. A malicious design to injure. State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693. The intentional doing of an unlawful act which was determined upon before it was executed. State v. Lane, Mo., 371 S.W.2d 261, 263. An intent, at the time of a killing, willfully to take the life of a human being, or an intent willfully to act in callous and wanton disregard of the consequences to human life; but "malice aforethought" does not necessarily imply any ill will, spite or hatred towards the individual killed. See also Premeditation.

Malice in fact. Express or actual malice. Ill will towards a particular person; an actual intention to injure or defame such person. Judge v. Rockford Memorial Hospital, 17 Ill.App.2d 365, 150 N.E.2d 202, 208. It implies desire or intent to injure, while "malice in law," or "implied malice," means wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse, and jury may infer it. See Malice (Actual malice). Compare Malice in law.
MALICE IN LAW

Malice in law. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. Lyons v. St. Joseph Belt Ry. Co., 232 Mo.App. 575, 84 S.W.2d 933, 944. Implied, inferred, or legal malice. As distinguished from malice in fact, it is presumed from tortious acts, deliberately done without just cause, excuse, or justification, which are reasonably calculated to injure another or others. See also Legal malice. Compare Malice in fact.

Malice pre pense. Malice aforethought; deliberate, pre-determined malice.

Malicious /mali'shəs/. Characterized by, or involving, malice; having, or done with, wicked, evil or mischievous intentions or motives; wrongful and done intentionally without just cause or excuse or as a result of ill will. See also Malice; Willful.

Malicious abandonment. In criminal law, the desertion of a wife or husband without just cause.

Malicious abuse of legal process. Wilfully misapplying court process to obtain object not intended by law. The willful misuse or misapplication of process to accomplish a purpose not warranted or commanded by the writ. The malicious perversion of a regularly issued process, whereby a result not lawfully or properly obtained on a writ is secured; not including cases where the process was procured maliciously but not abused or misused after its issuance. The employment of process where probable cause exists but where the intent is to secure objects other than those intended by law. Hughes v. Swinehart, D.C.Pa., 376 F.Supp. 650, 652. The tort of "malicious abuse of process" requires a perversion of court process to accomplish some end which the process was not designed to accomplish, and does not arise from a regular use of process, even with ulterior motives. Capital Elec. Co. v. Cristaldi, D.C.Md., 187 F.Supp. 646, 648. See also Abuse (Process); Malicious prosecution. Compare Malicious use of process.

Malicious accusation. Procuring accusation or prosecution of another from improper motive and without probable cause. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious act. A wrongful act intentionally done without legal justification or excuse; an unlawful act done willfully or purposely to injure another.

Malicious arrest. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious assault with deadly weapon. Form of aggravated assault in which the victim is threatened with death or serious bodily injury from the defendant's use of a deadly weapon. The element of malice can be inferred from the nature of the assault and the selection of the weapon.

Malicious injury. An injury committed against a person at the prompting of malice or hatred towards him, or done spitefully or wantonly. The willful doing of an act with knowledge it is liable to injure another and regardless of consequences. Injury involving element of fraud, violence, wantonness and willfulness, or criminality. An injury that is intentional, wrongful and without just cause or excuse, even in the absence of hatred, spite or ill will. Panchula v. Kaya, 59 Ohio App. 556, 18 N.E.2d 1003, 1005, 13 O.O. 301. Punitive damages may be awarded to plaintiff for such injury.

Malicious killing. Any intentional killing without a legal justification or excuse and not within the realm of voluntary manslaughter. State v. Cope, 78 Ohio App. 429, 67 N.E.2d 912, 920, 34 O.O. 171.

Maliciously. Imports a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another, or an intent to do a wrongful act, and may consist in direct intention to injure, or in reckless disregard of another's rights. See also Malice; Malicious.

Malicious mischief. Willful destruction of personal property of another, from actual ill will or resentment towards its owner or possessor. Though only a trespass at the common law, it is now a crime in most states.

Malicious motive. Any motive for instituting a prosecution, other than a desire to bring an offender to justice. Lounder v. Jacobs, 119 Colo. 511, 205 P.2d 236, 238. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious prosecution. One begun in malice without probable cause to believe the charges can be sustained. An action for damages brought by person, against whom civil suit or criminal prosecution has been instituted maliciously and without probable cause, after termination of prosecution of such suit in favor of person claiming damages. Beaurline v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 426 S.W.2d 295, 296.

One who takes an active part in the initiation, continuation or procurement of civil proceedings against another is subject to liability to the other for wrongful civil proceedings if: (a) he acts without probable cause, and primarily for a purpose other than that of securing the proper adjudication of the claim in which the proceedings are based, and (b) except when they are ex parte, the proceedings have terminated in favor of the person against whom they are brought. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 674.

Elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution are: (1) commencement of prosecution of proceedings against present plaintiff; (2) its legal causation by present defendant; (3) its termination in favor of present plaintiff; (4) absence of probable cause for such proceedings; (5) presence of malice therein; and (6) damage to plaintiff by reason thereof. Palermo v. Cotton, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 758, 764.

In addition to the tort remedy for malicious criminal proceedings, the majority of states also permit tort actions for malicious institution of civil actions. See also Advice of counsel; False arrest; Vexatious proceeding.

Malicious trespass. The act of one who maliciously or mischievously injures or causes to be injured any property of another or any public property.

Malicious use of process. Utilization of process to intimidate, oppress or punish a person against whom it is sued out. Austin Liquor Mart, Inc. v. Department of Revenue, 18 Ill.App.3d 894, 310 N.E.2d 719, 728. Exists where plaintiff proceeds maliciously and without probable cause to execute object which law intends process to subserve. It has to do with the wrongful initiation of such process, while “abuse of civil process” is concerned with perversion of a process after it is issued. Hughes v. Swinehart, D.C.Pa., 376 F.Supp. 650, 653. See also Abuse (Process). Compare Malicious abuse of legal process.

Malignare /mælinjərɪ/. To malign or slander; also to maim.

Malingering /mælinɡərɪŋ/. To feign sickness or any physical disablement or mental lapse or derangement, especially for the purpose of escaping the performance of a task, duty, or work, or for purpose of continuing to receive disability payments. Person who consciously feigns or simulates mental or physical illness for gain.

Malitia /mæljɪtɪə/. Lat. Actual evil design; express designs of men must be thwarted.

Malitia supplent aetatem /mæljɪtɪə ˈspʌlənt əˈtɛtɛm/. Malice supplies [the want of] age.

Malitia hominis est obviandum /mæljɪtɪə ˈhɒmɪnɪs ɪst əbˈviːjəndəm/. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted.

Malleable /mælɪˈəbl/. Capable of being drawn out and extended by beating; capable of extension by hammering; reducible to laminated form by beating.

Mallory Rule. Rule derived from case of the same name in which the court held that a confession given by one who had been detained an unreasonable time before being brought before magistrate was inadmissible though it was otherwise voluntary and trustworthy. Mallory v. U. S., 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479. Also known as McNabb-Mallory Rule.

Mallum. In old European law, a court of the higher kind in which the more important business of the country was dispatched by the count or earl. A public national assembly.

Malo animo /mæləʊ ˈæmə,məʊ/. Lat. With an evil mind; with a bad purpose or wrongful intention; with malice.

Malo grato /mæləʊ ˈɡreɪtəʊ/. Lat. In spite; unwillingly.

Maloney Act. Amendment passed in 1938 to Securities Exchange Act requiring registration of brokers in over-the-counter securities.

Malpractice. Professional misconduct or unreasonable lack of skill. This term is usually applied to such conduct by doctors, lawyers, and accountants. Failure of one rendering professional services to exercise that degree of skill and learning commonly applied under all the circumstances in the community by the average prudent reputable member of the profession with the result of injury, loss or damage to the recipient of those services or to those entitled to rely upon them. It is any professional misconduct, unreasonable lack of skill or fidelity in professional or fiduciary duties, evil practice, or illegal or immoral conduct. Matthews v. Walker, 34 Ohio App.2d 128, 296 N.E.2d 569, 571, 63 O.O.2d 208. See also Discovery rule; Standard of care.

Legal malpractice. Consists of failure of an attorney to use such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise in performance of tasks which they undertake, and when such failure proximately causes damage it gives rise to an action in tort. Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart and Gelfand, 6 Cal.3d 176, 98 Cal.Rptr. 837, 838, 491 P.2d 421.

Medical malpractice. In medical malpractice litigation, negligence is the predominant theory of liability. In order to recover for negligent malpractice, the plaintiff must establish the following elements: (1) the existence of the physician’s duty to the plaintiff, usually based upon the existence of the physician-patient relationship; (2) the applicable standard of care and its violation; (3) a compensable injury; and, (4) a causal connection between the violation of the standard of care and the harm complained of. Kosberg v. Washington Hospital Center, Inc., 129 U.S.App.D.C. 322, 394 F.2d 947, 949. See also Captain of the ship doctrine; Continuous Treatment Doctrine; Discovery rule; Malpractice.

Maltreatment. In reference to the treatment of his patient by a surgeon, this term signifies improper or unskilful treatment; it may result either from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness; but the word does not necessarily imply that the conduct of the surgeon, in his treatment of the patient, is either willfully or grossly careless. See also Malpractice (Medical malpractice).

Malum in se. A wrong in itself; an act or case involving illegality from the very nature of the transaction, upon principles of natural, moral, and public law. Grindstaff v. State, 214 Tenn. 58, 377 S.W.2d 921, 926; State v. Shedoudy, 45 N.M. 516, 118 P.2d 280, 287. An act is said to be malum in se when it is inherently and essentially evil, that is, immoral in its nature and injurious in its consequences, without any regard to the fact of its being noticed or punished by the law of the state. Such are most or all of the offenses cognizable at common law (without the denouncement of a statute); as murder, larceny, etc. Compare Malum prohibitum.

Malum non habet efficientem, sed deficientem, causam. /mæləʊ nɒn ˈheɪbət əˈʃɪntəm ˈsed əˈʃɪntəm ˈkɔzəm/. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause.
Malum non prœsumitur /mælum nɒn prɔz(y)æwmatər/. Wickedness is not presumed.

Malum prohibitum /mælum prɔhibatəm/. A wrong prohibited; a thing which is wrong because prohibited; an act which is not inherently immoral, but becomes so because its commission is expressly forbidden by positive law; an act involving an illegality resulting from positive law. Compare Malum in se.

Malum quo communius eo pejus /mælum kwɔw kanjuwə(ɪ)yəs ɪəw plɪjəs/. The more common an evil is, the worse it is.

Malus usus abolendus est /mæləs yʊwsəs əboləndəs ɪst/. A bad or invalid custom is [ought] to be abolished.

Malveilles. In old English law, ill will; crimes and misdemeanors; malicious practices.

Malveis procurors /mælvəi prɔskjʊərəz/. L. Fr. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice.

Malversation /mælvərsəˈeɪʃən/. In French law, this word is applied to all grave and punishable faults committed in the exercise of a charge or commission (office), such as corruption, exaction, concussion, larceny.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children. See Mankind.

In feudal law, a vassal; a tenant or feudatory. The Anglo-Saxon relation of lord and man was originally purely personal, and founded on mutual contract.

Manacles. Chain for the hands; shackles.

Manage. To control and direct, to administer, to take charge of. To conduct; to carry on the concerns of a business or establishment. Generally applied to affairs that are somewhat complicated and that involve skill and judgment.

Management. Government, control, superintendence, physical or manual handling or guidance; act of managing by direction or regulation, or administration, as management of family, or of household, or of servants, or of great enterprises, or of great affairs. Branch v. Veterans’ Administration, 189 Ark. 662, 74 S.W.2d 800, 804. Discretionary power of direction.

Manager. One who has charge of corporation and control of its business, or of its branch establishments, divisions, or departments, and who is vested with a certain amount of discretion and independent judgment. Braniff v. McPherren, 177 Okl. 292, 58 P.2d 871, 872. A person chosen or appointed to manage, direct, or administer the affairs of another person or of a business, sports team, or the like. The designation of "manager" implies general power and permits reasonable inferences that the employee so designated is invested with the general conduct and control of his employer’s business.

U. S. Auto Ass’n v. Alexander Film Co., D.C.Mun.App., 93 A.2d 770, 771. See also General manager.

Also one of the persons appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to prosecute impeachments before the Senate.

Managers of a conference. In England, members of the houses of parliament appointed to represent each house at a conference between the two houses. It is an ancient rule that the number of commons named for a conference should be double those of the lords.

Managing agent. See Agent.

Managium /mænɪˈjɪjəm/. A mansion-house or dwelling-place.

Manas medie /mænәs miˈdiə/. Men of a mean condition, or of the lowest degree.

Manbote /mænbət/. In Roman law, a compensation or recompense for homicide, particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal, the amount of which was regulated by that of the were.

Manca, mancus, or mancusa /mæŋka/mæŋksə/). A square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence.

Manceps /mænsəps/. Lat. In Roman law, a purchaser; one who took the article sold in his hand; a formality observed in certain sales. A farmer of the public taxes.

Manche-present /mɒnʃ prɛˈzəʊn/. A bribe; a present from the donor’s own hand.

Mancipare /mænsəˈpɛrə/. Lat. In Roman law, to sell, alienate, or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities; to sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation.

Mancipate /mænsəˈpiːt/. To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Mancipatio /mænsəˈpiːʃ(ə)ˈreɪʃ(ə)nu/). Lat. In Roman law, a certain ceremony or formal process anciently required to be performed, to perfect the sale or conveyance of res mancipi (land, houses, slaves, horses, or cattle).

The parties were present (vendee and vendor), with five witnesses and a person called "libripens," who held a balance or scales. A set form of words was repeated on either side, indicative of transfer of ownership, and certain prescribed gestures made, and the vendee then struck the scales with a piece of copper, thereby symbolizing the payment, or weighing out, of the stipulated price.

The ceremony of mancipatio was used, in later times, in one of the forms of making a will. The testator acted as vendor, and the heir (or familie emptor) as purchaser, the latter symbolically buying the whole estate or succession, of the former. The ceremony was also used by a father in making a fictitious sale of his son, which sale, when three times repeated, effectuated the emancipation of the son.

Mancipi res /mænsəˈpiː rɛs/. Lat. In Roman law, certain classes of things which could not be aliened or transferred except by means of a certain formal ceremony of conveyance called "mancipatio" (q.v.). These included land, houses, slaves, horses, and cattle. All other things were called "res nec mancipi."
The distinction was abolished by Justinian. The distinction corresponded as nearly as may be to the early distinction of English law into real and personal property; res mancipi being objects of a military or agricultural character, and res nec mancipi being all other subjects of property. Like personal estate, res nec mancipi were not originally either valuable in se or valued.

Mancipium (/mænsi̱pi̱yəm/). Lat. In Roman law, the momentary condition in which a filius, etc., might be when in course of emancipation from the potestas, and before that emancipation was absolutely complete. The condition was not like the dominica potestas over slaves, but slaves are frequently called "mancipia" in the non-legal Roman authors.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater familias, viz.: the manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per as et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. Si pater filium ter venum dat, filius a patre liber est. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quaedam venditio, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation.

Mancomunal (/mænkəmʊnəl/). In Spanish law, an obligation is said to be mancomunal when one person assumes the contract or debt of another, and makes himself liable to pay or fulfill it.

Mancus (/mæŋkuːs/). See Manca, mancus, or mancusa.

Mandamiento (/mændəmyəntoʊ/). In Spanish law, commission; authority or power of attorney. A contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge.

Mandamus (/mændəymes/). Lat. We command. This is the name of a writ (formerly a high prerogative writ) which issues from a court of superior jurisdiction, and is directed to a private or municipal corporation, or any of its officers, or to an executive, administrative or judicial officer, or to an inferior court, commanding the performance of a particular act therein specified, and belonging to his or their public, official, or ministerial duty, or directing the restoration of the complainant to rights or privileges of which he has been illegally deprived. A writ issuing from a court of competent jurisdiction, commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation, or person to perform a purely ministerial duty imposed by law. Nebel v. Nebel, 241 N.C. 491, 85 S.E.2d 876, 882.

Extraordinary writ which lies to compel performance of ministerial act or mandatory duty where there is a clear legal right in plaintiff, a corresponding duty in defendant, and a want of any other appropriate and adequate remedy. Cohen v. Ford, 19 Pa.Cmwlth. 417, 339 A.2d 175, 177. See also Ministerial act.

The U.S. District Courts have original jurisdiction of any action in the nature of mandamus to compel an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof to perform a duty owed to the plaintiff. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1361.

Mandamus has traditionally issued in response to abuses of judicial power. Thus, where a district judge refuses to take some action he is required to take or takes some action he is not empowered to take, mandamus will lie. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland, 346 U.S. 379, 384, 74 S.C.T. 145, 98 L.Ed. 106. The Supreme Court may issue a writ of mandamus in aid of the appellate jurisdiction that might otherwise be defeated by the unauthorized action of the court below. McEl­lan v. Caroland, 217 U.S. 268, 30 S.C.T. 501, 503, 54 L.Ed. 762.

The remedy of mandamus is a drastic one, to be invoked only in extraordinary situations. Banker's Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland, 346 U.S. 379, 382–385, 74 S.C.T. 145, 147–149, 98 L.Ed. 106; Ex parte Fahey, 332 U.S. 258, 259, 67 S.Ct. 1585, 1589, 91 L.Ed. 2041. The writ has traditionally been used in the federal courts only "to confine an inferior court to a lawful exercise of its prescribed jurisdiction or to compel it to exercise its authority when it is its duty to do so." Will v. United States, 389 U.S., at 95, 88 S.Ct., at 273, quoting Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21, 26, 63 S.Ct. 938, 941, 87 L.Ed. 1185.

Pleading. Like most of the extraordinary writs, the writ of mandamus has been abolished under rules practice in favor of a complaint or motion in the nature of mandamus which accomplishes the same object, e.g. Federal or Mass.R.Civ.P. 81(b).

Mandans (/mændənz/). Lat. In the civil law, the employing party in a contract of mandate. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests, or employs another to do some act for him.

Mandant (/mændənt/). In French and Scotch law, the employing party in the contract of mandatum, or mandate.

Mandataire (/mændətɛr/). Fr. In French law, a person employed by another to do some act for him; a mandatory.

Mandata libica recipiunt strictam interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam /mandéyda lissata rśniyant strikiam intárpratéshjyównam, sëd aļissata léytam et źkšensam/. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful commands a broad and extended one.

Mandatarius terminos sibi postos transgredi non potest /mændáteríyas tårmanas sibay póžtows trærntshyday nóng póýtwést/. A mandatory cannot exceed the limits assigned him.
MANDATORY

Mandatory /mêndatêriy/. He to whom a mandate, charge, or commandment is given; also, he that obtains a benefit by mandamus. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662.

Mandate. A command, order, or direction, written or oral, which court is authorized to give and person is bound to obey. Silverman v. Seneca Realty Co., 154 Misc. 35, 276 N.Y.S. 466. A judicial command or precept proceeding from a court or judicial officer, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. A precept or order issued upon the decision of an appeal or writ of error, directing action to be taken, or disposition to be made of case, by inferior court. Official mode of communicating judgment of appellate court to lower court, directing action to be taken or disposition to be made of cause by trial court. Tierney v. Tierney, Fla.App., 290 So.2d 136, 137. See also Decree; Order.

A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without payment. Agreement to perform services for another without pay.

A contract by which a lawful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be performed gratuitously. The mandatory is bound to the exercise of slight diligence, and is responsible for gross neglect. Williams v. Conger, 125 U.S. 397, 8 S.Ct. 293, 296; Graf v. Ford Motor Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 390, 243 N.E.2d 138, 139, 5 O.0. 291.

Mandatum /mêndéytam/. Lat. In the civil law, the contract of mandate (q.v.).

Mandatum nisi gratuitum nullum est /mêndéytam náysay gratüywstam nálam èst/. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate.

Mandati vel bélawow. (I have commanded or made my mandate to the bailiff.) In English practice, the return made by a sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty has the execution of a writ, that he has commanded the bailiff to execute it.

Manerium /maniriyam/. In old English law, a manor.

Manerium dictur a manendo, secundum excellentiam, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis /maniriyam disstar ey manendo, sakêndam éksalênshiyam, sílydiyz mëgna, fiksm, et stéybalas/. A manor is so called from manendo, according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm.

Mangonare /mëgonéry/. In old English law, to buy in a market.

Manhood. The status of one who has reached his legal majority which in most jurisdictions is 18. Formerly, it was the age of 21. When this status is achieved, a person may act sui juris. See also Legal age; Majority.

In feudal law, a term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was, "Devenio vester homo"; I become your man. 2 Bl.Comm. 54.

Mania /mëniy/. See Insanity.

Manic. Phase of manic-depressive psychosis in which the mood of the patient is overactive and expansive; characterized by excessive ego valuation and over-estimation of personal importance. Manic mood may include boisterousness, joviality, anger, joyousness.

Manifest. Evident to the senses, especially to the sight, obvious to the understanding, evident to the mind, not obscure or hidden, and is synonymous with open, clear, visible, unmistakable, indubitable, evident, and self-evident. In evidence, that which is clear and self-evident. In evidence, that which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious. Houston v. Leyden Motor Coach Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 348, 243 N.E.2d 293, 296; Graf v. Ford Motor Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 390, 243 N.E.2d 337, 341.

Mandatory statutory provision is one which must be observed, as distinguished from "directory" provision, which leaves it optional with department or officer to which addressed to obey it or not. State ex rel. Dworken v. Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, 131 Ohio St. 23, 1 N.E.2d 138, 139, 5 O.O. 291.

Mandatory statutory provision. See Statute. (q.v.)

Mandatory statute. See Statute. (q.v.)

Mandatory statutes. Generic term describing statutes which require and not merely permit a course of action. They are characterized by such directives as "shall" and not "may."

A "mandatory" provision in a statute is one the omission to follow which renders the proceedings to which it relates void, while a "directory" provision is one the observance of which is not necessary to validity of the proceeding. It is also said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory, Kavanaugh v. Fash, C.C.A.Okl., 74 F.2d 435, 437; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Document used in shipping and warehousing containing a list of the contents, value, origin, carrier and destination of the goods to be shipped or warehoused. A written document required to be carried by merchant vessels, containing an account of the cargo, with other particulars, for the facility of the customs officers. The Sylvia II, D.C.Mass., 28 F.2d 215, 216. See 19 U.S.C.A. § 1431 et seq. List of passengers and cargo kept by vessel and aircraft.
Manifesta probatone non indigent /mænɪfɪstoʊ prɔbɛɪ̯ʃəni ˈnɒn ɪndədʒɪnt/. Things manifest do not require proof.

Manifestation of intention. In trusts and wills, the external expression of intention as distinguished from the undisclosed internal intention. Restatement of Trusts, Second, § 2, comment g.

Manifest law. See Lex manifesta, s. v. Lex.

Manifest necessity. Doctrine of "manifest necessity" which will authorize granting of mistrial in criminal case, and preclude defendant from successfully raising plea of former jeopardy, contemplates a sudden and overwhelming emergency beyond control of court and unforeseeable, and it does not mean expediency. Fonseca v. Judges of Family Court of Kings County, 59 Misc. 2d 492, 496, 299 N.Y.S. 2d 493, 498. Such exists where, due to circumstances beyond control of parties and court, it becomes no longer possible to conduct trial, or to reach a fair result based upon the evidence. People v. Turner, 105 Ill.App. 3d 393, 61 Ill.Dec. 275, 278, 434 N.E.2d 428, 431.

Manifesto /mænɪfɪstəʊ/. A formal written declaration, promulgated by a sovereign, or by the executive authority of a state or nation, proclaiming its reasons and motives for declaring a war, or for any other important international action. Public declaration or proclamation of political or social principals.

Manifest weight of evidence. The word "manifest", in rule that appellate court cannot substitute its opinion for that of trial court as to facts unless trial court's finding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence, means unmistakable, clear, plain, or indisputable, and requires that an opposite conclusion be clearly evident. Levin v. Siver, 27 Ill.App. 3d 134, 169 N.E.2d 156.

Manipulation. Series of transactions involving the buying or selling of a security for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading or to raise or depress the price to induce the purchase or sale by others. Such acts are prohibited by Sec. 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C.A. § 78i, j. See also Wash sale.

Mankind. The race or species of human beings. In law, females, as well as males, are included under this term.

Mann Act. Federal statute (White Slave Traffic Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2421) making it a crime to transport a woman or girl in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of prostitution or debauchery, or for any other immoral purpose.

Manner. A way, mode, method of doing anything, or mode of proceeding in any case or situation. See also Custom and Usage.

Manner and form; modo et forma. In common law pleading, formal words introduced at the conclusion of a traverse. Their object is to put the party whose pleading is traversed not only to the proof that the matter of fact denied is, in its general effect, true as alleged, but also that the manner and form in which the fact or facts are set forth are also capable of proof.

Manning. A day's work of a man. A summoning to court.

Mannire /mænɪərɪ/. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. It is different from bannire; for, though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge.

Mannopus /mænəˈpɒs/. In old English law, goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. The same as "mainour" (q.v.).

Man of straw. See Men of straw.

Manor. A house, dwelling, seat, or residence.

In English law, the manor was originally a tract of land granted out by the king to a lord or other great person, in fee. It was otherwise called a "barony" or "lordship," and appendant to it was the right to hold a court, called the "court-baron." The lands comprised in the manor were divided into terre tenementales (tenemental lands or bockland) and terre dominicales, or desmesne lands. The former were given by the lord of the manor to his followers or retainers in freehold. The latter were such as he reserved for his own use; but of these part were held by tenants in copyhold, i.e., those holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court; and part, under the name of the "lord's waste," served for public roads and commons of pasture for the lord and tenants. The tenants, considered in their relation to the court-baron and to each other, were called "pares curiae". The word also signified the franchise of having a manor, with jurisdiction for a court-baron and the right to the rents and services of copyholders.

Reputed manor. Whenever the demesne lands and the services become absolutely separated, the manor ceases to be a manor in reality, although it may (and usually does) continue to be a manor in reputation, and is then called a "reputed manor," and it is also sometimes called a "seigniory in gross."

Manorial extent /mænəˈriːəl ɛkˈstɛnt/. In old English law, a survey of a manor made by a jury of tenants, often of unfree men sworn to sit for the particulars of each tenancy, and containing the smallest details as to the nature of the service due. These manorial extents were made in the interest of the lords, who were anxious that all due services should be done; but they imply that other and greater services were not due, that the customary tenants, even though they be unfree men, owed these services for their tenements, no less and no more. Statements that the tenants were not bound to do services of a particular kind were not very uncom-

Mansion-house. In Anglo-Saxon times the Manor. In old English law, a habitation or dwelling, generally with land attached. A residence or dwelling-house for the parish priest; a parsonage or vicarage house.
Manser /mânsar/. A bastard.
Mansio /mânsi(i)yow/. In Anglo-Saxon times the amount of land which would support a man and his family, called by various names.
Mansion-house. In the law of burglary, etc., any species of dwelling-house.
Manslaughter. The unjustifiable, inexcusable and inten¬ tional killing of a human being without deliberation, premeditation and malice. State v. Banister, Mo.App., 512 S.W.2d 843, 845. The unlawful killing of a human without any deliberation, which may be involuntary, in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and 859, 40 L.Ed. 1039.

Criminal homicide constitutes manslaughter when:
(a) it is committed recklessly; or (b) a homicide which would otherwise be murder is committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance for which there is reasonable explanation or excuse.
The reasonableness of such explanation or excuse shall determine from the viewpoint of a person in the actor's situation under the circumstances as he believes them to be. Model Penal Code, § 210.3.

The heat of passion, which will reduce a murder to manslaughter, must be such passion as would be aroused naturally in the mind of the ordinary reason¬ able person under the same or similar circumstances, as shown by the evidence in the case.

See also Adequate cause; Assault with intent to commit manslaughter; Hot blood; Negligent manslaughter; Sudden heat of passion.

There are various types or degrees of manslaughter recognized by federal and state statutes:
Involuntary manslaughter. Such exists where a person in committing an unlawful act not felonious or tending to great bodily harm, or in committing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, unguardedly or undesignedly kills another. Model Penal Code, § 210.3(1)(a); 18 U.S.C.A. § 1112. Compare Accidental killing.

Voluntary manslaughter. Manslaughter committed vol¬ untarily upon a sudden heat of the passions; as if, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other. Model Penal Code, § 210.3(1)(b); 18 U.S.C.A. § 1112. It is the unlawful taking of human life without malice and under circumstances falling short of willful, premeditated, or deliberate intent to kill and approaching too near thereto to be justifiable homicide.

The absence of intention to kill or to commit any unlawful act which might reasonably produce death or great bodily harm is the distinguishing feature between voluntary and involuntary homicide.

Manstealing. A word sometimes used synonymously with “kidnapping” (q.v.).

Mansuetae naturae /mânswi(y)tiy natyûriy/. Tamed and domesticated animals.

Mansuetus /mânswi(y)tas/. Lat. Tame; as though ac¬ customed to come to the hand.

Mantheoff /mâni(y)fi/. In Saxon law, a horse-stealer.

Manticulate /mânti(ky)âiye(t)/. To pick pockets.

Mantle children /mântal childran/. See Pallio cooper¬ are.

Manual. Of, or pertaining to, the hand or hands; done, made, or operated by or used with the hand or hands; or as manual labor. Performed by the hand; used or employed by the hand; held in the hand. See also Manual labor.

Manual delivery. Delivery of personal property sold, donated, mortgaged, etc., by passing it into the “hand” of the purchaser or transferee, that is, by an actual and corporeal change of possession.

Manual gift. The manual gift, that is, the giving of corporeal movable effects, accompanied by a real deliv¬ er; such is not subject to any formality.

Manualis obedientia /mânyuwyélys abiydiyénsi(y)i/.
Sworn obedience or submission upon oath.

Manual labor. Work done with the hand. State v. Ash, 53 Ariz. 197, 87 P.2d 270, 272. Labor performed by hand or by the exercise of physical force, with or with¬ out the aid of tools, machinery or equipment, but de¬ pending for its effectiveness chiefly upon personal mus¬ cular exertion rather than upon skill, intelligence or adroitness.

Manu brevi /mâni(y)iuw brîyvay/. Lat. With a short hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuity.

Manucaptio /mânyuwképsh(i)yow/. In old English practice, a writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to main¬ prise.

Manucaptors /mânyuwképtors/. Same as mainpernors (q.v.).

Manufacture. v. From Latin words manus and factura, literally, put together by hand. Now it means the process of making products by hand, machinery, or other automated means. United States v. Anderson, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 943, 946. Meaning of word “manu-
Manufacture, n. The process or operation of making goods or wares by manual labor or by machinery, especially on a large scale, has expanded as workmanship and art have advanced, so that now nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions or new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes devised and directed by human skill, or by the employment of machinery, are commonly designated as "manufactured."

Manufacture. n. The process or operation of making goods or any material produced by hand, by machinery or by other agency; anything made from raw materials by the hand, by machinery, or by art. The production of articles for use from raw or prepared materials by giving such materials new forms, qualities, properties or combinations, whether by hand labor or machine. Cain's Coffee Co. v. City of Muskogee, 171 Okl. 635, 44 P.2d 50, 52.

In patent law, any useful product made directly by human labor, or by the aid of machinery directed and controlled by human power, and either from raw materials, or from materials worked up into a new form. Also the process by which such products are made or fashioned.

Manufacturer. One who by labor, art, or skill transforms raw material into some kind of a finished product or article of trade. Henry v. Markesan State Bank, C.C.A.Minn., 68 F.2d 554, 557. Any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal relationship which manufactures, assembles, or produces goods.

Manufacturers liability doctrine. The foundation for the liability under this doctrine is knowledge of the danger attending use of manufactured or assembled product and negligence in failing to give appropriate warning, or negligence in failing to discover and appreciate the danger, and the probable consequences that injury will proximately result from the use of such product for the purposes for which it was intended. See Strict liability.

Manufacturing corporation. A corporation engaged in the production of some article, thing, or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to artificial forces, or to which something has been added to change its natural condition.

Manufacturing establishment. Any place where machinery is used for manufacturing purposes. Lilley v. Eberhardt, Mo., 37 S.W.2d 599, 601.

Manu fort /mæn(y)uw förtyay/. Lat. With strong hand. A term used in old writs of trespass. Manu fort et cum multitudine gentium, with strong hand and multitude of people.

Manu longa /mæn(y)uw lógga/. Lat. With a long hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying indirectly or circuitously.

Manumission /mæn(y)amishan/. The act of liberating a slave from bondage and giving him freedom. In a wider sense, releasing or delivering one person from the power or control of another. Enfranchisement.

Manumittere idem est quo extra manum vel postes- tatem ponerere /mænymomitáray aydám est kwód ekstro ménám vél pówdstétam pównriy/. To manumit is the same as to place beyond hand and power.

Manung or monung. In old English law, the district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.

Manu opera /mæn(y)uw ópura/. Lat. Cattle or implements of husbandry; also stolen goods taken from a thief caught in the fact.

Manupes /mæn(y)apizya/. In old English law, a foot of full and legal measure.

Manupretium /mæn(y)apriyz/. In old English law, a foot of full and legal measure.

Many. The word "many" is defined as consisting of a great number, numerous, not few. Many is a word of very indefinite meaning, and, though it is defined to be numerous and multitudinous, it is also recognized as synonymous with "several", "sundry", "various" and "divers". Goslin v. Kurn, 351 Mo. 395, 173 S.W.2d 79, 87.

Map. A representation of the earth's surface, or of some portion of it, showing the relative position of the parts represented, usually on a flat surface. See also Plat map.

Mapp v. Ohio. Landmark Supreme Court case decided in 1961 in which it was ruled that evidence illegally obtained by state officers is not admissible in a state trial if appropriate motions are filed to suppress. The rationale for the rule is that the 4th Amendment (U.S. Const.) protection against unreasonable search and seizure is applicable to the states under and through the 14th Amendment. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081.

Mar. To make defective; to damage greatly; to impair, spoil, ruin; to do physical injury to, especially by cutting off or defacing a part; to mutilate; mangle; disfigure; deface.

Mara /märə/. In old records, a mere or moor; a lake, pool, or pond; a bog or marsh that cannot be drained.

Marajuana. See Marihuana.

Maraud. To rove about in search of booty; to pillage or plunder. To invade another's domain to pillage or to loot.

Marbury v. Madison. Landmark case decided in 1803 in which the Supreme Court established the right of the judicial branch to pass on the constitutionality of an act of Congress, thereby establishing the functions and prerogatives of the judiciary in its relation to the legislative branch. Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 2 L.Ed. 60.

Marcatus /märkäta/. The rent of a mark by the year.

Marchandises avariees. In French mercantile law, damaged goods.

Marchers. In old English law, noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, and who, according to Camden, had their private laws, as if they had been petty kings; which were abolished by the statute 27 Hen. VIII, c. 26. Called also "lords marchers."

Marches. An old English term for boundaries or frontiers, particularly the boundaries and limits between England and Wales, or between England and Scotland, or the borders of the dominions of the crown, or the boundaries of properties in Scotland.

Marcheta /märkäta/. In old English law, a fine paid for leave to marry, or to bestow a daughter in marriage.

Marchioness /märshanës/. A dignity in a woman answerable to that of marquis in a man, conferred either by creation or by marriage with a marquis.

Mare /märë/. Lat. The sea.

Marescallus /märəskæləs/. In old English law, a marshal; a master of the stables; an officer of the exchequer; a military officer of high rank, having powers and duties similar to those of a constable. See also Marshal.

Mareschal /märəshəl/. L. Fr. Marshal; a high officer of the royal household.

Marettum /märətəm/. Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers.

Margin. The edge or border; the edge of a body of water where it meets the land. As applied to a boundary line of land, the "margin" of a river, creek, or other water-course means the center of the stream. But in the case of a lake, bay, or natural pond, the "margin" means the line where land and water meet.

In finance, difference between market value of loan collateral and face value of loan.

A sum of money, or its equivalent, placed in the hands of a broker by the principal or person on whose account a purchase or sale of securities is to be made, as a security to the former against losses to which he may be exposed by subsequent fluctuations in the market value of the stock. The amount paid by the customer when he uses his broker's credit to buy a security. See also Margin account; Margin transaction.

In commercial transactions the difference between the purchase price paid by a middleman or retailer and his selling price, or difference between price received by manufacturer for its goods and costs to produce. Also called gross profit margin. See also Profit; Remargining.

Margin account. Securities industry's method of extending credit to customers. Under such practice customer purchases specified amount of stock from securities firm by advancing only portion of purchase price, with brokerage firm extending credit or making loan for balance due, and firm maintains such stock as collateral for loan and charges interest on balance of purchase price. Margin account requirements are specified by regulations of Federal Reserve Board. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 78g. Stephens v. Reynolds Securities, Inc., D.C.Ala., 413 F.Supp. 50. See also Margin transaction.

Marginal street. Dock or wharf used in conjunction with and in furtherance of commerce and navigation. In re Triborough Bridge Approach, City of New York, 159 Misc. 617, 288 N.Y.S. 697, 711, 716.

Margin call. A demand by a broker to put up money or securities upon purchase of a stock, or, if the stock is already owned on margin, to increase the money or securities in the event the price of the stock has or is likely to fall since purchase. The last process (of maintaining the minimum required margin) is remargining. See Margin requirement.

Margin list. List of Federal Reserve Board which limits the loan value of a bank's stock to a certain per cent (e.g. 50%) of its market value. When a bank is not on the margin list, no limit is placed on the value of its stock for use as collateral.

Margin profit. See Margin; Profit.

Margin requirement. The percentage of the purchase price that must be deposited with a broker to purchase a security on margin. The margin requirement is set or adjusted by the Federal Reserve Board.

Margin trading. See Margin; Margin account; Margin transaction.

Margin transaction. The purchase of a stock or commodity with payment in part in cash (called the margin) and in part by a loan. Usually the loan is made by the broker effecting the purchase. See also Margin account.
Marihuana, mariguana, marijuana /ˈmærə(h)wona/. An annual herb, cannabis sativa, having angular rough stem and deeply lobed leaves. The bast fibres of cannabis are the hemp of commerce. A drug prepared from "cannabis sativa," designated in technical dictionaries as "cannabis" and commonly known as marihuana, mariguana, marihuana, marajuana, or maraguana. State v. Navaro, 83 Utah 6, 26 P.2d 955.

"Marihuana" means all parts of the plant Cannabis sativa L., whether growing or not; the seeds thereof; the resin extracted from any part of the plant; and every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of the plant, its seeds or resin. It does not include the mature stalks of the plant, fiber produced from the stalks, oil or cake made from the seeds of the plant, any other compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of the mature stalks (except the resin extracted therefrom), fiber, oil, or cake, or the sterilized seed of the plant which is incapable of germination. Uniform Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C.A. § 802. See also Cannabis.

Marihuana is also commonly referred to as "pot", "grass", "tea", "weed" or "Mary-Jane"; and in cigarette form as a "joint" or "reefer".

Marinarius /ˌmɑrɪnəriəs/. An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitanus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

Marine. Naval; relating or pertaining to the sea; maritime; having to do with navigation and commerce of the sea; pertaining to maritime affairs, or connected with navigation and commerce of the sea; i.e. maritime matters. Member of U.S. Marine Corps. See also Maritime.

Marine belt. That portion of the main or open sea, adjacent to the shores of a given country, over which the jurisdiction of its municipal laws and local authorities extends. Territorial waters, defined by international law as extending out three miles from the shore. See also Territorial waters.

Marine carrier. By statutes of several states this term is applied to carriers plying upon the ocean, arms of the sea, the Great Lakes, and other navigable waters within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Marine contract. One relating to maritime affairs, shipping, navigation, marine insurance, affreightment, maritime loans, or other business to be done upon the sea or in connection with navigation. See e.g. Bareboat charter.

Marine court in the city of New York. Formerly, a local court of New York City, originally created as a tribunal for the settlement of causes between seamen. It was the predecessor of the City Court of the city of New York.

Marine insurance. See Insurance.

Marine Interest. Interest, allowed to be stipulated for at an extraordinary rate, for the use and risk of money loaned on respondentia and bottomry bonds.

Marine league /ˈmæriən lɪŋ/. A measure of distance commonly employed at sea, being equal to one-twentieth part of a degree of latitude, or three geographical or nautical miles.

Mariner. A seaman or sailor; one engaged in navigating vessels upon the sea; persons employed abroad ships or vessels.

Marine risk. The perils of the sea; the perils necessarily incident to navigation.

Mariner's will. A nuncapatute or oral will permitted in some jurisdictions for the sailor who is actually at sea at the time of making the will. Generally, such will affects personal property only.

Maris et feminae conjunctio est de jure naturae /ˌməriəs ət ʃeɪməni ˈkɒŋˌnʌŋkʃiəʊn ɪst ə di ˈdʒʊri nəˈtɜːri/. The connection of male and female is by the law of nature.

Maritaggio amissio per defaltam /ˌmærɪtədʒiəʊ əmɪˈʃiəʊ ˌpər ˌdɛfəltəm/. An obsolete writ for the tenant in frank-marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

Maritaggium /ˌmærɪtədʒiəʊˌjɪm/. The portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. Also the power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony.

Maritaggio est aut liberum aut servitio obligatum; liberam maritaggium dicitur ubi donator vult quod terra sic data quieta sit et libera ab omni seculari servitio /ˌmærɪtədʒiəʊˌjɪm əst ət ˈlɪbərəm ət ˈsɜrvɪʃiəʊˌjɪm ˈəblɪˈɡətəm; ˈlɪbərəm ˌmærɪtədʒiəʊˌjɪm ˈdɪsʌtər ˈjuːəbweɪ daʊˈnɛtər vəlt kwəd ˈtɛrə sɪk ˈdɛta kwaɪətə sit ət ˈlɪbərə əb ˈɒmən sekˈələrər ˈsɜrvɪʃiəˌjɪm/. A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called "frank-marriage" when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service.

Maritaggio habere /ˌmærɪtədʒiəʊˌjɪm ˈhæbəri/. To have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

Marital /ˈmærɪtəl/ or /ˈmærətəl/. Relating to, or connected with, the status of marriage; pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.

Marital agreements. Contracts between parties who are either on the threshold of marriage or on the verge of separation, though, in general, the term refers to all agreements between married people. Such agreements are primarily concerned with the division and ownership of marital property. In some jurisdictions, the contract must be made through a third person if the law does not permit the spouses to contract directly with each other. A number of states have adopted the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act. See also Antenuptial agreement; Equitable distribution; Marriage settlement; Post-nuptial agreement.

Marital communications privilege. In most jurisdictions private communications between the spouses during the marriage are privileged at the option of the witness spouse and hence inadmissible in a trial. In some jurisdictions the communications are disqualified, and hence not admissible, even with the consent of the witness spouse. This privilege is subject to certain limitations; e.g. prosecutions for crimes committed by one spouse against the other or against the children of either; also, communications made in letter dictated by husband to stenographer to his wife is not within privilege, Wolfe v. U.S., 291 U.S. 7, 54 S.Ct. 279, 78 L.Ed. 617; presence of third party and intent that third party communicate message destroys privilege. See also Husband-wife privilege.

Marital deduction. A deduction allowed upon the transfer of property from one spouse to another. The deduction is allowed under the Federal gift tax for lifetime (i.e., inter vivos) transfers and also under the Federal estate tax for testamentary transfers. There is no ceiling on the estate tax marital deduction for decedents dying after 1981. I.R.C. §§ 2056, 2523. See also Pecuniary formulas.

Marital deduction trust. In estate planning, a device in the form of a trust utilized to gain the maximum benefit of the marital deduction by dividing the property in half. Commonly, one half of the property is transferred to the marital deduction trust and the other half is disposed of in a trust or like arrangement with a view towards having it escape taxation in the estate of the surviving spouse. As a result of a change in the law with respect to the estate of decedents dying after 1981, the marital deduction trust is generally not used. The law provides that there is no monetary ceiling on the estate tax marital deduction for decedents dying after 1981.

Marital portion. In Louisiana, the name given to that part of a deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled.

Marital privileges. Those rights, immunities and advantages which attach to the state of marriage such as the right to connubial relations and the right to hold property as husband and wife. See also Marital communications privilege.

Marital property. Term used to describe property of spouses subject to equitable distribution upon termination of marriage. Marriage of Schwartz, 1 Dist., 131 Ill.App.3d 351, 86 Ill.Dec. 698, 701, 475 N.E.2d 1077, 1080. Property purchased or otherwise accumulated by spouses while married to each other and which, in most jurisdictions, on dissolution of the marriage is divided in proportions as the court deems fit. Claunche v. Claunche, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 788, 790. See Community property; Equitable distribution; Property; Separate property.

Marital rights and duties. Those arising from marriage contract and constituting its object, and therefore embracing what the parties agree to perform towards each other and to society. Rights of husband and wife to a specified share of other's personal estate upon death of other. In re Dean's Estate, 350 Mo. 494, 168 S.W.2d 529, 534, 535.

Maritima Angliae /maritama ängliyiy/. In old English law, the emolument or revenue coming to the king from the sea, which the sheriffs annually collected, but which was afterwards granted to the admiral.

Maritima incrementa /maritama iğkrämënts/. In old English law, marine increases. Lands gained from the sea.

Maritime. Pertaining to navigable waters, i.e. to the sea, ocean, great lakes, navigable rivers, or the navigation or commerce thereof.

See also Federal Maritime Commission; Maritime court; Navigable waters.

Maritime Administration. An agency within the Department of Commerce which promotes and regulates the activities of the U.S. merchant marine, directs emergency operations related to merchant marine activities, establishes specifications for shipbuilding and design, determines routes, and manages other areas of merchant operations. The Maritime Act of 1981 transferred the Maritime Administration to the Department of Transportation. See also Maritime Commission.

Maritime belt. That part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U.S. 1, 26 S.Ct. 408, 50 L.Ed. 913. See also Marine belt; Territorial waters.

Maritime bills. See Bill (Maritime Law).

Maritime cause of action. A case arising on the sea, ocean, great lakes, or navigable rivers, or from some act or contract concerning the commerce and navigation thereof. The Thomas Jefferson, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 428, 6 L.Ed. 358; and Peyroux v. Howard, 32 U.S. (7 Pet.) 324, 8 L.Ed. 700. An action based upon an injury to a passenger of a vessel while on navigable waters and caused by negligence comes within scope of "maritime cause of action" within original jurisdiction of federal District Court. Cuozzo v. Italian Line, Italia-Societa Per Azioni Di Navigazione-Genoa, D.C.N.Y., 168 F.Supp. 304, 306. See also Maritime jurisdiction; Maritime law; Maritime tort; Navigable waters.

Maritime Commission. The Federal Maritime Commission regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic off-shore commerce of the United States, assures that United States international trade is open to all nations on fair and equitable terms, and guards against unauthorized monopoly in the waterborne commerce of the United States. This is accomplished through maintaining surveillance over steamship conferences and common carriers by water; assuring that only the rates on file with the Commission are charged; approving agreements between persons subject to the Shipping Acts of 1916 and 1984; guaranteeing equal treatment to shippers and carriers by terminal operators, freight forwarders, and other persons subject to the shipping statutes; and ensuring that adequate levels of financial responsibility are maintained for indemnification of passengers or oil spill cleanup. See also Maritime Administration.

Maritime contract. A contract relating to business of navigation. Massman Const. Co. v. Bassett, D.C.Mo., 30 F.Supp. 813, 815. A contract whose subject-matter has relation to the navigation of the seas or to trade or commerce to be conducted by navigation or to be done upon the sea or in ports. One having reference to maritime services or maritime transactions. Marubeni-Iida (America), Inc. v. Nippon Yusen Kaisha, D.C.N.Y., 207 F.Supp. 418, 419. As regards right to jury trial in contract disputes, see 28 U.S.C.A. § 1873.

Maritime court. A court exercising jurisdiction in maritime causes; one which possesses the powers and jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. See Admiralty court; Maritime jurisdiction.

Maritime interest. An expression equivalent to marine interest (q.v.).

Maritime law. That which the Congress has enacted or the Federal courts, sitting in admiralty, or in the exercise of their maritime jurisdiction, have declared and would apply. J. B. Effenson Co. v. Three Bays Corp., C.A.Fla., 238 F.2d 611, 615. That system of law which particularly relates to marine commerce and navigation, to business transacted at sea or relating to navigation, to ships and shipping, to seamen, to the transportation of persons and property by sea, and to marine affairs generally. The law relating to harbors, ships, and seamen, divided into a variety of subject areas, such as those concerning harbors, property of ships, duties and rights of masters and seamen, contracts of affreightment, average, salvage, etc. It extends to civil marine torts and injuries, illegal dispossession or withholding of possession from the owners of ships, municipal seizures of ships, etc.

Substantively, in the United States, it is federal law, and jurisdiction to administer it is vested in the federal courts, though not to the entire exclusion of the courts of the states. O'Donnell v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., 318 U.S. 36, 63 S.Ct. 488, 87 L.Ed. 596. See Maritime jurisdiction.

Maritime lien. A privileged claim on a vessel for some service rendered to it to facilitate its use in navigation, or an injury caused by it in navigable waters, to be carried into effect by legal process in the admiralty court. The Westmoor, D.C.Or., 27 F.2d 886, 887. A special property right in a ship given to a creditor by law as security for a debt or claim subsisting from the moment the debt arises with right to have the ship sold and debt paid out of proceeds. Such a lien is a proprietary interest or right of property in the vessel itself, and not a cause of action or demand for personal judgment against the owner. The lien is enforced by a direct proceeding against the vessel or other property in which it exists. See Supp.Admiralty Rule C.

Any person furnishing repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, or other necessities, to any vessel, whether foreign or domestic, upon the order of the owner of such vessel, or of a person authorized by the owner, shall have a maritime lien on the vessel, which may be enforced by suit in rem, and it shall not be necessary to allege or prove that credit was given to the vessel. Federal Maritime Lien Act, § 971.

Maritime loan. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred.

Maritime prize. See Prize.

Maritime service. In admiralty law, a service rendered upon the seas, ocean, great lakes, or a navigable river, and which has some relation to commerce or navigation, —some connection with a vessel employed in trade, with her equipment, her preservation, or the preservation of her cargo or crew.

Maritime state. In English law, consists of the officers and mariners of the British navy, who are governed by express and permanent laws, or the articles of the navy, established by act of parliament.

Maritus /maríyatas/máratas/. Lat. A husband; a married man.

Mark. A character, usually in the form of a cross, made as a substitute for his signature by a person who cannot write, in executing a conveyance, will or other legal document. It is commonly made as follows: A third person writes the name of the marksman, leaving a blank space between the Christian name and surname; in this space the latter traces the mark, or crossed lines, and above the mark is written "his" (or "her"), and below it, "mark." See Cross.

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others, appearing thus in the compound, "trade-mark."

A token, evidence, or proof; as in the phrase "a mark of fraud."

In trademark law, the term "mark" includes any trademark, service mark, collective mark, or certification mark. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1127. See also Trademark.
MARK

A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver.

Monetary unit, e.g. German Deutsche mark.
The word is sometimes used as another form of "marque," a license of reprisals.

In early Teutonic and English law, a species of village community, being the lowest unit in the political system; one of the forms of the gens or clan, variously known as the "mark," "gemeinde," "commune," or "parish." Also the land held in common by such a community. The union of several such village communities and their marks, or common lands, forms the next higher political union, the hundred.

See also Bench mark; Certification mark; Collective mark.

Demi-mark. Half a mark; a sum of money which was anciently required to be tendered in a writ of right, the effect of such tender being to put the demandant, in the first instance, upon proof of the seisin as stated in his count; that is, to prove that the seisin was in the king's reign there stated.

High and low water-mark. See Water-mark.

Markdown. Reduction in selling price.

Marked money. Term used to describe money given by undercover agent who buys contraband or gives bribe in money, or ransom money given to kidnapper, or money given to bank robber, which bears a tell-tale mark for use in identifying and connecting the money to the perpetrator of the crime.

Market. Place of commercial activity in which goods, commodities, securities, services, etc., are bought and sold. Zemel v. Commercial Warehouses, 132 N.J.L. 341, 40 A.2d 642, 643.
The region in which any commodity or product can be sold; the geographical or economic extent of commercial demand. A public time and appointed place of buying and selling; also purchase and sale. It differs from the forum, or market of antiquity, which was a public marketplace on one side only, or during one part of the day only, the other sides being occupied by temples, theaters, courts of justice, and other public buildings.

In a limited sense, "market" is the range of bid and asked prices reported by brokers making the market in over-the-counter securities. Oppen v. Hancock Securities Corp., D.C.N.Y., 250 F.Supp. 668, 675.

By the term "market" is also understood the demand there is for any particular article; as, "the cotton market is depressed." Is also an abbreviated term for "stock" or "commodity" markets.

See also Common market; Current market value.

Clerk of the market. See Clerk of the Market.

Geographic market. In antitrust context, that geographic area in which a product is sold and in which there is or is not competition. It generally implies agreement allocating different areas to each competitor with the understanding that the other competitors will not sell in those areas. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. U. S., 341 U.S. 593, 71 S.Ct. 971, 95 L.Ed. 1199. A relevant "geographic market" for purposes of assessing monopoly power is the territorial area in which businessmen effectively compete. Telex Corp. v. International Business Machines Corp., D.C.Okl., 367 F.Supp. 258, 336. Within broad geographic market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute "geographic markets" for antitrust purposes. U. S. Steel Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A.Ohio, 426 F.2d 592, 596. See also Product market; Relevant market, below.

Listed market securities. The market value of a security as reflected by transactions of that security on the floor of an exchange.

Open market. A market wherein supply and demand are expressed in terms of a price.

Product market. In antitrust context, a market in which competitors agree among themselves to limit the manufacture or sales of products so as to prevent competition among themselves. Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322.

Public market. A market which is not only open to the resort of the general public as purchasers, but also available to all who wish to offer their wares for sale, stalls, stands, or places being allotted to those who apply, to the limits of the capacity of the market, on payment of fixed rents or fees.

Relevant market. In antitrust context, it may refer to geographic area in which competitors agree to respect the rights of others to sell a product. It may also refer to product markets in which competitors agree among themselves to limit the manufacture or sales of products so as to prevent or limit competition among themselves. Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322. See also Relevant market.

Thin market. A market for publicly traded securities in which the number of transactions and/or the number of securities offered for sale or purchase at any one time are relatively few. In a thin market a single substantial purchase or sale order may cause a significant price movement.

Marketability. Salability. The probability of selling property, goods, securities, services, etc., at a specific time, price, and terms.

Marketable. Salable. Such things as may be sold in the market; those for which a buyer may be found; merchantable.

Marketable securities. Stocks and bonds held of other companies that can be readily sold on stock exchanges or over-the-counter markets and that the company plans to sell as cash is needed. Classified as current liquid assets and as part of working capital.

Marketable title. A title which is free from encumbrances and any reasonable doubt as to its validity, and such as a reasonably intelligent person, who is well informed as to facts and their legal bearings, and ready and willing to perform his contract, would be willing to accept in exercise of ordinary business prudence. Sin-
Marketable Title Acts. Many states have adopted Marketable Title Acts the purpose of which is to simplify land title transactions through making it possible to determine marketability by limited title searches over some reasonable period of the immediate past (e.g. 40 yrs.) and thus avoid the necessity of examining the record back into distant time for each new transaction.

Market order. An order to buy or sell on a stock or commodity exchange at the current (best) price when the order reaches the floor of the exchange. Requests by customers to purchase or sell securities at the market price existing when the order reaches the exchange floor.

Market over. In English law, an open and public market. The market-place or spot of ground set apart by custom for the sale of particular goods is, in the country, the only market over; but in London every shop in which goods are exposed publicly to sale is market over, for such things only as the owner professes to trade in. An expression applied to the open sale of goods.

Market power. Term for purposes of the Sherman Act, is the ability to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business; the ability to raise prices above those which would be charged in a competitive market. National Bancard Corp. (NaBanco) v. VISA U.S.A., Inc., D.C.Fla., 596 F.Supp. 1231, 1265. See Market share.

Market price. The price at which a seller is ready and willing to sell and a buyer ready and willing to buy in the ordinary course of trade. The price actually given in current market dealings; price established by public sales or sales in the way of ordinary business. The actual price at which given stock or commodity is currently sold, or has recently been sold in open market, that is, not at forced sale, but in the usual and ordinary course of trade and competition between sellers and buyers equally free to bargain, as established by records of late sales. In the case of a security, market price is usually considered the last reported price at which the stock or bond sold.

Market price is synonymous with market value, and means the price actually given in current market dealings, or the price at which the supply and demand are equal. Public Service Commission of State v. Montana-Dakota Utilities Co., N.D., 100 N.W.2d 140, 146. The point of intersection of supply and demand in the market. See also Market value.

Market quotations. The latest (most current) prices at which securities or commodities have been bought and sold on an exchange or other market. Board of Trade of Chicago v. L. A. Kinsey Co., C.A.Ind., 130 F. 507, aff'd 198 U.S. 236, 25 S.Ct. 637, 49 L.Ed. 1031.

Market share. The percentage of a market that is controlled by a firm. A 20 percent share of market means that the firm has captured 20 percent of the actual sales in the market. See Market power.

Market structure. Refers to the broad organizational characteristics of a market. The major characteristics are seller concentration, product differentiation, and barriers to entry.

Market value. The price property would command in the open market. The highest price a willing buyer would pay and a willing seller accept, both being fully informed, and the property being exposed for a reasonable period of time. The market value may be different from the price a property can actually be sold for at a given time (market price). The market value of an article or piece of property is the price which it might be expected to bring if offered for sale in a fair market; not the price which might be obtained on a sale at public auction or a sale forced by the necessities of the owner, but such a price as would be fixed by negotiation and mutual agreement, after ample time to find a purchaser, as between a vendor who is willing (but not compelled) to sell and a purchaser who desires to buy but is not compelled to take the particular article or piece of property. U. S. v. Certain Property in Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, C.A. N.Y., 403 F.2d 800, 802. See also Actual market value;
MARKET VALUE

Cash value; Clear market value; Fair cash market value; Fair market value; Market price.

Marking up. The process wherein a legislative committee goes through a bill section by section, revising its language and amending the bill as desired. Extensive revision may lead to the introduction of a clean bill under a new number. May also refer to procedure by which a case is placed on the trial calendar; e.g. "marking up for trial."

Markon. An amount originally added to cost to obtain list price. Usually expressed as a percentage of cost. Further increases in list price are called markups; decreases are called markdowns. See also Markup.

Marksman. In practice and conveyancing, one who makes his mark; a person who cannot write, and only makes his mark in executing instruments.

Markup. An amount originally added to cost. Usually expressed as a percentage of selling price. Also refers to an increase above an originally-established retail price. See Margin; Marking up; Markon.

Markush doctrine /märkəsh döktrən/. The doctrine permits an applicant for a patent where there is no known subgeneric term which would include elements which applicant found useful and exclude those which are not, to employ a generic term limited to the elements found to be operative and recognizes as unobjectionable as to form, claims containing a coined subgeneric expression. In re Swenson, C.C.P.A., 132 F.2d 336.

Marque and reprisal, letters of /ˈlɛdrɔz əv márk and reprɪsəl/. These words, "marque" and "reprisal," are frequently used as synonymous, but, taken in their strict etymological sense, the latter signifies a "taking in return," the former, the passing the frontiers (marches) in order to such taking. Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable, by the law of nations, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another, and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs; and the party to whom these letters are granted may then seize the bodies or the goods of the subjects of the state to which the offender belongs, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found. Reprisals are to be granted only in case of a clear and open denial of justice. At the present day, in consequence partly of treaties and partly of the practice of nations, the making of reprisals is confined to the seizure of commercial property on the high seas by public cruisers, or by private cruisers especially authorized thereto. Article I, Sec. 8, of U.S. Const. grants Congress the power to grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal.

Marque, law of /ˈlɔ əv márk/. A sort of law of reprisal, which entitles him who has received any wrong from another and cannot get ordinary justice to take the shipping or goods of the wrongdoer, where he can find them within his own bounds or precincts, in satisfaction of the wrong.

Marquis, or marquess /mɑrkiə/mærkwəs/. In English law, one of the second order of nobility; next in order to a duke.

Marquisate /mærkwəst/ˈzæt/. The seigniory of a marquis.

Marriage. Legal union of one man and one woman as husband and wife. Singer v. Hara, 11 Wash.App. 247, 522 P.2d 1187, 1193. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the legal status, condition, or relation of one man and one woman united in law for life, or until divorced, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of sex. A contract, according to the form prescribed by law, by which a man and woman capable of entering into such contract, mutually engage with each other to live their whole lives (or until divorced) together in state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. The word also signifies the act, ceremony, or formal proceeding by which persons take each other for husband and wife.

In old English law, marriage is used in the sense of "maritagium" (q.v.), or the feudal right enjoyed by the lord or guardian in chivalry of disposing of his ward in marriage.

See also Avail of marriage; Banns of matrimony; Common-law marriage; Consensual marriage; Restraint of marriage; Voidable marriage; Void marriage.

Ceremonial marriage. Marriage which follows all the statutory requirements of blood tests, license, waiting period, and which has been solemnized before an official (religious or civil) capable of presiding at the marriage.

Informal marriage. A marriage in which promises are exchanged between the parties without an official ecclesiastical representative present. In most cases, the law requires consummation of the marriage to consider such valid. See Consensual marriage.

Jactitation of marriage. See Jactitation.

Manus marriage. A form of marriage in early Rome; it formed a relation called manus (hand) and brought the wife into the husband’s power, placing her as to legal rights in the position of a daughter.

Marriage in jest. A marriage in jest is subject to annulment for lack of requisite consent and intention to marry.

Mixed marriage. A marriage between persons of different nationalities or religions; or, more particularly, between persons of different racial origin; as between a white person and a negro or an Indian. See Miscegenation.

Morganatic marriage. The lawful and inseparable conjunction of a man, of noble or illustrious birth, with a woman of inferior station, upon condition that neither the wife nor her children shall partake of the titles, arms, or dignity of the husband, or succeed to his inheritance, but be contented with a certain allowed rank assigned to them by the morganatic contract. But since these restrictions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony is regularly performed; the union is indissoluble; the children legitimate.

Plural marriage. In general, any bigamous or polygamous union, but particularly, a second or subsequent marriage of a man who already has one wife living under system of polygamy. Such marriages are prohibited.

Proxy marriage. Marriage contracted or celebrated by one or more agents rather than by the parties themselves.

Putative marriage. One contracted in good faith and in ignorance (on one or both sides) of some existing impediment on the part of at least one of the contracting parties. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Henderson, Tex.Civ.App., 53 S.W.2d 811. Such marriages are recognized in very few jurisdictions.

Marriage Act, Royal. An English act of 12 Geo. III, c. 1 (1772), by which members of the royal family are forbidden to marry without the king's (or queen's) consent, or except on certain onerous conditions.

Marriage articles. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, intended as preliminary to a formal marriage settlement, to be drawn after marriage.

Marriage broker. One who for a consideration brings a woman and man together in marriage. Such activity is void and illegal as against public policy.

Marriage ceremony. The form, religious or civil, for the solemnization of a marriage.

Marriage certificate. An instrument which certifies a marriage, and is executed by the person officiating at the marriage; it is not intended to be signed by the parties, but is evidence of the marriage.

Marriage license. A license or permission granted by public authority to persons who intend to intermarry, usually addressed to the minister or magistrate who is to perform the ceremony, or, in general terms, to any one authorized to solemnize marriages. By statute in most jurisdictions, it is made an essential prerequisite to the lawful solemnization of the marriage.

Marriage-notice book. A book kept, in England, by the registrar, in which applications for and issue of registrar's licenses to marry are recorded.

Marriage per verba de praesenti /mæræj par vɔrba diɔ præzɛntɪ/ /mɑrəɪŋ pər ˈvɜrba də prɛzɛntɪ/. To constitute such a marriage, there must be an agreement to become husband and wife immediately from the time when the mutual consent is given. Pitney v. Pitney, 151 Kan. 848, 101 P.2d 933, 935.

Marriage portion. Dowry; a sum of money or other property which is given to or settled on a woman on her marriage.

Marriage promise. Betrothal; engagement to intermarry with another.

Marriage records. Those documents kept by a state, city or town official which are permanent records of marriages and which include the names of the spouses, the maiden name of the wife, their addresses and the date of the marriage. From these documents certificates of marriages are prepared.

Marriage settlement. An agreement in contemplation of marriage in which each party agrees to release or modify property rights which would otherwise arise from the marriage. A written agreement in the nature of a conveyance, called a "settlement," which is made in contemplation of a proposed marriage and in consideration thereof, either by the parties about to marry, or one of them, or by a parent or relation on their behalf, by which the title to certain property is settled, i.e., fixed or limited to a prescribed course of succession; the object being, usually, to provide for the wife and children. Thus, the estate might be limited to the husband and issue, or to the wife and issue, or to husband and wife for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor for life, remainder over to the issue, or otherwise. Such settlements may also be made after marriage, in which case they are called "post-nuptial." See also Antenuptial agreement; Marital agreements; Palimony; Post-nuptial agreement.

Married woman. A woman who has a husband living and not divorced; a feme covert.

Marshall. The President is required to appoint a U.S. Marshal to each judicial district. It is the responsibility of U.S. marshals to execute all lawful writs, process and orders issued under authority of the United States. In executing the laws of the United States within a state, the marshal may exercise the same powers which a sheriff of the State may exercise in executing the laws thereof. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 561, 569, 570.

Also, in some of the states, this is the name of a law officer in certain cities having powers and duties corresponding generally to those of a constable or sheriff. Administrative head of city police or fire department. See also Provost-Marshal.

In old English law, the title borne by several officers of state and of the law, of whom the most important were the following: (1) The earl-marshall, who presided in the court of chivalry; (2) the marshal of the king's house, or knight-marshall, whose special authority was in the king's palace, to hear causes between members of the household, and punish faults committed within the verge; (3) the marshal of the king's bench prison, who had the custody of that jail; (4) the marshal of the exchequer, who had the custody of the king's debts; (5) the marshal of the judge of assize, whose duty was to swear in the grand jury.

Marshalling assets. Also known as marshalling assets and securities, marshalling of liens or marshalling of remedies, it is an equitable doctrine requiring a senior creditor, having two funds to satisfy his debt, to resort first to the one fund which is not subject to the demand of a junior creditor of the common debtor, to avoid the inequity which would result from an election of the senior creditor to satisfy its demand out of the only fund available to the junior creditor, thereby excluding the junior creditor from any satisfaction. Matter of Central R. Co. of New Jersey, D.C.N.J., 45 B.R. 1011, 1019.

The arrangement or ranking of assets in a certain order towards the payment of debts.

Under the common law, a doctrine whereby encumbered lands, which are sold to different persons at different times by conveyances the grantees and the person holding the lien, are chargeable in equity with the encumbrance in the inverse order of their alienation. Ingersoll v. Somers Land Co., 82 N.J.Eq. 476, 89 A. 288.

Marsh of the queen's bench. An officer who had the custody of the queen's bench prison. The St. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 22, abolished this office, and substituted an officer called "keeper of the queen's prison."

Marshalsea /márshalsey/. In English law, a prison belonging to the king's bench. It was subsequently consolidated with others, under the name of the "King's Prison."

Marshalsea, court of /kört av márshalsey/. In English law, the court or seat of the marshal. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the king's house, instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants. It had jurisdiction of all trespasses committed within the verge of the king's court, where one of the parties was of the royal household; and of all debts and contracts, when both parties were of that establishment. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 101, § 13.

Mart. A place of public traffic or sale. See also Market.

Marte suo decurrere /márty su'yúwow dákárhariy/. Lat. To run by its own force. A term applied in the civil law to a suit when it ran its course to the end without any impediment.

Martial law /márshal ló/. Exists when military authorities carry on government or exercise various degrees of control over civilians or civilian authorities in domestic territory. Ochikubo v. Bonesteel, D.C.Cal., 60 F.Supp. 916, 928, 929, 930. Such may exist either in time of war or when civil authority has ceased to function or has become ineffective. A system of law, obtaining only in time of actual war and growing out of the exigencies thereof, arbitrary in its character, and depending only on the will of the commander of an army, which is established and administered in a place or district of hostile territory held in belligerent possession, or, sometimes, in places occupied or pervaded by insurgents or mobs, and which suspends all existing civil laws, as well as the civil authority and the ordinary administration of justice. See also Military government; Military law.

Mary Carter agreement. The term "Mary Carter Agreement" arises from the agreement popularized by the case of Booth v. Mary Carter Paint Co., Fla.App. 1967, 202 So.2d 8, and now is used rather generally to apply to any agreement between the plaintiff and some, but less than all, defendants whereby the parties place limitations on the financial responsibility of the agreeing defendants, the amount of which is variable and usually in some inverse ratio to the amount of recovery which the plaintiff is able to make against the nonagreeing defendant or defendants. Such agreements are held to be void as against public policy in certain states, while in others are permissible if disclosed to the jury.

Masochism /másówizam/. [From Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, a nineteenth-century Austrian novelist and historian.] A form of perversion in which sexual pleasure is heightened when one is beaten and maltreated at the hands of the other party; the opposite of sadism. Sexual perversion, in which a member of one sex takes delight in being dominated, even to the extent of violence or cruelty, by one of the other sex.

Mason and Dixon Line. The boundary line between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south, celebrated before the extinction of slavery as the line of demarcation between the slave and the free states. It was run by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, commissioners in a dispute between the Penn Proprietors and Lord Baltimore. The line was carried 244 miles from the Delaware river where it was stopped by Indians. A resurvey was made in 1849, and in 1900 a new survey was authorized by the two states.

Mass /más/. In the civil law, a mass; an unwrought substance, such as gold or silver, before it is wrought into cups or other articles.

Massachism. See Masochism.

Massachusetts ballot. The office-block type of Australian ballot in which, under each office, the names of candidates, with party designations, are printed in alphabetical order.

Massachusetts rule. As regards sending out checks through banks for collection, the "Massachusetts rule" is that each bank that receives the item acts as an agent for the depositor; but in some other states, the "New York rule" prevails, under which only the bank first receiving the item is responsible to, or is the agent of, the depositor, the other banks being the agent of the bank, in the process of the collection.

Massachusetts trust. A business organization wherein property is conveyed to trustees and managed for benefit of holders of certificates like corporate stock certificates. A "Massachusetts business trust" is an unincorporated association organized under Massachusetts law for purpose of investing in real estate in much the same manner as a mutual fund invests in corporate securities. Kusner v. First Pa. Corp., D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 276, 281. See also Common-law trust; Real estate investment trust; Trust estates as business companies.
Masses. Religious ceremonials or observances of the Roman Catholic Church.

Master. A principal who employs another to perform service in his affairs and who controls or has right to control physical conduct of other in performance of the service. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2. One who stands to another in such a relation that he not only controls the results of the work of that other but also may direct the manner in which such work shall be done. Matonti v. Research-Cottrell, Inc., D.C.Pa., 202 F.Supp. 527, 532.

One having authority; one who rules, directs, instructs, or superintends; a head or chief; an instructor; an employer. See various "Master" titles below.

One who has reached the summit of his trade and who has the right to hire apprentices and journeymen.

Fed.R.Civil P. 53, and analogous state rules, provide for the appointment by the court of a master to assist it in specific judicial duties as may arise in a case. The master's powers and duties depend upon the terms of the order of reference and the controlling court rule, and may include taking of testimony, discovery of evidence and other acts or measures necessary for the performance of his duties specified in the order of reference. The master is required to prepare a report of his proceedings for the court. In the federal courts the appointment of a master is the "exception rather than the rule", while under many state rules, the court has more liberal powers to appoint such. See also Reference.

Special master. A master appointed to act as the representative of the court in some particular act or transaction, as, to make a sale of property under a decree. Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U.S. 349, 12 S.Ct. 887, 36 L.Ed. 732. A federal judge may appoint a U.S. magistrate to serve as a special master. 28 U.S.C.A. § 636.

Master agreement. The omnibus labor agreement reached between a union and the leaders of the industry or a trade association. It becomes the pattern for labor agreements between the union and individual employers.

Master and servant. The relation of master and servant exists where one person, for pay or other valuable consideration, enters into the service of another and devotes to him his personal labor for an agreed period. The relation exists where the employer has the right to select the employee, the power to remove and discharge him and the right to direct both what work shall be done and the manner in which it shall be done. Matonti v. Research-Cottrell, Inc., D.C.Pa., 202 F.Supp. 527, 532. Restatement, Second, Agency § 2. Such term has generally been replaced by "employer and employee". Compare Agency; Independent contractor.

Master at common law. The title of officers of the English superior courts of common law appointed to record the proceedings of the court to which they belong; to superintend the issue of writs and the formal proceedings in an action; to receive and account for the fees charged on legal proceedings, and moneys paid into court.

Master deed or lease. Conveyancing document used by owners or lessees of condominiums.

Master in chancery. An officer of a court of chancery who acts as an assistant to the judge or chancellor. His duties are to inquire into such matters as may be referred to him by the court, examine causes, take testimony, take accounts, compute damages, etc., reporting his findings to the court in such shape that a decree may be made; also to take oaths and affidavits and acknowledgments of deeds. In modern practice, many of the functions of a master are performed by clerks, commissioners, auditors, and referees, and in those states that have merged law and equity courts in adopting Rules of Civil Procedure the office has been superseded. See Master.

Master in lunacy. In old English law, the masters in lunacy were judicial officers appointed by the lord chancellor for the purpose of conducting inquiries into the state of mind of persons alleged to have been lunatics. Such inquiries usually took place before a jury.

Master lease. See Lease; Sublease.

Master of a ship. In maritime law, the commander of a merchant vessel, who has the chief charge of her government and navigation and the command of the crew, as well as the general care and control of the vessel and cargo, as the representative and confidential agent of the owner. He is commonly called the "captain."

Master of the Crown Office. In England, the Queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of Queen's bench, who prosecutes at the complaint or relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. He is an officer of the Supreme Court.

Master of the Faculties. In English law, an officer under the archbishop, who grants licenses and dispensations, etc.

Master of the Horse. In English law, the third great officer of the royal household, being next to the lord steward and lord chamberlain. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

Master of the Mint. In English law, an officer who received bullion for coinage, and paid for it, and superintended everything belonging to the mint. He was usually called the "warden of the mint." It was provided by St. 33 Vict., c. 10, § 14, that the chancellor of the exchequer for the time being was to be the master of the mint. Such office was repealed by the Coinage Act of 1971.

Master of the Ordnance. In English law, a great officer, to whose care all the royal ordnance and artillery were committed. In modern times called Master-General of the Ordnance, a post held by a senior officer in the Ministry of Defense.
Master of the Rolls. In English law, an assistant judge of the court of chancery, who held a separate court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor, and had the keeping of the rolls and grants which passed the great seal, and the records of the chancery. He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common-law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. Under the act constituting the Supreme Court of Judicature, the master of the rolls became a judge of the high court of justice and ex officio a member of the court of appeal. The same act, however, provided for the abolition of this office, under certain conditions, when the next vacancy occurs. Also sits as an ex officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Supreme Court Act, 1981, § 2(2)), and presides over the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal (Supreme Court Act, 1981, § 10).

Master plan. Term used in land use control law, zoning and urban redevelopment to describe the omnibus plan of a city or town for housing, industry and recreational facilities and their impact on environmental factors. See also Planned unit development.

Master policy. An insurance policy which covers a group of persons as in health or life insurance written as group insurance. Generally, there is only one master policy and the participants have only certificates evidencing their participation.

Masters of the supreme court. In English law, officials deriving their title from Jud. (Officers') Act 1879, and being, or filling the places of, the sixteen masters of the common-law courts, the queen's coroner and attorney, the master of the crown office, the two record and writ clerks, and the three associates.

Master's report. The formal report or statement made by a master in chancery of his decision on any question referred to him, or of any facts or action he has been directed to ascertain or take.

The document filed with the court after a master has heard the evidence and made his findings. The report should contain his findings and conclusions of law where necessary. Fed.R.Civil P. 53(e).

Master-servant rule. Under this rule, master (employer) is liable for conduct of servant (employee) which occurs while servant is acting within scope of his employment or within scope of his authority. See also Fellow servant; Respondeat superior; Servant.

Mater-familias /meytar ursorlii/ys/. Lat. In civil law, the mother or mistress of a family. A chaste woman, married or single.

Materia /mətɪriə/. Lat. In Civil law, materials; as distinguished from species, or the form given by labor and skill.

In English law, matter; substance; subject-matter. 3 Bl.Comm. 322.

Material. Important; more or less necessary; having influence or effect; going to the merits; having to do with matter, as distinguished from form. Representation relating to matter which is so substantial and important as to influence party to whom made is "material." See Material fact; Relevant.

Material allegation. An allegation is said to be material when it forms a substantive part of the case presented by the pleading. A material allegation in a pleading is one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient.

Material alteration. A material alteration in any written instrument is one which changes its tenor, or its legal meaning and effect; one which causes it to speak a language different in effect from that which it originally spoke. A material alteration of a deed is one which affects a change in its legal effect. Boys v. Long, Okl., 268 P.2d 890, 893.

Any alteration of an instrument is material which changes the contract of any party thereto in any respect, including any such change in: (a) the number or relations of the parties; or (b) an incomplete instrument, by completing it otherwise than as authorized; or (c) the writing as signed, by adding to it or by removing any part of it. U.C.C. § 3-407(1). The term is defined similarly when applied to other kinds of commercial paper.

Material breach. See Breach of contract.

Material evidence. That quality of evidence which tends to influence the trier of fact because of its logical connection with the issue. Evidence which has an effective influence or bearing on question in issue. Barr v. Dolphin Holding Corp., Sup., 141 N.Y.S.2d 906, 908. "Materiality" of evidence refers to pertinency of the offered evidence to the issue in dispute. Vine Street Corp. v. City of Council Bluffs, Iowa, 220 N.W.2d 860, 863. Evidence which is material to question in controversy, and which must necessarily enter into the consideration of the controversy, and which by itself or in connection with other evidence is determinative of the case. Camurati v. Sutton, 48 Tenn.App. 54, 342 S.W.2d 732, 739.

To establish Brady violation requiring reversal of a conviction, defendant must show that prosecution has suppressed evidence, that such evidence was favorable to defendant or was exculpatory, and that evidence was material; evidence is "material" if there is reasonable probability that, but for failure to produce such evidence, outcome of case would have been different. U.S.
Material fact. One which constitutes substantially the consideration of the contract, or without which it would not have been made. See also Reliance.

Insure. A fact which, if communicated to the agent or insurer, would induce him to either decline the insurance altogether, or not accept it unless a higher premium is paid. One which necessarily has some bearing on the subject-matter. A fact which increases the risk, or which, if disclosed, would have been a fair reason for demanding a higher premium. Any fact the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence the insurer in making or refusing the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate.

Pleading and practice. One which is essential to the case, defense, application, etc., and without which it could not be supported. One which tends to establish any of issues raised. The "material facts" of an issue of fact are such as are necessary to determine the issue. Material fact is one upon which outcome of litigation depends. Amant v. Pacific Power & Light Co., 10 Wash. App. 785, 520 P.2d 481, 484. See also Material allegation.

Securities. To be a "material" fact within the Securities Act of 1933, it must concern information about which an average prudent investor ought reasonably be informed before purchasing a security. Gridley v. Sayre & Fisher Co., D.C.S.C., 409 F.Supp. 1266, 1270. Within purview of Securities Act provision rendering it unlawful for any person in connection with offer, sale or purchase of any security, directly or indirectly, to make any untrue statement of material fact, or fail to disclose a material fact, is one which a reasonable person would attach importance to in determining his or her choice of action in the transaction. Or, stated alternatively, a fact is deemed "material" if its disclosure would have been viewed by a reasonable investor as having significantly altered the "total mix" of information made available. Securities and Exchange Commission v. Paro, D.C.N.Y., 468 F.Supp. 635, 646. An omitted fact is material if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote. TSC Industries, Inc. v. Northway Inc., 426 U.S. 438, 96 S.Ct. 2126, 48 L.Ed.2d 757. See also Reliance; Rule 10b-5.

Summary judgment. In determining what constitutes a genuine issue as to any material fact for purposes of summary judgment, an issue is "material" if the facts alleged are such as to constitute a legal defense or are of such nature as to affect the result of the action. Austin v. Wilder, 26 N.C.App. 229, 215 S.E.2d 794, 796. See Fed.R.Civ. P. 56(c).

A fact is "material" and precludes grant of summary judgment if proof of that fact would have effect of establishing or refuting one of essential elements of a cause of action or defense asserted by the parties, and would necessarily affect application of appropriate principle of law to the rights and obligations of the parties. Johnson v. Soulis, Wyo., 542 P.2d 867, 872.

Materialman. A person who has furnished materials or supplies used in the construction or repair of a building, structure, etc.

Materialman's lien. By statute in most states, a person who furnishes material for the construction, improvement or alteration of a building or other structure has a priority for payment of his claim based on his lien as a supplier of such materials. See also Mechanic's lien.

Material representation or misrepresentation. A misrepresentation is "material" if it relates to a matter upon which plaintiff could be expected to rely in determining to engage in the conduct in question. Barrington Press, Inc. v. Morey, C.A.I11., 752 F.2d 307, 310. In law of deceit, a statement or undertaking of sufficient substance and importance as to be the foundation of an action if such representation is false. See also Material fact; Representation.

Material witness. A person who can give testimony relating to a particular matter no one else, or at least very few, can give. In an important criminal case, a material witness may sometimes be held by the government against his or her will. He may be the victim or an eye witness. See also Witness.

Maternal. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother; as maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line.

or committing magistrate in respect to offenses committed within the city (e.g. traffic or ordinance violations) and sometimes with civil jurisdiction in small causes, or other special statutory powers.

McCarran Act. A federal statute which permits a state to regulate and to tax foreign insurance companies which do business within the state. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1011 et seq. See also internal security acts.

McNabb-Mallory Rule. The rule which requires that a suspect be promptly brought before a magistrate or else inculminating statements made by him during the illegal detention will be suppressed. McNabb v. U.S., 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819, and Mallory v. U.S., 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479. "McNabb Rule" is that there must be reasonable promptness in taking prisoner before committing magistrate, or confession obtained during period between arrest and commitment is inadmissible in prosecution of party arrested, and that rule applies to voluntary as well as involuntary confessions. Muldrow v. U.S., C.A. Cal., 281 F.2d 903, 906. See also Fed.R.Crim.P. 5(a); 18 U.S.C.A. § 3501. See also Confession.

McNaghten Rule. See M'Naghten Rule.

M.D. An abbreviation for "Middle District," in reference to the division of the United States into judicial districts; e.g. United States Court for middle district of Ohio. Also an abbreviation for "Doctor of Medicine" or "Medical Doctor."

Meadow. A tract of low or level land producing grass which is mown for hay. A tract which lies above the shore, and is overflowed by spring and extraordinary tides only, and yields grasses which are good for hay.

Mean or mesne. A middle between two extremes, whether applied to persons, things, or time. Average, having an intermediate value between two extremes or between the several successive values of variable quantity during one cycle of variation. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Huwe, C.C.A. Ohio, 116 F.2d 1008, 1009.

Meander /miyəndər/. To meander means to follow a winding or flexuous course; and when it said, in a description of land, "thence with the meander of the river," it must mean a meandered line,—a line which follows the sinuosities of the river,—or, in other words, that the river is the boundary between the points indicated.

This term is used in some jurisdictions with the meaning of surveying and mapping a stream according to its meanderings, or windings and turnings. See Meander lines.

Meander lines. Lines run in surveying particular portions of the public lands which border on navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser. In preparing the official plat from the field notes, the meander line is represented as the border line of the stream, and shows that the water-course, and not the meander line as naturally run on the ground, is the boundary. Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U.S. 300, 20 S.Ct. 124, 44 L.Ed. 171.

Mean high tide. The "mean high tide" or "ordinary high tide" is a mean of all the high tides, and the average to be used should be, if possible, the average of all the high tides over a period of 18.6 years. O'Neill v. State Highway Dept., N.J., 50 N.J. 307, 235 A.2d 1, 9.

Mean high water mark. The point on the shore which the average high tide will reach.

Meaning. That which is, or is intended to be, signified or denoted by act or language; signification; sense; import. See also Construction.

Mean lower low tide. The average of lower low tides over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Mean low tide. The average of all low tides both low and lower low over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Mean low water mark. The point on the shore which the average low tide will reach.

Mean reserve. The mean of the reserve at the beginning of the policy year, after the premium for such year is paid, and the terminal reserve at end of such policy year. Kentucky Home Life Ins. Co. v. Leisman, 268 Ky. 825, 105 S.W.2d 1046, 1047.

Means. That through which, or by the help of which, an end is attained; something tending to an object desired; intermediate agency or measure; necessary condition or co-agent; instrument. Under insurance policy, equivalent to cause. Pope v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 235 Mo.App. 263, 131 S.W.2d 887, 892.

Resources; available property; money or property, as an available instrumentality for effecting a purpose, furnishing a livelihood, paying a debt, or the like.

Measure. That by which extent or dimension is ascertained, either length, breadth, thickness, capacity, or amount. The rule by which anything is adjusted or proportioned. See Land measure; Metes and bounds; Survey.

Measure of damages. The rule, or rather the system of rules, governing the adjustment or apportionment of damages as a compensation for injuries in actions at law. See Damages.

Measure of value. In the ordinary sense of the word, "measure" would mean something by comparison with which we may ascertain what is the value of anything. When we consider, further, that value itself is relative, and that two things are necessary to constitute it, independently of the third thing, which is to measure it, we may define a "measure of value" to be something by comparing with which any two other things we may infer their value in relation to one another. See Value.
Mechanical equivalent. If two devices do the same work in substantially the same way, and accomplish substantially the same result, they are "mechanical equivalents." Wire Tie Machinery Co. v. Pacific Box Corporation, C.C.A.Cal., 107 F.2d 54, 56. A device which may be substituted or adopted, instead of another, by any person skilled in the particular art from his knowledge of the art, and which is competent to perform the same functions or produce the same result, without introducing an original idea or changing the general idea of means. The test of equivalency is whether the substituted element operates in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result. See also Equivalent.

Mechanical process. See Process.

Mechanic's lien. A claim created by state statutes for the purpose of securing priority of payment of the price or value of work performed and materials furnished in erecting, improving, or repairing a building or other structure, and as such attaches to the land as well as buildings and improvements erected thereon. In re Louisville Daily News & Enquirer, D.C.Ky., 20 F.Supp. 465, 466. Such lien covers materialmen, tradesmen, suppliers, and the like, who furnish services, labor, or materials on construction or improvement of property. See also Commence (Commencement of building or improvement); Lien waiver; Stop notice statute.

Mechanic's lienor. The term "mechanic's lienor" means any person who under local law has a lien on real property (or on the proceeds of a contract relating to real property) for services, labor, or materials furnished in connection with the construction or improvement of such property. I.R.C. § 6323(h).

Medee /'medf/ /miedf/. In old English law, a bribe or reward; a compensation given in exchange, where the things exchanged were not of equal value.

Media annata /'mi'di:ya an'ata/'/ /mii'diya an'et/ /mii'diyan/W. In Spanish law, half-yearly profits of land.

Media concludendi /'mi'di:ya ko:'klu:wi'da:n/ /mii'diyan/ The steps of an argument. Thus "a judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi." Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039. The theory or basis of facts upon which a legal conclusion is reached, per Holmes, C. J., in Hobeason v. Keegen, 178 Mass. 247, 59 N.E. 627. Grounds for asserting the right known when the suit was brought. Mendez v. Baetjer, C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 163, 166.

Medie et infime manus homines /'mi'di:jy e:t in'fi:mri ma'nas ho'mi:ni:/ /mii'di:jy et in'me:n/ Men of a middle and base condition.

Media nox /'mi'di:ya noks/ /mi'di:jyan/ In old English law, midnight. Ad mediam noctem, at midnight.

Medianus homo /'mi'di:jyan/ /mii'di:jyan/ A man of middle fortune.

Medicaid. A form of public assistance sponsored jointly by the federal and state governments providing medical aid for people whose income falls below a certain level. See also Medicare.

Mediate descent. See Descent.

Mediate powers. Those incident to primary powers given by a principal to his agent. For example, the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits. These subordinate powers are sometimes called "mediate powers."

Mediate testimony. Secondary evidence (q.v.).

Mediation. Private, informal dispute resolution process in which a neutral third person, the mediator, helps disputing parties to reach an agreement. The mediator has no power to impose a decision on the parties. See also Alternative dispute resolution; Arbitration; Conciliation.

Also, the friendly interference of a neutral nation in the controversies of others, for the purpose, by its influence and by adjusting their difficulties, of keeping the peace in the family of nations.

Mediation and Conciliation Service. An independent department of the federal government charged with trying to settle labor disputes by conciliation and mediation. 29 U.S.C.A. § 172 et seq.

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service represents the public interest by promoting the development of sound and stable labor-management relationships; preventing or minimizing work stoppages by assisting labor and management to settle their disputes through mediation; advocating collective bargaining, mediation, and voluntary arbitration as the preferred processes for settling issues between employers and representatives of employees; developing the art, science, and practice of dispute resolution; and fostering constructive joint relationships of labor and management leaders to increase their mutual understanding and solution of common problems. See also American Arbitration Association; National Mediation Board.

Mediator. Neutral third person who helps disputing parties to reach agreement through the mediation process. See also Arbitrator; Referee.

Mediators of questions. In old English law, six persons authorized by statute (27 Edw. III, St. 2, c. 24), who, upon any question arising among merchants relating to unmerchantable wool, or undue packing, etc., might, before the mayor and officers of the staple upon their oath certify and settle the same; to whose determination therein the parties concerned were to submit.

Medicaid. A form of public assistance sponsored jointly by the federal and state governments providing medical aid for people whose income falls below a certain level. See also Medicare.
Medical. Pertaining, relating or belonging to the study and practice of medicine, or the science and art of the investigation, prevention, cure, and alleviation of disease.

Medical care. The term "medical care" is defined broadly in the Internal Revenue Code (I.R.C. § 213) and more comprehensively in the regulations. It includes expenses for doctors, nurses and other medical services, as well as payments for operations, hospitals, institutional care and transportation necessary to obtain medical care. The basic test for the allowance of medical deductions is whether the expense was incurred and paid primarily for the prevention or alleviation of a physical or mental defect or illness. Edward A. Harvey, 12 T.C. 409 (1949). See also Medical expenses.

Medical deduction. See Medical expenses.

Medical evidence. Evidence furnished by doctors, nurses, and other medical personnel testifying in their professional capacity as experts, or by standard treatises on medicine or surgery. Fed.Evid.R. 702, 703. See Expert witness.

Medical examiner. Public officer charged with responsibility of investigating all sudden, unexplained, unnatural or suspicious deaths reported to him, including the performance of autopsies and assisting the state in criminal homicide cases. Term may also include a physician who conducts examinations for insurance companies and other institutions. The medical examiner has replaced the coroner in many states. See also Coroner.

Medical expenses. Medical expenses, including medicines and drugs and health insurance premiums, of an individual and his or her dependents are allowed as an itemized deduction to the extent that such amounts (less insurance reimbursements) exceed a certain percent of adjusted gross income. I.R.C. § 213. See also Medical care.

Medical jurisprudence. The science which applies the principles and practice of the different branches of medicine to the elucidation of doubtful questions in a court of law. Otherwise called "forensic medicine" (q.v.). A sort of mixed science, which may be considered as common ground to the practitioners both of law and medicine.

Medical malpractice. See Malpractice.

Medicare. Federal Act (Health Insurance for the Aged Act) to provide hospital and medical insurance for aged under Social Security Act. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1395 et seq. See also Medicaid (state provided medical assistance).

Medicine. The science and art dealing with the prevention, cure and alleviation of diseases; in a narrower sense that part of the science and art of restoring and preserving health which is the province of the physician as distinguished from the surgeon and obstetrician. Burke v. Kansas State Osteopathic Ass'n, C.C.A.Kan., 111 F.2d 250, 253.

Forensic medicine. Another name for medical jurisprudence. See Forensic medicine.

Medico-legal. Relating to the law concerning medical questions. See Forensic medicine.

Medietas linguae /modéyatés lingwiy/. In old practice, moiety of tongue; half-tongue. Applied to a jury impaneled in a cause consisting the one half of natives, and the other half of foreigners. See De medietate linguae.

Medio acquietando /miédiyó akwéyaténdow/. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him.

Mediterranean passport. A pass issued by the admiralty of Great Britain under various treaties with the Barbary States in the eighteenth century. They were granted to British built ships and were respected by the Barbary pirates. They were also issued by the United States.

Medium of exchange. Anything which serves to facilitate the exchange of things by providing a common basis of measurement such as money, checks, drafts, etc. See Legal tender.

Medium tempus /miédiyom tempús/. In old English law, meantime; mesne profits.

Medietum /medíyótam/. In old English law, a mixing together; a medley or mêlée; an affray or sudden encounter. An offense suddenly committed in an affray. The English word "medley" is preserved in the term "chance-medley." An intermeddling, without violence, in any matter of business.

Medley /médiy/. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand to hand battle; a mêlée. See Chance-medley; Chaud-medley.

Medsceat /médzhiyt/. In old English law, a bribe; hush money.

Meeting. A coming together of persons; an assembly. Particularly, in law, an assembling of a number of persons for the purpose of discussing and acting upon some matter or matters in which they have a common interest; e.g. in corporate law, a meeting of the board of directors or of the stockholders.

Annual meeting. See Regular meeting, below.

Called meeting. In the law of corporations, a meeting not held at a time specially appointed for it by the charter or by-laws, but assembled in pursuance of a "call" or summons proceeding from some officer, committee or group of stockholders, or other persons having authority in that behalf.

Family meeting. See Family.

General meeting. A meeting of all the stockholders of a corporation, all the creditors of a bankrupt, etc.

Regular meeting. In the law of public and private corporations, a meeting (of directors, trustees, stockholders, etc.) held at the time and place appointed for it by statute, by-law, charter or other positive direction. This is commonly termed the "annual" meeting of such group.
Meeting of creditors. See Creditor's meeting.

Meeting of minds. As essential element of contract, is mutual agreement and assent of parties to contract to substance and terms. It is an agreement reached by the parties to a contract and expressed therein, or as the equivalent of mutual assent or mutual obligation. Rice v. McKinley, App., 267 Ark. 659, 590 S.W.2d 305, 306. The "meeting of the minds" required to make a contract is not based on secret purpose or intention on the part of one of the parties, stored away in his mind and not brought to the attention of the other party, but must be based on purpose and intention which has been made known or which from all the circumstances should be known. McClintock v. Skelly Oil Co., 232 Mo.App. 1204, 114 S.W.2d 181, 189. A subjective understanding is not required; it suffices that the conduct of the contracting parties indicates an agreement to the terms of the alleged contract. Steinberg v. Chicago Medical School, 69 Ill.2d 320, 13 Ill.Dec. 699, 371 N.E.2d 634, 640.

Megalomania /mégalaméniya/. See Insanity.

Megalopolis. Heavily populated continuous urban area including many cities.

Megbote /mégboüt/. In Saxon law, a recompense for the murder of a relation.

Meigne, or maisnader /miyn/. In old English law, a family.

Meindre age /minder éjiy/°azh/. L. Fr. Minority; lesser age.

Meiny, meine, or meinie /miyn(i)y/. In old English law, a household; staff or suite of attendants; a retinue; particularly, the royal household.

Melancholia /mêlanjóliya/. A kind of mental unsoundness characterized by extreme depression of spirits, ill-grounded fears, delusions, and brooding over one particular subject or train of ideas. Depressed phase of manic-depressive psychosis, the intensity and duration of which is out of proportion to any apparent precipitating factors. See Insanity.

Meldföeh /mêlföy/. In Saxon law, the recompense due and given to him who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person, called the "promoter's [i.e., informer's] fee."

Melior /miyl(i)yar/. Lat. Better; the better. Melior res, the better (best) thing or chattel.

Meliorations /miyl(i)yaréyshan(d)z/. In Scottish law, improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. Occasionally used in English and American law in the sense of valuable and lasting improvements or betterments.

Meliorum conditionem ecclesiar sur facere potest pralatus, deteriorem nequaquam /miyl(i)yórom kandishiyównam akliyziyiy s(y)úwwiy fáysaryiy pówzt praléytyas, datiriyórom nakwéykwam/. A bishop can make the condition of his own church better, but by no means worse.

Meliorum conditionem suam facere potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam /miyl(i)yórom kandishiyównam s(y)úwwam fássaryy pówzt máynar, datiriyórom nakwéykwam/. A minor can make his own condition better, but by no means worse.

Melior causa possidentis /miyl(i)yor ést kóza pósédéntás/. The cause of the possessor is preferable.

Melior est conditio defendentis /miyl(i)yór ést kondišish(iy)ow pósédéntás/. The condition of the party in possession is the better one, i.e., where the right of the parties is equal.

Melior est conditio possidentis, et rei quam actoris /miyl(i)yór ést kondišish(iy)ow pósédéntás ét riay kwéem séktóras/. The condition of the possessor is the better, and the condition of the defendant is better than that of the plaintiff.

Melior est conditio possidentis ubi neuter jus habet /miyl(i)yór ést kondišish(iy)ow pósédéntás yúwbyb n(y)úwtr jór hékby/. The condition of the possessor is the better where neither of the two has a right.

Melior est justitia vere preveniens quam severe puniens /miyl(i)yóg ést jastish(iy)og viriy pravýn(i)yany zkwéem savýrýy pyúwnyynyany/. That justice which absolutely prevents [a crime] is better than that which severely punishes it.

Melius est in tempore occurrere, quam post causam vulneratum remedium querere /miyl(i)yós ést in témpary akhhrary, kwéem póst kózam válnéréydam ramiyólyam kwirláry/. It is better to meet a thing in time than after an injury inflicted to seek a remedy.

Melius est jus deficiens quam jus incertum /miyl(i)yóg ést jas dafishiyog viriy pravýn(i)yany zkwéem savýrýy pyúwnyynyany/. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire /miyl(i)yóg ést omniya mála pétay kwéem málo kwéem kônséntáry/or/. It is better to suffer every ill than to consent to ill.

Melius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos /miyl(i)yóg ést pétary fóntiy kwéem sêktéray riyyalow/. It is better to go to the fountain head than to follow little streamlets.

Melius est recurrere quam malo currere /miyl(i)yóg ést rakhhrary kwéem málo khrhrary/. It is better to run back than to run badly; it is better to retrace one's steps than to proceed improperly.
MELIUS INQUIRENDUM

Mélius inquirendum /méyi(y)as inkwaréndam/. To be better inquired into.

In old English law, the name of a writ commanding a further inquiry respecting a matter; as, after an imperfect inquisition in proceedings in outlawry, to have a new inquest as to the value of lands.

Member. One of the persons constituting a family, partnership, association, corporation, guild, court, legislature, or the like.

A part or organ of the body; especially a limb or other separate part. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, Cal.App., 82 P.2d 1115, 1116.

Member bank. A bank which has become affiliated with (i.e. purchased stock in) one of the Federal Reserve banks. Member of Federal Reserve System (which includes all nationally chartered banks and any state-chartered banks that have been accepted for membership). See Federal Reserve System.

Member firm. In securities and commodities trading, a brokerage firm that is a member of a particular exchange (e.g. member of New York Stock Exchange).

Member of Congress. A member of the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States. In popular usage, particularly the latter.

Member of crew. To qualify as a "member of the crew" and thus as a "seaman" under the Jones Act, one must be more or less permanently attached to a vessel or fleet, must be one whose duties serve naturally and primarily as an aid to navigation in the broadest sense, and the vessel must be in the navigation.

Member of Parliament. One having the right to sit in either house of the British parliament.

Membrana /membréyna/. Lat. In old Civil and English law, a skin of parchment. The ancient rolls usually consist of several of these skins, and the word "membrana" is used, in citations to them, in the same way as "page" or "folio," to distinguish the particular skin referred to.

Membrum /mémbrum/. A slip or small piece of land.

Mémoire /mémwóhr/mémwöhr/. In French law, a document in the form of a petition, by which appeals to the court of cassation are initiated.

Memorandum /mémorándam/. Lat. To be remembered; be it remembered. A formal word with which the body of a record in the Court of King’s Bench anciently commenced.

An informal record, note or instrument embodying something that the parties desire to fix in memory by the aid of written evidence, or that is to serve as the basis of a future formal contract or deed. A brief written statement outlining the terms of an agreement or transaction. Informal interoffice communication.

Under portion of statute of frauds providing that a contract not to be performed within a year is invalid unless the contract, or some memorandum of the contract, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent, the word "memorandum" implies something less than a complete contract, and the "memorandum" functions only as evidence of the contract and need not contain every term, so that a letter may be a sufficient "memorandum" to take a case out of the statute of frauds. Kerner v. Hughes Tool Co., 128 Cal. Rptr. 839, 845, 56 C.A.3d 924.

This word is used in the statute of frauds as the designation of the written agreement, or note or evidence thereof, which must exist in order to bind the parties in the cases provided. The memorandum must be such as to disclose the parties, the nature and substance of the contract, the consideration and promise, and be signed by the party to be bound or his authorized agent. See U.C.C. § 2-201. See also Contract.

Memorandum articles. In the law of marine insurance, this phrase designates the articles of merchandise which are usually mentioned in the memorandum clause (q.v.), and for which the underwriter's liability is thereby limited.

Memorandum check. See Check.

Memorandum clause. In a policy of marine insurance the memorandum clause is a clause inserted to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. It might begin, for example, as follows: "N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be straded,"—meaning that the underwriters are not to be liable for damage to these articles caused by seawater or the like.

Memorandum decision. A court's decision that gives the ruling (what it decides and orders done), but no opinion (reasons for the decision).

Memorandum in error. A document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact.

Memorandum of alteration. Formerly, in England, where a patent was granted for two inventions, one of which was not new or not useful, the whole patent was bad, and the same rule applied when a material part of a patent for a single invention had either of those defects. To remedy this the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 83, empowers a patentee (with the fiat of the attorney general) to enter a disclaimer (q.v.) or a memorandum of an alteration in the title or specification of the patent, not being of such a nature as to extend the exclusive right granted by the patent, and thereupon the memorandum is deemed to be part of the letters patent or the specification.

Memorandum of association. In England, a document to be subscribed by seven or more persons associated for a lawful purpose, by subscribing which, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of the companies' acts in respect of registration, they may form themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. See also Articles of association; Articles of incorporation.

Memorandum sale. See Sale.
Memorial. A document presented to a legislative body, or to the executive, by one or more individuals, containing a petition or a representation of facts.

In practice, a short note, abstract, memorandum, or rough draft of the orders of the court, from which the records thereof may at any time be fully made up. See Memorandum decision.

In English law, that which contains the particulars of a deed, etc., and is the instrument registered, as in the case of an annuity which must be registered.

Memoriter /memóristar/. Lat. From memory; by or from recollection. Thus, memoriter proof of a written instrument is such as is furnished by the recollection of a witness who had seen and known it.

Memory. The word as used in Blackstone and other ancient authorities, appeared to be synonymous with "mind", whereas the word "memory" in modern times is used in a more restricted sense of recollection of past events rather than the general state of one's mental power.

Mental capacity; the mental power to review and recognize the successive states of consciousness in their consecutive order.

This word, as used in jurisprudence to denote one of the psychological elements necessary in the making of a valid will or contract or the commission of a crime, implies the mental power to conduct a consecutive train of thought, or an orderly planning of affairs, by recalling correctly the past states of the mind and past events, and arranging them in their due order of sequence and in their logical relations with the events and mental states of the present. See also Mind and memory.

The phrase "sound and disposing mind and memory" means not merely distinct recollection of the items of one's property and the persons among whom it may be given, but entire power of mind to dispose of property by will. See Capacity.

The reputation and name, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

Legal memory. An ancient usage, custom, supposed grant (as a foundation for prescription) and the like, are said to be immemorial when they are really or fictitiously of such an ancient date that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," or, in other words, "beyond legal memory." And legal memory or "time out of mind," according to the rule of the common law, commenced from the reign of Richard I, A.D. 1189. But under the statute of limitation of 32 Hen. VIII this was reduced to 60 years, and again by that of 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 71, to 20 years. In the American states, by statute, the time of legal memory is generally fixed at a period corresponding to that prescribed for actions for the recovery of real property, usually about 20 years.

Menace. To threaten; make threats. An unlawful threat of duress or injury to the person, property or character of another. Odorizzi v. Bloomfield School Dist., 246 C.A.2d 123, 54 Cal.Rptr. 533, 538. Menace may constitute a ground for divorce, or duress such as would vitiate a contract. See also Assault.

Men of straw. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i.e., by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of "straw-shoes." An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to meet with one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate; to which the ready answer was, "To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it." And straw-shoes went into court and swore. Athens abounded in straw-shoes. See also Straw man or party.

Mens /mén/. Lat. Mind; intention; meaning; understanding; will.

Mensa et thoro /ménsa è ṭhòrò/. From bed and board. See Divorce.

Mensality /ménsélyìths/. Parsonages or spiritual livings united to the tables of religious houses, and called "menses benefices" amongst the canonists.

Mensis /mënsis/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a month. Mensis vetitus, the prohibited month; fence-month (q.v.).

Mens legis /ménész liyjas/. The mind of the law; that is, the purpose, spirit, or intention of a law or the law generally.

Mens legislatoris /ménész léjislátóras/. The intention of the law-maker.

Mensor /ménzsor/. In civil law, a measurer of land; a surveyor.

Mens rea /ménz réya/. As an element of criminal responsibility: a guilty mind; a guilty or wrongful purpose; a criminal intent. Guilty knowledge and wilfulness. United States v. Greenbaum, C.C.A.N.J., 138 F.2d 437, 438. See Model Penal Code § 2.02. See also Criminal (Criminal intent); Knowledge; Knovingly; Premeditation; Specific intent.

Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est /ménz tèståtoráss in testaméntss spéktaands ést/. The intention of the testator is to be regarded in wills.

Mensularius /ménsülériyas/. In civil law, a money-changer or dealer in money.

Mensura /mens(y)úra/. In old English law, a measure.

Mensura domini regis /mens(y)úra dómánnay riyjas/. "The measure of our lord the king," being the weights and measures established under King Richard I, in his parliament at Westminster, 1197.

Mental. Relating to or existing in the mind; intellectual, emotional, or psychic, as distinguished from bodily or physical.

Mental alienation. A phrase sometimes used to describe insanity (q.v.).

Mental anguish. When connected with a physical injury, this term includes both the resultant mental sensation of pain and also the accompanying feelings of distress, fright, and anxiety. As an element of damages implies a relatively high degree of mental pain and distress; it is more than mere disappointment, anger, worry, resentment, or embarrassment, although it may include all of these, and it includes mental sensation of pain resulting from such painful emotions as grief, severe disappointment, indignation, wounded pride, shame, despair and/or public humiliation. Trevino v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 582 S.W.2d 582, 584. In other connections, and as a ground for divorce or for compensable damages or an element of damages, it includes the mental suffering resulting from the excitation of the more poignant and painful emotions, such as grief, severe disappointment, indignation, wounded pride, shame, public humiliation, despair, etc. See also Mental cruelty.

Mental capacity or competence. Term contemplates the ability to understand the nature and effect of the act in which a person is engaged and the business he or she is transacting. Jones v. Traders & General Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 689, 694. Such a measure of intelligence, understanding, memory, and judgment relative to the particular transaction (e.g. making of will or entering into contract) as will enable the person to understand the nature, terms, and effect of his or her act. Conley v. Nailor, 118 U.S. 127, 6 S.Ct. 1001, 30 L.Ed. 112. See also Capacity; Insanity.

Mental cruelty. A course of conduct on the part of one spouse toward the other spouse which can endanger the mental and physical health and efficiency of the other spouse to such an extent as to render continuance of the marital relation intolerable. As a ground for divorce, is conduct which causes embarrassment, humiliation and anguish so as to render life miserable and unendurable or to cause a spouse's life, person or health to become endangered. McGowan v. McGowan, 15 Ill.App.2d 913, 305 N.E.2d 261, 262. See also Indignity; Mental anguish.

Mental disease or defect. See Insanity.

Mental incapacity; mental incompetency. Such is established when there is found to exist an essential privation of reasoning faculties, or when a person is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. See Incapacity; Insanity.

Mental reservation. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise.

Mental state. Capacity or condition of one's mind in terms of ability to do or not do a certain act. See Mental capacity or competence.

Mental suffering. See Mental anguish; Mental cruelty.

Mentiri /mēntāryay/. Lat. To lie; to assert a falsehood.

Mentition /mēntišān/. The act of lying; a falsehood.

Mera noctis /mēra nōktās/. Midnight.

Mercable /märkbal/. Merchantable; to be sold or bought.

Mercantant /märkantānt/mār/*/. A foreign trader.

Mercantile /märkantāyl/*/. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of, merchants, or the business of merchants; having to do with trade or commerce or the business of buying and selling merchandise; trading; commercial; conducted or acting on business principles.

Mercantile agencies. See Credit bureau.

Mercantile law. An expression substantially equivalent to commercial law. It designates the system of rules, customs, and usages generally recognized and adopted by merchants and traders, and which, either in its simplicity or as modified by common law or statutes, constitutes the law for the regulation of their transactions and the solution of their controversies. The Uniform Commercial Code is the general body of law governing commercial or mercantile transactions. See Uniform Commercial Code.

Mercantile Law Amendment Acts. The statutes 19 & 20 Vict., cc. 60, 97, passed mainly for the purpose of assimilating the mercantile law of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Mercantile paper. See Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments.

Mercantile specialty. A writing that is not payable to order or to bearer but is otherwise negotiable. See U.C.C. § 3–805 (making Article 3 applicable to instruments lacking words of negotiability).

Mercative /märkastāv/. Belonging to trade.

Mercature /märkastār/. The practice of buying and selling.

Mercedary /mārsdēr/. A hirer; one that hires.

Mercenarius /mārsnēriyās/. A hireling or servant.

Mercen-lage /mārsnālō/. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bl. Comm. 65.

Merces /mārsīys/. Lat. In the civil law, reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from "pensio," it means the rent of farms (praedio rustici).

Merchandise. All goods which merchants usually buy and sell, whether at wholesale or retail; wares and commodities such as are ordinarily the objects of trade and commerce. But the term is generally not understood as including real estate, and is rarely applied to provisions such as are purchased day by day for immediate consumption (e.g. food).

Stock of merchandise. See Stock.

Merchandise broker. One who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control, being simply an agent with very limited powers. Hughes v. Young, 17 Tenn.App. 24, 65 S.W.2d 868. See Broker.

Merchandise Marks Act, 1862. The statute 25 & 26 Vict., c. 88, designed to prevent the fraudulent marking of merchandise and the fraudulent sale of merchandise falsely marked.

Merchant. One who is engaged in the purchase and sale of goods; a trafficker; a retailer; a trader. Term commonly refers to person who purchases goods at wholesale for resale at retail; i.e. person who operates a retail business (retailer).

A person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his occupation holds himself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his occupation holds himself out as having such knowledge or skill. U.C.C. § 2-104(1).

A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Merchants of this description are commonly known by the name of "shipping merchants."

Commission merchant. See Commission merchant.

Law merchant. See Commercial law; Mercantile law.

Statute merchant. See Statute.

Merchantability /mârchantabilaty/. Means that the article sold shall be of the general kind described and reasonably fit for the general purpose for which it shall have been sold, and where the article sold is ordinarily used in but one way, its fitness for use in that particular way is impliedly warranted unless there is evidence to the contrary. See also Fitness for particular purpose; Merchantable; Warranty.

Merchantable /mârchantabal/. Goods, to be "merchantable," must be fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are to be used. Consolidated Supply Co. v. Babbitt, 96 Idaho 626, 534 P.2d 466, 468, and conform to any promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label. Virgil v. Kash N' Karry Service, 484 A.2d 652, 655. Within § 2-314 of the U.C.C. creating implied warranty of merchantability, term "merchantable" implies that the goods sold conform to ordinary standards of care and that they are of average grade, quality and value of similar goods sold under similar circumstances. Woodruff v. Clark County Farm Bureau Co-op Ass'n, 153 Ind.App. 31, 286 N.E.2d 188, 194.

Goods to be merchantable must be at least such as: pass without objection in the trade under the contract description; and in the case of fungible goods, are of fair average quality within the description; and are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used; and run, within the variations permitted by the agreement, of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved; and are adequately contained, packaged, and labeled as the agreement may require; and conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label if any. U.C.C. § 2-314(2).

See also Fitness for particular purpose; Warranty (Implied Warranty of Merchantability or fitness for particular purpose).

Merchantable title. A good and marketable title in fee simple, free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts; a title which will enable the owner not only to hold it in peace but to sell it to a person of reasonable prudence. Overboe v. Overboe, N.D., 160 N.W.2d 650, 654. Good record title acceptable to a knowledgeable buyer not being under duress to purchase. One that can be held without reasonable apprehension of being assailed and readily transferable in market. Crow Creek Gravel & Sand Co. v. Dooley, 182 Ark. 1009, 33 S.W.2d 369, 370. See also Marketable title; Warranty (Warranty of title).

Merchant appraiser. See Appraiser.

Merchantman /mârchantman/. A ship or vessel employed in foreign or domestic commerce or in the merchant service.

Merchants' accounts. Accounts between merchant and merchant, which must be current, mutual, and unsettled, consisting of debts and credits for merchandise.

Merchant seaman. A sailor employed in a private vessel, as distinguished from one employed in the navy or public ships.

Merchant Shipping Acts. Certain English statutes, beginning with the St. 16 & 17 Vict., c. 131, whereby a general superintendence of merchant shipping is vested in the board of trade. See Maritime Commission.

Merchant /mârchat/mâr/. In feudal law, a fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to the lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. The same as marcheta (q.v.).

Merciament /mârs(h)ynamant/. An amercement, penalty, or fine (q.v.).

Mercimoniator Angliae /mârsamôwniâytas ânglîyt/. In old records, the impost of England upon merchandise.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet /mârsâs âpêlêshiy(s)yow ãd rîyz mówîbalizy têntam pàrtanst/. The term "merchantise" belongs to movable things only.

Mercis appelatione homines non contineri /mârsâs âpêlêshiywîny hîmoniy zôn kôntanirây/. Men are not included under the denomination of "merchantise."

Mercna lagu /mârknâ láguw/. See Lagu; Mercen-lago.

Mercy. In old English practice, the arbitration of the king or judge in punishing offenses not directly censured.
by law. So, "to be in mercy" signifies to be merced or fined for bringing or defending an unjust suit, or to be liable to punishment in the discretion of the court.

In criminal law, the discretion of a judge, within the limits prescribed by law, to remit altogether the punishment to which a convicted person is liable, or to mitigate the severity of his sentence; as when a jury recommends the prisoner to the mercy of the court.

Mercy killing. Euthanasia. The affirmative act of bringing about immediate death allegedly in a painless way and generally administered by one who thinks that the dying person wishes to die because of a terminal or hopeless disease or condition. See also Brain death; Death (Natural Death Acts); Right to die laws; Will (Living will).

Mere /mér/. L. Fr. Mother. AEle, mere, fille, grandmother, mother, daughter. En ventre sa mere, in its mother's womb.

Mere evidence rule. In search and seizure, it was once the rule that in a lawful search the officer had a right to seize instrumentalities and fruits of the crime but no right to seize other items (e.g., clothing of the suspect) which are mere evidence. This rule no longer prevails. Warden, Md. Penitentiary v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642, 18 L.Ed.2d 782. See Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

Mere licensee. One who enters upon the land or property of another without objection, or by the mere permission, sufferance, or acquiescence of the owner or occupier. Mann v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 232 Iowa 1049, 7 N.W.2d 45, 60. See License.

Merely. Without including anything else; purely; only; solely; absolute; wholly. In re Plymouth Motor Corporation, Cust. & Pat.App., 46 F.2d 211, 212.

Mere motion. The free and voluntary act of a party himself, done without the suggestion or influence of another person, is said to be done of his mere motion, ex mero motu (q.v.).

The phrase is used of an interference of the courts of law, who will, under some circumstances, of their own motion, object to an irregularity in the proceedings, though no objection has been taken to the informalities by the plaintiff or defendant in the suit.

Mere right. The mere right of property in land; the jus proprietas, without either possession or even the right of possession. The abstract right of property.

Mere-stone. In old English law, a stone for bounding or dividing lands.

Meretricious /mēhrstrikəs/. Of the nature of unlawful sexual connection. The term is descriptive of the relation sustained by persons who contract a marriage that is void by reason of legal incapacity.

Merger. The fusion or absorption of one thing or right into another; generally spoken of a case where one of the subjects is of less dignity or importance than the other. Here the less important ceases to have an independent existence.

Corporations. An amalgamation of two corporations pursuant to statutory provision in which one of the corporations survives and the other disappears. The absorption of one company by another, the former losing its legal identity, and latter retaining its own name and identity and acquiring assets, liabilities, franchises, and powers of former, and absorbed company ceasing to exist as separate business entity. Morris v. Investment Life Ins. Co., 27 Ohio St.2d 26, 272 N.E.2d 105, 108, 109, 56 O.O.2d 14. It differs from a consolidation wherein all the corporations terminate their existence and become parties to a new one.

The antitrust laws seek not only to control existing monopolies but also to discourage the acquisition of market power. Historically, mergers have provided an important route to positions of market dominance. Accordingly, Congress has required all mergers, whether vertical, horizontal, or conglomerate, to be scrutinized under the provisions of section 7 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 18. See also Kefauver-Celler Act; Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act.

Accounting methods. See Pooling of interests; Purchase method of accounting.

Cash merger. A merger transaction in which certain shareholders or interests in a corporation are required to accept cash for their shares while other shareholders receive shares in the continuing enterprise. Modern statutes generally authorize cash mergers, though courts test such mergers on the basis of fairness and, in some states, business purpose.

Conglomerate merger. Merger of corporations which are neither competitors nor potential or actual customers or suppliers of each other. U. S. v. General Dynamics Corp., D.C.N.Y., 258 F.Supp. 36, 56. One in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Kennebec Copper Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A.Colo., 467 F.2d 67, 67, 75. A conglomerate merger is one that is neither vertical nor horizontal and can be of any of three types. A geographic extension merger occurs when the acquiring firm, by merger, extends its dominance to an adjacent geographic market. See, e.g., United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 94 S.Ct. 2856, 41 L.Ed.2d 978. A product extension merger occurs when the merger joins firms in related product markets. See, e.g., FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co. (Clorox), 386 U.S. 588, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303. A "pure" conglomerate merger occurs when the two merging firms operate in unrelated markets having no functional economic relationship. See, e.g., United States v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 324 F.Supp. 19. These categories are not mutually exclusive: for example, a merger may have both horizontal and vertical aspects. See, e.g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510.
Defacto merger. A transaction that has the economic effect of a statutory merger but is cast in the form of an acquisition of assets or an acquisition of voting stock and is treated by a court as if it were a statutory merger. Occurs where one corporation is absorbed by another, but without compliance with statutory requirements for a merger. Arnold Graphics Industries, Inc. v. Independent Agent Center, Inc., C.A.N.Y., 775 F.2d 38, 42.

Down stream merger. The merger of a parent corporation into its subsidiary.

Horizontal merger. Merger between business competitors, such as manufacturers of the same type products or distributors selling competing products in the same market area. See also Vertical merger.

Short form merger. A number of states provide special rules for the merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent where the parent owns substantially all of the shares of the subsidiary. This is known as a "short-form" merger. Short-form mergers under such special statutes may generally be effected by: (a) adoption of a resolution of merger by the parent corporation, (b) mailing a copy of the plan of merger to all shareholders of record of the subsidiary, and (c) filing the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state and his issuance of a certificate of merger. This type of merger is less expensive and time consuming than the normal type merger. See e.g. Rev. Model Bus. Corp. Act § 11.04.

Triangular merger. A method of amalgamation of two corporations by which the disappearing corporation is merged into a subsidiary of the surviving corporation and the shareholders of the disappearing corporation receive shares of the surviving corporation. In a reverse triangular merger the subsidiary is merged into the disappearing corporation so that it becomes a wholly owned subsidiary of the surviving corporation.

Up stream merger. A merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent. See Short form merger, above.

Criminal law. When a man commits a major crime which includes a lesser offense, or commits a felony which includes a tort against a private person, the latter is merged in the former.

Divorce law. Substitution of rights and duties under judgment or decree for those under property settlement agreement. Roesbery v. Roesbery, 88 Idaho 514, 401 P.2d 805, 807.

Judgments. A valid and personal judgment merges the original claim in the judgment and thereafter suit is brought on the judgment and not on the original claim. Restatement of Judgments § 45, comment a.

Law and equity. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, there is now only one form of action, the "civil action," in which the parties may be given both legal and equitable relief. Fed.R.Civl P. 2.

Property interests. It is a general principle of law that where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated, or, in the law phrase, is said to be merged; that is, sunk or drowned, in the greater. Thus, if there be tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and shall never exist any more. Similarly, a lesser interest in real estate merges into a greater interest when lessee purchases leased property.

Rights. This term, as applied to rights, is equivalent to "confusio" in the Roman law, and indicates that where the qualities of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights which extinguishes both qualities; whence, also, merger is often called "extinguishment."

Rights of action. In the law relating to rights of action, when a person takes or acquires a remedy or security of a higher nature, in legal estimation, than the one which he already possesses for the same right, then his remedies in respect of the minor right or security merge in those attaching to the higher one; as, for example, where a claim is merged in the judgment recovered upon it.

Sentences. If a defendant is charged in two duplicitous indictments with commission of two crimes, he may be sentenced on conviction of the more serious crime but not on both indictments, e.g. possession of marihuana and possession of the same marihuana at the same time and place with intent to sell. Kuklis v. Com., 361 Mass. 302, 280 N.E.2d 155.

Title. See Property interests, above.

Merger clause. A provision in a contract to the effect that the written terms may not be varied by prior or oral agreements because all such agreements have been merged into the written document. See U.C.C. § 2-202.

Meridians. These are imaginary north and south lines which are used in the Governmental Survey System. These intersect the base line to form a starting point for the measurement of land under that system.

Meritorious /mēhxrŏrtŏrijəs/. Possessing or characterized by "merit" in the legal sense of the word. See Merits.

Meritorious cause of action. This description is sometimes applied to a person with whom the ground of action, or the consideration, originated or from whom it moved. For example, where a cause of action accrues to a woman while single, and is sued for, after her marriage, by her husband and herself jointly, she is called the "meritorious cause of action."

Meritorious consideration. One founded upon some moral obligation; a valuable consideration in the second degree.

Meritorious defense. See Defense.

Merits. As a legal term, refers to the strict legal rights of the parties. Mink v. Keim, 266 App.Div. 184, 41
Mesne assignment. If A. grant a lease of land to B., and B. assign his interest to C., and C. in his turn assign his interest therein to D., in this case the assignments so made by B. and C. would be termed "mesne assignments." that is, they would be assignments intervening between A.'s original grant and the vesting of D.'s interest in the land under the last assignment.

Mesne incumbrance. An intermediate charge, burden, or liability; an incumbrance which has been created or has attached to property between two given periods.

Mesne lord. In old English law, a middle or intermediate lord; a lord who held of a superior lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 59. More commonly termed a "mesne" (q.v.).

Mesne process. See Process.

Mesne profits. Intermediate profits; i.e., profits which have been accruing between two given periods. Dumas v. Ropp, 98 Idaho 61, 558 P.2d 632, 633. Value of use or occupation of land during time it was held by one in wrongful possession and is commonly measured in terms of rents and profits. See also Profit.

Mesne, writ of. An ancient and abolished writ, which lay when the lord paramount distrained on the tenant paravail. The latter had a writ of mesne against the mesne lord.

Message. Any notice, word, or communication, no matter the mode and no matter how sent, from one person to another.

President's message. An annual communication from the president of the United States to Congress, made at or near the beginning of each session, embodying his views on the state and exigencies of national affairs, suggestions and recommendations for legislation, and other matters. U.S. Const. art. 2, § 3.

Message from the crown. In old English law, the method of communicating between the sovereign and the house of parliament. A written message under the royal sign-manual was brought by a member of the house, being a minister of the crown or one of the royal household. Verbal messages were also sometimes delivered.

Messarius /mesäriyys/. In old English law, a chief servant in husbandry; a bailiff.

Messenger. One who bears messages or errands; a ministerial officer employed by executive officers, legislative bodies, and courts of justice, whose service consists principally in carrying verbal or written communications or executing other orders.

Messuage. Dwelling-house with the adjacent buildings and curtilage. Term formerly had a more extended signification.

Meta /miyta/. Lat. A goal, bound, or turning-point. In old English law, a tree or a pillar, marking the position or beginning of a boundary line.

Metayer system /matéyar*/matéyèy sistam/. A system of agricultural holdings, under which the land is divided, in small farms, among single families, the landlord generally supplying the stock which the agricultural system of the country is considered to require, and receiving, in lieu of rent and profit, a fixed proportion of the produce. This proportion, which is generally paid in kind, is usually one-half. The system prevails in some parts of France and Italy.

Metcorn. A measure or portion of corn, given by a lord to customary tenants as a reward and encouragement for labor.

Metegavel /miytgæval/. A tribute or rent paid in victuals.

Meter. An instrument of measurement; as a coal-meter, a gas-meter, a land-meter. The basic metric unit of length; equivalent to 39.37 inches. See also Metric system.

Meter rate. Rate applied to charge for utility services based upon quantity used; e.g. kilowatt hours of electricity.

Metes and bounds /miytos ən báwndz/. The boundary lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. A way of describing land by listing the compass directions and distances of the boundaries. It is often used in connection with the Government Survey System. See also Land measure.

Metewand, or meteyard /miytwánd/miýtýárd/. A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

Method. The mode of operating, or the means of attaining an object. In patent law, "engine" and "method" mean the same thing, and may be the subject of a patent. Method, properly speaking, is only placing several things, or performing several operations, in the most convenient order, but it may signify a contrivance or device.

Metric system. A decimal system of weights and measures based on the meter as a unit length and the kilogram as a unit mass. Derived units include the liter for liquid volume, the stere for solid volume, and the are for area.

Metropolitan /métropólstan/. Of or pertaining to a city or metropolis and the cluster of towns surrounding it. In ecclesiastical matters, the head of a province or an archbishop.

Metropolitan council. Official or quasi-official body appointed or elected by voters in the city and towns which comprise the metropolitan area. The powers and duties of such council are set by statute. Created to provide unified administration of functions and services common to cities and towns within metropolitan area; e.g. sewage disposal, public transportation, water supply.

Metropolitan district. A special district embracing parts or the whole of several contiguous cities or other areas, created by a State to provide unified administration of one or more functions; e.g., sewage disposal, water supply, metropolitan transit.

Metteshep, or mettenshep /miytshæp/. In old English law, an acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants for default in not doing their customary service in cutting the lord’s corn.

Metus /miytas/. Lat. Fear; terror. In a technical sense, a reasonable and well-grounded apprehension of some great evil, such as death or mayhem, and not arising out of mere timidity, but such as might fall upon a man of courage. Fear must be of this description in order to amount to duress avoiding a contract.

Meubles /myúwbľ/. In French law, the movables of English law. Things are meubles from either of two causes: (1) From their own nature, e.g., tables, chairs; or (2) from the determination of the law, e.g., obligations.

Meum est promittere, non dimittere /miyam êst promitêrê non dimitêrê/. It is mine to promise, not to discharge.

Mexican divorce. Term used to describe divorce decree in Mexico either by mail order or by the appearance of one spouse who never acquires a Mexican domicile. In both cases, the divorce is not entitled to recognition in the United States. Bethune v. Bethune, 192 Ark. 811, 94 S.W.2d 1043.

Migration. Movement from one place to another; from one country or region to another country or region.

Migratory divorce. Term used to describe a divorce secured by a spouse who leaves his or her domicile and moves to, or resides temporarily in, another state or country for purpose of securing the divorce. See also Mexican divorce.

Migratory game. Generally applied to birds which move from one place to another in season.

Mile. A measure of length or distance, containing 8 furlongs, or 1,760 yards, or 5,280 feet; or 1,609 meters. This is the measure of an ordinary or statute mile; but the nautical or geographical mile contains 6,080 feet. See also Per diem.

Mileage. Allowance for traveling expenses at certain rate per mile. Especially to members of legislative bodies, witnesses, sheriffs, and bailiffs. See also Per diem.

Mileage tax. License tax imposed upon intrastate business of transportation for compensation on public roads of state.

Miles /máylyiz/. Lat. In civil law, a soldier.

Militarization of state. The whole of military forces, staff, etc. under the Department of Defense.

Military appeals. See Court of Military Appeals.

Military base. See Base.

Military boards. A military board is a body of persons appointed to act as a fact finding agency or as an advisory body to the appointing authority. A military board may be appointed to investigate, advise, administer or adjudicate. Military boards may act as investigating committees to determine the cause of property damage, injury, or death, or to inquire into loss or misappropriation of property or funds. Boards may also act as administrative tribunals to examine the applicable facts, hear evidence, and make determination concerning personnel matters such as promotion, separation, and retirement.

Military bounty land. See Bounty.

Military commissions. Courts whose procedure and composition are modeled upon courts-martial, being the tribunals by which alleged violations of martial law are tried and determined. The membership of such commissions is commonly made up of civilians and army officers. They are probably not known outside of the Unit ed States, and were first used by General Scott during the Mexican war.

Military court of inquiry. A military court of special and limited jurisdiction, convened to investigate specific matters. 10 U.S.C.A. § 935. Proceedings do not include a trial of issues in which anyone is formally a party; its traditional function has been to investigate and advise whether further proceedings shall be had. U.S. v. Shibley, D.C. Cal. 1953, 112 F.Supp. 734, 742–743.

Military courts. Courts convened subject to the Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.; e.g. Courts-martial, Court of Military Review, Military Court of Inquiry; Court of Military Appeals.

Military feuds. See Feud.

Military government. Such as is exercised by military commander under direction of President in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels. Such supersedes local law. Hammond v. Squier, D.C. Wash., 51 F.Supp. 227, 230. See Martial law.

Military jurisdiction. There are under the Constitution, three kinds of military jurisdiction: one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States or in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels. Such supersedes local law. Hammond v. Squier, D.C. Wash., 51 F.Supp. 227, 230. See Martial law.

Military law. A system of regulations for the government of armed forces. That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. Military law is distinct from martial law, in that it applies only to persons in the military or naval service of the government; whereas, martial law, when once established, applies alike to citizens and soldiers and supersedes civil law. See Code of Military Justice.

Military offenses. Those offenses which are cognizable by the military courts, as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc. See Code of Military Justice; Court Martial.

Military office. See Office.

Military officer. See Officer.

Military Review, Courts of. Each armed service has a Court of Military Review which reviews courts-martial decisions. 10 U.S.C.A. § 866. Further appeal is to the U.S. Court of Military Appeals. See Court of Military Appeals.

Military tenures. The various tenures by knight-service, grand-serjeanty, cornage, etc., were frequently called "military tenures," from the nature of the services which they involved.

Military testament. See Testament.

Militia /mili'sti/. Lat. Knights.

Militia /mili'ah/. The body of citizens in a state, enrolled for discipline as a military force, but not engaged in actual service except in emergencies, as distinguished from regular troops or a standing army. State v. Dawson, 272 N.C. 555, 159 S.E. 2d 1, 9.

Mill. One-tenth of one cent. Many states use a mill rate to compute property taxes. See Mill rate.

Miller Act. Federal statute which requires the posting of performance and payment bonds before an award may be made for a contract beyond a certain amount for construction, alteration or repair of a public building or public work of the U.S. government. 40 U.S.C.A. §§ 270a–270f.

Miller-Tydings Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) granting anti-trust exemption to State laws which permitted resale price maintenance agreements (fair trade laws). This exemption was repealed in 1975.

Milling in transit. A special privilege allowable at certain designated points, whereby the carrier, having transported grain to a shipper's mill, agrees that the shipper may reship the meal without charge and for which extra compensation is usually exacted by interstate carriers under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mill power. An expression designating a unit of water power. It is the descriptive term used to rate water power for the purpose of renting it. It indicates the amount of power due to a stated quantity of water used on the particular fall. It is a term of practical convenience in defining the quantity and weight of water available for use by the lessee. The actual amount of horse power developed may vary with the efficiency of the water wheels and other appliances supplied by the lessee.

Mill privilege. The right of a riparian proprietor to erect a mill on his land and to use the power furnished by the stream for the purpose of operating the mill, with due regard to the rights of other owners above and below him on the stream.

Mill rate. Tax applied to real property. Each mill represents $1 of tax assessment per $1000 of property value assessment. See also Mill.

Mill site. A parcel of land on or contiguous to a watercourse, suitable for the erection and operation of a mill operated by the power furnished by the stream. Specifically, in mining law, a parcel of land constituting a portion of the public domain, located and claimed by the owner of a mining claim under the laws of the United States (or purchased by him from the government and patented), not exceeding one acre in extent, not including any mineral land, not contiguous to the vein or lode, and occupied and used for the purpose of a mill or for other uses directly connected with the operation of the mine; or a similar parcel of land located and actually used for the purpose of a mill or reduction plant, but not by the owner of an existing mine nor in connection with any particular mining claim. See 30 U.S.C.A. § 42.

Mina /máyna/. In old English law, a measure of corn or grain.

Minage /máynaj/. A toll or duty paid for selling corn by the mina.

Minare /manériy/. In old records, to mine or dig mines. Minator, a miner.

Minatur innocentibus qui parcit nocentibus /mányetar înaséntabas kwáy pársat náséntabas/. He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.

Mind. In its legal sense, "mind" means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit, or to assent.

Mind and memory. A phrase applied to testators, denoting the possession of mental capacity to make a will. In other words, one ought to be capable of making his will, with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. See also Capacity.

Mind, state of. Evidence is admissible to show a person's state of mind when this issue is material and relevant to the case; e.g. statements indicating despair may be admissible on issue of suicide. Fed.Evid.R. 803(3). See also Mental state.

Mine. An excavation in the earth from which ores, coal, or other mineral substances are removed by digging or other mining methods, and in its broader sense it denotes the vein, lode, or deposit of minerals. Atlas Milling Co. v. Jones, C.C.A.Okl., 115 F.2d 61, 63. It may include open cut, strip, or hydraulic methods of mining. Rudd v. Hayden, 265 Ky. 495, 97 S.W.2d 35, 37.

Mineral, adj. Relating to minerals or the process and business of mining; bearing or producing valuable minerals.

Mineral, n. Any valuable inert or lifeless substance formed or deposited in its present position through natural agencies alone, and which is found either in or upon the soil of the earth or in the rocks beneath the soil.

Any natural constituent of the crust of the earth, inorganic or fossil, homogeneous in structure, having a definite chemical composition and known crystallization. The term includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug, such as beds of stone which may be quarried.

The word is not a definite term and is susceptible of limitations or extensions according to intention with which it is used. In its ordinary and common meaning is a comprehensive term including every description of stone and rock deposit whether containing metallic or nonmetallic substances. West Virginia Dept. of Highways v. Farmer, 159 W.Va. 823, 226 S.E.2d 717, 719. Standing alone it might by itself embrace the soil, hence include sand and gravel, or, under a strict definition, it might be limited to metallic substances. Puget Mill Co. v. Duecy, 1 Wash.2d 421, 96 P.2d 571, 573, 574. The term "mineral" as it is used in the public land laws is more restricted than it is when used in some other respects. Its definition has presented many difficulties. It has been held that for purposes of mining laws, a mineral is whatever is recognized as mineral by the standard authorities on the subject. United States v. Toole, D.C.Mont., 224 F.Supp. 440, 444.

Mineral deed. A realty conveyance involving a severance from fee of present title to minerals in place, either effecting such severance in first instance or conveying part of such mineral ownership previously severed from the fee. Hickey v. Dirks, 156 Kan. 326, 133 P.2d 107, 109, 110.

Mineral district. A term occasionally used in acts of congress, designating in a general way those portions or regions of the country where valuable minerals are mostly found, or where the business of mining is chiefly carried on, but carrying no very precise meaning and not a known term of the law.

Mineral land entry. See Entry.

Mineral lands. Lands containing deposits of valuable, useful, or precious minerals in such quantities as to justify expenditures in the effort to extract them, and which are more valuable for the minerals they contain than for agricultural or other uses. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U.S. 526, 23 S.Ct. 365, 47 L.Ed. 575; Defebeak v. Hawke, 115 U.S. 392, 6 S.Ct. 95, 29 L.Ed. 423. Lands on which metals or minerals have been discovered in rock in place. Such lands include not merely metaliferous lands, but all such as are chiefly valuable for their deposits of mineral character, which are useful in arts or valuable for purposes of manufacture, Dunbar Lime Co. v. Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., C.C.A. Utah, 17 F.2d 351, 384; and embrace not only those which the lexicon defines as "mineral", but, in addition, such as are valuable for deposits of marble, slate, petroleum, asphaltum, and even guano. United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 311 U.S. 317, 61 S.Ct. 264, 284, 85 L.Ed. 210.

Mineral lease. An agreement permitting use of land to explore, and then, if mineral is discovered, giving right to take mineral either for definite term or so long as it can be produced in paying quantities upon reserved royalty. Gordon v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., C.C.A.Tex., 63 F.2d 487, 488. A mineral lease so characterized as a real right, is merely a contract which permits the lessee to explore for minerals on the land of the lessor in consideration of the payment of a rental and/or bonuses. Prestridge v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., La.App., 131 So.2d 810, 820. See also Mining lease.

Mineral lode. A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of the mountain and also any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock.

Mineral right. An interest in minerals in land, with or without ownership of the surface of the land. A right to take minerals or a right to receive a royalty. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Strohacker, 202 Ark. 645, 152 S.W.2d 557, 561.

Mineral servitude. The right to exploit or develop minerals. Frost Lumber Industries v. Republic Production Co., C.C.A.La., 112 F.2d 462, 466.

Minerator. In old records, a miner.

Miner's inch. See Inch.

Minimal contacts. See Minimum contacts.

Minima poena corporalis est major qualibet pecuniaria /minima pyna korpareylas est meyjar kwéylab pokykynýJyirys/. The smallest corporal punishment is greater than any pecuniary one.

Mini-maxi. An underwriting arrangement with a broker requiring the broker to sell the minimum on an all-or-none basis and the balance on a best-efforts basis.

Minime mutanda sunt que certain habuerunt interpretationem /minami muwytaend sînt kwiy sûrtam habuywiwont antärprétyeshiyónwm/. Things which had had a certain interpretation [whose interpretation has been settled, as by common opinion] are not to be altered.

Miniment. An old form of muniment (q.v.).

Minimum charge. The lowest tariff which may be charged to a customer of a public utility or common carrier regardless of the amount of service rendered.

Minimum. The least quantity assignable, admissible or possible in given case and is opposed to maximum.
MINING DISTRICT

Mining district. A section of country usually designated by name and described or understood as being confined within certain natural boundaries, in which the precious metals (or their ores) are found in paying quantities, and which is worked therefor, under rules and regulations prescribed or agreed upon by the miners therein. See also Mining location.

Mining lease. A lease of a mine or mining claim or a portion thereof, to be worked by the lessee, usually under conditions as to the amount and character of work to be done, and reserving compensation to the lessor either in the form of a fixed rent or a royalty on the tonnage of ore mined, and which (as distinguished from a license) conveys to the lessee an interest or estate in the land, and (as distinguished from an ordinary lease) conveys not merely the temporary use and occupation of the land, but a portion of the land itself, that is, the ore in place and un severed and to be extracted by the lessee. See also Mineral lease.

Mining location. The act of appropriating and claiming, according to certain established rules and local customs, a parcel of land of defined area, upon or in which one or more of the precious metals or their ores have been discovered, and which constitutes a portion of the public domain, with the declared intention to occupy and work it for mining purposes under the implied license of the United States. Also the parcel of land so occupied and appropriated. St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 636, 26 L.Ed. 875. Essential to any valid location is the discovery of a valuable mineral deposit. Upon making a valid location the locator has vested rights in the land which are property in the true sense of the word. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 295, 40 S.Ct. 321, 325, 64 L.Ed. 567. Once the land is patented, the land is private property. See also Location (Mining law).

Mining partnership. An association of several owners of a mine for co-operation in working the mine. Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 102 U.S. 645, 26 L.Ed. 266; Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U.S. 512, 9 S.Ct. 355, 32 L.Ed. 764. Generally, where the parties co-operate in developing a lease for oil and gas, each agreeing to pay his part of the expenses and to share in the profits or losses, a "mining partnership" exists. Continental Supply Co. v. Dickson Oil Co., 194 Okl. 660, 153 P.2d 1017, 1019. A special type of partnership different in many respects from ordinary or trading partnerships. Meister v. Farrow, 109 Mont. 1, 92 P.2d 753, 757, 758, 760, 761.

Mining rent. Consideration given for a mining lease, whether such lease creates a tenancy, conveys a fee, or grants an incorporeal right or a mere license.

Minister. Person acting as agent for another in performance of specified duties or orders. A person ordained according to the usages of some church or associated body of Christians for the preaching of the gospel and filling the pastoral office. In England, holder of government office; e.g. Prime Minister.

Foreign minister. An ambassador, minister, or envoy from a foreign government.

International law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation as a mediator or arbitrator between two other nations who are engaged in a controversy, with their consent, with a view to effecting an amicable adjustment of the dispute.

A general name given to the diplomatic representatives sent by one state to another, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

Public law. One of the highest functionaries in the organization of civil government, standing next to the sovereign or executive head, acting as his immediate auxiliary, and being generally charged with the administration of one of the great bureaus or departments of the executive branch of government. In England, otherwise called a "cabinet minister," "secretary of state," or "secretary of a department". See also Ministry.

Public minister. A general term comprehending all the higher classes of diplomatic representatives,—as ambassadors, envoys, residents,—but not including the commercial representatives, such as consuls.

Ministerial act. /minəstər(ə)l/. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial. That which involves obedience to instructions, but demands no special discretion, judgment, or skill. Arrow Exp. Forwarding Co. v. Iowa State Commerce Commission, 256 Iowa 1088, 130 N.W.2d 451, 453. An act is "ministerial" when its performance is positively commanded and so plainly prescribed as to be free from doubt. J.E. Brenneman Co. v. Schramm, D.C.Pa., 473 F.Supp. 1316, 1319. Official's duty is "ministerial" when it is absolute, certain and imperative, involving merely execution of a specific duty arising from fixed and designated facts. Long v. Seabrook, 260 S.C. 562, 197 S.E.2d 659, 662.

One which a person or board performs under a given state of facts in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority without regard to or the exercise of his or their own judgment upon the propriety of the act being done. State, Dept, of Mental Health v. Allen, Ind.App., 427 N.E.2d 2, 4; Gibson v. Winterset Community School Dist., 258 Iowa 440, 138 N.W.2d 112, 115. Compare Discretionary acts. See also Mandamus.

Ministerial duty. One regarding which nothing is left to discretion—a simple and definite duty, imposed by law, and arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist.

Ministerial function. A function as to which there is no occasion to use judgment or discretion. Hood Motor Co., Inc. v. Lawrence, La., 320 So.2d 111, 115. See also Ministerial act.

Ministerial office. See Office.

Ministerial officer. One whose duties are purely ministerial, as distinguished from executive, legislative, or judicial functions, requiring obedience to the mandates of superiors and not involving the exercise of judgment or discretion.

Ministerial power. See Power.
Ministerial trust. See Trust.

Ministers plenipotentiary /ministärz plénapäténte/; shariy/“ši‘ihéhry/; “travels.” Ministers plenipotentiary possess full powers, and are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary.

Ministrant /mínastrant/. The party cross-examining a witness was so called, under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

Ministri regis /mínistr regis/. Lat. In old English law, ministers of the king, applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government.

Ministry. The term as used in England is wider than Cabinet and includes all the holders of public office who come in and go out with the Prime Minister. In this respect it may be contrasted with the Permanent Civil Service, whose tenure is independent of public changes. The term stands for a department of government for which a minister is responsible to Parliament. The first English Ministry as now understood was formed after the general election of 1696.

Minor-trial. A private, voluntary, informal form of dispute resolution in which attorneys for each disputant make a brief presentation of his or her best case before officials for each side who have authority to settle. Usually, a neutral, third-party advisor is present at the hearing. Following the attorneys’ presentations, the principals attempt to settle the dispute. The neutral third-party advisor may be asked to render a non-binding advisory opinion regarding the outcome of the dispute if it were litigated.

Minor. An infant or person who is under the age of legal competence. A term derived from the civil law, which described a person under a certain age as less than so many years. In most states, a person is no longer a minor after reaching the age of 18 (though state laws might still prohibit certain acts until reaching a greater age; e.g. purchase of liquor). See also Delinquent child; Infancy; Juvenile; Legal age; Majority.

Also, less; of less consideration; lower; a person of inferior condition.

Minor atas /mínair atás/. Lat. Minority or infancy. Literally, lesser age.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis nec etiam convenire; differetur usque aetatem; sed non cadit breve /mínair ánti témpas áisiy nón pówtst in kéys(y)uw prpréystétýtas něk ésiýam kóvnóaráyri; difýarti áškiyí atéýtam; séd nón kéydat břiýyí/. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree; it should be deferred until majority; but the writ does not fail.

Minor regalia /mínor ragéélyíya/. In English law, the lesser prerogatives of the crown, including the rights of the revenue.

Minor deviation rule. Under "minor deviation rule" for determining when the deviation from purpose and use for which permission to drive insured vehicle is granted will preclude coverage under omnibus clause of policy, if bailee’s use is not gross, substantial, or major violation, even though it may have amounted to deviation, protection is still afforded to bailee under omnibus clause. James v. Aetna Life & Cas., 1148, 26 Ariz.App. 137, 546 P.2d 1146.

Minor dispute. A “minor dispute” within the meaning of the Railway Labor Act is one which relates to the interpretation of an existing labor management contract and is directed to rights already vested, in contrast to a major dispute, which involves the formation of the collective bargaining agreement or the substantial alteration of an existing agreement and which involves the acquisition of rights. Gregory v. Burlington Northern R. Co., D.Min., 698 F.Supp. 538, 541. Compare Major (or minor) dispute.

Minor fact. In the law of evidence, a relative, collateral, or subordinate fact; a circumstance. Compare Material fact.

Minority. The state or condition of a minor; infancy. Opposite of “majority.” See Minor. Compare Legal age; Majority.

The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly; opposed to majority (q.v.).

In context of Constitution’s guarantee of equal protection, “minority” does not have merely numerical denotation but refers to identifiable and specially disadvantaged group. Graves v. Barnes, D.C.Tex., 343 F.Supp. 704, 730.

Minority opinion. See Opinion.

Minority stockholder. Those stockholders of a corporation who hold so few shares in relation to the total outstanding that they are unable to control the management of the corporation or to elect directors.

Minor jurare non potest /mínair jàriéir yón pówtst/. A minor cannot make oath. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury.

Minor minorem custodire non debet, alios enim presumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit /mínair mánor mánor jàriéir yón dábét, éýílyóws línam práz(y)ůwmat máliy jàriéir kwy sýípsám jàriéir nésst/. A minor ought not to be guardian to a minor, for he who knows not how to govern himself is presumed to be unfit to govern others.

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori aetate, nisi in causa dotis, propter favorem /mínair nón tántíy ráspóndári yón dáj(y)ántíy mánoráy stéyti, náyssay in dówdas, próptar favórám/. A minor is not bound to reply during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

Minor offenses. See Petty offense.
MINOR'S ESTATES

Minor qui infra ætatem 12 annorum fuerit utegaari non potest, nec extra legem poni, quia ante talem ætatem, non est sub lege aliqua, nec in decennia /máyns kwáy ínfrá stétyám dýyuwósam ánóram fyúvarst átledáry nó náwst, něk ékstra líjyám pównay, kwáys éntiy télym stétyám, nónn ét sb líjy yálskó néik in dássen. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the law, because before such age he is not under any law, nor in a decennary.

Minor septemdecim annis non admittitur fore executo¬reó /máyns sëptámdússam ánáns nó nó admítatsár fóríy òsgékystórm. A person under seventeen years is not admitted to be an executor. A rule of ecclesiastical law.

Minors' estates. Property of those who have not reached their legal majority and which must be adminis¬tered after their death or during their lives under a court appointed fiduciary.

Mint. The place designated by law where bullion is coined into money under authority of the government.

Mintage /míntaj/. The charge or commission taken by the mint as a consideration for coining into money the bullion which is brought to it for that purpose; the same as "seigniorage."

Also that which is coined or stamped as money; the product of the mint.

Mint-mark. The masters and workers of the English mint, in the indentures made with them, agreed "to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making." After every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they were entitled to their quietus under the great seal, and to be discharged from all suits or actions.

Mint-master. One who manages the coinage.

Minus /máyns/. Lat. In the civil law, less; less than. The word had also, in some connections, the sense of "not at all." For example, a debt remaining wholly unpaid was described as "minus solutum."

Minus Latium /máyns léywshám. See Jus Latium.

Minus solvit, qui tardius solvit /máyns sošít kwáy tárdýús sóšít/. He does not pay who pays too late.

Minute. In measures of time or circumference, a minute is the sixtieth part of an hour or degree.

Minutes. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. Thus, the record of the proceedings at a meeting of directors or shareholders of a company is called the "minutes."

A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. See also Record; Transcript.

Minutes book. A book kept by the clerk or prothon¬otary of a court for entering memoranda of its proceedings. A record of all actions authorized at corporate board of directors' or stockholders' meeting.

Minutio /manýyuwshyíujó/. Lat. In the civil law, a lessening; diminution or reduction.

Miranda hearing. A pre-trial proceeding to determine whether there has been compliance with the require¬ments of the Miranda Rule (q.v.). The outcome will decide whether the prosecution will be permitted to introduce into evidence statements of the defendant made during custodial interrogation. See Miranda Rule; Suppression hearing.

Miranda Rule /márendó rúw/. Prior to any custodial interrogation (that is, questioning initiated by law en¬forcement officers after a person is taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom in any significant way) the person must be warned: 1. That he has a right to remain silent; 2. That any statement he does make may be used as evidence against him; 3. That he has a right to the presence of an attorney; 4. That if he cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for him prior to any questioning if he so desires.

Unless and until these warnings or a waiver of these rights are demonstrated at the trial, no evidence ob¬tained in the interrogation may be used against the accused. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 478, 479, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 1612, 1630, 16 L.Ed.2d 694.

See also In custody; Interrogation.

Misallege /míshlé/. To cite falsely as a proof or argu¬ment.

Misapplication. Improper, illegal, wrongful, or corrupt use of application of funds, property, etc. See also Misappropriation.

Misappropriation. The unauthorized, improper, or un¬lawful use of funds or other property for purpose other than that for which intended. Misappropriation of a client's funds is any unauthorized use of client's funds entrusted to an attorney, including not only stealing but also unauthorized temporary use for lawyer's own pur¬pose, whether or not he derives any personal gain or benefit therefrom. In re Harrison, D.C.App., 461 A.2d 1034, 1036. Term may also embrace the taking and use of another's property for sole purpose of capitalizing unfairly on good will and reputation of property owner. Pocket Books, Inc. v. Dell Pub. Co., 49 Misc.2d 252, 267 N.Y.S.2d 269, 272. See Model Rules of Professional Con¬duct. See also Embezzlement.

Misbehavior. Ill conduct; improper or unlawful behav¬ior. Such as to support contempt conviction is conduct inappropriate to particular role of actor, be he judge, juror, party, witness, counsel or spectator. U. S. v. Seale, C.A.III., 461 F.2d 345, 366.

Misbranding. False or misleading labeling. People v. Rosenbloom, 119 Cal.App. 759, 2 P.2d 228, 231. Such practices are prohibited by federal and state statutes; e.g. Fair Packaging and Labeling Act.

Miscarriage /maskærəj/miskærəj/. Poor management or administration; mismanagement.

Miscarriage of justice. Decision or outcome of legal proceeding that is prejudicial or inconsistent with substantial rights of party.

As used in constitutional standard of reversible error, “miscarriage of justice” means a reasonable probability of more favorable outcome for the defendant. People v. Lopez, 251 Cal.App.2d 918, 60 Cal.Rptr. 72, 76. A miscarriage of justice, warranting reversal, should be declared only when the court, after examination of entire cause, including the evidence, is of the opinion that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of the error. People v. Bernhardt, 222 C.A.2d 567, 35 Cal.Rptr. 401, 419.

Miscarriage of justice from erroneous charge to jury, under statute declaring that no judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted on basis of error which does not result in such miscarriage, results only when an erroneous charge is reasonably calculated to confuse or mislead. Marley v. Saunders, Fla., 249 So.2d 30, 35.

Miscegenation /mæsjēnēˈshən/ /mis-ja'/. Mixture of races. Term formerly applied to marriage between persons of different races. Statutes prohibiting marriage between persons of different races have been held to be invalid as contrary to equal protection clause of Constitution. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817, 18 L.Ed.2d 1010.

Mischarge. An erroneous charge; a charge, given by a court to a jury, which involves errors for which the judgment may be reversed.

Mischief. In legislative parlance, the word is sometimes used to signify the evil or danger which a statute is intended to cure or avoid.

In the phrase “malicious mischief,” (q.v.) it imports a wanton or reckless injury to persons or property.

A person is guilty of criminal mischief if he: (a) damages tangible property of another purposely, recklessly, or by negligence in the employment of fire, explosives, or other dangerous means, or (b) purposely or recklessly tampers with tangible property of another so as to endanger person or property; or (c) purposely or recklessly causes another to suffer pecuniary loss by deception or threat. Model Penal Code, § 220.3.

Misconduct. A transgression of some established and definite rule of action, a dereliction from duty, unlawful behavior, willful in character, improper or wrong behavior; its synonyms are misdemeanor, misdeed, misbehavior, delinquency, impropriety, mismanagement, offense, but not negligence or carelessness. Term “misconduct” when applied to act of attorney, implies dishonest act or attempt to persuade court or jury by use of deceptive or reprehensible methods. People v. Sigal, 249 C.A.2d 299, 57 Cal.Rptr. 541, 549. Misconduct, which renders discharged employee ineligible for unemployment compensation, occurs when conduct of employee evinces willful or wanton disregard of employer’s interest, as in deliberate violations, or disregard of standards of behavior which employer has right to expect of his employees, or in carelessness or negligence of such degree or recurrence as to manifest wrongful intent or evil design. Wilson v. Brown, La. App., 147 So.2d 27, 29. See also Wanton misconduct.

Misconduct in office. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in character. Term embraces acts which the office holder had no right to perform, acts performed improperly, and failure to act in the face of an affirmative duty to act. See also Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Miscontinuance. In practice, an improper continuance; want of proper form in a continuance; the same with “discontinuance.”

Miscreant /miskrēˈənt/. In old English law, an apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl.Comm. 44.

Misdate. A false or erroneous date affixed to a paper or document.

Misdelivery. Delivery of mail, freight, goods, or the like, to person other than authorized or specified recipient. The delivery of property by a carrier or warehouseman to a person not authorized by the owner or person to whom the carrier or warehouseman is bound by his contract to deliver it. In commercial law, refers to a bailee surrendering goods to someone other than the person entitled to them under a document covering the goods.

Misdemeanant /mɪsdəˈmiənənt/. A person guilty of a misdemeanor; one sentenced to punishment upon conviction of a misdemeanor.

Misdemeanor /mɪsdəˈmiənər/. Offenses lower than felonies and generally those punishable by fine, penalty, forfeiture or imprisonment otherwise than in penitentiary. Under federal law, and most state laws, any offense other than a felony is classified as a misdemeanor. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 19, 3401. Certain states also have various classes of misdemeanors (e.g. Class A, B, etc.). See Fed.R.Crim.P. 58 with respect to “Procedure for Misdemeanors and Other Petty Offenses”. See also Degrees of crime; infraction; Petty offense.

Misdescription. An error or falsity in the description of the subject-matter of a contract which deceives one of the parties to his injury, or is misleading in a material or substantial point. In commercial law, refers to a bailee inaccurately identifying, in a document of title, the goods received from the bailor. See also Misrepresentation.

Misdirection. An error made by a judge in instructing the jury upon the trial of a cause.

Mise /maɪz/miyz/. In common law pleading, the issue in a writ of right. When the tenant in a writ of right pleads that his title is better than the demandant's, he is said to join the mise on the mere right.

Also expenses; costs; disbursements in an action.

Mise-money. In old English law, money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc.

Miserable depositum /mizárébalij dospózatam/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity.

Misera est servitus, ubi jus est vagum aut incertum /mizárast ést sárvatas yúwyab jás ést véygam ód íansármat/. It is a wretched state of slavery which subsists where the law is vague or uncertain.

Miserere /mizárirýj/. The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy; whence it is also called the "psalm of mercy."

Misericordia /mizárakórd(i)ýa/. Lat. Mercy; a fine or amerciament; an arbitrary or discretionary amerciament.

Misericordia communis /mizárakórd(i)ýa kamyúwnas/. In old English law, a fine set on a whole county or hundred.

Misefeasance /misfiyzans/. The improper performance of some act which a person may lawfully do. "Nonfeasance" means the omission of an act which a person ought to do; "misfeasance" is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do; and "malfeasance" is the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all. Compare Malfeasance.

Misefeazance. See Misfeasance.

Misperion. An adverse event, calamity, or evil fortune, arising by accident (or without the will or concurrence of him who suffers from it), and not to be foreseen or guarded against by care or prudence. In its application to the law of homicide, this term always involves the further idea that the person causing the death is not at the time engaged in any unlawful act. See also Accident.

Misperion. See Joiner.

Miskenning /miskéning/. In Saxon and old English law, an unjust or irregular summoning to court; to speak unsteadily in court; to vary in one's plea.

Mislaid property. See Property.

Misleay. To deposit in a place not afterwards recollected; to lose anything by forgetfulness of the place where it was laid.

Misleading. Delusive; calculated to lead astray or to lead into error. A Judge's instructions which are of such a nature as to be misunderstood by the jury, or to give them a wrong impression, are said to be "misleading." See also Deception; Deceit; Misrepresentation.

Mismomer. Mistake in name; giving incorrect name to person in accusation, indictment, pleading, deed or other instrument. Under rules practice in some states, such is ground for dismissal by motion. In most states, however, as well as in the federal courts, such mismomer can be corrected by amendment of the pleadings.

When a mismomer occurs in a deed, the normal procedure is to prepare and record a correction deed. Commonly, a quit claim deed is used for this purpose.

Misleading. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defense of an action, is so called; as in the case of a plaintiff not merely stating his title in a defective manner, but setting forth a title which is essentially defective in itself; or if, to an action of debt, the defendant pleads "not guilty" instead of nil debet. Rules of Civil Procedure (in effect in the federal and many state courts) permit liberal amendment of incorrect or deficient pleadings. See Fed.R.Civ P. 15.

Misprion. A word used to describe an offense which does not possess a specific name. United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798. But more particularly and properly the term denotes either: (1) a contempt against the sovereign, the government, or the courts of justice, including not only contempt of court, properly so called, but also all forms of seditious or disloyal conduct and leze-majesty; (2) maladministration of public office; neglect or improper performance of official duty, including peculation of public funds; (3) neglect of light account made of a crime, that is, failure in the duty of a citizen to endeavor to prevent the commission of a crime, or, having knowledge of its commission, to fail to reveal it to the proper authorities.

Concealment of crime. See Misprion of felony.

Negative misprion. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed; that is, misprion in the third of the specific meanings given above.

Positive misprion. The commission of something which ought not to be done; that is, misprion in the first and second of the specific meanings given above.

Misprion of felony. The offense of concealing a felony committed by another, but without such previous concert with or subsequent assistance to the felon as would make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798. Elements of the crime are that the principal committed and completed the felony alleged, that the defendant had full knowledge of that fact, that the defendant failed to notify the authorities, and that defendant took an affirmative step to conceal the crime. U.S. v. Ciambrone, C.A.Nev., 750 F.2d 1416, 1417.

Whoever, having knowledge of the actual commission of a felony cognizable by a court of the United States, conceals and does not as soon as possible make known the same to some judge or other person in civil or military authority under the United States, is guilty of the federal crime of misprion of felony. 18 U.S.C.A. § 4.

See also Obstructing justice.
Mispriision of treason. The bare knowledge and concealment of an act of treason or treasonable plot by failing to disclose it to the appropriate officials; that is, without any assent or participation therein, for if the latter elements be present the party becomes a principal. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2382.

Misreading. Reading a deed or other instrument to an illiterate or blind man (who is a party to it) in a false or deceitful manner, so that he conceives a wrong idea of its tenor or contents.

Misrecital /mis rais hytal/. The erroneous or incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement, deed, or pleading.

Misrepresentation. Any manifestation by words or other conduct by one person to another that, under the circumstances, amounts to an assertion not in accordance with the facts. An untrue statement of fact. An incorrect or false representation. That which, if accepted, leads the mind to an apprehension of a condition other and different from that which exists. Colloquially it is understood to mean a statement made to deceive or mislead.

As amounting to actual legal fraud consists of material representation of presently existing or past fact, made with knowledge of its falsity and with intention that other party rely thereon, resulting in reliance by that party to his detriment. Jewish Center of Sussex County v. Whale, 86 N.J. 619, 432 A.2d 521, 524.

In a limited sense, an intentional false statement respecting a matter of fact, made by one of the parties to a contract, which is material to the contract and influential in producing it. A "misrepresentation," which justifies the rescission of a contract, is a false statement of a substantive fact, or any conduct which leads to a belief of a substantive fact material to proper understanding of the matter in hand, made with intent to deceive or mislead.

See also Deceit; Deception; False; Fraud; Material fact; Reliance.

Insurance law. A statement of something as a fact which is untrue and material to the risk, and which assured states knowing it to be untrue and with intent to deceive, or which insured states positively as true, not knowing it to be true, and which has a tendency to mislead. One that would influence a prudent insurer in determining whether or not to accept the risk, or in fixing the amount of the premium in the event of such acceptance. See also Material fact.

Missilia /mis u l y s/. In Roman law, gifts or liberalities, which the prae tors and consuls were in the habit of throwing among the people.

Missing ship. In maritime law, a vessel is so called when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year.

Missions. In church parlance, the establishment of churches and schools and relief depots through which are taught the principles of Christianity, the afflicted cared for, and the needy supplied.

Missura /mis y ura/. The ceremonies used in a Roman Catholic church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

Mistake. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. A state of mind not in accord with reality. A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Salazar v. Steelman, 22 Cal.App.2d 402, 71 P.2d 79, 82. See also Error; Ignorance.

Mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in (1) an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract; or (2) belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed.

A mistake of law happens when a party, having full knowledge of the facts, comes to an erroneous conclusion as to their legal effect. It is a mistaken opinion or inference, arising from an imperfect or incorrect exercise of the judgment, upon facts, Page v. Provines, 179 Okl. 391, 66 P.2d 7, 10; and necessarily presupposes that the person forming it is in full possession of the facts. The facts precede the law, and the true and false opinion alike imply an acquaintance with them. The one is the result of a correct application of legal principles, which every man is presumed to know, and is called "law;" the other, the result of a faulty application, and is called a "mistake of law."

In criminal law, ignorance or mistake as to a matter of fact or law is a defense if: (a) the ignorance or mistake negatives the purpose, knowledge, belief, recklessness or negligence required to establish a material element of the offense; or (b) the law provides that the state of mind established by such ignorance or mistake constitutes a defense. Model Penal Code, § 2.04(1).

Mutual mistake is where the parties have a common intention, but it is induced by a common or mutual mistake. "Mutual" as used in the expression mutual mistake of fact expresses a thought of reciprocity and distinguishes it from a mistake which is a common mistake of both parties. There is something of the thought of a common mistake because it must affect both parties. Mistake of fact as ground for relief may be neither "mutual" nor common in the strict sense because it may be wholly the mistake of one of the parties, the other being wholly ignorant both of the fact upon the faith of which the other has mistakenly acted and that the other has acted upon such an understanding of the fact situation.
MISTAKE

Unilateral mistake. A mistake by only one party to an agreement and generally not a basis for relief by rescission or reformation.

Mister. A title of courtesy. A trade, craft, occupation, employment, office.

Mistery. A trade or calling.

Mistrial. An erroneous, invalid, or nugatory trial. A trial of an action which cannot stand in law because of want of jurisdiction, or a wrong drawing of jurors, or disregard of some other fundamental requisite before or during trial. Trial which has been terminated prior to its normal conclusion. A device used to halt trial proceedings when error is so prejudicial and fundamental that expenditure of further time and expense would be wasteful if not futile. Ferguson v. State, Fla., 417 So.2d 639, 641. The judge may declare a mistrial because of some extraordinary event (e.g. death of juror, or attorney), for prejudicial error that cannot be corrected at trial, or because of a deadlocked jury.

"Mistrial" is equivalent to no trial and is a nugatory trial while "new trial" recognizes a completed trial which for sufficient reasons has been set aside so that the issues may be tried de novo. People v. Jamerson, 196 Colo. 63, 580 P.2d 805, 806.

Mitigating circumstances. Such as do not constitute a justification or excuse for the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability. For example, mitigating circumstances which will reduce degree of homicide to manslaughter are the commission of the killing in a sudden heat of passion caused by adequate legal provocation. People v. Morrin, 31 Mich.App. 301, 187 N.W.2d 434, 438.

Those that affect basis for award of exemplary damages, or reduce actual damages by showing, not that they were never suffered, but that they have been partially extinguished.

In actions for libel and slander, refer to circumstances bearing on defendant's liability for exemplary damages by reducing moral culpability, or on liability for actual damages by showing partial extinguishment thereof. The "mitigating circumstances" which the statute allows defendant in libel action to prove are those which tend to show that defendant in speaking the slanderous words acted in good faith, with honesty of purpose, and not maliciously. Roemer v. Retail Credit Co., 44 C.A.3d 926, 119 Cal.Rptr. 82, 91.

See also Comparative negligence; Exculpatory circumstances; Extraordinary circumstances.

Mitigation. To make less severe. Alleviation, reduction, abatement or diminution of a penalty or punishment imposed by law.

Mitigation of damages. Doctrine of "mitigation of damages," sometimes called doctrine of avoidable consequences, imposes on party injured by breach of contract or tort duty to exercise reasonable diligence and ordinary care in attempting to minimize his damages, or avoid aggravating the injury, after breach or injury has been inflicted and care and diligence required of him is the same as that which would be used by man of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Darnell v. Taylor, La.App., 236 So.2d 57, 61. Mitigation of damages is an affirmative defense and applies when plaintiff fails to take reasonable actions that would tend to mitigate his injuries. Mott v. Persichetti, Colo.App., 534 P.2d 823, 825. See Restatement, Contracts § 336(1); U.C.C. § 2-603. See also Avoidable consequences doctrine.

Mitigation of punishment. A judge may reduce or order a lesser sentence in consideration of such factors as the defendant's past good behavior, his family situation, his cooperation with the police and kindred factors.

Mitori sensus. Lat. The more favorable accetpation.

Mittius imperanti melius paretur. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed.

Mitter. L. Fr. To put, to send, or to pass; as, miter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. These words are used to distinguish different kinds of releases.

Mitter avant. L. Fr. In old practice, to put before; to present before a court; to produce in court.

Mittimus. The name of a precept in writing, issuing from a court or magistrate, directed to the sheriff or other officer, commanding him to convey to the prison the person named therein, and to the jailer, commanding him to receive and safely keep such person until he shall be delivered by due course of law. State v. Lenihan, 151 Conn. 552, 200 A.2d 476, 478. Transcript of minutes of conviction and sentence duly certified by court clerk. United States ex rel. Chasteev v. Denemark, C.C.A.II., 138 F.2d 289, 291.

Old English law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine; it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc.

Mixed. Formed by admixture or commingling; partaking of the nature, character, or legal attributes of two or more distinct kinds or classes.

As to mixed Action; Blood relations; Mixed blood; Contract; Government; Jury; Larceny; Marriage; Nuissance; Policy; Presumption; Property; Tithes; and War, see those titles.
Mixed insurance company. One which has, at least in part, the nature of both stock and mutual companies, and in which a certain portion of the profits is divided among the stockholders and distribution of other funds is made among the insured. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665, 667; Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 658, 659.

Mixed laws. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property.

Mixed question of law and fact. A question depending for solution on questions of both law and fact, but is really a question of either law or fact to be decided by either judge or jury.

Mixed questions. This phrase may mean either those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws, or questions arising on a trial involving both law and fact.

Mixed subjects of property. Such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as embellishments, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such are animals seres naturae, charters and deeds, court rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms.

Mixtion /miks(h)chan/. The mixture or confusion of goods or chattels belonging severally to different owners, in such a way that they can no longer be separated or distinguished; as where two measures of wine belonging to different persons are poured together into the same cask. See also Commingled; Fungibles.

Mixtum imperium /mikstum impiriyam/. Lat. In old English law, mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the "power" of certain subordinate civil magistrates as distinct from "jurisdiction."

M'Naghten Rule. The test applied in a number of the states for the defense of insanity. This test, as prescribed by statute or case law, has a number of variations in the respective states applying such. Under M'Naghten test or rule, an accused is not criminally responsible if, at the time of committing the act, he was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. M'Naghten's Case, 8 Eng.Rep. 718 (1843). State v. Johnson, 383 A.2d 1012, 1022.

The standard under the "M'Naghten insanity" test to determine whether a person is sane is did the defendant have sufficient mental capacity to know and understand what he was doing, and did he know and understand that it was wrong and a violation of the rights of another. To be "sane" and thus responsible to the law for the act committed, the defendant must be able to both know and understand the nature and quality of his act and to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of the commission of the offense. People v. Crosier, 41 Cal.App.3d 712, 116 Cal.Rptr. 467, 471.

See also Insanity, supra, regarding other tests used by courts in determining criminal responsibility.

Mob. An assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law, and committing, or threatening to commit, depredations upon property or violence to persons.

The word, in legal use, is practically synonymous with "riot," but the latter is the more correct term.

Mobilia /mowbiliya/. Lat. Movable things; movable things; otherwise called "res mobiles."

Mobilia non habent situm /mowbiliya non nón saytum/. Movable things have no situs or legal habitation.

Mobilia sequuntur personam /mowbiliya sokwántar parsómnam/. Movable follow the law of the person.

Mock. To deride, to laugh at, to ridicule, to treat with scorn and contempt.

Modal legacy. See Legacy.

Mode. The manner in which a thing is done; as the mode of proceeding, the mode of process.

Model. A preliminary pattern or representation of something to be made or something already made. A facsimile of something invented, made on a reduced scale, in compliance with the patent laws. A replication of something made to scale. Style or design of product or item. See also Sample.

Model act. Statute proposed by the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws for adoption by state legislatures, e.g. Uniform Commercial Code; Model Penal Code; Model Probate Code. Frequently, the state adopting the model act will modify it to some extent to meet its own needs or may adopt only a portion of such.

Model jury instructions. See Jury Instructions.

Model Rules of Professional Conduct. Rules adopted by the American Bar Association in 1983, with technical amendments adopted in 1987, which provide comprehensive treatment of professional conduct in the form of rules as to what an attorney may and may not do in dealing with the court, opposing counsel, his/her client and third persons. These Rules, which replace the former ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, have been adopted by many states (usually by the state supreme court) to govern conduct of attorneys admitted to practice in the state.

Moderamen inculpatæ tutelæ /moderáyman inkalpétyil/. Lat. In Roman law, the regulation of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor.
MODERATA MISERICORDIA

Moderata misericordia /mōdāryta mizərəkôrd(i)ya/. A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any trespass beyond the quality or quantity of the offense. It is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amerciament of the parties.

Moderate castigavit /mōdārytiv kəsətəgyvst/. Lat. In old pleading, be moderately chastised. The name of a plea in trespass which justifies an alleged battery on the ground that it consisted in a moderate chastisement of the plaintiff by the defendant, which, from their relations, the latter had a legal right to inflict.

Moderator. A chairman or president of an assembly. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

Modiatio /mōdiyat(i)ow/. In old English law, a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine.

Modica circumstantia facti just mutat /mōdīdakə sərkəstənsh(i)əm fəktə jəs myəwət/. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

Modification. A change; an alteration or amendment which introduces new elements into the details, or cancels some of them, but leaves the general purpose and effect of the subject-matter intact. See Amendment.

Modify. To alter; to change in incidental or subordinate features; enlarge, extend; amend; limit, reduce. Such alteration or change may be characterized, in quantitative sense, as either an increase or decrease. Johnson v. Three Bays Properties No. 2, Inc., Fla.App., 159 So.2d 924, 926. See Modification.

Modius /mōd(i)yəs/. Lat. A measure. Specifically, a Roman dry measure having a capacity of about 550 cubic inches; but in medieval English law used as an approximate translation of the word "bushel."

Modius terrae vel agrī /mōd(i)ya təriə vəl əgrə/. In old English law, a quantity of ground containing in length and breadth 100 feet.

Modo et forma /mōdow et fɔrmə/. Lat. In manner and form. Words used in the old Latin forms of pleadings by way of traverse, and literally translated in the modern precedents, importing that the party traversing denies the allegation of the other party, not only in its general effect, but in the exact manner and form in which it is made.

Modus /mōdəs/. Lat. In Civil law, manner; means; way.

Criminal pleading. The modus of an indictment is that part of it which contains the narrative of the commission of the crime; the statement of the mode or manner in which the offense was committed.

Ecclesiastical law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom.

Old conveyancing. Mode; manner; the arrangement or expression of the terms of a contract or conveyance.

Also a consideration; the consideration of a conveyance, technically expressed by the word "ut."

A qualification, involving the idea of variance or departure from some general rule or form, either by way of restriction or enlargement, according to the circumstances of a particular case, the will of a donor, the particular agreement of parties, and the like.

Rank modus. One that is too large. Rankness is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, rather than a rule of law.

Modus decimandi /mōdəs dəzəməndəi/. In Ecclesiastical law, a manner of tithing; a partial exemption from tithes, or a pecuniary composition prescribed by immoral usage, and of reasonable amount; for it will be invalid as a rank modus if greater than the value of the tithes in the time of Richard I.

Modus de non decimando /mōdəs də ni dəzəməndəo/. In Ecclesiastical law, a custom or prescription of entire exemption from the payment of tithes; this is not valid, unless in the case of abbey-lands.

Modus de non decimando non valet /mōdəs də ni dəzəməndəo nən vələt/. A modus (prescription) not to pay tithes is void.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem /mōdəs et kənvəntʃiəvəy ləgəm/. Custom and agreement overrule law. This maxim forms one of the first principles relative to the law of contracts. The exceptions to the rule here laid down are in cases against public policy, morality, etc.

Modus habilis /mōdəs həbələs/. A valid manner.

Modus legem dat donationi /mōdəs liəjəm dət dənəʃiənəni/. Custom gives law to the gift.

Modus operandi /mōdəs ˈəpərəndi/. Method of operating or doing things (M.O.). Term used by police and criminal investigators to describe the particular method of a criminal's activity. It refers to pattern of criminal behavior so distinct that separate crimes or wrongful conduct are recognized as work of same person. People v. Kimbrough, 1 Dist., 138 Ill.App.3d 481, 93 Ill.Dec. 82, 485 N.E.2d 1292, 1297.

Modus tenendi /mōdəs tənəndi/. The manner of holding; i.e., the different species of tenures by which estates are held.

Modus transferendi /mōdəs tənəfərəndi/. The manner of transferring.

Modus vacandi /mōdəs vəkəndi/. The manner of vacating. How and why an estate has been relinquished or surrendered by a vassal to his lord might well be referred to by this phrase.

Moerda /mōrdə/. The secret killing of another; murder.

Mohatra. In French law, a transaction covering a fraudulent device to evade the laws against usury. It takes place where an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash.

Moiety /mọyadiy/. The half of anything. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. See also Community property. Compare Entirety.

Moiety acts. A name sometimes applied to penal and criminal statutes which provide that half the penalty or fine shall inure to the benefit of the informer.

Molliter manus imposuit /mobtar maenas impoz(h)-ywat/. Lat. He gently laid hands upon. Formal words in the old Latin pleas in actions of trespass and assault where a defendant justified laying hands upon the plaintiff, as where it was done to keep the peace, etc. The phrase is literally translated in the modern precedents, and the original is retained as the name of the plea in such cases.

Monarchical. Of or pertaining to a monarchy or government by royalty. See Monarchy.

Monarchy /mọnarkiy/. A government in which the supreme power is vested in a single person. Where a monarch is invested with absolute power, the monarchy is termed "despotic;" where the supreme power is virtually in the laws, though the majesty of government and the administration are vested in a single person, it is a "limited" or "constitutional" monarchy. It is hereditary where the regal power descends immediately from the possessor to the next heir by blood, as in England; or elective, as was formerly the case in Poland.

Moneta /mọniyta/. Lat. Money (q.v.)

Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monete fit omnium rerum conveniens et justa aestimatio /maniyta est jastam miydiyam et mens(y)ura riram kom-yuyt(i)yam, nüm pör miydiyam maniytiy fit om-niyam riram kanvi(y)yanz et jastam estoméysh(i)yow/. Money is the just medium and measure of commutable things, for by the medium of a money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made.

Monetagium /mọnatey(i)yam/. Mintage, or the right of coining money. Hence, anciently, a tribute payable to a lord who had the prerogative of coining money, by his tenants, in consideration of his refraining from changing the coinage.

Monetandi jus comprehendirur in regalibus que nunquam a regio septio abdicantur /mọnatey(i)yam jás komprahéndatar in ragēyābas kwīy nāŋkwem ēy riy(j)i(y)ow séptrow ābdakentar/. The right of coining money is comprehended among those royal prerogatives which are never relinquished by the royal scepter.

Monetary. The usual meaning is "pertaining to coinage or currency or having to do with money," but it has been held to include personal property. In re Kipp's Will, Sur., 37 N.Y.S.2d 541, 543.

Monetary bequest. A transfer by will of cash. It is often designated as a pecuniary bequest.

Money. In usual and ordinary acceptation it means coins and paper currency used as circulating medium of exchange, and does not embrace notes, bonds, evidences of debt, or other personal or real estate. Lane v. Railey, 280 Ky. 319, 133 S.W.2d 74, 79, 81.

A medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government as a part of its currency. U.C.C. § 1–201(24).

See also Currency; Current money; Flat money; Legal tender; Near money; Scrip; Wampum.

Public money. Revenue received from federal, state, and local governments from taxes, fees, fines, etc. See Revenue.

Money-bill. An act by which revenue is directed to be raised, for any purpose or in any shape whatsoever, either for governmental purposes, and collected from the whole people generally, or for the benefit of a particular district, and collected in that district, or for making appropriations. All federal revenue bills must arise in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. Art. I, Sec. 7, U.S.Const.

Money changers. A money changer is one whose occupation is the exchanging of kinds or denominations of currency, and the common meaning of the term pertained to those persons who, in early history, engaged in the business of foreign exchange and it includes the business of a banker and buying and selling of uncurren funds and the exchanging of one kind of money for another. Arnold v. City of Chicago, 387 Ill. 532, 56 N.E.2d 795, 799. Such functions are today handled by the international departments of banks.

Money claims. In English practice, under the Judicature Act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" or "common counts" formerly in use.

Money demand. A claim for a fixed and liquidated amount of money, or for a sum which can be ascertained by mere calculation; in this sense, distinguished from a claim which must be passed upon and liquidated by a jury, called "damages."

Moneyed corporation. See Corporation.

Money had and received. In common law pleading, the technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

Gist of action for "money had and received" is that defendant has received money which, in equity and good conscience, should have been paid to plaintiff and under such circumstances that he ought to pay it over.

Money judgment. A final order, decree or judgment of a court by which a defendant is required to pay a sum of money in contrast to a decree or judgment of equity in which the court orders some other type of relief; e.g. injunction or specific performance. See also Judgment. For enforcement of money judgments, see Execution.

Money land. A phrase descriptive of money which is held upon a trust to convert it into land.

Money laundering. See Laundering.

Money lent. In common law pleading, the technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for which the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

Money made. The return made by a sheriff to a writ of execution, signifying that he has collected the sum of money required by the writ.

Money market. The financial market for dealing in short term debt instruments such as U.S. Treasury bills, commercial paper, and bankers' acceptances, in contrast to the capital market which furnishes long term financing.

Money of adieu. In French law, earnest money; so called because given at parting in completion of the bargain. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest money; "money of adieu" is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans.

Money order. A type of negotiable draft issued by banks, post offices, telegraph companies and express companies and used by the purchaser as a substitute for a check. Form of credit instrument calling for payment of money to named payee, and involving three parties: remitter, payee, and drawee. Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Fitzimons, Minn., 261 N.W.2d 586, 589. Money order may encompass nonnegotiable as well as negotiable instruments and may be issued by a governmental agency, a bank, or private person or entity authorized to issue it, but essential characteristic is that it is purchased for purpose of paying a debt or to transmit funds upon credit of the issuer of the money order. People v. Norwood, 26 C.A.3d 148, 103 Cal.Rptr. 7, 12.

Money-order office. One of the post-offices authorized to draw or pay money orders.

Money paid. In common law pleading, the technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant. See also Money had and received.

Money-purchase plan. A pension plan where the employer contributes a specified amount of cash each year on behalf of the employee. The amount contributed by the employer is not specifically defined but depend on the rate of return on the cash invested.

Money supply. The amount of money in the economy at any point in time. Such consists of funds in circulation as well as in checking accounts. Money has been categorized into 4 groups based upon liquidity, as follows:

- M-1 is generally funds in circulation, checking accounts, drafts.
- M-2 includes M-1 as well as mutual funds, overnight repurchase agreements, and savings accounts.
- M-3 includes M-2 as well as longer term repurchase agreements and time deposits in excess of $100,000.
- M-4 includes M-3 as well as banker's acceptances, T-bills and similar longer term investments.

Monger /mõgar/. A dealer or seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity, to express a seller of such commodity; e.g. fishmonger, moneymonger.

Moniers, or moneyeers /môñiyeàrz/môñiyeàrz/. Ministers of the mint; also bankers.

Moniment /môñamont/. A memorial, superscription, or record.

Monition /môñihan/. In admiralty, formerly the summons to appear and answer, issued on filing the libel; which was either a simple monition in personam or an attachment and monition in rem. With the unification of the Admiralty Rules and Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1966, the monition was abolished.

General monition. In civil law practice, a monition or summons to all parties in interest to appear and show cause against the decree prayed for.

Practice. A monition is a formal order of the court commanding something to be done by the person to whom it is directed, and who is called the "person monished." Thus, when money is decreed to be paid, a monition may be obtained commanding its payment. In ecclesiastical procedure, a monition is an order monishing or warning the party complained against to do or not to do a certain act "under pain of the law and contempt thereof." A monition may also be appended to a sentence inflicting a punishment for a past offense; in that case the monition forbids the repetition of the offense.

Monitory letters /môñot(à)riy lêtarz/. Communications of warning and admonition sent from an ecclesiastical judge, upon information of scandal and abuses within the cognizance of his court.

Monocracy /mônôkrasiy/. A government by one person.

Monocrat /mônôkrat/. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

Monogamy /mônôgàmiy/. The marriage of one wife only, or the state of such as are restrained to a single wife. The term is used in opposition to "bigamy" and "polygamy."

Mônomachy /mônomàkiy/. A duel; a single combat. It was anciently allowed by law for the trial or proof of crimes. It was even permitted in pecuniary causes, but it is now forbidden both by the civil law and canon laws.

Monopoly dictur, cum unus solus aliquod genus mercature universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuens /mônapólîyô ðisåsår, kàm yùwnas sówîlás áłakwod ëyynas markàtúriyü yùwnasàrèm lëymat, prìyshiyàm ëd sùyùwn barley stàkùtywèn/. It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure.

Monopoliurn /mônópoliurn/. The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly.

Monopoly /mônópoly/. A privilege or peculiar advantage vested in one or more persons or companies, consisting in the exclusive right (or power) to carry on a particular business or trade, manufacture a particular article, or control the sale of the whole supply of a particular commodity. A form of market structure in which one or only a few firms dominate the total sales of a product or service.

"Monopoly", as prohibited by Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, has two elements: possession of monopoly power in relevant market and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. U. S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L.Ed.2d 778. A monopoly condemned by the Sherman Act is the power to fix prices or exclude competition, coupled with policies designed to use or preserve that power. U. S. v. Otter Tail Power Co., D.C.Minn., 331 F.Supp. 54, 58.

It is "monopolization" in violation of Sherman Antitrust Act for persons to combine or conspire to acquire or maintain power to exclude competitors from any part of trade or commerce, provided they also have such power that they are able, as group, to exclude actual or potential competition and provided that they have intent and purpose to exercise that power. Davidson v. Kansas City Star Co., D.C.Mo., 202 F.Supp. 613, 617; Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., C.A.Or., 473 F.2d 328, 332.

See also Market; Relevant market.

Legal monopoly. Exclusive right granted by governmental unit to business to provide such services as electric and telephone service. The rates and services of such utilities are in turn regulated by the government.

Natural monopoly. A natural monopoly is one resulting where one firm of efficient size can produce all or more than market can take at remunerative price. Ovitron Corp. v. General Motors Corp., D.C.N.Y., 295 F.Supp. 373, 377. One which is created from circumstances over which the monopolist has no power. For example, a market for a particular product may be so limited that it is impossible to profitably produce such except by a single plant large enough to supply the whole demand. U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, C.C.A.N.Y., 148 F.2d 416, 430.

Monopoly power. The "monopoly power" which must exist in order to establish a violation of Sherman Antitrust Act may be defined as the power to fix prices, to exclude competitors, or to control the market in the relevant geographical area in question. ALW, Inc. v. United Air Lines, Inc., C.A.Nev., 510 F.2d 82, 56. See also Market; Monopoly; Relevant market.

Monopsony. A condition of the market in which there is but one buyer for a particular commodity.

Monstrans de droit /mônstranz də drɔyt/. L. Fr. In English law, a showing or manifestation of right; one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the crown, of either real or personal property. It is the proper proceeding when the right of the party, as well as the right of the crown, appears upon record, and consists in putting in a claim of right grounded on facts already acknowledged and established, and praying the judgment of the court whether upon these facts the king or the subject has the right. 3 Bl.Comm. 256.

Monstrans de faits /mônstranz də fɛ̃ts/. L. Fr. In old English practice, a showing of deeds; a species of profert.

Monstraverunt, writ of /rid av monstravirant/. In English law, a writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor.

Montes pietatis /montyiz päyatētaytəs/. Public pawnbroking establishments; institutions established by government, in some European countries, for lending small sums of money on pledges of personal property. In France they are called "monts de piété."

Month. Word "month," unless otherwise defined, means "calendar month," or time from any day of any of the months as adjudged in the calendar to corresponding day, if any, if not any, to last day, of next month.

The space of time denoted by this term varies according as one or another of the following varieties of months is intended:

Astronomical, containing one-twelfth of the time occupied by the sun in passing through the entire zodiac.

Calendar, civil, or solar, which is one of the months in the Gregorian calendar,—January, February, March, etc.,—which are of unequal length.

Lunar, being the period of one revolution of the moon, or twenty-eight days.

The word "month," when used in a statute or contract without qualification, meant at common law a lunar month of 28 days. State v. White, 73 Fla. 426, 74 So. 486, 487.

Month to month tenancy. See Tenancy.

Monument. Anything by which the memory of a person, thing, idea, art, science or event is preserved or perpetuated. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In real-property law and surveying, monuments are visible marks or indications left on natural or other objects indicating the lines and boundaries of a survey. Any physical object on ground which helps to establish location of boundary line called for; it may be either natural (e.g. trees, rivers, and other land features) or artificial (e.g. fences, stones, stakes, or the like placed by human hands). Delphay v. Savage, 227 Md. 373, 177 A.2d 249, 251. See also Natural monument.

Monumenta quae nos recorda vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia /mónymenta kwíly nóws rakhóda vokw kém a sánt vëhruûtés ét vëdastéytës vëstíj(j)i(y)s/. Monuments, which we call "records," are the vestiges of truth and antiquity.

Moun. See Manung or monung.

Moonshine. Intoxicating liquor illicitly produced or smuggled into community for beverage purposes, or spurious liquor, illegally distilled or manufactured. State v. King, 331 Mo. 268, 53 S.W.2d 252, 254.

Mooring. Anchoring or making fast to the shore or dock. The securing or confining a vessel in a particular station, as by cables and anchors or by a line or chain run to the wharf.

Moot. A subject for argument; unsettled; undecided. A moot point is one not settled by judicial decisions.

Moot case. A case is "moot" when a determination is sought on a matter which, when rendered, cannot have any practical effect on the existing controversy. Leonhart v. McCormick, D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 1073, 1076. Question is "moot" when it presents no actual controversy or where the issues have ceased to exist. Matter of Lawson’s Estate, 41 Ill.App.3d 37, 353 N.E.2d 345, 347.

Generally, an action is considered "moot" when it no longer presents a justiciable controversy because issues involved have become academic or dead. Sigma Chi Fraternity v. Regents of University of Colo., D.C.Colo., 258 F.Supp. 515, 523. Case in which the matter in dispute has already been resolved and, hence, one not entitled to judicial intervention unless the issue is a recurring one and likely to be raised again between the parties. Super Tire Engineering Co. v. McCormick, 416 U.S. 115, 94 S.Ct. 1694, 40 L.Ed.2d 1. A case becomes "moot" when the issues presented are no longer "live" or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome. Murphy v. Hunt, U.S.Neb., 455 U.S. 478, 102 S.Ct. 1181, 1182, 71 L.Ed.2d 353.

Moot court. A court held (normally in law schools) for the arguing of moot or hypothetical cases.

Moot hill. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence; the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below.

Mooting. The exercise of arguing questions of law or equity, raised for the purpose. See Moot court.

Moot man. One of those who used to argue the reader’s cases in the inns of court.

Mora /mórä/. Lat. In the civil law, delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default.
Mora reproubar in lege /mória réprobér in liyjiy/. Delay is reprobed in law.

Moratorium /mòrətɔrᵊiːəm/. A term designating suspension of all or of certain legal remedies against debtors, sometimes authorized by law during financial distress. A period of permissive or obligatory delay; specifically, a period during which an obligor has a legal right to delay meeting an obligation. State ex rel. Jensen Livestock Co. v. Hyslop, 111 Mont. 122, 107 P.2d 1088, 1092. Delay or postponement of a legal obligation or an action or proceeding. See Injunction; Restraining order.

More favorable terms clause. A provision in a labor-management contract by which the union agrees not to make more favorable agreements with other and competing employers.

More or less. About; substantially; or approximately; implying that both parties assume the risk of any ordinary discrepancy. The words are intended to cover slight or unimportant inaccuracies in quantity, Carter v. Finch, 186 Ark. 954, 57 S.W.2d 408; and are ordinarily to be interpreted as taking care of unstatistical differences or differences of small importance compared to the whole number of items transferred.

Moreover. In addition thereto, also, furthermore, likewise, beyond this, besides this.

Morganatic-marriage. See Marriage.

Morgangina, or mongangiva /mɔrgɑŋˈniːnə/ [jəvə]. A gift on the morning after the wedding; dowry; the husband's gift to his wife on the day after the wedding.

Morgue /mɔrg/. A place where the bodies of persons found dead are kept for a limited time and exposed to view, to the end that their relatives or friends may identify them.

Mormon. A member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Church was organized in 1830 at Seneca, New York, by Joseph Smith, and today its headquarters are in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Morning loan. An unsecured loan to permit the borrower, generally a stockbroker, to carry on his business for the day.

MORTGAGE

Such a mortgage today is called an equitable mortgage. The mortgage operates as a conveyance of the legal title to the mortgagee, but such title is subject to defeasance on payment of the debt or performance of the duty by the mortgagor.

The above definitions are applicable to the common-law (i.e., estate or title) conception of a mortgage. Such conception is still applicable in certain states. But in many other states, a mortgage is regarded as a mere lien, and not as creating a title or estate. Zeigler v. Sawyer, Tex.Civ.App., 16 S.W.2d 894, 896. It is a pledge or security of particular property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, whatever form the transaction may take, but is not now regarded as a conveyance in effect, though it may be cast in the form of a conveyance. Still other states have adopted a hybrid or intermediate theory or category of mortgage.

See also Assumption of mortgage; Balloon mortgage; Bulk mortgage; Chattel mortgage; Collateral mortgage; Conversion or convertibility clause; Corporate mortgage trust; Deed (Deed of trust); Due-on-sale clause; In rem mortgage; Potomac mortgages; Release (Release of mortgage); Ship Mortgage Act; Submortgage; Tacit mortgage; Technical mortgage; Trust (Trust deed); Union mortgage clause. For Bona fide mortgage, see Bona fide.

Adjustable rate mortgage (ARM). A mortgage in which the interest rate is not fixed but is tied to an index and is periodically adjusted as the rate index moves up or down. Such ARM mortgages commonly provide for an option to convert to a fixed rate mortgage. See also Cap; Conversion or convertibility clause; Discount index.

Amortized mortgage. One in which the mortgagor pays the current interest charge as well as a portion of principal in his periodic payment.

Balloon-payment mortgage. Mortgage requiring interest payments for a specified period and full payment of principal (a balloon payment) at the end of the period.

Blanket mortgage. One which conveys title to or creates a lien on all the borrower's assets or a substantial portion of them rather than on a specific asset.

Chattel mortgage. Mortgage secured by personal property. See Chattel mortgage.

Closed-end mortgage. One in which neither the property mortgaged nor the amount borrowed may be altered during the term of the mortgage.

Consolidated mortgage. A single mortgage given to replace or to combine several outstanding mortgages.

Construction draw mortgage. Type of mortgage used to finance building construction.

Conventional mortgage. The conventional mortgage is a contract by which a person binds the whole of his property, or a portion of it only, in favor of another, to secure the execution of some engagement, but without divesting himself of possession. It is distinguished from the "legal" mortgage, which is a privilege which the law alone in certain cases gives to a creditor over the property of his debtor, without stipulation of the parties. This last is very much like a general lien at common law, created by the law rather than by the act of the parties, such as a judgment lien.

Conventional home mortgage. The common security device used by those who wish to purchase a home by transferring to the bank or other financial institution a lien or defeasible legal title in return for the price or part of the price of the home. A non-FHA or VA home loan; i.e., not backed by government insurance or security. The mortgage is conventional in that the lender looks only to the credit of the borrower and the security of the property, and not to the additional backing of another such as would be the case with an FHA insured mortgage.

Direct reduction mortgage. An amortized mortgage. One on which principal and interest payments are paid at the same time (usually monthly) with interest being computed on the remaining balance.

Equitable mortgage. A specific lien upon real property to secure the payment of money or the performance of some other obligation, which a court of equity will recognize and enforce, in accordance with the clearly ascertained intent of the parties to that effect, but which lacks the essential features of a legal mortgage, either because it grows out of the transactions of the parties without any deed or express contract to give a lien, or because the instrument used for that purpose is wanting in some of the characteristics of a common-law mortgage, or, being absolute in form, is accompanied by a collateral reservation of a right to redeem, or because an explicit agreement to give a mortgage has not been carried into effect.

FHA mortgage. One in which the loan has been insured in whole or in part by the Federal Housing Administration.

First mortgage. The first (in time or right) of a series of two or more mortgages covering the same property and successively attaching as liens upon it. Also, in a more particular sense, a mortgage which is a first lien on the property, not only as against other mortgages, but as against any other charges or incumbrances. Also called "senior" mortgage.

First mortgage bonds. Bonds the payment of which is secured by a first mortgage on property.

Fixed-rate mortgage. Such mortgage specifies an interest rate that remains fixed for the life of the mortgage regardless of market conditions. Compare Adjustable rate mortgage, above.

Future advances mortgage. A term used to describe a present mortgage transaction where part of the loan proceeds will not be paid out until a future date.

General mortgage. Mortgages are sometimes classified as general and special, a mortgage of the former class being one which binds all property, present and future, of the debtor (sometimes called a "blanket" mortgage); while a special mortgage is limited to certain particular and specified property.
Graduated payment adjustable rate mortgage (GPARM). A mortgage format that combines the features of the graduated payment mortgage (GPM) and the adjustable rate mortgage (ARM).

Graduated payment mortgage (GPM). A mortgage loan that carries monthly payments which increase annually by a specified percentage during the early years of the loan and then remain constant thereafter. See also Adjustable rate mortgage, above.

Growing equity mortgage (GEM). A mortgage loan that is fully amortized over a significantly shorter term than the traditional 25 or 30 year mortgage, and which may have payments which increase each year.

Joint mortgage. One which is given to or by two or more mortgagees jointly.

Judicial mortgage. In the law of Louisiana, the lien resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by default, whether final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ.Code La. art. 3321.

Junior mortgage. One which ranks below another mortgage of the name property in the value of the security, and is subordinate to senior mortgages in its rights.

Leasehold mortgage. Mortgage secured by lessee’s interest in leased property.

Legal mortgage. A term used in Louisiana. The law alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the parties should stipulate it. That is called “legal mortgage.” It is also called a tacit mortgage, because it is established by the law without the aid of any agreement. Civ.Code La. art. 3311.

Mortgage of goods. See Chattel mortgage.

Open-end mortgage. A mortgage permitting the mortgagor to borrow additional money under the same mortgage, with certain conditions, usually as to the assets of the mortgagor.

Package mortgage. A package mortgage is used to include not only the real property but many items of personal property incident to the real property, such as stoves, refrigerators, and the like.

Purchase money mortgage. Generally, any mortgage given to secure a loan made for the purpose of acquiring the land on which the mortgage is given; more particularly, a mortgage given to the seller of land to secure payment of a portion of the purchase price. A mortgage given, concurrently with a conveyance of land, by the vendee to the vendor, on the same land, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price.

Reverse annuity mortgage (RAM). A mortgage format under which the mortgage loan proceeds are disbursed periodically over a long time period to provide regular income for the borrower-mortgagor. The loan will usually be repaid in a lump sum when the mortgagor dies or the property is sold.

Second mortgage. One which takes rank immediately after a first mortgage on the same property, without any intervening liens, and is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the property. Properly speaking, however, the term designates the second of a series of mortgages, not necessarily the second lien. For instance, the lien of a judgment might intervene between the first and second mortgages; in which case, the second mortgage would be the third lien. Also called “junior” mortgage. See also Wraparound mortgage, infra.

Senior mortgage. One which ranks ahead of another mortgage in terms of rights in the security. See also First mortgage, above.

Shared appreciation mortgage (SAM). A mortgage format that gives the lender the right to recover, as “contingent interest”, some agreed-upon percentage of the property’s appreciation in value measured when it is sold or at some other future fixed date.

Shared-equity mortgage (SEM). A mortgage format under which a purchaser-occupant and another person (often a relative) become co-owners and co-mortgagors of real estate. Usually the non-occupant owner pays all or a substantial part of the monthly payments and is entitled to share in any appreciation when the real estate is sold.

Straight mortgage. One in which the mortgagor is obligated to pay interest during the term of the mortgage and a final payment of principal at the end of the term in contrast to an amortized mortgage.

Tacit mortgage. See Legal mortgage, above.

VA Mortgage. Home mortgage loan provided to veterans and their spouses which is guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

Variable rate mortgage. A long-term mortgage contract which includes a provision permitting the lending institution to adjust, upward and downward, the contract’s interest rate in response to changes in money market rates and the conditions of demand for mortgages.

Wraparound mortgage. See Wraparound mortgage.

Mortgage banker. A person or firm engaged in the business of dealing in mortgages including their original placement, servicing, refinancing, and resale to other investors. Normally such banker uses its own funds as opposed to a commercial or savings and loan bank which uses primarily funds of depositors. While some mortgage bankers do provide long term (permanent) financing, the majority specialize in short term and interim financing.

Mortgage bond. Bonds for which real estate or personal property is pledged as security that the bond will be paid as stated in its terms. May be first, second, refunding, and so on.

Mortgage broker. Person or firm who functions as intermediary between borrower and lender in securing loan, or places loans with investors.
Mortgage certificate. Document evidencing participation in a large mortgage held by the mortgagee for the benefit of the certificate holders.

Mortgage clause. Provision in fire insurance policies protecting the mortgagor as his interest may appear.

Mortgage commitment. A formal written communication by a lender, agreeing to make a mortgage loan on specific property, specifying the loan's amount, length of time, and other conditions. Because of interest rate fluctuations, such commitments normally have time limitations. See also Loan commitment.

Mortgage company. A firm engaged in the business of originating and closing mortgages which are then assigned or sold to investors.

Mortgage contingency clause. Clause in an agreement for sale of real estate conditioning the purchaser's performance on his obtaining a mortgage from a third party.

Mortgage discount. The difference between the principal amount of a mortgage and the amount it actually sells for. Sometimes called points, loan brokerage fee, or new loan fee.

Mortgagee /mɔr'gæj/ /mɔr'gæj/ /mɔr'gæj/. Person that takes or receives a mortgage.

Mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee of real property who is in possession of it with the agreement or assent of the mortgagor, express or implied, and in recognition of his mortgage and because of it, and under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien an equitable prerequisite to his being dispossessed.

Mortgage foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Mortgage guarantee insurance. A type of insurance which guarantees to the mortgagee a given portion of the loss if the mortgagor suffers a loss due to nonpayment on the loan. See Federal Housing Administration; Insurance.

Mortgage insurance. See Insurance.

Mortgage lien. Encumbrances on property of mortgagor which secures debt obligation. In some states, the mortgagor retains legal title until foreclosure and the mortgagee has a security interest called a lien which is recognized ahead of other claims to the property.

Mortgage loan. A loan secured by a mortgage on real estate in which the borrower is the mortgagor and the lender the mortgagee. See Mortgage.

Mortgage market. Conditions which exist as to demand for purchase of mortgages generally by financial institutions which use mortgages as part of their investment portfolio.

Mortgage point. A percentage of the mortgage, generally 1%, charged by the mortgagee up front as a cost of financing.

Mortgage servicing. The responsibilities (which may be undertaken by a service company hired by the original lender) of mortgage lending, such as collecting installment payments, releasing liens, initiating foreclosure upon default, etc.

Mortgage warehousing. System under which mortgage company holds loans which would ordinarily be sold, in order to sell later at a lower discount. These mortgages are used as collateral security with a bank to borrow new money to loan.

Mortgaging out. The process by which a mortgagor secures one hundred percent financing of his purchase. He purchases property with no money of his own but entirely with mortgage money.

Mortgagor /mɔr'gægər/ /mɔr'gægər/ /mɔr'gægər/. One who, having all or some part of title to property, by written instrument pledges that property for some particular purpose such as security for a debt. The party who mortgages the property; the debtor. That party to a mortgage who gives legal title or a lien to the mortgagee to secure the mortgage loan.

Morth. Sax. Murder, answering exactly to the French "assassinat" or "muerte de guet-apens".

Morthlaga /mɔr'tlægə/ /mɔr'tlægə/. A murderer.

Morthlæge /mɔr'tlæjə/. Murder.

Mortis causa /mortis kɑːzə/ /mortis kɑːzə/ /mortis kɑːzə/. Lat. By reason of death; in contemplation of death. Thus used in the phrase "Donatio mortis causa" (q.v.).

Mortis momentum est ultimum vitae momentum /mortis məməntəm est ˈɑːltəm məməntəm/ /mortis məməntəm est ˈɑːltəm məməntəm/. The last moment of life is the moment of death.

Mortmain /mortmæn/ /mortmæn/ /mortmæn/. A term applied to denote the alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one “dead hand”, this occasioned the general appellation of “mortmain” to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bl.Comm. 268; Perin v. Carey, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 465, 16 L.Ed. 701.

Mortmain acts. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the possession or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortua manu. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I, it was enacted by the statute 9 Geo. II, c. 36 (called the “Mortmain Act” par excellence), that no lands should be given to charities unless certain requisites should be observed. Some traces of these laws remained until 1860.

Mortuary. A burial-place. Term applied to undertaking and embalming establishments.

A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church-yard or not. 2 Bl.Comm. 425.

Term has been sometimes used in a civil as well as in an ecclesiastical sense, and applied to a payment to the lord of the fee.
Mortuary tables. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Mortuum vadium /mörtyuwam véidyam/. A dead pledge; a mortgage (q.v.); a pledge where the profits or rents of the thing pledged are not applied to the payment of the debt.

Mortuus /mörtyuwas/. Lat. Dead. So in sheriff's return. Mortuus est, he is dead.

Mortuus civiliter /mörtyuwas savilitar/. Civil death (q.v.).

Mortuus exitus non est exitus /mörtyuwas égzatas nón ést égzadas/. A dead issue is no issue. A child born dead is not considered as issue.

Mortuus sine prole /mörtyuwas sayniy prówliy/. Dead without issue. In genealogical tables often abbreviated to "m.s.p."

Moslem Law. One of the two great systems of customary law which the English found in India. It regulated the life and relations of all Moslems, and parts of it, especially its penal provisions, were applied to both Moslems and Hindus.

Mos retinendus est fidelissimae vetustatis /mows rétanéndos ést fáy dalisimáy vétástéytas/. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.

Most favored nation clause. A clause found in most treaties providing that the citizens or subjects of the contracting nations may enjoy the privileges accorded by either party to those of the most favored nations. The general design of such clauses is to establish the principle of equality of international treatment. The test of whether this principle is violated depends upon the concession of advantages to a particular nation, the nature of which such concession is made, but the condition on which it is granted; whether it is given for a price, or whether this price is in the nature of a substantial equivalent, and not of a mere evasion. United States has generally taken the stand that reciprocal commercial concessions are given for a valuable consideration and are not within the scope of this clause. Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U.S. 190, 8 S.Ct. 456, 31 L.Ed. 386. See also Reciprocal trade agreements.

A primary effect of "most favored nation" status is lower import tariffs or duties.

Most suitable use valuation. For gift and estate tax purposes, property that is transferred normally is valued in accordance with its most suitable or highest and best use. Thus, if a farm is worth more as a potential shopping center, this value will control even though the transferee (i.e., the donee or heir) continues to use the property as a farm. For an exception to this rule concerning the valuation of certain kinds of real estate transferred by death, see Special use valuation.

Mote /mówt/. Sax. A meeting; an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folkmote, etc.

Moteer. A customary service or payment at the mote or court of the lord, from which some were exempted by charter or privilege.

MOTION IN LIMINE

Mother. A woman who has borne a child. A female parent. The term includes maternity during prebirth period.

Mother-in-law. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

Motion. In parliamentary law, the formal mode in which a member submits a proposed measure or resolve for the consideration and action of the meeting.

An application made to a court or judge for purpose of obtaining a rule or order directing some act to be done in favor of the applicant. State v. James, Mo., 347 S.W.2d 211, 216. It is usually made within the framework of an existing action or proceeding and is ordinarily made on notice, but some motions may be made without notice. One without notice is called an ex parte motion. Written or oral application to court for ruling or order, made before (e.g., motion to dismiss) or after (e.g., motion for new trial). For requisite form of motions, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 7(b).

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING VERDICT. A motion that judgment be entered in accordance with the movant's earlier motion for a directed verdict and notwithstanding the contrary verdict actually returned by the jury. Huff v. Thornton, 287 N.C. 1, 213 S.E.2d 198, 204. Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b). See Non obstante veredicto.

Motion for judgment on pleadings. Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c) any party may move after the pleadings are closed for judgment thereon. It is a device for disposing of cases when the material facts are not in dispute and only questions of law remain. See also Summary judgment.

Motion for more definite statement. If a pleading is so vague or ambiguous that a party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading, such party may move for a more definite statement. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(e).

Motion for new trial. A request that the judge set aside the judgment or verdict and order a new trial on the basis that the trial was improper or unfair due to specified prejudicial errors that occurred, because of newly discovered evidence, etc. Fed.R.Civ.P. 59; Fed.R.Crim.P. 33. See also Plain error rule.

Motion in arrest of judgment. See Arrest of judgment.

Motion in bar. One which, if allowed, will absolutely bar the action; e.g. plea of double jeopardy. U. S. v. Jorn, 400 U.S. 470, 91 S.Ct. 547, 27 L.Ed.2d 543.

Motion in limine. A pretrial motion requesting court to prohibit opposing counsel from referring to or offering evidence on matters so highly prejudicial to moving party that curative instructions cannot prevent prejudicial and granting of motion is not a ruling on evidence and, where properly drawn, granting of motion cannot be error. Redding v. Ferguson, Tex.Civ.App., 501 S.W.2d 717, 724. See also Motion to suppress; Suppression hearing.

Motion to dismiss. A motion requesting that a complaint be dismissed because it does not state a claim for which the law provides a remedy, or is in some other way legally insufficient. One which is generally interposed before trial to attack the action on the basis of insufficiency of the pleading, of process, venue, joinder, etc. Fed.R.Civ. P. 12(b). See also Demurrer.

Motion to strike. On motion of either party, the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense, or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter. Fed.R.Civ. P. 12(f).

Motion to suppress. Device used to eliminate from the trial of a criminal case evidence which has been secured illegally, generally in violation of the Fourth Amendment (search and seizure), the Fifth Amendment (privilege against self incrimination), or the Sixth Amendment (right to assistance of counsel, right of confrontation etc.), of U.S. Constitution. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b) and 41(f); also Motion in limine; Suppression hearing.

Motive. Cause or reason that moves the will and induces action. An idea, belief or emotion that impels or incites one to act in accordance with his state of mind or emotion. People v. Gibson, 56 C.A.3d 119, 128 Cal.Rptr. 302, 308. The circumstance tending to establish the requisite mens rea for a criminal act and is the inducement which impels or leads the mind to indulge in a criminal act. State v. Segotta, App., 100 N.M. 18, 665 P.2d 280, 287.

In common usage intent and “motive” are not infrequently regarded as one and the same thing. In law there is a distinction between them. “Motive” is said to be the moving course, the impulse, the desire that induces criminal action on part of the accused; it is distinguished from “intent” which is the purpose or design with which the act is done, the purpose to make the means adopted effective. State v. Willis, Mo.App., 632 S.W.2d 63, 65.

As to criminal motive, see Criminal; Mens rea. See also Intent.

Motor Carrier Act. Federal statute (administered by ICC) which regulated (routes, rates, etc.) motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce. 49 U.S.C.A. § 301 et seq. This Act was repealed in 1983 when motor carriers became deregulated.

Mouth of river. By statute in some states, the mouth of a river or creek, which empties into another river or creek, is defined as the point where the middle of the channel of each intersects the other.

Movable. That which can be changed in place, as movable property; or in time, as movable feasts or terms of court. Compare Fixture.

Movable estate. A term equivalent to "personal estate" or "personal property."
fine unjustly; to punish. Gorton v. Doty, 57 Idaho 792, 69 P.2d 136, 142.

Formerly, an imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like.

Mulcta damnun famæ non irrogat /mäktä dämnaam féymi nön íhragt/. A fine does not involve loss of character.

Mulier /myůwliyär/. Lat. A woman; a wife; a widow; a virgin; a legitimate child.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate.

Mulieratus /myůwliyareytas/. A legitimate son.

Mulcta. A fine or final satisfaction, anciently mulum /myuwlyam/. In old English law, the state of being a fine.

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi, pro communi utilitate introducunt sunt /mältä in jûriy kamyuwnay kôntä rêshyiýwnam dispyuwtânday, prôw kamyuwnay yuwultståytiy intrádäktä sánt/. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason.

Multa multi exercitatione facilius quam regulæ perciptiones /mältä múltow egzärstståehiýwnyi fasiliyäx kwêm rêsyalas porşiþiyży/. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.

Multa non vetat lex, quæ tamen tacite damnavit /mältä nön viytät léks, kwý tíyman tésätiy damnéyyvat/. The law forbids not many things which yet it has silently condemned.

MULTINATIONAL CORPORATION

Multa transeunt cum universitate quae non per se transeunt /mältä trénziyant kâm yuwnavorsståeytiy kwý nön pár sî trénziyant/. Many things pass with the whole which do not pass separately.

Multicraft union. A labor union which craftsmen in different trades may join.

Multidistrict litigation. When civil actions involving one or more common (and often complex) questions of fact are pending in several different federal district courts, such actions may be transferred to one district for coordinated and consolidated management and trial under a single judge. 28 U.S.C. § 1407. The types of cases in which massive filings of multidistrict litigation are reasonably certain to occur include not only civil antitrust actions but also, common disaster (air crash) actions, patent and trademark suits, products liability actions and securities law violation actions, among others. Such cases are assigned and transferred by a Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, and are governed by the "Manual for Complex Litigation" and "Rules of Procedure of the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation."

Multifariousness /mältaferyiýsnes/. In equity pleading, the misjoinder of causes of action in a bill. The fault of improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected against one defendant (more commonly called misjoinder of claims), or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants, in the same bill. Essen v. Adams, 342 Mo. 1196, 119 S.W.2d 773, 777.

This problem does not generally arise in the federal courts or in the majority of state courts, for Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e) permits pleading of inconsistent claims or defenses and Rule 18(a) permits liberal joinder of independent or alternative claims. Civil Rule 18 permits a party to join, either as independent or as alternate claims, as many claims, legal, equitable, or maritime, as he has against an opposing party.

Legislation. The joining, in a single legislative act, of dissimilar and discordant subjects, which, by no fair intendment, can be considered as having a legitimate connection or relation to the subject of the act.

Multilateral agreement. An agreement among more than two persons, firms, or governments.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit /mälta múltä, nýmow ómnía nóvvvat/. Many men have known many things; no one has known everything.

Multinational corporation. In a strict sense this term is descriptive of a firm which has centers of operation in many countries in contrast to an "international" firm.
MULTINATIONAL CORPORATION

which does business in many countries but is based in only one country, though the terms are often used interchangeably.

Multipartite /məlˈtɪpərtɪt/. Divided into many or several parts.

Multiple access. The defense of several lovers in paternity actions. Yarumark v. Strickland, Fla.App., 193 So.2d 212.

Multiple counts. A civil pleading (e.g., complaint) or a criminal indictment which contains several separate causes of action or crimes within the framework of one pleading. Joiner of multiple claims against opposing party is permitted under Fed.R.Civil P. 18. Joinder of offenses is provided for in Fed.R.Crim.P. 8.

Multiple evidence. That which is admissible for a specific purpose to which it must be confined and inadmissible to prove a different fact.

Multiple listing. An agreement between the owner of real estate and a broker in which the broker will permit other brokers to sell property for a percentage of his commission or on some other basis satisfactory to the brokers. Device used by real estate brokers to give wide exposure to properties listed for sale whereby each cooperating broker informs all other participating brokers of properties listed with him. Grempler v. Multiple Listing Bureau of Harford County, Inc., 258 Md. 419, 266 A.2d 1, 3. See also Listing.

Multiple offenses. A single act may be an offense against two statutes, and if each statute requires proof of an additional fact which the other does not, an acquittal or conviction under either statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution and punishment under the other. If there is identity between the two charges, the defendant may not be punished for both, though he may be punished for the more serious. Com. v. Kuklis, 361 Mass. 302, 280 N.E.2d 155.

Multiple-party accounts. A multiple-party account is any of the following types of account: (i) a joint account, (ii) a P.O.D. account, or (iii) a trust account. It does not include accounts established for deposit of funds of a partnership, joint venture, or other association for business purposes, or accounts controlled by one or more persons as the duly authorized agent or trustee for a corporation, unincorporated association, charitable or civic organization or a regular fiduciary or trust account where the relationship is established other than by deposit agreement. Uniform Probate Code, § 6-101(5).

Multiplicity of actions or suits. Numerous and unnecessary attempts to litigate the same right. A phrase descriptive of the situation where several different suits or actions are brought upon the same issue. The actions must be against a single defendant. Prospect Park & C. R. Co. v. Morey, 155 App.Div. 347, 140 N.Y.S. 380, 385. Under Civil Rules practice such claims should properly be joined or maintained as a single class action. Fed.R.Civ.P. 23.

Term "multiplicity" refers to the practice of charging the commission of a single offense in several counts. This practice is prohibited because single wrongful acts cannot furnish basis for more than one criminal prosecution. State v. Hill, 10 Kan.App.2d 607, 706 P.2d 472, 475; U.S. v. Stanfa, C.A.Pa., 685 F.2d 85, 86. Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure have been drafted to discourage this practice. U. S. v. Allied Chemical Corp., D.C.Va., 420 F.Supp. 122, 123.

See Collateral estoppel doctrine; Duplicity; Final decision rule; Multiple counts; Res (Res judicata).

Multistate corporation. A corporation that has operations in more than one state; from which issues commonly arise relative to the assignment of appropriate amounts of the entity's taxable income to the states in which it has a presence.

Multitude. An assemblage of many people.

Multitudinem decem faciunt /mɔltɪˈtʌdɪnɪm dɛˈkɪnt/ /malt(i)yudam fiyeʃiənt/. Ten makes a multitude.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium /mɔltɪˈtʌdʊˌʊdəʊr ærəˈʃiəniəm nɔn pærət ərəˈreɪ pətəˈriːnəm/. The multitude of those who err furnish no countenance or excuse for error. It is no excuse for error that it is entertained by numbers.

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam /mɔltɪˈtʌdʊˌʊdəʊr ɪmˈpərətərəm pɜrˈdɪt kəˈriəm/. A great number of unskilful practitioners ruins a court.

Multus utilius est paucia idonea effundere quam multis inutilibus homines gravari /mɔltʊs juːˈtɪliəs ɛst pjuːˈkʃə ɪˈdəniə əˈfʌndərɛ ˈkɑm mjuːtɪs ɪnjuˈtɪlɪbəs həʊmɪnɨz ɡrəˈvɛri/. It is more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things.

Multus inutilibus homines gravari /mɔltʊs ɪnˈjuːtɪliəs həʊmɪnɨz ɡrəˈvɛri/. The complete drying up of the body as the result of burial in a dry, hot soil, or the exposure of the body to a dry, cold atmosphere.

Mund. In old English law, peace; whence mundbryc, a breach of the peace.

Multicapta transgressione crescat pena inflicttio /mɔltɪˈkæptə trənˌɡrɛʃənɪə ˈkriːsət ˈpɛnə ɪnˈflɪktʃiə/ /maltaplaʃkətə trensgrəʃiənəni krɛskət pliniət ɪnفلکشنیو əw/. As transgression is multiplied, the infliction of punishment should increase.

Multiplicity /mɔltɪˈplɪsɪtɪ/ /malt(i)plesit/. A state of being many. That quality of a pleading which involves a variety of matters or particulars. A multiplying or increasing.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et questions, quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores /mɔltɪˈpleks iət ɪndɪsɪˈtʃtəm ˈpærɪt kəʃənʃənəm; ət kwestʃənz, kwəʊ sɪmˈplɪʃərəz, eo ləˈkɪdərəz/. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion; and questions, the more simple they are, the more lucid.
Mundbyrd, mundeburde /mándbārd/. A receiving into favor and protection.

Mundium /mándiyam/. In old French law, a tribute paid by a church or monastery to their seigniorial avoués and vidames, as the price of protecting them.

Munera /myúwnara/. In the early ages of the feudal law, the name given to the grants of land made by a king or chieftain to his followers, which were held by no certain tenure, but merely at the will of the lord. Afterwards they became life-estates, and then hereditary, and were called first "benefices," and then "feuds."

Municeps /myúwnséps/. Lat. In Roman law, eligible to office. A provincial person; a countryman. This was the designation of one born in the provinces or in a city politically connected with Rome, who had come to Rome, and though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices.

In the provinces the term seems to have been applied to the freemen of any city who were eligible to the municipal offices.

Municipal. In narrower, more common, sense, it means pertaining to a local governmental unit, commonly, a city or town or other governmental unit. In its broader sense, it means pertaining to the public or governmental affairs of a state or nation or of a people. Chadwick v. City of Crawfordsville, 216 Ind. 399, 24 N.E.2d 937, 941, 942. Relating to a state or nation, particularly when considered as an entity independent of other states or nations. Hammel v. Little, 66 App.D.C. 356, 87 F.2d 907, 910.

Municipal action. Exercise of governmental power by a municipal board, agency, or other body, or by a municipal officer. Orme v. Atlas Gas & Oil Co., 217 Minn. 27, 13 N.W.2d 757, 761.

Municipal affairs. A term referring to the internal business affairs of a municipality. Griffin v. City of Los Angeles, 134 Cal.App. 763, 26 P.2d 655. The term is frequently used in constitutional and statutory provisions concerning the power to legislate as to the concerns of municipalities. And it has come to include public service activities, such as supplying water to the inhabitants, the construction of a reservoir for their benefit, the sale and distribution of electrical energy, and the establishment and operation of transportation service, which were once regarded as being of a strictly private nature. See also Municipal function.

Municipal aid. A contribution or assistance granted by a municipal corporation towards the execution or progress of some enterprise, undertaken by private parties, but likely to be of benefit to the municipality; e.g., urban redevelopment projects.

Municipal authorities. As used in statutes contemplating the consent of such authorities, the term means the consent by the legislative authorities of the city acting by ordinance; for example, in a town, the members of the town board.

Municipal bonds. Evidences of indebtedness (debt obligations) issued by state or local government entities, negotiable in form, payable at designated future time, and intended for sale in market with object of raising money for municipal expense, which is beyond immediate resources of reasonable taxation, as distinguished from temporary evidences of debt, such as vouchers, certificates of indebtedness, orders, or drafts drawn by one officer on another and similar devices for liquidating current obligations in anticipation of collection of taxes. A bond issued by a village, town, city, county, state, or other public body. Interest on such bonds is generally exempt from federal income taxes and from some state income taxes. Sometimes referred to as "tax exempts."

Municipal charter. A legislative enactment conferring governmental powers of the state upon its local agencies.

Municipal corporation. A legal institution formed by charter from sovereign (i.e. state) power erecting a populous community of prescribed area into a body politic and corporate with corporate name and continuous succession and for the purpose and with the authority of subordinate self-government and improvement and local administration of affairs of state. A body corporate consisting of the inhabitants of a designated area created by the legislature with or without the consent of such inhabitants for governmental purposes, possessing local legislative and administrative power, also power to exercise within such area so much of the administrative power of the state as may be delegated to it and possessing limited capacity to own and hold property and to act in purveyance of public conveniences.

Municipal corporation is a body politic and corporate, created to administer the internal concerns of the district embraced with its corporate limits, in matters peculiar to such place and not common to the state at large. Tribe v. Salt Lake City Corp., Utah, 540 P.2d 499, 502. A municipal corporation has a dual character, the one public and the other private, and exercises correspondingly twofold functions and duties—one class consisting of those acts performed by it in exercise of delegated sovereign powers for benefit of people generally, as arm of state, enforcing general laws made in pursuance of general policy of the state, and the other consisting of acts done in exercise of power of the municipal corporation for its own benefit, or for benefit of its citizens alone, or citizens of the municipal corporation and its immediate locality. Associated Enterprises, Inc. v. Toltec Watershed Imp. Dist., Wyo., 490 P.2d 1069, 1070.

See also Public corporations.

Quasi municipal corporations. Bodies politic and corporate, created for the sole purpose of performing one or more municipal functions. Public corporations organized for governmental purposes and having for most purposes the status and powers of municipal corporations (such as counties, townships, school districts, drainage districts, irrigation districts, etc.), but not municipal.
MUNICIPAL CORPORATION

corporations proper, such as cities and incorporated towns.

Municipal corporation de facto. One which exists when there is (1) some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully have been created; (2) a colorable and bona fide attempt to perfect an organization under such a law; (3) user of the rights claimed to have been conferred by the law.

Municipal courts. In the judicial organization of several states, courts are established under this name with territorial authority confined to the city or community in which they are established. Such courts usually have a criminal jurisdiction corresponding to that of a police court, and, in some cases, possess civil jurisdiction in small causes. In certain cities, small claims or traffic courts are under the jurisdiction of the municipal court.

Municipal domicile. Sometimes used in contradistinction to "national domicile" and "quasi national domicile" to refer to residence in a county, township, or municipality; called also "domestic domicile."

Municipal election. One at which municipal officers are chosen.

Municipal function. One created or granted for the special benefit and advantage of the urban community embraced within the corporate boundaries. State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council of Helena, 102 Mont. 27, 55 P.2d 671, 673.

Municipal functions are those which specially and peculiarly promote the comfort, convenience, safety and happiness of the citizens of the municipality, rather than the welfare of the general public. Under this class of functions are included, in most jurisdictions, the proper care of streets and alleys, parks and other public places, and the erection and maintenance of public utilities and improvements generally.

Municipal government. Instrumentalities of state for purpose of local government. Moore v. State, 159 Tenn. 468, 19 S.W.2d 233. This term, in certain state constitutions, embraces the governmental affairs of counties, and includes all forms of representative municipal government—towns, cities, villages, etc. See also Municipality.

Municipality. A legally incorporated or duly authorized association of inhabitants of limited area for local governmental or other public purposes. A body politic created by the incorporation of the people of a prescribed locality invested with subordinate powers of legislation to assist in the civil government of the state and to regulate and administer local and internal affairs of the community. State ex rel. McIntire v. City Council of City of Libby, 107 Mont. 216, 82 P.2d 587, 588. A city, borough, town, township or village. Also, the body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

Political subdivision or public agency or instrumentality of a State. Bankruptcy Code § 101.

See also Person (Municipalities).

Municipal law. That which pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law, commercial law, and international law. City of Louisville v. Babb, C.C.A.Ind., 75 F.2d 162, 165. In its more common and narrower connotation however it means those laws which pertain to towns, cities and villages and their local government. People ex rel. Ray v. Martin, 294 N.Y. 61, 60 N.E.2d 541, 547, 548.

Municipal lien. A lien or claim existing in favor of a municipal corporation against a property owner for his proportionate share of a public improvement, made by the municipality, whereby his property is specially and individually benefited.

Municipal officer. One who holds an office of a municipality; e.g. mayor, city manager.

Municipal ordinance. A law, rule, or ordinance enacted or adopted by a municipal corporation for the proper conduct of its affairs or the government of its inhabitants; e.g. zoning or traffic ordinances, building codes. Particularly a regulation under a delegation of power from the state.

Municipal purposes. Public or governmental purposes as distinguished from private purposes. It may comprehend all activities essential to the health, morals, protection, and welfare of the municipality.

Municipal securities. The evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, towns, counties, townships, school-districts, and other such territorial divisions of a state. They are of two general classes: (1) Municipal warrants, orders, or certificates; (2) municipal bonds.

The term "municipal securities" means securities which are direct obligations of, or obligations guaranteed as to principal or interest by, a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any municipal corporate instrumentality of one or more States, or any security which is an industrial development bond (as defined in § 103(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code) the interest on which is excludable from gross income. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3.

See Municipal bonds; Municipal warrants.

Municipal warrants. A municipal warrant or order is an instrument drawn by an officer of a municipality upon its treasurer, directing him to pay an amount of money specified therein to the person named or his order, or to bearer.

Municipicium /mywənəsiˈpiːəm/. In Roman law, a foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was granted, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there. A free town which retained its original right of self-government, but whose inhabitants also acquired certain rights of Roman citizens.

Muniment-house, or muniment-room. A house or room of strength, in cathedrals, collegiate churches, castles, colleges, public buildings, etc., purposely made for keeping deeds, charts, writings, etc.

Muniments of title /myûwnaments av táyda/. Documentary evidence of title. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. See Deed.

The records of title transactions in the chain of title of a person purporting to create the interest in land and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. See Deed.

Under "muniment of title doctrine" when ownership of property has been litigated between individuals and title has been adjudicated in one of the parties, the losing party cannot relegate the matter with those who rely upon the title of the winning party. Purdes v. Carvel Hall, Inc., D.C.Iowa, 301 F.Supp. 1256, 1264.

Murder. The unlawful killing of a human being by another with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Com. v. Carroll, 194 A.2d 911, 914. The crime is defined by statute in most states (e.g. Calif. Penal Code, § 187). The Model Penal Code definition is as follows:

Criminal homicide constitutes murder when: (a) it is committed purposely or knowingly; or (b) it is committed recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life. Such recklessness and indifference are presumed if the actor is engaged or is an accomplice in the commission of, or an attempt to commit, or flight after committing or attempting to commit robbery, rape or deviate sexual intercourse by force or threat of force, arson, burglary, kidnapping or felonious escape. Model Penal Code, § 210.2.

See also Assassination; Assault with intent to commit murder; Felony murder doctrine; Homicide; Manslaughter.

Degrees of murder. In most states murder is divided into two degrees, for the purpose of imposing a more severe penalty for some murders than for others. All murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery or burglary, are commonly deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder are deemed murder of the second degree. This general pattern has been followed in most of the states although slight changes have been made in a few of these. Some, for example, have omitted any reference to "poison", while a few have added "torture" to "poison". To the felony-murder clause of the statute several have added "mayhem" and sometimes the inclusion of some other felony may be found, such as kidnapping, sodomy or larceny. In certain states there is also the crime of murder in the third degree. For the definition of first and second degree murder under the federal criminal code, see 18 U.S.C.A. § 1111.
Mutual association. As applied to written documents, such as wills, court records, and the like, this term means rendering the document imperfect by the subtraction from it of some essential part, as, by cutting, tearing, burning, or erasure, but without totally destroying it. See U.C.C. § 3-407. Also, the alteration in the writing, as in a negotiable instrument, so as to make it another and different instrument and no longer evidence of the contract which the parties made. Clem v. Chapman, Tex. Civ.App., 262 S.W. 168, 171. See also Alteration; Deface; Spoilation.

In criminal law, the depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. People v. Bullington, 27 Cal.App.2d 396, 80 P.2d 1030, 1032. See Maim; Mayhem.

It is a federal crime to mutilate public records (18 U.S.C.A. § 2071), coins (§ 331), passports (§ 1543).

Mutiny. Insubordinate; disposed to mutiny; tending to incite or encourage mutiny.

 Mutiny, n. In criminal law, an insurrection of soldiers or seamen against the authority of their commanders; a sedition or revolt in the army or navy. One is guilty of mutiny who with intent to usurp or override lawful military authority refuses in concert with any other person or persons to obey orders or otherwise do his duty or creates any violence or disturbance. 10 U.S.C.A. § 894. (Uniform Code of Military Justice, Art. 94.) See also Desertion.

Mutiny Act. In English law, an act of parliament annually passed to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689, and was the only provision for the payment of the army. 1 Bl.Comm. 415.

Mutual. Common to both parties. Interchangeable; reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other; given and received—spoken of an engagement or relation in which like duties and obligations are exchanged; e.g., the marital relation.

As to mutual Account; Assent; Combat; Condition; Contract; Covenant; Credits; Debt; Insurance; Insurance (Mutual insurance); Mistake; Promise; and Testament, see those titles. See also Mutuality.

Mutual affray. A fight in which both parties willingly enter and is similar to a duel. Taylor v. Commonwealth, 281 Ky. 442, 136 S.W.2d 644. See Affray.

Mutual agreement. A meeting of the minds on a specific subject, and a manifestation of intent of the parties to do or refrain from doing some specific act or acts. See Agreement; Contract; Treaty.

Mutual association. See Savings and loan association.

Mutual benefit association. One based on reciprocal contracts and requires that a member receive benefits as a matter of right. In re Henderson's Estate, 17 Cal.2d 853, 112 P.2d 605, 609. Commonly a fraternal or social organization which provides insurance for its members on an assessment basis.

Mutual benefit insurance. Type of insurance offered to members of a mutual benefit association commonly characterized by assessment of members to meet claims. See Mutual benefit association.

Mutual company. A corporation in which shares are held exclusively by members to whom profits are distributed as dividends in proportion to the business which the members did with the company (e.g. state-chartered mutual savings banks, federal savings and loan associations). One in which the members are both the insurers and the insured (mutual insurance companies). Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 659.

Mutual demands. Those between the same parties and due in the same capacity or right. Thompson v. Prince, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 574, 576.

Mutual fund. A fund managed by an investment company in which money is raised through the sale of stock and subsequently invested in publicly traded securities. The investment performance of the mutual fund depends on the performance of the underlying investments. Each mutual fund tends to have an investment objective such as: a growth fund strives for capital appreciation in the portfolio; an income fund looks for a stream of income over the life of the investment.

There are two general types of mutual funds; "open-end" in which capitalization is not fixed and more shares may be sold at any time, and "closed-end" in which capitalization is fixed and only the number of shares originally authorized may be sold.

See also Investment company; Load; Open-end investment company.

Closed-end funds. Mutual funds that do not repurchase their shares from investors; the shares are sold in a secondary market, such as on a stock exchange.

Growth funds. Mutual funds that are composed of stocks of companies that are still experiencing growth; the objective is to generate an increase in investment value, with less concern about the provision of steady income. Compare with Income funds, below.

Income funds. Mutual fund consisting of securities that provide periodic dividends or coupon payments; they usually consist of coupon bonds; they are designed to provide investors with a stable income. Compare with Growth funds, above.

Index fund. A mutual fund whose portfolio is designed to match the performance of a broad-based index such as Standard & Poor's Index and whose performance therefore mirrors the market as reflected by the index.

Load fund. Mutual fund in which a charge (load) is made at time of purchase of shares to cover administrative and commission expenses.

Money market funds. Mutual fund that invests in money market securities.
No-load fund. A mutual fund that has no service charge (load) for buying its shares.

Open-end funds. Mutual funds that are willing to repurchase their shares from investors at any time.

Mutual insurance company. Type of insurance company in which there is no capital stock and in which the policy holders are the sole owners. Christiansen v. National Savings and Trust Company, C.A.D.C., 583 F.2d 520, 526. A cooperative enterprise in which members are both insurers and insureds, whose business is conducted for benefit of policy holders. Public Housing Administration v. Housing Authority of City of Bogalusa, 242 La. 519, 137 So.2d 315, 321. See also Stock insurance company.

Mutuality. Reciprocity; interchange. An acting by each of two parties; an acting in return. "Mutuality of contract" means that obligation rests on each party to do or permit doing of something in consideration of other party's act or promise; neither party being bound unless both are bound. Aden v. Dalton, 341 Mo. 454, 107 S.W.2d 1070, 1073. Called, also, mutuality of obligation. United Appliance Corporation v. Boyd, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 760, 764.

As to mutuality of Assent, Mistake, etc., see those titles.

Mutuality doctrine. Doctrine in equity to the effect that equitable relief will be denied a party to a contract on a showing that the plaintiff is not bound to the same extent as the defendant in fulfilling the contract. In another context, it refers to the obligation of a meeting of the minds before a contract can be found. See Mutuality of obligation.

Mutuality of estoppel. This doctrine dictates that a judgment will not be held conclusive in favor of one person unless it would be conclusive against him had the case been decided the other way. Foltz v. Pullman, Inc., Del.Super., 319 A.2d 38, 41.

Mutuality of obligation. Mutuality of obligation requires that unless both parties to a contract are bound, neither is bound. Sala & Ruthe Realty, Inc. v. Campbell, 89 Nev. 483, 515 P.2d 394, 396. Such obligation as pertaining to executory contract requires that each party to agreement be bound to perform, and if it appears that one party was never bound to do the acts which formed the consideration for promise of the other, there is lack of mutuality of obligation and other party is not bound. McCandless v. Schick, 85 Idaho 509, 380 P.2d 893, 898. See Mutuality doctrine.

Mutuality of remedy. In equity, one party to a contract may not have equitable relief if he is not bound by the contract to the same extent as the other party, or if his remedy is not co-extensive. Generally, specific performance will be granted only where there is "mutuality of remedy", which means that right to performance must be mutual. Burr v. Greenland, Tex.Civ.App., 356 S.W.2d 370, 375.

Mutual mistake. As justifying reformation of an instrument is one common to both or all parties, where each party labors under the same misconception respecting a material fact, the terms of the agreement, or the provision of a written instrument designed to embody such an agreement. RGS, Cardox Recovery, Inc. v. Dorchester Enhanced Recovery Co., Tex.App. 13 Dist., 700 S.W.2d 635, 639. Mutual mistake with regard to contract, justifying reformation, exists where there has been a meeting of the minds of the parties and an agreement actually entered into but the agreement in its written form does not express what was really intended by the parties. Sierra Blanca Sales Co., Inc. v. Newco Industries, Inc., App., 84 N.M. 524, 505 P.2d 867, 873.

Mutual relief association. An insurer, chartered under a designated statute, having no capital stock, having relief funds created and sustained by assessments made upon the members, which files reports with insurance commissioner evidencing that it is not conducted for profit of its officers. State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 412.

Mutual rescission. An agreement between the parties to cancel their contract, releasing the parties from further obligations under the contract. The object of the agreement is to restore the parties to positions they would have occupied had no contract ever been made. See also Rescission of contract.

Mutual reserve company. A company issuing "benefit thrift certificates" containing both savings features and renewable term insurance features, paid for by a single premium, with cash and loan values and limitation upon the expense liable for cost of supervision and management, was a "mutual reserve company".

Mutual savings bank. A bank organized by depositors, whose interest is shown by certificates of deposit, for the purpose of furnishing a safe depositary for money of members. It need not be incorporated or under supervision unless state law so requires. A-C Investment Ass'n v. Helvering, 62 App.D.C. 339, 68 F.2d 386, 387. A banking institution in which the depositors are the owners and which has no capital stock. See also Savings and Loan Association.

Mutual wills. Those made as the separate wills of two people which are reciprocal in provisions. Or those executed pursuant to agreement or compact between two or more persons to dispose of their property in particular manner, each in consideration of the other's doing so. See Reciprocal wills.

Mutuum /myùwtyuwam/. Lat. A loan for consumption; a loan of chattels, upon an agreement that the borrower may consume them, returning to the lender an equivalent in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which is to be used or consumed, and is to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. In re Ellis' Estate, 24 Del.Ch. 393, 6 A.2d 602, 611. At common law, such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, and not a bailment. See also Loan for exchange; Loan for use.

Mysterious disappearance. Term refers to theft insurance policy provision covering any disappearance or loss under unknown, puzzling or baffling circumstances which arouse wonder, curiosity or speculation, or circumstances which are difficult to understand or explain. Claiborne v. U. S. Fire Ins. Co., La.App., 193 So.2d 315, 317.

Mystery. A trade, art, or occupation. Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery.

Nation. A people, or aggregation of men, existing in the form of an organized jural society, usually inhabiting a distinct portion of the earth, speaking the same language, using the same customs, possessing historic continuity, and distinguished from other like groups by their racial origin and characteristcs, and generally, but not necessarily, living under the same government and sovereignty. Montoya v. U. S., 180 U.S. 261, 21 S.Ct. 358, 45 L.Ed. 521.

In American constitutional law the word "state" is applied to the several members of the American Union, while the word "nation" is applied to the whole body of the people embraced within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

National. Pertaining or relating to a nation as a whole. Commonly applied in American law to institutions, laws, or affairs of the United States or its government, as opposed to those of the several states. "National" contemplates an activity with a nationwide scope. In re National Foundation for Diarrheal Diseases, 8 Misc.2d 12, 164 N.Y.S.2d 177, 178. See also Federal.

A person owing permanent allegiance to a state. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101.

The term "national" as used in the phrase "national of the United States" is broader than the term "citizen". Brassert v. Biddle, D.C.Conn., 59 F.Supp. 457, 462.

National bank. A bank incorporated and doing business under the laws of the United States, whose charter is approved by the Comptroller of the Currency as distinguished from a state bank, which derives its powers from the authority of a particular state. Most such banks are members of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. See Member Bank.

National currency. Legal tender; that which circulates as money. Notes issued by national banks, and by the United States government. See Currency; Federal Reserve notes; Legal tender.

National debt. The money owing to government to some of the public or to financial institutions, consisting of such obligations as Treasury bills, notes, and bonds, the interest of which is paid out of the taxes raised by the whole of the public (i.e. out of general revenues).

National defense. A generic concept that refers to the military and naval establishments and the related activities of national preparedness and includes all matters directly and reasonably connected with the defense of the nation against its enemies. Gorin v. United States, 312 U.S. 19, 61 S.Ct. 429, 434, 436, 85 L.Ed. 488. Implicit in the term "national defense" is the notion of defending those values and ideals which set this nation apart. U.S. v. Robel, Wash., 389 U.S. 258, 88 S.Ct. 419, 424, 19 L.Ed.2d 508.

National domain. See Domain.

National domicile. See Domicile.

National emergency. A state of national crisis; a situation demanding immediate and extraordinary national or federal action. Congress has made little or no distinction between a "state of national emergency" and a "state of war". Brown v. Bernstein, D.C.Pa., 49 F.Supp. 728, 732.

National Environmental Policy Act. Federal Act setting forth declaration of national environmental policy and goals. Major provision requires that every federal agency submit an environmental impact statement with every legislative recommendation or program affecting the quality of the environment. 42 U.S.C.A. § 4321 et seq. See Environmental impact statements.

National government. The government of a whole nation, as distinguished from that of a state, local or territorial division of the nation, and also as distinguished from that of a league or confederation. Commonly referred to as the "federal government".

National Guard. Organization of men maintained as a reserve for the U.S. Army and Air Force. Members serve on a state-wide basis but are subject to being activated for federal service as well as for state emergencies.

Nationality. That quality or character which arises from the fact of a person's belonging to a nation or state. Nationality determines the political status of the individual, especially with reference to allegiance; while domicile determines his civil status. Nationality arises either by birth or by naturalization. See also Naturalization.

Nationality Act. Shortened name for Immigration and Nationality Act which is a comprehensive federal statute embracing such matters as immigration, naturalization and admission of aliens. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101 et seq.

Nationalization. The acquisition and control of privately owned business by government. See also Denationalization.

National Labor Relations Act. A federal statute known as the Wagner Act of 1935 and amended by the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947; it is comprehensive legislation regulating the relations between employers and employees, including supervised elections, and establishing National Labor Relations Board. 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

The Board has two principal functions under the act: preventing and remedying unfair labor practices by employers and labor organizations or their agents, and conducting secret ballot elections among employees in appropriate collective-bargaining units to determine whether or not they desire to be represented by a labor organization. The Board also conducts secret ballot elections among employees who have been covered by a union-shop agreement to determine whether or not they wish to revoke their union's authority to make such agreements; in jurisdictional disputes, decides and determines which competing group of workers is entitled to perform the work involved; and conducts secret ballot elections among employees concerning employers' final settlement offers in national emergency labor disputes.

The Board's major responsibilities are: (1) the mediation of disputes over wages, hours, and working conditions which arise between rail and air carriers and organizations representing their employees, and (2) the investigation of representation disputes and certification of employee organizations as representatives of crafts or classes of carrier employees.

National origin. In equal employment opportunities provisions of Civil Rights Act, term "national origin" on its face refers to country where person was born, or, more broadly, country from which his or her ancestors came, and was not intended to embrace requirement of United States citizenship. Espinoza v. Farah Mfg. Co., Inc., Tex., 414 U.S. 86, 94 S.Ct. 334, 336, 38 L.Ed.2d 287.

National Service Life Insurance. Special type of life insurance for military and naval personnel during and after their service created by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940 and containing highly favorable rates and terms.

Nations, law of. See International law.

Native. A natural-born subject or citizen; a citizen by birth; one who owes his domicile or citizenship to the fact of his birth within the country referred to. The term may also include one born abroad, if his parents were then citizens of the country, and not permanently residing in foreign parts. U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 18 S.Ct. 456, 42 L.Ed. 890.

The word "natives", as used in Alien Enemy Act, refers to person's place of birth, so that a person remains a native of country of his birth, though he has moved away therefrom. United States ex rel. D'Esquiva v. Uhl, C.C.A.N.Y., 137 F.2d 903, 905.

Native born. See Native.

Nativi conventionarii /natáyvay konvënish(ly)onériyay/. Villeins or bondmen by contract or agreement.

Nativi de stipite /natáyvay diy stipadiy/. Villeins or bondmen by birth or stock.

Nativitas /nativiastes/. Villenage; that state in which men were born slaves.

Nativo habendo /natáyvow habéndow/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a lord when his villein had run away from him. It was directed to the sheriff, and commanded him to apprehend the villein, and to restore him together with his goods to the lord.

Nativus /natáyvas/. Lat. In old English law, a native; specifically, one born into a condition of servitude; a born serf or villein.

Natura appetit perfectum; ita et pars non extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de tempore ad tempus /natyura spétat perfektam; ayta est leks/. Nature covets perfection; so does law also.

Nature vis maxima; natura bis maxima /natyúrya vis měksasma; natyúrya bis měksasma/. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great.

Natura fide jussio nis sit strictissimi juris et non durat vel extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de tempore ad tempus /natyúrya fádiy jášiisýwmas sit striktisýsam júras ét nón dyúrst vél ekstendéyter diy riý ád rém, diy persówna ád Natural. Untouched by man or by influences of civilization; wild; untutored, and is the opposite of the word "artificial". Department of Public Works and Bldgs. for and in Behalf of People v. Keller, 22 Ill.App.3d 54, 316 N.E.2d 794, 796. The juristic meaning of this term does not differ from the vernacular, except in the cases where it is used in opposition to the term "legal;" and then it means proceeding from or determined by physical causes or conditions, as distinguished from positive enactments of law, or attributable to the nature of man rather than to the commands of law, or based upon moral rather than legal considerations or sanctions.

As to natural Allegiance; Boundary; Channel; Child; Children; Day; Death; Domicile; Equity; Fruit; Guardian; Heirs; Infancy; Liberty; Obligation; Person; Possession; Presumption; Rights; Succession; Watercourse; and Year, see those titles.

Natural and probable consequences. Those consequences that a person by prudent human foresight can anticipate as likely to result from an act, because they happen so frequently from the commission of such an act that in the field of human experience they may be expected to happen again. Pope v. Pinkerton-Hays Lumber Co., Fla.App., 120 So.2d 227, 230.

Natural born citizen. Persons who are born within the jurisdiction of a national government, i.e., in its territorial limits, or those born of citizens temporarily residing abroad. See Jus soli; Naturalization clause.

Natural consequences. See Natural and probable consequences.

Natural death. Death from causes other than accident or violence. Also called death from natural causes.

Natural Death Acts. See Right to die laws; Will (Living will).

Naturale est quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound.

Natural flood channel. A channel beginning at some point on banks of stream and ending at some other point lower down stream, through which flood waters naturally flow at times of high water. C. M. Bott Furniture Co. v. City of Buffalo, 131 Misc. 624, 227 N.Y.S. 660, 665.

Naturalization. The process by which a person acquires nationality after birth and becomes entitled to the privileges of U.S. citizenship. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1401 et seq.

In the United States collective naturalization occurs when designated groups are made citizens by treaty (as Louisiana Purchase), or by a law of Congress (as in annexation of Texas and Hawaii). Individual naturalization must follow certain steps: (a) petition for naturalization by a person of lawful age who has been a lawful resident of the United States for 5 years; (b) investigation by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to determine whether the applicant can speak and write the English language, has a knowledge of the fundamentals of American government and history, is attached to the principles of the Constitution and is of good moral character; (c) hearing before a U.S. District Court or certain State courts of record; and (d) after a lapse of at least 30 days a second appearance in court when the oath of allegiance is administered.

Naturalization clause. The Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Section 1, provides that all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside. See Jus soli.

Naturalization courts. Both federal and state courts of record have jurisdiction over naturalization matters. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1421.

Naturalized citizen. One who, being an alien by birth, has received U.S. citizenship under naturalization laws. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1421 et seq.

Natural law. This expression, "natural law," or jus naturale, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Antonine age, and was intended to denote a system of rules and principles for the guidance of human conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one people, might be discovered by the rational intelligence of man, and would be found to grow out of and conform to his nature, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical constitution. The point of departure for this conception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered "according to nature," which in its turn rested upon the purely supposititious existence, in primitive times, of a "state of nature;" that is, a condition of society in which men universally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, such nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. In ethics, it consists in practical universal judgments which man himself elicits. These express necessary and obligatory rules of human conduct which have been established by the author of human nature as essential to the divine purposes in the universe and have been promulgated by God solely through human reason.

Natural life. The period of a person’s existence considered as continuing until terminated by physical dissolution or death occurring in the course of nature; used in contradistinction to that juristic and artificial conception of life as an aggregate of legal rights or the possession of a legal personality, which could be terminated by "civil death" (q.v.), that is, that extinction of personality which resulted from entering a monastery or being attainted of treason or felony.

Natural monument. Objects permanent in character which are found on the land as they were placed by nature, such as streams, lakes, ponds, shores, and beaches; sometimes including highways and streets, walls, fences, trees, hedges, springs, and rocks, and the like.

Natural object of testator's bounty. In testamentary law, term comprises whoever would take, in the absence of a will, because they are the persons whom the law has so designated, and in the ordinary case the law follows the normal condition of near relationship.

Natural objects. In interpretation of boundaries term includes mountains, lakes, rivers, etc. See also Natural monument.

Natural premium. Actual sum necessary to meet maturing death claims each year and is necessarily exceeded by the "net premium". Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Natural resources. Any material in its native state which when extracted has economic value. Timber land, oil and gas wells, ore deposits, and other products of nature that have economic value. The cost of natural resources is subject to depletion. Often called "wasting assets."

The term includes not only timber, gas, oil, coal, minerals, lakes, and submerged lands, but also, features which supply a human need and contribute to the health, welfare, and benefit of a community, and are essential to the well-being thereof and proper enjoyment of property devoted to park and recreational purposes.

Natural rights. Those which grow out of nature of man and depend upon his personality and are distinguished from those which are created by positive laws enacted by a duly constituted government to create an orderly civilized society. In re Gogabashvele's Estate, 195 Cal. App.2d 503, 16 Cal.Rptr. 77, 91.

Natura non facit saltum; ita nec lex /nastýura nón féysat sóltam; aýta něk léıks/. Nature makes no leap [no sudden or irregular movement]; so neither does law. Applied in old practice to the regular observance of the degrees in writs of entry, which could not be passed over per saltum.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supervacuum /nastýura nón féysat vákyuyum, něk léıks s(y)uíwparr-vákyuyuwm/. Nature makes no vacuum, the law nothing purposeless.

Natus /náytas/. Lat. Born, as distinguished from nasciaturus, about to be born. Ante natus, one born before a particular person or event, e.g., before the death of his father, before a political revolution, etc. Post natus, one born after a particular person or event.

Nauclerus /nókliras/. Lat. In the civil law, the master or owner of a merchant vessel.

Naulage /nólëji/ The freight of passengers in a ship.

Naulium /nólëm/. In the civil law, the freight or fare paid for the transportation of cargo or passengers over the sea in a vessel. This is a Latinized form of a Greek word.

Nauta /nóta/. Lat. In the civil and maritime law, a sailor; one who works a ship. Any one who is on board a ship for the purpose of navigating her. The employer of a ship.

Nautical. Pertaining to ships or to the art of navigation or the business of carriage by sea. See also Marine.

Nautical assessors. Experienced shipmasters, or other persons having special knowledge of navigation or nautical affairs, who are called to the assistance of a court of admiralty, in difficult cases involving questions of negligence, and who sit with the judge during the argument, and give their advice upon questions of seamanship or the weight of testimony.

Nautical mile. See Mile.

Nautica pecunia /nótká pakyúwm(i)yá/. A loan to a shipowner, to be repaid only upon the successful termination of the voyage, and therefore allowed to be made at an extraordinary rate of interest (nauticum fænus).

Nauticum fænus /nótkáms fýynas/. Lat. In the civil law, nautical or maritime interest; an extraordinary rate of interest agreed to be paid for the loan of money on the hazard of a voyage; corresponding to interest on contracts of bottomry or respondentia in English and American maritime law.

Navagium /névýyiyiym/. In old English law, a duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship.

Naval. Appertaining to the navy (q.v.).

Naval base. See Base.

Naval law. The system of regulations and principles for the government of the navy. See Code of Military Justice.

Navarchus /návárkas/. In the civil law, the master or commander of a ship; the captain of a man-of-war.

Navicularius /návikyolériyas/. In the civil law, the master or captain of a ship.

Navigable. See Navigable waters.

Navigable in fact. Streams or lakes are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their natural and ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Taylor Fishing Club v. Hammett, Tex.Civ. App., 88 S.W.2d 127, 129. See also Navigable waters.

Navigable river or stream. At common law, a river or stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, or as far as the tide ebbs and flows. But as to the definition in American law, see Navigable waters.

Navigable sea. The "navigable sea" is divided into three zones: (1) nearest to the nation's shores are its internal or "inland waters"; (2) beyond the inland waters, and measured from their seaward edge, is a belt known as the marginal or "territorial sea"; and (3) outside the territorial sea are the "high seas". U.S. v. State of La., 394 U.S. 11, 89 S.Ct. 773, 780, 788, 22 L.Ed.2d 44.

Navigable waters. Those waters which afford a channel for useful commerce.

Any body of water, navigable in fact, which by itself or by uniting with other waters forms a continuous highway over which commerce may be carried on with other states or countries. United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., 311 U.S. 377, 61 S.Ct. 291, 85 L.Ed. 243, rehearing denied 312 U.S. 712, 61 S.Ct. 548, 85 L.Ed. 1143, petition denied 317 U.S. 594, 63 S.Ct. 67, 87 L.Ed. 487. In determining whether water is "navigable," the factual inquiry is whether the water has capability of use by the public for the purpose of transportation and commerce. U.S. v. Kaiser Aetna, C.A. Hawaii, 584 F.2d 378, 381.

A water is "navigable," for purposes of admiralty jurisdiction, provided that it is used or susceptible of being used as an artery of commerce. Adams v. Montana Power Co., C.A.Mont., 528 F.2d 437, 440. Rivers are "navigable" in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Madole v. Johnson, D.C.La., 241 F.Supp. 379, 381.

Navigable waters of the United States. A body of water is "navigable water of the United States" if it is presently being used or is suitable for use for transportation and commerce, or if it has been so used or was suitable for such use in the past, or if it could be made suitable for such use in the future by reasonable improvements. U.S. v. Cannon, D.C.Del., 363 F.Supp. 1045, 1050. Such waters have been held to include the high seas, which begin at a line three miles offshore. Reynolds v. Ingalls Shipbuilding Div., Litton Systems, Inc., C.A. Miss., 788 F.2d 264, 268.

Navigate. To journey by water; to go in a vessel; to sail or manage a vessel; to use the waters as a highway for commerce or communication; to ply. To direct one's course through any medium; to steer, especially to operate an airplane or airship. United States v. Monstad, C.C.A.Cal., 134 F.2d 986, 987, 988.

Navigation. The act or the science or the business of traversing the sea or other navigable waters in ships or vessels. The Silvia, 171 U.S. 462, 19 S.Ct. 7, 43 L.Ed. 241.

Regular navigation. In this phrase, the word "regular" may be used in contradistinction to "occasional," rather than to "unlawful," and refer to vessels that, alone or with others, constitute lines, and not merely to such as are regular in the sense of being properly documented under the laws of the country to which they belong.

Rules of navigation. Rules and regulations adopted by commercial nations to govern the steering and management of vessels approaching each other at sea so as to avoid the danger of collision or fouling.

Navigational visibility. Visibility as affecting speed with reference to distance within which boat in fog could be brought to stop, before any course of any vessel emerging from fog on either side would cross her projected course alongside the fog bank at its nearest point. The Silver Palm, C.C.A.Cal., 94 F.2d 754, 767.

Navy. A fleet of ships; the aggregate of vessels of war belonging to a nation. In a broader sense, and as equivalent to "naval forces," the entire corps of officers and men enlisted in the naval service and who man the public ships of war, including in this sense, in the United States, the officers and men of the Marine Corps. Wilkes v. Dinsman, 48 U.S. (7 How.) 89, 12 L.Ed. 618; U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U.S. 249, 7 S.Ct. 507, 30 L.Ed. 667. One of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Navy Department. Part of the Department of Defense, presided over by the Secretary of the Navy, who is responsible to the Secretary of Defense for the operation and efficiency of the Navy. (10 U.S.C.A. § 5031). The primary mission of the Navy is to protect the United States, as directed by the President or the Secretary of Defense, by the effective prosecution of war at sea including, with its Marine Corps component, the seizure or defense of advanced naval bases; to support, as required, the forces of all military departments of the United States; and maintain freedom of the seas.

Nazeranna /názæreme/. In old English law, a sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office.

N.B. An abbreviation for "notas bene," mark well, observe; also "nulla bona," no goods.

N.C.D. "Nemin contra dicente." No one dissenting.

N.D. An abbreviation for "Northern District," e.g. U.S. District Court for Northern District of N.Y.

Ne admittas /nɛldimtas/. Lat. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a prohibitory writ, directed to the bishop, at the request of the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit is pending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk pending the suit between them.

Neap tide /niːp tɛɪd/. When the moon is in its first and third quarters, the tides do not rise as high, nor fall as low, as on the average; at such times the tides are known as "neap tides." Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, Cal., 296 U.S. 10, 56 S.Ct. 23, 80 L.Ed. 9.

Near. Proximate; close-by; about; adjacent; contiguous; abutting. The word as applied to space is a relative term without positive or precise meaning, depending for its significance on the subject-matter in relation to which it is used and the circumstances under which it becomes necessary to apply it to surrounding objects. Closely akin or related by blood; as, a near relative. Close to one's interests and affections; touching or affecting intimately, as one's near affairs, friends. Not far distant in time, place or degree; not remote; adjoining. Zeigenfus v. Snelbaker, 38 N.J.Super. 304, 118 A.2d 876, 879.

Near money. Liquid assets which are readily convertible into money.

Neat, net. The clear weight or quantity of an article without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

Ne balla pas /na bélya pá/. L. Fr. He did not deliver. A plea in detinue, denying the delivery to the defendant of the thing sued for.

Necation. The act of killing.

Nec curia deficeret in justitia exhibenda /nék kyúriya dafízarat in jáéth(i)ya égazabénda/. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice.

Necessaries. An article which a party actually needs. State v. Earnest, Mo.App., 162 S.W.2d 338, 341. Things indispensable, or things proper and useful, for the sustenance of human life.

Necessaries consist of food, drink, clothing, medical attention, and a suitable place of residence, and they are regarded as necessaries in the absolute sense of the word. However, liability for necessaries is not limited to articles required to sustain life; it extends to articles which would ordinarily be necessary and suitable, in view of the rank, position, fortune, earning capacity, and mode of living of the individual involved.

Whether attorney's services are to be considered "necessaries" depends on whether there is necessity therefor. Fen v. Hart Dairy Co., 231 Mo.App. 1005, 83 S.W.2d 120, 124. But such services are usually "necessaries". Leonard v. Alexander, 50 Cal.App.2d 385, 122 P.2d 984, 986.

What constitutes "necessaries" for which an admiralty lien will attach depends upon what is reasonably needed in the ship's business, regard being had to the character of the voyage and the employment in which the vessel is being used. Walker Skageth Food Stores v. The Bavols, D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 109, 110, 111.

See also Necessity; Necessitous circumstances; Support.

Necessaries, doctrine of. One who sells goods to a wife or child may charge the husband or father if the goods are required for their sustenance or support.

Necessarily included offense. For a lesser offense to be "necessarily included" in offense charged, within lesser included offense rule, it must be such that the greater offense cannot be committed without also committing the lesser. Kelly v. U.S., 125 U.S.App.D.C. 205, 370 F.2d 227, 228. "Lesser offense" is "necessarily included" in a graver offense if the greater of the offenses includes all the legal and factual elements of the lesser. State v. Umfleet, Mo.App., 538 S.W.2d 55, 59. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 31(c). See also Lesser included offense.

Necessarium est quod non potest alter se habere /néssérséryam ést kwó nón pówtást áléstar siy habiriy/. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessarius /néssáriya/. Lat. Necessary; unavoidable; indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful.

Necessary. This word must be considered in the connection in which it is used, as it is a word susceptible of various meanings. It may import absolute physical necessity or inevitability, or it may import that which is only convenient, useful, appropriate, suitable, proper, or conducive to the end sought. It is an adjective expressing degrees, and may express mere convenience or that which is indispensable or an absolute physical necessity. It may mean something which in the accomplishment of a given object cannot be dispensed with, or it may mean something reasonably useful and proper, and of greater or lesser benefit or convenience, and its force and meaning must be determined with relation to the particular object sought. Kay County Excise Board v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 185 Okl. 327, 91 P.2d 1087, 1088.

In eminent domain proceedings, it means land reasonably requisite and proper for accomplishment of an object in view, not absolute necessity of particular location. State v. Whitcomb, 94 Mont. 415, 22 P.2d 823.

With respect to taxation (i.e. deduction of necessary expenses is carrying on trade or business), means appropriate and helpful in furthering the taxpayer's business or income producing activity. I.R.C. §§ 162(a) and 212. See also Ordinary (Ordinary expenses).

As to necessary: Damages; Deposit; Domicile; Implication; Intromission; Repair; and Way, see those titles. See also Necessaries; Necessity.

Necessary and proper. Words "necessary and proper" mean appropriate and adapted to carrying into effect given object. Petition of Public Service Coordinated Transport, 103 N.J.Super. 505, 247 A.2d 888, 891.

Necessary and proper clause. Art. I, § 8, par. 18 of U.S. Constitution, which authorizes Congress to make all laws necessary and proper to carry out the enumerated powers of Congress and all other powers vested in the government of the United States or any department or officer thereof. See Penumbra doctrine.

These words are not limited to such measures as are absolutely and indispensably necessary, without which the powers granted must fail of execution, but they include all appropriate means which are conducive or adapted to the end to be accomplished, and which, in the judgment of Congress will most advantageously effect it.
NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE

Julliard v. Greenman, 110 U.S. 421, 440, 4 S.Ct. 122, 28 L.Ed. 204. The "necessary and proper" clause of the federal Constitution is not a grant of power but a declaration that Congress possesses all of the means necessary to carry out its specifically granted powers. Kinsella v. U.S., 361 U.S. 234, 80 S.Ct. 297, 4 L.Ed.2d 268.

Necessary inference. One which is inescapable or unavoidable from the standpoint of reason. Taylor v. Twiner, 193 Miss. 410, 9 So.2d 644, 646.

Necessary parties. In pleading and practice, those persons who must be joined in an action because, inter alia, complete relief cannot be given to those already parties without their joinder. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a).

Necessary parties are those who must be included in action either as plaintiffs or defendants, unless there is a valid excuse for their nonjoinder. City of Hutchinson for Human Relations Commission of Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, Kansas Office of Kansas State Employment Service, 213 Kan. 399, 517 P.2d 117, 122. Those persons who have such an interest in controversy that its final adjudication may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Royal Petroleum Corp. v. Dennis, 160 Tex. 392, 332 S.W.2d 313, 314. A "necessary party" is one whose joinder is required in order to afford the plaintiff the complete relief to which he is entitled against the defendant who is properly suable in that county. Orange Associates, Inc. v. Albright, Tex.Civ.App., 548 S.W.2d 806, 807.

See also Indispensable parties; Joinder; Parties.

Necessitas /näsæstæs/. Lat. Necessity; a force, power, or influence which compels one to act against his will.

Necessitas culpabilis /näsæstæs kälpybalas/. Culpable necessity; unfortunate necessity; necessity which, while it excuses the act done under its compulsion, does not leave the doer entirely free from blame. The necessity which compels a man to kill another in self-defense is thus distinguished from that which requires the killing of a felon.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci /näsæstæs ê ët léks témparas êt lôsway/. Necessity is the law of time and of place.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus /näsæstæs akskýuwsat ö akstényuwsat dalíktam õakothýyalas kwôd nóñ opórêytor âydóm an sôvilis/. Necessity excuses or extenuates a delinquency in capital cases, which has not the same operation in civil cases.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum /näsæstæs âjyjas âsístam kwôd ëjlijas nôñ êsístam/. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is not lawful.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quod jura privata /näsæstæs andyùwsat prívâllyjiyjas kwôwad jûrâ prévnya/. Necessity gives a privilege with reference to private rights. The necessity involved in this maxim is of three kinds, viz.: (1) Necessity of self-preservation; (2) of obedience; and (3) necessity resulting from the act of God, or of a stranger.

Necessitas non habet legem /näsæstæs nôn hêyet liyjam/. Necessity has no law.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata /näsæstæs póblank mëjyôr êst kwôm prôvya/. Public necessity is greater than private. "Death," it has been observed, "is the last and furthest point of particular necessity, and the law imposes it upon every subject that he prefer the urgent service of his king and country before the safety of his life."

Necessitas quod cogit, defendit /näsæstæs kwôd kôwjaq dôfendat/. Necessity defends or justifies what it compels. Applied to the acts of a sheriff, or ministerial officer, in the execution of his office.

Necessitas sub lege non continetur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum /näsæstæs sôb lîiyjîy nôn kôntânylîytor, kwâyâ kwôd ëjliyas nôñ êsí lâsîtam näsæstæs fêyjas ësístam/. Necessity is not restrained by law, since what otherwise is not lawful, necessity makes lawful.

Necessitas vincet legem; legum vincula irredit /näsæstæs vînstås liyjam; liygam vîgkyôla frôdet/. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.

Necessitas vincit legem; legum vincula irredit /näsæstæs vînstås liyjam; liygam vîgkyôla frôdet/. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.

Necessities. See Necessaries.

Necessitous /näsæstæs/. Indigent or pressed by poverty. See Indigent.

Necessitous circumstances /näsæstæs sôrkaistén-sass/. Needing the necessities of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support. In the civil code of Louisiana the words are used relative to the fortune of the deceased and to the condition in which the claimant lived during the marriage. See also Necessaries; Non-support.

Necessitudo /näsæst(y)ùwdom/. Lat. In the civil law, an obligation; a close connection; relationship by blood.

Necessity. Controlling force; irresistible compulsion; a power or impulse so great that it admits no choice of conduct. That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible. The quality or state of being necessary, in its primary sense signifying that which makes an act or event unavoidable. Quality or state of fact of being in difficulties or in need; a condition arising out of circumstances that compels a certain course of action. Bykofsky v. Borough of Middletown, D.C.Pa., 401 F.Supp. 1242, 1250. See Irresistible impulse.

A person is excused from criminal liability if he acts under a duress of circumstances to protect life or limb or health in a reasonable manner and with no other acceptable choice. See Justification; Self-defense.
The word "necessity", within certificate of public convenience and necessity, is not used in the sense of being essential or absolutely indispensable but merely that certificate is reasonably necessary for public good. Alabama Public Service Commission v. Crow, 247 Ala. 120, 22 So.2d 721, 724. To fulfill requirements for easement of right of way of necessity, the necessity must be actual, real, and reasonable, as distinguished from inconvenience, but it need not be absolute and irresistible necessity. When used in relation to power of eminent domain does not mean absolute necessity, but only reasonable necessity. The "necessity" of and appurtenance for the beneficial use of leased premises, which will entitle the lessee thereto, is not an absolute necessity in the sense that it must be completely indispensable, but is a real necessity and not a mere convenience or advantage.

See also Necessaries; Necessary.

Neck-verse. The Latin sentence, "Miserere mei, Deus," non dedit or /na downa pa/non diydat/. Ne dona pas, or non dedit /na dönâ pa/nön diydât/. The general issue in a formedon, now abolished. It denied the gift in tail to have been made in manner and form as alleged; and was therefore the proper plea, if the tenant meant to dispute the fact of the gift, but did not apply to any other case.

Nee. The name to which a person was born; this term is sometimes used after a woman's married name to indicate a maiden family name.

Need. A relative term, the conception of which must, within reasonable limits, vary with the personal situation of the individual employing it. Term means to have an urgent or essential use for (something lacking); to want, require. City of Dayton v. Borchers, 13 Ohio Misc. 273, 232 N.E.2d 437, 440. See Necessaries.

Needless. In a statute against "needless" killing or mutilation of any animal, this term denotes an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction.

Negate. To deny, negative, nullify or render ineffective.

Negato conclusionis est error in lege /nágéysh(iy)ow kánklùwahšiâyéwowmás ēst ēhrâr in liyjìiy/. The denial of a fact, as alleged; a statement in the form of denial. Two negatives do not make a good issue.

Negatio declaratio /név éziyati réqnu/. A writ which forbids the person to whom it is addressed to leave the country, the state, or the jurisdiction of the court. It is the nature of civil bail, the purpose of which is to prevent the frustration of a plaintiff's equitable claims by insuring the continued physical presence of the defendant within the court's jurisdiction. Gredone v. Gredone, D.C.App., 361 A.2d 176, 179. Sometimes a ne exeat writ is issued only to restrain a person from leaving the jurisdiction, and sometimes it is issued against a person who is removing or attempting to remove property beyond the jurisdiction. August v. August, 65 Ga.App. 883, 16 S.E.2d 784, 785.

Ne exeat regno /név éziyati rápábskâ/. Lat. In American practice, a writ which issues to restrain a person from leaving the kingdom. It was formerly used for political purposes, but is now only resorted to in equity when the defendant is about to leave the kingdom; it is only in cases where the intention of the party to leave can be shown that the writ is granted.

Ne exeat republica /név éziyati râpâbskâ/. Lat. In American practice, a writ similar to that of ne exeat regno (q.v.), available to the plaintiff in a civil suit, under some circumstances, when the defendant is about to leave the state.

Nefas /niyâs/. Lat. That which is against right or the divine law. A wicked or impious thing or act.

Nefastus /nafâstas/. Lat. Inauspicious. Applied, in the Roman law, to a day on which it was unlawful to open the courts or administer justice.

Negate. To deny, negative, nullify or render ineffective.

Negatio declaratio /név éziyati réqnu/. A writ which forbids the person to whom it is addressed to leave the country, the state, or the jurisdiction of the court. It is the nature of civil bail, the purpose of which is to prevent the frustration of a plaintiff's equitable claims by insuring the continued physical presence of the defendant within the court's jurisdiction. Gredone v. Gredone, D.C.App., 361 A.2d 176, 179. Sometimes a ne exeat writ is issued only to restrain a person from leaving the jurisdiction, and sometimes it is issued against a person who is removing or attempting to remove property beyond the jurisdiction. August v. August, 65 Ga.App. 883, 16 S.E.2d 784, 785.

Ne exeat regno /név éziyati réqnu/. Lat. In American practice, a writ which issues to restrain a person from leaving the kingdom. It was formerly used for political purposes, but is now only resorted to in equity when the defendant is about to leave the kingdom; it is only in cases where the intention of the party to leave can be shown that the writ is granted.

Ne exeat republica /név éziyati râpâbskâ/. Lat. In American practice, a writ similar to that of ne exeat regno (q.v.), available to the plaintiff in a civil suit, under some circumstances, when the defendant is about to leave the state.

Nefas /niyâs/. Lat. That which is against right or the divine law. A wicked or impious thing or act.
negative is asserted. U. S. v. Eisenminger, D.C.Del., 16 F.2d 816, 819.

Negative condition. One by which it is stipulated that a given thing shall not happen.

Negative covenant. A provision in an employment agreement or a contract of sale of a business which prohibits the employee or seller from competing in the same area or market. Such restriction must be reasonable in scope and duration.

Negative easement. A right in owner of dominant tenement to restrict owner of servient tenement in exercise of general and natural rights of property. Fort Dodge, D. M. & S. Ry. v. American Community Stores Corp., 256 Iowa 1344, 131 N.W.2d 515, 521. An easement which restrains a landowner from making certain use of his land which he might otherwise have lawfully done but for that restriction and such easements arise principally by express grant or by implication. Huggins v. Castle Estates, Inc., 36 N.Y.2d 427, 369 N.Y.S.2d 80, 330 N.E.2d 48, 51.

Negative evidence. Testimony that an alleged fact did not exist. See Rebuttal evidence.

Negative pregnant. In pleading, a negative implying also an affirmative. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. A denial in such form as to imply or express an admission of the substantial fact which apparently is controverted; or a denial which, although in the form of a traverse, really admits the important facts contained in the allegations to which it relates. Cramer v. Aiken, 63 App. D.C. 16, 68 F.2d 761, 762. It occurs in responsive pleading where the denial is stated in the very words employed in the complaint and negative pregnant is condemned because it is pregnant with alternative admissions to allegations of the complaint. Prestin v. Baumgartner, 47 Wis.2d 574, 177 N.W.2d 825, 827.

Neglgildare. To claim kindred.

Neglect. May mean to omit, fail, or forbear to do a thing that can be done, or that is required to be done, but it may also import an absence of care or attention in the doing or omission of a given act. And it may mean a designed refusal, indifference, or unwillingness to perform one's duty. In re Perkins, 234 Mo.App. 716, 117 S.W.2d 686, 692.

The term is used in the law of bailment as synonymous with "negligence." But the latter word is the closer translation of the Latin "negligentia."

An omission to do or perform some work, duty, or act. Failure to perform or discharge a duty, covering positive official misdoing or official misconduct as well as negligence.

See also Excusable neglect; Negligence.

Culpable neglect. Such neglect which exists where the loss can fairly be ascribed to the party's own carelessness, improvidence, or folly. State ex rel. Fulton v. Coburn, 133 Ohio St. 192, 12 N.E.2d 471, 477, 10 O.O. 249.

Willful neglect. The neglect of the husband to provide for his wife the common necessaries of life, he having the ability to do so; or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness, profligacy, or dissipation. See also Neccessary.

Neglected child. A child is "neglected" when his parent or custodian, by reason of cruelty, mental incapacity, immorality or depravity, is unfit properly to care for him, or neglects or refuses to provide necessary physical, affectional, medical, surgical, or institutional or hospital care for him, or he is in such condition of want or suffering, or is under such improper care or control as to endanger his morals or health. In re DuMond, 196 Misc. 16, 17, 92 N.Y.S.2d 605.

Negligence. The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those ordinary considerations which ordinarily regulate human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a reasonable and prudent man would not do.

Negligence is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would use under similar circumstances; it is the doing of some act which a person of ordinary prudence would not have done under similar circumstances or failure to do what a person of ordinary prudence would have done under similar circumstances. Amoco Chemical Corp. v. Hill, Del.Super., 318 A.2d 614, 617. Conduct which falls below the standard established by law for the protection of others against unreasonable risk of harm; it is a departure from the conduct expectable of a reasonably prudent person under like circumstances. U.S. v. Ohio Barge Lines, Inc., 607 F.2d 624, 632.

The term refers only to that legal delinquency which results whenever a man fails to exhibit the care which he ought to exhibit, whether it be slight, ordinary, or great. It is characterized chiefly by inadvertence, thoughtlessness, inattention, and the like, while "wan-tonness" or "recklessness" is characterized by willfulness. The law of negligence is founded on reasonable conduct or reasonable care under all circumstances of particular case. Doctrine of negligence rests on duty of every person to exercise due care in his conduct toward others from which injury may result.

Actionable negligence. See Actionable negligence.

Active negligence. See Active negligence.

Collateral negligence. Doctrine which holds that: An employer of an independent contractor, unless he is himself negligent, is not liable for physical harm caused by any negligence of the contractor if (a) the contractor's negligence consists solely in the improper manner in which he does the work, and (b) it creates a risk of such harm which is not inherent in or normal to the work, and (c) the employer had no reason to contemplate the contractor’s negligence when the contract was made. Restatement, Second, Torts § 426.

Comparative negligence. See Comparative negligence.

Concurrent negligence. Arises where the same injury is proximately caused by the concurrent wrongful acts or omissions of two or more persons acting independently. See also Concurrent negligence.

Contributory negligence. The act or omission amounting to want of ordinary care on part of complaining party, which, concurring with defendant’s negligence, is proximate cause of injury. Honaker v. Crutchfield, 247 Ky. 495, 57 S.W.2d 502. Conduct by a plaintiff which is mate cause of injury. Honaker v. Crutchfield, 247 Ky. 495, 57 S.W.2d 502. Conduct by a plaintiff which is proximately caused by the concurrent wrongful acts or omissions of two or more persons acting independently.

Conduct for which plaintiff is responsible amounting to a breach of duty which law imposes on persons to protect themselves from injury, and which, concurring and cooperating with actionable negligence for which defendant is responsible, contributes to injury complained of as a proximate cause. Cowan v. Dean, 81 S.D. 486, 137 N.W.2d 337, 341.

The defense of contributory negligence has been replaced by the doctrine of comparative negligence (q.v.) in many states. See also Exceptions and limitations, below.

It is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded and proved by defendant. Fed.R.Civil P., Rule 8(c).

 Doctrine is also applicable to one who through his own negligence has contributed to material alteration of a negotiable instrument. U.C.C. § 3-406.

Criminal negligence. Criminal negligence which will render killing a person manslaughter is the omission on the part of the person to do some act which an ordinarily careful and prudent man would do under like circumstances, or the doing of some act which an ordinarily careful, prudent man under like circumstances would not do by reason of which another person is endangered in life or bodily safety; the word “ordinary” being synonymous with “reasonable” in this connection.

Negligence of such a character, or occurring under such circumstances, as to be punishable as a crime by statute; or (at common law) such a flagrant and reckless disregard of the safety of others, or wilful indifference to the injury liable to follow, as to convert an act otherwise lawful into a crime when it results in personal injury or death.

A wanton or reckless disregard for human life; a degree of carelessness amounting to a culpable disregard of rights and safety of others. Ruffin v. State, 10 Md. App. 102, 268 A.2d 494, 497. That species of want of care by which a person may be criminally liable. It varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and is called culpable negligence in some. However, it generally refers to conduct which is not intentional and ordinarily not wilful, wanton and reckless.

See Negligent homicide; Negligently; Negligent manslaughter.

Culpable negligence. Failure to exercise that degree of care rendered appropriate by the particular circumstances, and which a man of ordinary prudence in the same situation and with equal experience would not have omitted.

Degrees of negligence. While there are degrees of care, and failure to exercise proper degree of care is “negligence,” most courts hold that there are no degrees (e.g. slight, ordinary, gross) of negligence, except in bailment cases or under automobile guest statutes. Murray v. De Luxe Motor Stages of Illinois, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1074, 1078. The prevailing view is that there are no “degrees” of care in negligence, as a matter of law; there are only different amounts of care as a matter of fact. To the extent that the degrees of negligence survive, they are described below.

Exceptions and limitations. The general rule in automobile accident cases that contributory negligence bars recovery for the injuries sustained is subject to various exceptions and limitations. Thus the defense of contributory negligence may be inapplicable where defendant’s negligence is of a gross or willful character. Moreover, application of the doctrine of contributory negligence is limited by the last clear chance doctrine or similar doctrines, or by comparative negligence statutes.

Gross negligence. The intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another.

It is materially more want of care than constitutes simple inadvertence. It is an act or omission respecting legal duty of an aggravated character as distinguished from a mere failure to exercise ordinary care. It amounts to indifference to present legal duty and to utter forgetfulness of legal obligations so far as other persons may be affected. It is a heedless and palpable violation of legal duty respecting the rights of others. The element of culpability which characterizes all negligence is in gross negligence magnified to a high degree as compared with that present in ordinary negligence. Gross negligence is a manifestly smaller amount of watchfulness and circumspection than the circumstances require of a person of ordinary prudence. It falls short of being such reckless disregard of probable consequences as is equivalent to a wilful and intentional wrong. Ordinary and gross negligence differ in degree of inattention, while both differ in kind from wilful and intentional conduct which is or ought to be known to have a tendency to injure.

Gross negligence consists of conscious and voluntary act or omission which is likely to result in grave injury when in face of clear and present danger of which alleged tortfeasor is aware. Gaab v. Caudill, Fla.App., 236 So.2d 180, 182, 183, 185. That entire want of care which would raise belief that act or omission complained of was result of conscious indifference to rights and welfare of persons affected by it. Claunch v. Bennett, Tex.Civ.App., 395 S.W.2d 719, 724. Indifference to present legal duty and utter forgetfulness of legal obligations, so far as other persons may be affected, and a manifestly smaller amount of watchfulness and circumspection than the circumstances require of a person of ordinary prudence.

Hazardous negligence. Such careless or reckless conduct as exposes one to very great danger of injury or to imminent peril.

Imputed negligence. Refers to doctrine that places upon one person responsibility for the negligence of another; such responsibility or liability is imputed by reason of some special relationship of the parties, such as parent and child, husband and wife, driver and passenger, owner of vehicle and driver, bailor and bailee, master and servant, joint enterprise, and parent and custodian of a child. Schmidt v. Martin, 212 Kan. 373, 510 P.2d 1244, 1246.

Generally the doctrine of imputed negligence, as applied to automobile accidents, visits on one person legal responsibility for the negligent conduct of another. The doctrine applies only in limited classes of cases, as where there is a right to control in the relationship of master and servant, principal and agent, or a joint enterprise. The independent negligence of one person ordinarily is not imputable to another person except where the relation between the persons gives rise to an express or implied agency in the person committing the act of negligence.

See also Respondeat superior; Vicarious liability.

Legal negligence. See Legal negligence.

Ordinary negligence. The omission of that care which a person of common prudence usually takes of his own concerns. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662. Failure to exercise care of an ordinarily prudent person in same situation. A want of that care and prudence that the great majority of mankind naturally is said to be the want of ordinary care.

Ordinary negligence is based on fact that one ought to have known results of his acts, while "gross negligence" rests on assumption that one knew results of his acts, but was recklessly or wantonly indifferent to results. The distinction between "ordinary negligence" and "gross negligence" is that the former lies in the field of inadvertence and the latter in the field of actual or constructive intent to injure.

Passive negligence. Failure to do something that should have been done. It is negligence which permits defects, obstacles, or pitfalls to exist on premises; that is, negligence which causes dangers arising from physical condition of land. Pachowitz v. Milwaukee & Suburban Transport Corp., 56 Wis.2d 383, 202 N.W.2d 268, 275.

Difference between "active" and "passive" negligence is that one is only passively negligent if he merely fails to act in fulfillment of duty of care which law imposes upon him, while one is actively negligent if he participates in some manner in conduct or omission which caused injury. King v. Timber Structures, Inc. of Cal., 240 Cal.App.2d 178, 49 Cal.Rptr. 414, 417.

Per se negligence. The unexcused violation of a statute which is applicable is per se or automatic negligence in some states. See also Negligence per se.

Slight negligence. A failure to exercise great care. Slight negligence is defined to be only an absence of that degree of care and vigilance which persons of extraordinary prudence and foresight are accustomed to use. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662.

Tax negligence. I.R.C. § 6653(a) imposes a penalty on taxpayers who show negligence or intentional disregard of rules and regulations with respect to the underpayment of certain taxes.

Wilful, wanton or reckless negligence. These terms are customarily treated as meaning essentially the same thing. The usual meaning assigned to "wilful," "wanton" or "reckless," according to taste as to the word used, is that the actor has intentionally done an act of an unreasonable character in disregard of a risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it, and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow. It usually is accompanied by a conscious indifference to the consequences, amounting almost to willingness that they shall follow; and it has been said that this is indispensable. See for example Tyndall v. Rippon, 5 Del.Super, 458, 61 A.2d 422; Wolters v. Venhaus, 350 III.App. 322, 112 N.E.2d 747. The result is that "wilful," "wanton" or "reckless" conduct tends to take on the aspect of highly unreasonable conduct, or an extreme departure from ordinary care, in a situation where a high degree of danger is apparent. As a result there is often no clear distinction at all between such conduct and "gross" negligence, and the two have tended to merge and take on the same meaning, of an aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than in degree from ordinary lack of care. It is at least clear, however, that such aggravated negligence must be more than any mere mistake resulting from inexperience, excitement, or confusion, and more than mere thoughtlessness or inadvertence, or simple inattention.

"Wantonness" constituting gross and wanton negligence within automobile guest statute indicates a realization of imminence of danger and a reckless disregard, complete indifference, and unconcern of probable consequences of the wrongful act. Mann v. Good, 202 Kan. 631, 451 P.2d 233, 236.

Negligence, estoppel by. Equitable estoppel can arise when one through culpable negligence induces another to believe certain facts to exist and the other reasonably relies and acts on such belief. Imposition of an estoppel in such setting is designed to assure that the loss is borne by the party who made the injury possible or who could have prevented it. Foley Machinery Co. v. Amland Contractors, Inc., 209 N.J.Super. 70, 506 A.2d 1263.

Negligence in law. "Actionable negligence" or "negligence in law" grows out of nonobservance of a duty prescribed by law. See also Negligence per se.

Negligence per se. A form of ordinary negligence that results from violation of a statute. Seim v. Garavalia, Minn., 306 N.W.2d 806, 810. Conduct, whether of action or omission, which may be declared and treated as negligence without any argument or proof as to the particular surrounding circumstances, either because it is in violation of a specific statute or valid municipal ordinance, or because it is so palpably opposed to the dictates of common prudence that it can be said without hesitation or doubt that no careful person would have been guilty of it. As a general rule, the violation of a public duty, enjoined by law for the protection of person or property, so constitutes. See also Strict liability.

Negligent. See Negligence.

Negligent entrustment. Negligence consisting of entrusting dangerous article to another whom lender knows, or should know, is likely to use it in a manner involving unreasonable risk of harm to others. Teter v. Clemens, 112 Ill.2d 252, 97 Ill.Dec. 467, 469, 492 N.E.2d 1340, 1342.

Negligent homicide. The criminal offense committed by one whose negligence is the direct and proximate cause of another's death. Criminal homicide constitutes negligent homicide when it is committed negligently. Model Penal Code § 210.4(1). Killing of a human being by criminal negligence. La.Rev.St. § 14:32. Although an intentional act is required, it is not necessary, unlike the crime of involuntary manslaughter, that a defendant realize the risk involved in his conduct. State v. Fisher, 141 Ariz. 227, 686 P.2d 750, 770. See also Homicide (Vehicular homicide); Negligent manslaughter.

Negligentia /négljéshiyá/. Lat. In the civil law, carelessness; inattention; the omission of proper care or forethought. The term is not exactly equivalent to our "negligence," inasmuch as it was not any negligentia, but only a high or gross degree of it, that amounted to culpa (actionable or punishable fault).

Negligentia semper habet infortunium comitem /négljéshiyásempar hýbat infortyúniyiyam komotam/. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion.

Negligently. A person acts negligently with respect to a material element of an offense when he should be aware of a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the material element exists or will result from his conduct. The risk must be of such a nature and degree that the actor's failure to perceive it, considering the nature and purpose of his conduct and the circumstances known to him, involves a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the actor's situation. Model Penal Code, § 2.02. See also Negligence.

Negligently done. The doing of an act where ordinary care required that it should not have been done at all, or that it should have been done in some other way, and where the doing of the act was not consistent with the exercise of ordinary care under the circumstances. See Negligence.

Negligent manslaughter. A statutory crime in some jurisdictions consisting of an unlawful and unjustified killing of a person by negligence but without malice. See also Negligent homicide; Vehicular homicide.

Negligent offense. One which ensues from a defective discharge of a duty, which defective could have been avoided by the exercise of that care which is usual, under similar circumstances, with prudent persons of the same class. State v. Weiner, 41 N.J. 21, 194 A.2d 467, 480.

Negligent violation of statute. One occasioned by or accompanied with negligent conduct.

Negocié /negówši/. Fr. Business; trade; management of affairs.

Negotiability /negówšiabiliši/. Legal character of being negotiable (q.v.). A term referring to a set of circumstances, described by law, under which a transferee of property can acquire rights therein that are better or greater than the rights of the transferor. See also Words of negotiability.

Negotiable /negówšiabal/. Legally capable of being transferred by endorsement or delivery. Usually said of checks and notes and sometimes of stocks and bearer bonds. See Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments; Non-negotiable.

Negotiable bond. Type of bond which may be transferred by negotiation from original holder to another.

Negotiable certificate of deposit (CD). Security issued by large commercial banks and other depository institutions as a short-term source of funds; it typically specifies a fixed interest rate and has a maturity of one year or less.

Negotiable document of title. A document of title providing by its terms that the goods are to be delivered to bearer or to the order of a named person or, where recognized in overseas trade, that runs to a named person or assigns. U.C.C. § 7-104(1).

Negotiable instruments. A written and signed unconditional promise or order to pay a specified sum of money on demand or at a definite time payable to order or bearer. U.C.C. 3-104(1). To be negotiable within the meaning of U.C.C. Article 3, an instrument must meet the requirements set out in Section 3-104: (1) it must be a writing signed by the maker or drawer; it must contain an (2) unconditional (3) promise (example: note) or order (example: check) (4) to pay a sum certain in money; (5) it must be payable on demand or at a definite time; (6) it must be payable to the bearer or to order (examples of instruments payable to order are (a) "Pay to the order of Daniel Dealer," and (b) "Pay Daniel Dealer or order"; and (7) it must not contain any other promise, order, obligation, or power given by the maker or drawer except as authorized by Article 3. See also Commercial paper; Negotiation.

Negotiated plea. The effect of plea bargaining in which the criminal defendant agrees to plead guilty to the charge or to a reduced charge in return for a recommendation from the prosecutor of a disposition less severe than possible under the particular statute. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(e).

Negotiable Order of Withdrawal. See N.O.W. account.

Negotiable words. Words and phrases which impart the character of negotiability to bills, notes, checks, etc., in which they are inserted; for instance, a direction to pay to A. "or order" or "bearer". See Negotiable instrument.

Negotiate /negówshiyéyt/. To transact business; to bargain with another respecting a transaction; to conduct communications or conferences with a view to reaching a settlement or agreement. It is that which passes between parties or their agents in the course of or incident to the making of a contract and is also conversation in arranging terms of contract.

To communicate or confer with another so as to arrive at the settlement of some matter. To meet with another so as to arrive through discussion at some kind of agreement or compromise about something. Al Herd, Inc. v. Isaac, 271 Cal.App.2d 749, 76 Cal.Rptr. 697, 699. To discuss or arrange a sale of bargain; to arrange the preliminaries of a business transaction. Also to sell or discount negotiable paper, or assign or transfer it by indorsement and delivery. To conclude by bargain, treaty, or agreement. See also Negotiation.

Negotiated plea. The effect of plea bargaining in which the criminal defendant agrees to plead guilty to the charge or to a reduced charge in return for a recommendation from the prosecutor of a disposition less severe than possible under the particular statute. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(e). See Plea bargaining.

Negotiating bank. A bank that purchases drafts drawn by the beneficiary of a negotiation credit.

Negotiation /negówshiyéyshon/. The transfer of an instrument in such form that the transferee becomes a holder. If the instrument is payable to order it is negotiated by delivery with any necessary indorsement; if payable to bearer it is negotiated by delivery. U.C.C. § 3-202(1). The act by which a check or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person. The term also describes the same process with respect to documents of title. See U.C.C. § 7-501.

Negotiation is process of submission and consideration of offers until acceptable offer is made and accepted. Gainey v. Brotherhood of Ry. and S. S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exp. & Station Emp., D.C.Pa., 275 F.Supp. 292, 300. The deliberation, discussion, or conference upon the terms of a proposed agreement; the act of settling or arranging the terms and conditions of a bargain, sale, or other business transaction.

See also Due negotiation; Negotiate.

Negotiorum gestio /negówshiyórom jés(h)chí(y)ków/. Lat. In the civil law, literally, a doing of business or businesses. A species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority.

Negotiorum gestor /negówshiyóram jéstór/. Lat. In the civil law, a transactor or manager of business; a person voluntarily constituting himself agent for another; one who, without any mandate or authority, assumes to take charge of an affair or concern for another person, in the latter's absence, but for his interest.

One who spontaneously, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, intermeddles with his property, as to do work on it, or to carry it to another place, etc. N.E.I. An abbreviation for "non est inventus," he is not found.

Neife, naif, nativus /niyf/nayif/natíywos/. In old English law, a woman who was born a villein, or a bondwoman.

Neighbor. One who lives in close proximity to another.

Neighborhood. A place near; an adjoining or surrounding district; a more immediate vicinity; vicinage. Connally v. General Const. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 46 S.Ct. 126, 129, 70 L.Ed. 322.

It is not synonymous with territory or district, but is a collective noun, with the suggestion of proximity, and refers to the units which make up its whole, as well as to the region which comprehends those units. A district or locality, especially when considered with relation to its inhabitants or their interests. In ordinary and common usage "locality" is synonymous in meaning with "neighborhood," and neither connotes large geographical areas with widely diverse interests. Lukens Steel Co. v. Perkins, 70 App.D.C. 354, 107 F.2d 627, 631.

As used with reference to a person's reputation, "neighborhood" means in general any community or society where person is well known and has established a reputation.

Ne injuste vexes /niy anjastiy veksiyz/. Lat. In old English practice, a prohibitory writ, commanding a lord not to demand from the tenant more services than were justly due by the tenure under which his ancestors held.

Neither party. An abbreviated form of docket entry, meaning that, by agreement, neither of the parties will further appear in court in that suit used as a form of judgment in some states where a case has been settled.

Ne luminibus officiatur /niy liyjumínibas sfíshiyéytör/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house.

Neminem contradicente /némanem kontródó sóntít/. Lat. No one dissenting; no one voting in the negative. A phrase used to indicate the unanimous consent of a court or legislative body to a judgment, resolution, vote, or motion. Commonly abbreviated "nem. con."

Neminem ludit qui jure suo utitur /némanem líydat kwáy júry suíykwóów yúwítatór/. He who stands on his own rights injures no one.
Neminem oportet esse sapien tiorem legibus /neminem aportat esiy sēpīyēnshiyōrōm liyjābas/. No man ought to be wiser than the laws.

Nemo /niymow/. Lat. No one; no man. The initial Nemo agit in seipsum /niymow eyjat an siyipsam/. No man acts against himself. A man cannot be a judge and a party in his own cause.

Nemo aliena rei, sine satisdatione, defensor idoneus intelligitur /niymow ēliyihnēn riyay, sāniy sētas- dēyshiyōwniy, defēnsōr ādãoniyēs īntalijator/. No man is considered a competent defender of another’s property, without security. A rule of the Roman law, applied in part in admiralty cases.

Nemo alieno nomine lege agere potest /niymow ēliyihnōmō niyāniy āçjariy pōwtast/. No one can sue in the name of another.

Nemo aliquam partem recte intelligere potest, ante- quam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit /niymow ēlakwām tārtam rēktī īntalijāriy pōwtast, āntakkaw tōwōtam ītōrām āpariyljarat/. No one can properly understand any part of a thing till he has read through the whole again and again.

Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiendus est /niymow ēlāsgānē s(y)ūwām tārdst(y)ūwdonām ǎdiyēndēs ēst/. No one alleging his own turpitude is to be heard as a witness. This is not a rule of evidence, but applies to a party seeking to enforce a right founded on an illegal consideration.

Nemo bis punitur pro eodem delicto /niymow bīs pyūwnstār prōw iyōwdnām dalkitow/. No man is punished twice for the same offense.

Nemo cogitationis penam patitur /niymow kōjstāy- shiyōwnās plīnam pētāst/. No one suffers punishment on account of his thoughts.

Nemo cogitur rem suam vendere, etiam justo pretio /niymow kōwijatōr rēm s(y)ūwām vēndariy, īysh(y)am jāstow prēsh(y)ow/. No man is compelled to sell his own property, even for a just price.

Nemo contra factum suam venire potest /niymow kōntrā fēktām s(y)ūwām vanāyriy pōwtast/. No man can contravene or contradict his own deed. The principle of estoppel by deed.

Nemo damnnum facit, nisi qui id fecit quod facere jus non habet /niymow dēmnow fēysat, nāsąy sāyā kwāy id fīysat kwōd fēsəriy jās nōn hēybat/. No one is considered as doing damage, unless he who is doing what he has no right to do.

Nemo dare potest quod non habet /niymow dēriy pōwdst kwōd nōn hēybat/. No man can give that which he has not.

Nemo dat qui non habet /niymow dēt kwāy nōn hēybat/. He who hath not cannot give.

Nemo debet aliena factura locupletari /niymow dēbāt ēliyihnja jakt(y)ūrā lōk(y)aplaṭēray/. No one ought to gain by another’s loss.

Nemo debet bis puniri pro uno delicto /niymow dēbāt bīs pyanāyray prōw iyōwūm dalkitow/. No man ought to be punished twice for one offense. No man shall be placed in peril of legal penalties more than once upon the same accusation.

Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa /niymow dēbāt vēksēray prōw iyēydam kōzā/. No one should be twice harassed for the same cause.

Nemo debet bis vexari [si constet curiae quod sit] pro una et eadem causa /niymow dēbāt vēksēray (sāy kōnstāt kyūrīyiy kwōd sīt) prōw iyōwūnā ēd iyēydam kōzā/. No man ought to be twice troubled or harassed if it appear to the court that it is for one and the same cause. No man can be sued a second time for the same cause of action, if once judgment has been rendered. No man can be held to bail a second time at the suit of the same plaintiff for the same cause of action.

Nemo debet esse judex in propria causa /niymow dēbāt ēsiy jūwdeks in prolīypra kōzā/. No man ought to be a judge in his own cause. A maxim derived from the civil law.

Nemo debet immiscere se rei ad se nihil pertinenti /niymow dēbāt amīsāriy sīy riyay ēd siy nā(h)al pārtēnentāy/. No one should intermeddle with a thing that in no respect concerns him.

Nemo debet in communione invitus teneri /niymow dēbāt in komīyūniyōwniy anvāytaς tanīray/. No one should be retained in a partnership against his will.

Nemo debet locupletari aliena factura /niymow dēbāt lōk(y)aplaṭēray ēliyihnja jakt(y)ūrā/. No one ought to be enriched by another’s loss.

Nemo debet locupletari ex alterius incommodo /niymow dēbāt lōk(y)aplaṭēray ēks ɔltɑrɑyas īnkōmawdow/. No one ought to be made rich out of another’s loss.

Nemo debet rem suam sine facto aut defectu suo amittere /niymow dēbāt rēm s(y)ūwām sānnyi fēktow ŏt dafēkt(y)uw smiτtary/. No man ought to lose his property without his own act or default.

Nemo de domo sua extraheri potest /niymow dīy dōm-mow s(y)ūwā ektreθhāy pōwtast/. No man can be dragged out of his own house. In other words, every man’s house is his castle.

Nemo duabus utatur officiis /niymow d(y)uwōwbas yuwṭyētar əfi(s)hiyēs/. No one should hold two offices, i.e., at the same time.

Nemo ejusdem tenementi simul potest esse heres et dominus /niymow ajasdam tēnamentay sāymal pōwtast ēsiy hiriyz ēt dōmāςas/. No one can at the same time be the heir and the owner of the same tenement.
Nemo enim aliquam partem recte intelligere possit antequam totum iterum atque iterum perlegerit /nymphum lympham alskwam partam rekiti intaliari ponst antakwam totam iteram etkwiy itaram purliyjat. No one is able rightly to understand one part before he has again and again read through the whole.

Nemo est hæres viventis /nymwom est sibiy vaventas. No one is the heir of a living person. No one can be heir during the life of his ancestor. No person can be the actual complete heir of another until the ancestor is previously dead.

Nemo est supra leges /nymwom est syuwpraw liyjiyjy. No one is above the law.

Nemo ex alterius facto praegravari debet /nymwom eks oltaryas fkotw prygravery debat. No man ought to be burdened in consequence of another's whole.

Nemo ex consilio obligatur /nymwom eks kansliyow oblgayyta. No man is bound in consequence of his advice. Mere advice will not create the obligation of a mandate.

Nemo ex proprio dolo suo proprio relevetur, aut auxilium capiat /nymwom eks dowlow syuwyow prwprwyow relaviyta, ot ogyliyow kwakpayy. Let no one be relieved or gain an advantage by his own fraud. A civil law maxim.

Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem /nymwom eks prwprwyow dowlow kanskwataw ekshiyounam. No one maintains an action arising out of his own wrong.

Nemo ex suolo delicto meliorem suam conditionem facere potest /nymwom eks syuwyow dalikprom miiylliyrabor syuwam kandishiyownam fsaryiy powtast. No one can make his condition better by his own misdeed.

Nemo inauditus condemnari debet si non sit contumax /nymwom inodatas kondemnyer debat say nonsit konywwmak/. No man ought to be condemned without being heard unless he be contumacious.

Nemo in propria causa testis esse debet /nymwom in prwprwyow koza tetsa esiy debat. No one ought to be a witness in his own cause.

Nemo jus sibi dicere potest /nymwom jas syiyow disariy powtast. No one can declare the law for himself. No one can owe to himself.

Nemo militans deo implicetur secularibus negotiis /nymwom milatan diow implaityitar sekyalerebas nagowsiyas. No man who is warring for [in the service of] God should be involved in secular matters. A principle of the old law that men of religion were not bound to go in person with the king to war.

Nemo nascitur artifex /nymwom nesstar artafeks. No one is born an artificer.

Nemo patriam in qua natus est exuere, nec ligeantian debitum ejurare possit /nymwom patiriymam kwew neytas est agsyuwyari, nek liyyanashiyi debatam fyjareryi ponst. No man can renounce the country in which he was born, nor abjure the obligation of his allegiance.

Nemo plus commerci hæresi suo relinquit quam ipse habuit /nymwom plas komawday hadayday syuuyow reljkwat kwem ipisy hebywuat. No one leaves a greater benefit to his heir than he had himself.

Nemo plus juris ad alium transferre potest quam ipse habet /nymwom plas juras ed eryiam transfary powtast kwem ipisy hebybat. No one can transfer more right to another than he has himself.

Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patriam /nymwom powtast kontra rakordam vherofakeryy par pateriyam. No one can verify by the country against a record. The issue upon matter of record cannot be to the jury. A maxim of old practice.

Nemo potest esse dominus et hæres /nymwom powtast esiy domanas es etihrjy. No man can be both owner and heir.

Nemo potest esse simul actor et judex /nymwom powtast esiy ekkar et juywdeks. No one can be at once suitor and judge.

Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus /nymwom powtast esiy tenenz et domanas. No man can be both tenant and lord [of the same tenement].

Nemo potest exuere patriam /nymwom powtast agsyuwyariy pateriyam. No man can renounce his own country.

Nemo potest facere per alium quod per se non potest /nymwom powtast fasyriy par eryiam kwow par sipy non powtast. No one can do that by another which he cannot do of himself. A rule said to hold in original grants, but not in descents; as where an office descended to a woman, in which case, though she could not exercise the office in person, she might by deputy.

Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest facere per directum /nymwom powdast fasyriy par ablaykwam kwow non powdast fasyriy par draykwam. No man can do that indirectly which he cannot do directly.

Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam /nymwom powtast myuwteryi kanslilyyam syuyow in oltaryas snjuriyam. No man can change his purpose to another's injury.

Nemo potest nisi quod de jure potest /nymwom powtast fasyriy am juriy powtast. No one is able to do a thing, unless he can do it lawfully.

Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transferre quam ipse habet /nymwom powtast plas juras ed eryiam transfary kwem ipisy hebybat. No one can transfer a greater right to another than he himself has.

Nemo potest sibi debere /nymwom powtast sibay dabiriya. No one can owe to himself.

Nemo præsens nisi intelligat /nymwom priyans nasyay antelagy. One is not present unless he understands.
Nemo praesumitur alienam posteritatem sua praetulisse /niymow prazy(ü)wmanstar ælyfynam pastœrætætæm s(y)üywy pyralysy/. No man is presumed to have preferred another's posterity to his own.

Nemo praesumitur donare /niymow prazy(ü)wmanstar doneriy/. No one is presumed to give.

Nemo praesumitur esse immemor suae aetemae salutis, et maxime in articulo mortis /niymow prazy(ü)wmanstar ælymæmor s(y)üywy æyrmæ s(y)üy(w)atæs, æt mæksæmiæ in artikylæow mortæs/. No one is presumed to be forgetful of his own eternal welfare, and particularly at the point of death.

Nemo praesumitur ludere in extremis /niymow prazy(ü)wmanstar l(y)uwdariæ in skæstriymanæs/. No one is presumed to trifle at the point of death.

Nemo praesumitur malus /niymow prazy(ü)wmanstar mælas/. No one is presumed to be bad.

Nemo prohibetur plurres negociationes sive artes exercere /niymow pröw(h)ibylyer pl(y)üyriæ nagow shiy(y)ewshiy(y)ewnæyζ s(y)üyviæ ætriyæ égsærsæry/. No one is prohibited from following several kinds of business or several arts. The common law doth not prohibit any person from using several arts or mysteries at his pleasure.

Nemo prohibetur pluribus defensionibus uti /niymow pröw(h)ibylyer pl(y)üyriez dabæfæniyewnæbas ywutæy/. No one is prohibited from making use of several defenses.

Nemo prudens punit ut praeterita revocentur, sed ut futura præveniantur /niymow pröwduendæ pywunst æt prætæræta rywæsæntær, sëd æt f(y)tæyriæ prævælniæyæntær/. No wise man punishes in order that past things may be recalled, but that future wrongs may be prevented.

Nemo punitur pro alieno delicto /niymow pywunstar pröw ælyylyynæm daliktoæ/. No one is punished for another's wrong.

Nemo punitur sine injuria, facto, seu defalata /niymow pywunstar sámniæ ænjüriæ, fæktow, súwæ defaltoæ/. No one is punished unless for some wrong, act, or default.

Nemo qui condemnare potest, absolvere non potest /niymow kwæy kõndæmmæry pówstæ, sêzowæry sô nôw pówstæ/. No one may condemn but every one is bound to know that which he gives information about.

Nemo sibi esse judex vel suis jus dicere debet /niymow sibæy æsly jüwdæks wél s(y)yewwæ jës disiæry débæst/. No man ought to be his own judge, or to administer justice in cases where his relations are concerned.

Nemo sine actione experitur, et hoc non sine breve sive libello conventionali /niymow sâyniæ æksheiy(y)ewnæy æksêpærætæær, æt hök nô sâyniæ brîvriæ sâyniæ labèlow konvënsænæylæy/. No one goes to law without an action, and no one can bring an action without a writ or bill.

Nemo tenetur ad impossibile /niymow tanîyær æd imposibæly/. No one is bound to an impossibility.
Net estate. Under estate tax statute the term means
Net earnings. Earnings. See
Net cost. The actual cost of an item. Net cost is arrived at by deducting any income or financial gain from the total cost. As used in insurance, it represents the total premiums paid less the dividends received and cash surrender value.
Net earnings. See Earnings.
Net estate. Under estate tax statute the term means
Net operating income. Income generated from the operations of a business reduced by operating expenses.
Expenses not considered operating expenses include: interest, depreciation, and income taxes.

Net operating loss. The excess of operating expenses over revenues. Items such as interest expenses and dividends are not considered ordinary business expenses, and, therefore are excluded in calculating the net operating loss. I.R.C. § 172(c).

Net position. In securities and commodity trading, the difference between contracts long and contracts short held by a trader.

Net premium. In life insurance, this term is used to designate that portion of the premium which is intended to meet the cost of the insurance, both current and future. Its amount is calculated upon the basis of the mortality tables and upon the assumption that the company will receive a certain rate of interest upon all its assets; it does not include the entire premium paid by the assured, but does include a certain sum for expenses.

Net present value (NPV). The present value of the stream of net cash flows resulting from a project, discounted at the firm’s cost of capital, minus the project’s net investment. It is used to evaluate, rank, and select from among various investment projects.

Net price. The lowest price, after deducting all deductions, discounts, etc.

Net profit margin. A percent arrived at by dividing income after cost of goods sold, operating expenses and taxes by total revenues.

Net profits. Profits after deduction of all expenses; may be classified as net before or after taxes. Deducting the cost of goods sold from sales gives the gross profit. Deducting the operating expenses (overhead) from gross profit gives the operating profit. Deducting income taxes from operating profits gives the net profit. See also Net income.

Net rent. Basic rent charge plus additional monthly charges for taxes, utilities and maintenance. See also Net lease.

Net return. See Net income; Net profits.

Net revenues. See Net income; Net profits.

Net sale contract. One in which the principal agrees to accept a specified net price for property to be sold, and the agent’s compensation for negotiating a sale is to be any amount received in excess of the specified figure. Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co., 259 Cal.App.2d 619, 66 Cal.Rptr. 747, 751, 752. See also Net listing.

Net sales. Gross sales minus returns, allowances, rebates, and discounts.

Net settlement. The accounting or bookkeeping balance that results when banks exchange items drawn on each other.

Premium which, if exacted from a group of policyholders and immediately invested at the assumed rate of interest, will yield in the aggregate a sum exactly sufficient to pay all death claims as they mature providing the mortality rate is in accord with the table used. Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Net tonnage. The cubic contents of the interior of a vessel, when the spaces occupied by the crew and by propelling machinery are deducted, numbered in tons. Kiessig v. San Diego County, 51 Cal.App.2d 47, 124 P.2d 163, 165.

Net weight. The weight of an article or collection of articles, after deducting from the gross weight the weight of the boxes, coverings, casks, etc., containing the same. The weight of an animal dressed for sale, after rejecting hide, offal, etc.

The total assets of a person or business less the total liabilities (amounts due to creditors). In the case of a corporation net worth includes both capital stock and surplus; in the case of a partnership or single proprietorship it is the original investment plus accumulated and reinvested profits.

Net worth of a corporation may be determined by subtracting liabilities from assets or by adding the capital account and surplus account as reflected in the general ledger of a corporation. Eastern Capital Corp. v. Freeman, 10 Misc.2d 412, 168 N.Y.S.2d 834, 838. See also Book (Book value); Net asset value.

Net worth method. An approach used by the Internal Revenue Service to reconstruct the income of a taxpayer who fails to maintain adequate records. Under this approach, the gross income for the year is the increase in net worth of the taxpayer (i.e., assets in excess of liabilities) with appropriate adjustment for nontaxable receipts and nondeductible expenditures. The net worth method often is used when tax fraud is suspected.

Net yield. The rate of return on an investment after deducting all costs, losses and charges for management.

Ne unques accouple /niyâŋkwiyi\ akápal/. L. Fr. Never married. More fully, ne unques accouple en loïall matrimonie, never joined in lawful marriage. The name of a plea in the action of dower unde nihil habet, by which the tenant denied that the doweress was ever lawfully married to the decedent.

Ne unques executor /niyąŋkwiyż aŋzékyətər/. L. Fr. Never executor. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that he is an executor, as he is alleged to be; or that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be.

Ne unques seise que dower /niyąŋkwiyż siżyzy kə dəwər/. L. Fr. (Never seised of a dowerable estate.) In pleading, the general issue in the action of dower unde nihil habet, by which the tenant denies that the demandant's husband was ever seised of an estate of which dower might be had.

Ne unques son receiver /niyąŋkwiyż sən raʃiyər/. L. Fr. In old pleading, the name of a plea in an action of account-rendor, by which the defendant denies that he ever was receiver of the plaintiff.

Neurasthenia /njuərstənˈiə/ /ˈnjuərstrənɪə/. Neurosis manifested chiefly by exhaustion, mental and physical fatigue, irritability and poorly localized symptoms without any underlying physical disorder.

Neurology. Branch of medicine dealing with nervous system and its disorders.

Neutral. Indifferent; unbiased; impartial; not engaged on either side; not taking an active part with either of the contending sides. In an international war, the principal hostile powers are called "belligerents;" those actively co-operating with and assisting them, their "allies;" and those taking no part whatever, " neutrals."

Neutrality. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war. U. S. v. The Three Friends, 166 U.S. 1, 17 S.Ct. 495, 41 L.Ed. 897.

Neutral laws. Acts of Congress which forbid the fitting out and equipping of armed vessels, the enlisting of troops, or the engaging in other specified activities; for the aid of either of two belligerent powers with which the United States is at peace. See 22 U.S.C.A. § 441 et seq.

Neutralty proclamation. A proclamation by the President of the United States, issued on the outbreak of a war between two powers with both of which the United States is at peace, announcing the neutrality of the United States and warning all citizens to refrain from any breach of the neutrality laws.

Neutralization. Erasure or cancellation of unexpected harmful testimony by showing either by cross-examination or other witnesses that the witness has made a statement in conflict with his testimony. State v. Gallicchio, 44 N.J. 540, 210 A.2d 409, 412. See also Impeachment.

Neutral principles doctrine. Doctrine applied in the resolution of church property disputes which holds that court must refrain from resolving dispute on basis of religious doctrine and practice and must rely exclusively on objective, well-established concepts of trust and property law familiar to lawyers and judges; documents, including religious documents, pertinent to dispute must be scrutinized in purely secular terms. Presbytery of Elijah Parish Lovejoy v. Jaeggi, Mo., 682 S.W.2d 465, 473.

Neutral property. Property which belongs to citizens of neutral powers, and is used, treated, and accompanied by proper insignia as such.

Ne varietur /niyərviəˈtər/. Lat. It must not be altered. A phrase sometimes written by a notary upon a bill or note, for the purpose of establishing its identity, which, however, does not affect its negotiability.

Never indebted, plea of. In common law pleading, a species of traverse which occurs in actions of debt on simple contract, and is resorted to when the defendant means to deny in point of fact the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would by law be implied.

New. As an element in numerous compound terms and phrases of the law, this word may denote novelty, or the condition of being previously unknown or of recent or fresh origin, but ordinarily it is a purely relative term and is employed in contrasting the date, origin, or characteristic of one thing with the corresponding attributes of another thing of the same kind or class.

In order to be "new", as that word is used in the patent laws, the achievement must be either one that produces an unusual or improved or advanced result, which was unknown to the same prior art at the time of the claimed invention; or the achievement must be one that produces an old result in an unusual and substantially more efficient, or more economical way.

New acquisition. An estate derived from any source other than descent, devise, or gift from father or mother or any relative in the paternal or maternal line. Webb v. Caldwell, 198 Ark. 331, 128 S.W.2d 691, 694.

New and useful. The phrase used in the patent laws to describe the two qualities of an invention or discovery which are essential to make it patentable, viz., novelty, or the condition of having been previously unknown, and practical utility. To accomplish a new and useful result it is not necessary that result before unknown should be brought about, but it is sufficient if an old result is accomplished in a new and more effective way. Hirsch v. Wisconsin-Minnesota Gas & Electric Household Appliances Co., D.C.Minn., 18 F.2d 347, 354. An invention achieves a new result, where a function which had been performed by other means was performed to an efficient degree by an association of means never before combined, though all of them were old, and some of the changes seemed to be only in degree.

New assets. In the law governing the administration of estates, this term denotes assets coming into the hands of an executor or administrator after the expiration of the time when, by statute, claims against the estate are barred so far as regards recourse against the assets with which he was originally charged.
New assignment. Under common law practice, where the declaration in an action is ambiguous, and the defendant pleads facts which are literally an answer to it, but not to the real claim set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff’s course is to reply by way of new assignment; i.e., allege that he brought his action not for the cause supposed by the defendant, but for some other cause to which the plea has no application.

New cause of action. With reference to the amendment of pleadings, this term may refer to a new state of facts out of which liability is claimed to arise, or it may refer to parties who are alleged to be entitled under the same state of facts, or it may embrace both features. Amended and supplemental pleadings are permitted under Fed.R.Civil P. 15.

New for old. In making an adjustment of a partial loss under a policy of marine insurance, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance.

New issue. A security being offered to the public for the first time. The distribution of new issues is usually subject to SEC rules. New issues may be initial public offerings by previously private companies or additional securities offered by public companies.

Newly discovered evidence. Evidence of a new and material fact, or new evidence in relation to a fact in issue, discovered by a party to a cause after the rendition of a verdict or judgment therein. Testimony discovered after trial, not discoverable before trial by exercise of due diligence. Kash N’Karry Wholesale Supermarkets, Inc. v. Garcia, Fla.App., 221 So.2d 786, 788.

Newly discovered evidence such as will support motion for new trial or to reopen for amended findings refers to evidence of facts existing at the time of trial of which the aggrieved party was excusably ignorant. Chromalloy Am. Corp. v. Alloy Surfaces Co., D.C.Del., 55 F.R.D. 406, 409. To constitute newly discovered evidence for which new trial may be granted, evidence must pertain to facts in existence at time of trial, and not to facts that have occurred subsequently. U. S. v. DePugh, D.C.Mo., 266 F.Supp. 417, 434.

On motion, the court may relieve a party from a judgment or order because of newly discovered evidence which by due diligence could not have been discovered in time to move for a new trial. Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b).

Motions for new trial or relief from judgment or order based on newly discovered evidence must generally be made within a specified time period; see e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 59, 60; Fed.R.Crim.P. 33.

New matter. In pleading, matters of fact not previously alleged by either party in the pleadings, involving generally, new issues with new facts to be proved. Amended and supplemental pleadings are permitted under Fed.R.Civil P. 15 to add new matter.

In patent law, "new matter" is matter involving a departure from or in addition to the original disclosure. Stearn v. Superior Distributing Company, C.A.Mich., 674 F.2d 539, 544. Such matter may not be introduced into a patent application by way of amendment or continuation application. 35 U.S.C.A. § 132.

New promise. See Promise.

Newsman’s privilege. The alleged constitutional right (freedom of speech and press) of a newsman to refuse to disclose the sources of his information. See Shield laws.

Newspaper. A publication, usually in sheet form, intended for general circulation, and published regularly at short intervals, containing information and editorials on current events and news of general interest.

Official newspaper. One designated by a state or municipal legislative body, or agents empowered by them, in which the public acts, resolves, advertisements, and notices are required to be published. See also Legal newspaper.

New trial. See Motion for new trial; Plain error rule; Trial; Venire facias de novo.

New York interest. System of computing interest by using the exact number of days in a month and not 30 days uniformly.

New York Stock Exchange. An unincorporated association of member firms which handle the purchase and sale of securities for themselves and customers. It is the oldest and largest stock exchange in the country.

New York Times v. Sullivan. Landmark case in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that the constitutional guarantee of a free press and free speech require a public official who sues for defamation to prove malice on the part of the defendant in the publication of the matter. Malice in this context is the publishing of the material knowing it to be false or with a reckless disregard of its falsity. 376 U.S. 254, 279–280, 84 S.Ct. 710–726, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel.

Next /nekst/ Lat. In Roman law, bound; bound persons. A term applied to such insolvent debtors as were delivered up to their creditors, by whom they might be held in bondage until their debts were discharged.

Next. Nearest; closest; immediately following.

Next devisee /nëkst davâzjût=dëvâzjût/. Person to whom remainder is given by will.

Next eventual estate. Estate taking effect upon happening of the event terminating accumulation. In re Shupack’s Estate, 158 Misc. 873, 287 N.Y.S. 184, 196.

Next friend. One acting for benefit of infant, or other person not sui juris (person unable to look after his or her own interests or manage his or her own lawsuit), without being regularly appointed guardian. In re Boulware’s Will, 144 Misc. 235, 258 N.Y.S. 522. A "next friend" is not a party to an action, but is an officer of the court, especially appearing to look after the interests of the minor or the disabled person whom he represents.
Youngblood v. Taylor, Fal., 89 So.2d 503, 505. "Next friend" is not substantially different in many jurisdictions from "guardian ad litem"; their functions being generally the same. von Bulow by Auersperg v. von Bulow, D.C.N.Y., 634 F.Supp. 1284, 1293. See also Guardian; Parens patriae.

Next-in, first out (NIFO). An inventory valuation method whereby the cost of goods sold is based on the replacement cost, rather than the actual cost of the goods. This method is not a generally accepted accounting principle; therefore it is not commonly used. See Last-in, first-out (LIFO); First-in, first-out (FIFO).

Next of kin. In the law of descent and distribution, this term denotes the persons nearest of kindred to the decedent, that is, those who are most nearly related by blood; but it is sometimes construed to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions (i.e. statutory distributees). See e.g. N.Y. Estates, Powers & Trusts § 2-1.1.

The term "next of kin" is used with two meanings; (1) nearest blood relations according to law of consanguinity and (2) those entitled to take under statutory distribution of intestate's estates, and term is not necessarily confined to relatives by blood, but may include a relation existing by reason of marriage, and may well embrace persons, who in natural sense of word, and in contemplation of Roman law, bear no relation of kinship at all. In re Kyle's Autopsy, Okl., 309 P.2d 1070, 1073.

Next presentation. In the law of adovsons, the right of next presentation is the right to present to the first vacancy of a benefice.

Nexum /néksm/. Lat. In Roman law, in ancient times the nexum seems to have been a species of formal contract, involving a loan of money, and attended with pecuniary consequences, solemnized with the "copper and balance." Later, it appears to have been used as a general term for any contract struck with those ceremonies, and hence to have included the special form of conveyance called "mancipatio." In a general sense it means the obligation or bond between contracting parties.

In Roman law, this word expressed the tie or obligation involved in the old conveyance by mancipatio; and came latterly to be used interchangeably with (but less frequently than) the word "obligatio" itself.

Nexus. A multistate corporation's taxable income can be apportioned to a specific state only if the entity has established a sufficient presence, or nexus, with that state. State law, which often follows the Uniform Division of Income for Tax Purposes Act (UDITPA), specifies various activities that lead to such nexus in various states. See also UDITPA.

NGRI. Not guilty by reason of insanity. See Insanity; M'Naghten Rule.

Nicholls /nɪkɔlz/. In old English practice, debts due to the exchequer which the sheriff could not levy, and as to which he returned nil. These sums were transcribed once a year by the clerk of the nichills, and sent to the treasurer's remembrancer's office, whence process was issued to recover the "nichill" debts. Both of these offices were abolished in 1833.

Nickname. A short name; one nicked or cut off for the sake of brevity, without conveying an idea of opprobrium, and frequently evincing the strongest affection or the most perfect familiarity.

Niece. The daughter of one's brother or sister, or of one's brother-in-law or sister-in-law.

Niefe /nɪəf/. In old English law, a woman born in vassalage; a bondwoman.

Nient /nɪə(ɛ)nt/. L. Fr. Nothing; not.

Nient comprise /nɪə(ɛ)nt kæmprɪz/. Not comprised; not included. An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded.

Nient culpable /nɪə(ɛ)nt kɜːpəbl/. Not guilty. The name in French law of the general issue in tort or in a criminal action.

Nient dedire /nɪə(ɛ)nt dɛdɪr/. To say nothing; to deny nothing; to suffer judgment by default.

Nient le fait /nɪə(ɛ)nt laʃɛ(t)/. In pleading, not the deed; not his deed. The same as the plea of non est factum.

Nient seisi /nɪə(ɛ)nt sɪzi/. In old pleading, not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity.

NIFO. See Next-in, first out (NIFO). Compare Last-in, first-out (LIFO), and First-in, first-out (FIFO).

Nighttime. Generally, in absence of statutory provision to the contrary, "nighttime," within definition of burglary, is, as was held at common law, that period between sunset and sunrise during which there is not enough daylight to discern a man's face. State v. Dougherty, 186 Kan. 820, 352 P.2d 1031, 1032. The rule is often followed that "nighttime" begins thirty minutes after sunset and ends thirty minutes before sunrise, Model Penal Code, § 221.02; or, that period of time from one hour after sunset to one hour before sunrise, Model v. Lavery, 255 Mass. 327, 333-334, 151 N.E. 466, 468.

The common-law definition is still adhered to in some states (e.g. Calif. Penal Code § 7: "The period between sunset and sunrise.") but in others "night" has been defined by statute (see e.g. Model Penal Code definition above).

Night walkers. In England, described in the statute 5 Edw. III, c. 14, as persons who sleep by day and walk by night. Persons who prowl about at night, and are of a suspicious appearance and behavior. Persons whose habit is to be abroad at night for the purpose of commit-ing some crime or nuisance or mischief or disturbing the peace; not now generally subject to the criminal laws except in respect to misdemeanors actually committed, or in the character of vagrants or suspicious persons. In a narrower or more popular sense, a night walker is a prostitute who walks the streets at night for the purpose of soliciting men for lewd purposes.

Nihil /nay(h)al/. Lat. Nothing. Often contracted to "nihil est" or "nihil habeat," according to circumstances.

Nihil aliud potest rex quem de jure potest /nay(h)al akliyad powtast rek swam kwod dij juriy powtast/. The king can do nothing except what he can by law do.

Nihil capiat per breve /nay(h)al kepiviy pdr briyiy/. In practice, that he take nothing by his writ. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nil nihil capiat per billam.

Nihil consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus /nay(h)al konseenshuway tam kontreriyam ey swam ey atkwiwi mytays/. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear.

Nihil dat qui non habet /nay(h)al dwt kwod non heyt/. He gives nothing who has nothing.

Nihil de re accrescit ei qui nihil in re quando jus accresceret habet /nay(h)al dij riy akresist iay kway nay(h)al in riy kwondos jis akresist heyt/. Nothing of a matter accrues to him who, when the right accrues, has nothing in that matter.

Nihil dicit /nay(h)al disit/"day"/. He says nothing. The name of the judgment which may be taken as of course against a defendant who omits to plead or answer the plaintiff's declaration or complaint within the time limited. In some jurisdictions it is otherwise known as judgment "for want of a plea."

Judgment taken against party who withdraws his answer is judgment nihil dicit, which amounts to confession of cause of action stated, and carries with it, more strongly than judgment by default, admission of justice of plaintiff's case. See also Nil dicit judgment.

Nihil dictum quod non dictum prius /nay(h)al diktam kwod non diktam pryays/. Nothing is said which was not said before. Said of a case where former arguments were repeated.

Nihil est /nay(h)al ets/. There is nothing. A form of return made by a sheriff when he has been unable to serve the writ.

Nihil est enim liberali quod non idem justum /nay(h)al ey flam libaryily kwod non aydam jastam/. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just.

Nihil est magis ratione consentaneum quam eodem modo quoque dissolvare quo confitatum est /nay(h)al ey ets myyas reshyiyomwana konsteneyam kwam liyodam mowdow kwodkwijy dayolariy kwow konlidtaym ets/. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that a thing should be dissolved or discharged in the same way in which it was created.

Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat /nay(h)al feysat eyhar nomanas kdm ddy korporiy konstet/. An error as to a name is nothing when there is certainty as to the person.

Nihil habet /nay(h)al heyb/. He has nothing. The name of a return made by a sheriff to a scire facias or other writ which he has been unable to serve on the defendant.

Nihil habet forum ex scena /nay(h)al heyb foram ek syyna/. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

Nihil infra regnum subditos magis conservat in tranquilitate et concordia quam debita legum administration /nay(h)al infra ragnam sibdatows myyas konsarvat in tregkwilsteytly ek kankord(i)ly swam dbeta liggam administrvyay/ow/. Nothing preserves tranquility and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws.

Nihil iniquius quam quæquam intimor nullius antédntir. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far.

Nihil in lege intolerabilius est [quam] eandem rem diverso jure consideri /nay(h)al liiyiy intolobilyus ey swam iyandyam rm davirwos juriy sanfray/. Nothing is more intolerable in law than that the same matter, thing, or case should be subject to different views of law. Applied to the difference of opinion entertained by different courts, as to the law of a particular case.

Nihilist /nay(h)al last/nay/. One advocating doctrine of nihilism. One devoted to the destruction of the present political, religious, and social institutions.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est /nay(h)al myyas jastam ey swam kwod neasseryam ets/. Nothing is more just than that which is necessary.

Nihil nequum est præsumendum /nay(h)al nekwam ets priyz(y)omendam/. Nothing wicked is to be presumed.

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum /nay(h)al pefektam ey dam elakwid rest ajend/. Nothing is perfect while anything remains to be done.

Nihil peti potest ante id tempus quo per rerum naturam persolvit possit /nay(h)al petay powtast antiy id tempas kwod pdr rimat natyram persolvay póst/.
Nothing can be demanded before the time when, by the nature of things, it can be paid.

Nihil possimus contra veritatem /nây(h)al pósâmas kôntâ vêhrâyêtôm/. We can do nothing against truth.

Nihil prescribitur nisi quod possidetur /nây(h)al prâskribyâtar nâysay kwôd pôsôdïyatâr/. There is no prescription for which it is not possessed.

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum /nây(h)al kwôd êst kôntâ râshiyôwnam êst lîsâtâm/. Nothing that is against reason is lawful.

Nihil quod est invenieni consensui tam contrarium est vis atque metus /nây(h)al kwôd êst râshiyôwnam êst kôntâ kàntrenûyam êst kwâm vis âtkwiy mîytâs/. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear.

Nihil debet /nil dêtât/. He owes nothing. The form of the general issue in all actions of debt on simple contract.

Nihil dicit judgment. Judgment entered against defendant, in proceeding in which he is in court but has not filed an answer, is a "nihil dicit judgment"; all error of pleading being waived, court examines petition only to determine if it attempts to state cause of action within court's jurisdiction. Gonzalez v. Regalado, Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 689, 691. See also Nihil dicit.

Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore vel persona constat /nil fêysât âhôr nômânas kâm di kópôryô vêl pârsôwôns kônsôât/. A mistake in the name does not matter when the body or person is manifest.

Nihil habuit in tenementis /nil hêbyôwât an têmâmênts/. He had nothing [no interest] in the tenements. A plea in debt on a lease indented, by which the defendant sets up that the person claiming to be landlord had no title or interest.

Nihil ligatum /nil lîgâtôm/. Nothing bound; that is, no obligation has been incurred.

Nihil sine prudenti facit ratione vetustas /nil sâniy prûwdêntay fêysôt râshiyôwniy vassâtsâs/. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason.

Nihil temere novandum /nil têmrô niôvândam/. Nothing should be rashly changed.

Nimia certitudine ipsam destruit /nîmîya sêrsât(y)ûwdôw sêrsât(y)ûwdîaman îpsam dstrûswat/. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur /nîmîya sô(b)tibaitsî in jûriy rîprébêyâtâr/. Too much subtlety in law is discountenanced.

Ninium altercando veritas amittitur /nîmiyam ôltar- kânôôndôô vêhrôôs amittatâr/. By too much altercation truth is lost.

Nimmer /nîmâr/. A thief; a pilferer.

Nineteenth Amendment. Known as the women's suffrage amendment to the U.S. Const., it provides that the right of citizens of the U.S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the U.S. or by any state on account of sex. The 19th Amendment was ratified in 1920. See also Twenty-Sixth Amendment.

Ninety (90) day letter. Statutory notice sent by I.R.S. to taxpayer of tax deficiency. During the 90 day period after the mailing of such notice the taxpayer may either pay the tax and seek a refund or not pay the tax and challenge such alleged deficiency on petition to the Tax Court. I.R.C. §§ 6212, 6213. Notice of Commissioner's determination of tax liability must, absent jeopardy, precede assessment. Bromberg v. Inglis, C.A.Guam, 300 F.2d 859, 861. See also Thirty-day letter.

Ninth Amendment. This amendment to the U.S. Const. provides that the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Nisi /naysay/. Lat. Unless. The word is often affixed, as a kind of elliptical expression, to the words "rule," "order," "decree," "judgment," or "confirmation," to indicate that the adjudication spoken of is one which is to stand as valid and operative unless the party affected by it shall appear and show cause against it, or take some other appropriate step to avoid it or procure its revocation. Thus a "decree nisi" is one which will definitely conclude the defendant's rights unless, within the prescribed time, he shows cause to set it aside or successfully appeals. The word, in this sense, is opposed to "absolute." And when a rule nisi is finally confirmed, for the defendant's failure to show cause against it, it is said to be "made absolute." See also Show cause order.

Nisi decree. An interim decree or order which will ripen into a final decree unless something changes, or some event takes place. Conditional device decree. See also Nisi.

Nisi feceris /naysay fisars/. The name of a clause commonly occurring in the old manorial writs, commanding that, if the lords failed to do justice, the king's court or officer should do it. By virtue of this clause, the king's court usurped the jurisdiction of the private, manorial, or local courts.

Nisi prius /naysay prays/. The nisi prius courts are such as are held for the trial of issues of fact before a jury and one presiding judge. In America the phrase was formerly used to denote the forum (whatever may be its statutory name) in which the cause was tried to a jury, as distinguished from the appellate court.

Nisi prius clause /naysay prays klaz/. In practice, a clause entered on the record in an action at law, authorizing the trial of the cause at nisi prius in the particular county designated. It was first used by way of continuance.

Nisi prius roll /naysay prays rowl/. In practice, the roll or record containing the pleadings, issue, and jury process of an action, made up for use in the nisi prius court.

NKA. Now known as.

N.L. An abbreviation of "non liquet" (which see).

N.L.R.B. National Labor Relations Board.

No-action clause. Provision commonly found in liability insurance policies to the effect that the insurer is not liable to the insured and that no action may be brought against the insurer by the insured until an action has been brought and the insured has either paid the amount to the third person or until a judgment has been rendered fixing the amount due or until an agreement has been reached.

No-action letter. Letter written by attorney for governmental agency (e.g. S.E.C.) to effect that, if facts are as represented in request for ruling, he will advise agency not to take action because the facts do not warrant prosecution.

No arrival, no sale. Provision in sales contract that if goods do not arrive at destination buyer acquires no property therein and does not become liable for price.

No award. The name of a plea in an action on an award, by which the defendant traverses the allegation that an award was made.

Nobles magis plectuntur pecunia; plebes vero in corpore /nowbsliyz meyjas pléktsantar pokýwun(i)ya, plýbiybi virow in kórpsriy/. The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person.

Nobles sunt, qui arma gentilittia antecessorum suorum proferre possunt /nowbsliyz sînt kwâ árma jéntsish(i)yô ãntisysessôram s(y)uwôram provfêhriy pôssant/. The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors.

Nobiliiores et benigniores presumptiones in dubiis sunt preferenda /nabiliyoriyz et bsnigniyoriyz prázam(poshiyôwís in d(y)uwbiyôs sînt préferêndâ/. In cases of doubt, the more generous and more benign presumptions are to be preferred. A civil-law maxim.

Nobilitas est duplex, superior et inferior /nowbsliyzatës ést d(y)uwplekes, sapsiyrâ et ínfirîyâ/. There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.

Nobility. In English law, a division of the people, comprehending dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. These had anciently duties annexed to their respective honors. They are created either by writ, i.e., by royal summons to attend the house of peers, or by letters patent, i.e., by royal grant of any dignity and degree of peerage; and they enjoy many privileges, exclusive of their senatorial capacity. Since 1963 no new hereditary ennoblements have been created.

No bill. This phrase, endorsed by a grand jury on the indictment, is equivalent to "not found", "no indictment", or "not a true bill". It means that, in the opinion of the jury, evidence was insufficient to warrant the return of a formal charge. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 6(f). See Indictment.

No bonus clause. In states where applicable, a clause under the eminent domain section of a lease, giving the lessee the right to recover only the value of his physical improvements in the event of a taking, and not the value of his leasehold interest (the difference between the fixed rent of the lease and current market rental value).

No contest clause. Provision in a will to the effect that the legacy or devise is given on condition that no action is taken to contest the will; and if such action is initiated, the legacy or devise is forfeited. See also Non-contestability clause.
NOCTANTER

Noctanter /nôktânter/. By night; an abolished writ which issued out of chancery, and returned to the queen's bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.

Noctes and noctem de firma /nôktïzï di fîrma /nôktam*./. Entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights.

Noctum /nôktaum/. Lat. In old English law, a nuisance. Noctum damnosum, a nuisance occasioning loss or damage. Noctum injuriousum, an injurious nuisance. For the latter only a remedy was given.

No evidence. Under the rule that the court may render judgment non obstante veredicto if directed verdict would have been proper, the term "no evidence" does not mean literally no evidence at all; "no evidence" comprehends those situations wherein by the application of established principles of law the evidence is deemed legally insufficient to establish an asserted proposition of fact. Fields v. Burlison Packing Co., Tex.Civ. App., 405 S.W.2d 105, 106. "No evidence" points may be sustained only when (1) evidence of a vital fact is completely absent; (2) rules of law or evidence bar court from giving weight to only evidence offered to prove a vital fact; (3) no more than a mere scintilla of evidence is offered to prove a vital fact; and (4) the evidence conclusively establishes the opposite of the vital fact. Froman v. Perrin, Iowa, 213 N.W.2d 684, 686. The "no eyewitness rule" is that where there is no obtainable direct evidence of what decedent did or failed to do immediately before injury, trier of facts may infer that decedent was in exercise of ordinary care for his own safety. Marean v. Petersen, 259 Iowa 557, 144 N.W.2d 906, 913.

No fault. A type of automobile insurance, in force in many states, in which each person's own insurance company pays for injury or damage up to a certain limit regardless of whether its insured was actually at fault. See Insurance.

Also, popular name for a type of divorce in which a marriage can be ended on a mere allegation that it has "irretrievably" broken down or because of "irreconcilable" differences between the spouses. Under such statutory ground for dissolution of marriage, which exists in most all states, fault on the part of either spouse need not be shown or proved. See Irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

No fault insurance. See Insurance; No fault.

No funds. Endorsement marked on check when a check is drawn on bank in which the drawer has no funds with which to cover check. See also Fund or funds.

No goods. This is the English equivalent of the Latin term "nulla bona," being the form of the return made by a sheriff or constable, charged with an execution, when he has found no property of the debtor on which to levy.

Nolens volens /nôlûnîz vôûlûn/. Lat. Whether willing or unwilling; consenting or not.

No limit order. An order to buy or sell securities in which there is no stipulation as to price.

Nolissement /nôlisîmón/. Fr. In French marine law, affrayment.

Nolle prosequi /nôlî prôskwî/. Lat. A formal entry upon the record, by the plaintiff in a civil suit, or, more commonly, by the prosecuting attorney in a criminal action, by which he declares that he "will no further prosecute" the case, either as to some of the defendants, or altogether. The voluntary withdrawal by the prosecuting attorney of present proceedings on a criminal charge. Brantley v. Com., Pennsylvania Bd. of Probation and Parole, 95 Pa.Cmwlth. 641, 506 A.2d 970, 973. Commonly called "nol pro".

No-load fund. A type of mutual fund which charges little or nothing for administrative and selling expenses in the sale of its shares. See Mutual fund.

Nolo contendere /nôlôw kantêndariy/. Latin phrase meaning "I will not contest it"; a plea in a criminal case which has a similar legal effect as pleading guilty. Hudson v. U. S., 272 U.S. 451, 455, 47 S.Ct. 127, 128, 71 L.Ed. 347. Type of plea which may be entered with leave of court to a criminal complaint or indictment by which the defendant does not admit or deny the charges, though a fine or sentence may be imposed pursuant to it. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a), 12(a). The principal difference between a plea of guilty and a plea of nolo contendere is that the latter may not be used against the defendant in a civil action based upon the same acts. As such, this plea is particularly popular in antitrust actions (e.g. price fixing) where the likelihood of civil actions following in the wake of a successful antitrust prosecution is very great.

A defendant may plead nolo contendere only with the consent of the court. Such a plea shall be accepted by the court only after due consideration of the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(b).

Nomen /nômûn/. Lat. In the civil law, a name; the name, style, or designation of a person. Properly, the name showing to what gens or tribe he belonged, as distinguished from his own individual name (the praenomen), from his surname or family name (cognomen), and from any name added by way of a descriptive title (agronym). The name or style of a class or genus of persons or objects. A debt or a debtor.

Nomen collectivum /nômûn kolâktûvyûm/. A collective name or term; a term expressive of a class; a term including several of the same kind; a term expressive of the plural, as well as singular, number.
Nomen est quasi rei notamen /nównman èst kwéysay ríyay nowtéyman/. A name is, as it were, the note of a thing.

Nomen generale /nównman jénaréyliy/. A general name; the name of a genus.

Nomen generalissimum /nównman jénarélyssìmm/. A name of the most general kind; a name or term of the most general meaning. By the name of “land,” which is nomen generalissimum, everything terrestrial will pass.

Nomen juris /nównman jüras/. A name of the law; a technical legal term.

Nomen non sufficit, si res non sit de jure aut de facto /nównman nón sofisst séy ríy nón sit “di júrī” ót “di fækto”. A name is not sufficient if there be not a thing (or subject for it) de jure or de facto.

Nomen transcriptiunm /nównman trénskriptíshiyam/. See Nominatio transcriptiunm.

Nominal. Titular; existing in name only; not real or substantial; connected with the transaction or proceeding in name only, not in interest. Park Amusement Co. v. McCaughn, D.C.Pa., 14 F.2d 553, 556. Not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions; often with the implication that the thing named is so small, slight, or the like, in comparison to what might properly be expected, as scarcely to be entitled to the name; e.g., a nominal price. Lehman v. Tait, C.C.A.Md., 58 F.2d 20, 23.

Nominal account. In accounting, an income statement account which is closed into surplus at the end of the year when the books are balanced.

Nominal capital. Very small or negligible capital, whose use in particular business is incidental. Strayer’s Business College v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Md., 35 F.2d 426, 429. Capital in name only and which is not substantial; not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions. Feeders’ Supply Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Md., 31 F.2d 274, 276.

Nominal consideration. See Consideration.

Nominal damages. See Damages.

Nominal defendant. A person who is joined as defendant in an action, not because he is immediately liable in damages or because any specific relief is demanded as against him, but because his connection with the subject-matter is such that the plaintiff’s action would be defective, under the technical rules of practice, if he were not joined. See also Parties.

Nominal interest rate. The rate of interest stated in a security as opposed to the actual interest yield that is based upon the price at which the interest-bearing property is purchased and the length of time to maturity of the obligation.

Nominal partner. A person who appears to be a partner in a firm, or is so represented to persons dealing with the firm, or who allows his name to appear in the style of the firm or to be used in its business, in the character of a partner, but who has no actual interest in the firm or business.

Nominal party. See Nominal defendant; Parties.

Nominal payee rule. Refers to a U.C.C. Article 3 provision, § 3-405(1)(b), which renders effective any person’s indorsement of an instrument drawn by a person who intends the payee to have no interest in the instrument.

Nominal trust. A dry or passive trust in which the duties of the trustee are minimal and in which the beneficiary has virtual control.

Nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles /nómana myútabil(i)yam, ríyam ødøm amówbal(i)yam/. Names are mutable, but things are immovable [immutable]. A name may be true or false, or may change, but the thing itself always maintains its identity.

Nomina si nescis perit cognitio rerum; et nomina si perdas, certa distinctio rerum perditur /nómana si nesas pàrst kognísíth(i)yam øríam øt nómana si pàrdes sàrti dástiñksh(i)yam øríam pàrtár/. If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes; and, if you lose the names, the distinction of the things is certainly lost.

Nomina sunt note rerum /nómana sànt nótwlìy øríam/. Names are the notes of things.

Nomina sunt symbola rerum /nómana sànt symbólo øríam/. Names are the symbols of things.

Nominate. To name, designate by name, appoint, or propose for election or appointment.

Nominate contracts. In the civil law, contracts having a proper or peculiar name and form, and which were divided into four kinds, expressive of the ways in which they were formed, viz.: (1) Real, which arose ex re, from something done; (2) verbal, ex verbis, from something said; (3) literal, ex literis, from something written; and (4) consensual, ex consensus, from something agreed to.

Nominatim /nómnéytam/. Lat. By name; expressed one by one.

Nominating and reducing. A (now obsolete) mode of obtaining a panel of special jurors in England, from which to select the jury to try a particular action.

Nominatio auctoris /nómnéyshow øktóras/. Lat. In Roman law, a form of plea or defense in an action for the recovery of real estate, by which the defendant, sued as the person apparently in possession, alleges that he holds only in the name or for the benefit of another, whose name he discloses by the plea, in order that the plaintiff may bring his action against such other.

Nomination. An appointment or designation of a person to fill an office or discharge a duty. The act of suggesting or proposing a person by name as a candidate for an office.

Nomination paper. A paper used for selection of candidates by a political body which is not a political party and is not entitled to use a "nomination petition". Commonwealth v. Antico, 146 Pa.Super. 293, 22 A.2d 204, 209.
Nomination to a living. In English ecclesiastical law, the rights of nominating and of presenting to a living are distinct, and may reside in different persons. Presentation is the offering a clerk to the bishop. Nomination is the offering a clerk to the person who has the right of presentation. Also called Advowson.

Nominatus pendens /nómanstáyvas pendénis/. Lat. A nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes, "This indenture," etc., down to "whereas," though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, are of this kind.

Nomina transcriptitia /nómana tránskrptishiyaysa/. In Roman law, obligations contracted by literae (i.e., literis obligationes) were so called because they arose from a peculiar transfer (transcriptio) from the creditor's daybook (adversaria) into his ledger (codex).

Nomina villarum /nómana vaIéram/. In English law, an account of the names of all the villages and the possessors thereof, in each county, drawn up by several sheriffs (9 Edw. II), and returned by them into the exchequer, where it is still preserved.

Nomine /nómani/. Lat. By name; by the name of; under the name or designation of.

 Nominee /nónamiy/. One who has been nominated or proposed for an office. One designated to act for another in his or her place.

A form of securities registration widely used by institutional investors to avoid onerous requirements of establishing the right of registration by a fiduciary.

One designated to act for another as his representative in a rather limited sense; e.g. stock held by brokerage firm in street name to facilitate transactions even though customer is actual owner of securities. It is used sometimes to signify an agent or trustee. It has no connotation, however, other than that of acting for another, in representation of another, or as the grantee of another. Schuh Trading Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.III., 95 F.2d 404, 411.

Nominee trust. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more undisclosed beneficiaries.

Nomine pæne /nómani pI avanz/. In the name of a penalty.

In the civil law, a legacy was said to be left nominem pæne where it was left for the purpose of coercing the heir to do or not to do something.

The term has also been applied, in English law, to some kinds of covenants, such as a covenant inserted in a lease that the lessee shall forfeit a certain sum on non-payment of rent, or on doing certain things, as plowing up ancient meadows, and the like.

Nomocanon /nówmokáyvan/. (1) A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collation of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated. Balsamon wrote a commentary upon it in 1180. (2) A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without regard to imperial constitutions.

Nomographer /námsgrófar/. One who writes on the subject of laws.

Nomography /námsgrófíyi/. A treatise or description of laws.

Nomotheta /nówmótihytsa/. A lawgiver; such as Solon and Lycurgus among the Greeks, and Caesar, Pompey, and Sulla among the Romans.

Non. Lat. Not. The common prefix of negation.

Non-ability. Want of ability to do an act in law, as to sue. A plea founded upon such cause.

Non-acceptance. A buyer’s right under a contract of sale to reject the goods because of non-conformance with the contract. U.C.C. § 2-601(a). Failure or refusal of a drawee to accept a draft or bill. The refusal to accept anything.

Non acceptavit /nón aeksapayv/. In common law pleading, the name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange by which he denies that he accepted the same.

Non-access. Absence of opportunities for sexual intercourse between husband and wife; or the absence of such intercourse. Defense interposed by alleged father in paternity cases.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, qua competunt in limitationem veram /nón aeksapay dévant varba in dêmosntráhtshiyovnovm fósm, kwí kompódant in límitevshiyovnovm vífram/. Words ought not to be taken to import a false demonstration which may have effect by way of true limitation.

Non accretit infra sex annos /nón skriyvst infra séks ënovs/.. It did not accrue within six years. The name of a plea by which the defendant sets up the statute of limitations against a cause of action which is barred after six years.

Nonaquiescence. An administrative agency’s policy of declining to be bound by judicial precedent which is contrary to the agency’s interpretation of its organic statute, until the Supreme Court has ruled on the issue. At its most extreme, it is the policy of disregarding the decisions of federal courts within the circuit in which they sit when those decisions conflict with the Secretary’s own policies. Stieberger v. Heckler, D.C.N.Y., 615 F.Supp. 1315, 1321. A more limited version is an agency’s refusal to give nationwide effect to the holdings of a particular court of appeals. Lopez v. Heckler, C.C.A. Cal., 725 F.2d 1489, 1503. Sometimes abbreviated as non-acqu. or NA. Compare Acquiescence.

Non-admission. The refusal of admission.
None et decima /nówniy ét désmiyn/. In old European law, payments made to the church, by those who were tenants of churchfarms. The first was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry; the second was claimed in right of the church.

Non-age. Lack of requisite legal age. A minor. In general, the legal status of a person who is under eighteen years of age. See Minor.

Nonagium or nonage /nowniý(ly)om/nównaj/. In old European law, a ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretense of being distributed to pious uses.

Non alio modo puniatur aliquis quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio /nón éylíyow mówdow pyùwníyéytó álakwis kwàm sòkándam kwòd sìy héybat kùndemnëysh(ly)ow/. A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins.

Non aliter a signification verborum recediri oportet /nón eyliyow mowdow kùndemnëysh(ly)ow/ varbm.. We must never depart from the signification of words, unless it is evident that they are not conformable to the will of the testator.

Non alodial estate. Realty coming to deceased in any way other than by descent or devise from a now dead ancestor, or by deed of actual gift from a living one, there being no other consideration than that of blood. One acquired by purchase or by act or agreement of the parties, as distinguished from one acquired by descent or by operation of law.

Non-apparent easement. A non-continuous or discontinuous easement. See Easement.

Non-appearance. A failure of appearance; the omission of the defendant to appear within the time limited. See Default.

Non-assessable. This word, placed upon a certificate of stock, does not cancel or impair the obligation to pay the amount due upon the shares created by the acceptance and holding of such certificate. At most its legal effect is a stipulation against liability from further assessment or taxation after the expiration of one hundred per cent. shall have been paid. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U.S. 45, 23 L.Ed. 203.

Non assumpsit /nón asámp(s)át/. The general issue in the action of assumpsit; being a plea by which the defendant avers that "he did not undertake" or promise as alleged by the plaintiff. See Assumpsit.

Non assumpsit infra sex annos /nón asámp(s)át infra sexa ánosáw/. He did not undertake within six years. The name of the plea of the statute of limitations, in the action of assumpsit.

Non auditur perire volens /nón ótadár páráyryí vóvléns/. He who is desirous to perish is not heard. He who confesses himself guilty of a crime, with the view of meeting death, will not be heard. A maxim of the foreign law of evidence.

Non-bailable. Not admitting of bail; not requiring bail.

Non bis in idem /nón bis in áytam/. Not twice for the same; that is, a man shall not be twice tried for the same crime. This maxim of the civil law expresses the same principle as the familiar rule of our law that a man shall not be twice "put in jeopardy" for the same offense.

Non-cancellable /nón kánsalábl/. Such provision in insurance policy precludes insurer from cancelling policy after an illness or accident, so long as the premium has been paid. Dudgeon v. Mutual Ben. Health & Accident Ass'n, C.C.A.W.Va., 70 P.2d 49, 52.

Non cepit /nón sýpát/. He did not take. The general issue in replevin, where the action is for the wrongful taking of the property; putting in issue not only the taking, but the place in which the taking is stated to have been made.

Non-claim. The omission or neglect of person who ought to claim his right within the time limited by law.

Covenant of non-claim. See Covenant.

Non-combatant. A person connected with an army or navy, but for purposes other than fighting; such as the surgeons and chaplains or conscientious objectors. Also a neutral.

Non-commissioned. A non-commissioned officer of the armed services is an officer who holds his rank, not by commission from the executive authority, but by appointment of a superior officer.

Non compos mentis /nón kómpas méntas/. Lat. Not sound of mind; insane. This is a very general term, embracing all varieties of mental infirmity. See Incompetency; Insanity.

Non concedantur citationes priusquam exprimatur super qua re fieri debet citatio /nón kónséntdántor sztéshyijónwiy przyájkswam ékspraméytá sýjúwpor kwýry fáysráy débst sáytéshy(ly)ow/. Summonses should not be granted before it is expressed on what matter the summons ought to be made.

Non concessit /nón kansésåt/. Lat. He did not grant. The name of a common law plea denying a grant, which could be made only by a stranger.

Nonconforming lot. A lot the area, dimension or location of which was lawful prior to the adoption, revision or amendment of a zoning ordinance, but now fails to conform to the requirements of the zoning district in which it is located by reason of such adoption, revision, or amendment.

Nonconforming use. A structure the size, dimension or location of which was lawful prior to the adoption, revision or amendment of a zoning ordinance, but which fails to conform to the requirements of the zoning district in which it is located by reasons of such adoption, revision or amendment. A use which does not comply with present zoning provisions but which existed lawfully and was created in good faith prior to the enactment of the zoning provision. Camaron Apartments, Inc. v.
Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of City of Philadelphia, 14 Pa.Cmwlth. 571, 324 A.2d 805, 807.

Uses permitted by zoning statutes or ordinances to continue notwithstanding that similar uses are no longer permitted in area in which they are located. Beyer v. Mayor and Council of Baltimore City, 182 Md. 444, 34 A.2d 765, 766.

See also Variance.

Non-conformist. One who refuses to comply with others; one who refuses to join in the established forms of custom, belief, styles, usages, rules, etc.

Non consentit qui errat /nón kànséntst kwày éhrat/. He who mistakes does not consent.

Non constat /nón könstat/. Lat. It does not appear; it is not clear or evident. A phrase used in general to state some conclusion as not necessarily following although it may appear on its face to follow.

Non-contestability clause. Clause in insurance policy that precludes insurer from contesting policy on basis of fraud or mistake after a specified period of time (e.g., two years) when insured has acted thereon to his detriment by payments of premiums and foregoing other insurance. See also Incontestability clause.

Non-continuous easement. "Continuous easement" is one which may be enjoyed without any act by party claiming it, while "non-continuous easement," such as right of way, is one to enjoyment of which party's act is essential. A non-apparent or discontinuous easement. See Easement.

Noncontravention clause. In fire insurance policies, a provision that only the interests of the owner and first mortgagee are protected under the policy.

Non culpabilis /nón käl péy-bal/s. Lat. In pleading, not guilty. It is usually abbreviated "non cul."

Noncumulative dividends. Commonly incident to preferred stock if a dividend is "passed" (not paid) in a particular year or period; such passed dividends are gone forever and there is no obligation to pay such when the next dividend is paid.

Noncumulative voting. Also called "straight" voting, such voting rights limit a shareholder to voting no more than the number of shares he owns for a single candidate. In noncumulative voting, a majority shareholder will elect the entire board of directors. Compare Cumulative voting.

Non damificatus /nón dëmnafskéytas/. Lat. Not injured.

A common law plea in an action of debt on an indemnity bond, or bond conditioned "to keep the plaintiff harmless and indemnified," etc. It is in the nature of a plea of performance, being used where the defendant means to allege that the plaintiff has been kept harmless and indemnified, according to the tenor of the condition.

Non dat qui non habet /nón dát kwày nón héybat/. He who has not does not give.

Non detinet /nón détanat/. Lat. He does not detain.

The name of the general issue in the action of detinue. The general issue in the action of replevin, where the action is for the wrongful detention only.

Non differunt quae concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem /nón dífránt kwiy kankordaent riy, támetsay nón in varbas iýasydám/. Those things do not differ which agree in substance, though not in the same words.

Non dimisit /nón damáyzt/. L. Lat. He did not demisse. A common law plea resorted to where a plaintiff declared upon a demise without stating the indenture in an action of debt for rent. Also, a plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowant did not demisse.

Non-direction. Omission on the part of a judge to properly instruct the jury upon a necessary conclusion of law.

Non erit alia lex Ronue, alia Athsenis; alia nunc, alia nunc /nón erít alia lex ronue, alia athsenis; alia nunc, alia nunc/. There will not be one law at Rome, different in every nation throughout all time.

Non is arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum /nón ès aértchíyas víŋktyíalam intar hónmaniyj kwáým jásgaréndám/. There is no closer [or firmer] bond between men than an oath.

Non est certandum de regulis juris /nón ès sarténdám díly régyálas júras/. There is no disputing about rules of law.

Non est consonom rationi, quod cognitio accessorii in curia christianitatis impediat, ubi cognitio causae principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere /nón ès kónsans réshíyównay kwód kognishíyíow akssésoríay in kýryüra krystíyáznétýyas impílydyíyéyár, wýúbay kognishíyíow kýzyí prínspáspéylas èd fórám aklyíyíyéyastakám nótsátar pártsáriý/. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem /nón ès dispéystándám kóntra prínspíyá nagéntam/. We cannot dispute against a man who denies first principles.

Non est inventus /nón ès invéntas/. Lat. He is not found. The sheriff's return to process requiring him to arrest the body of the defendant, when the latter is not found within his jurisdiction. It is often abbreviated, "n. e. i.," or written, in English, "not found."

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum qui toto tempore vitae suae pro legitimo habebatur /nón ès jústam èlkwáam énteiyinyéym kówst mórtem féyórsíy bastárdám kwáý tótwó témperóly váýtly sýyýwiwy prów lájísdóm hóébsbéýétar/. It is not just to make an elderborn a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahtatur /nón ès nóówvam at prayórisíy líyóýíy jéd pasýrríyóýíy trahténtor/. It is no new thing that prior statutes should give place to later ones.

Non est recedendum a communi observantia /nón ès réýéndém am kýsyóóyýnay óózbárváshíyíyó/. There should be no departure from a common observance.

Non est regula quin fallet /nón ès régyaló kwín fólst/. There is no rule but what may fail.

Non est reus nisi mens sit rea /nón ès riýas náýsay méñz sit riýa/. One is not guilty unless his intention be guilty. This maxim is much criticized and is only applicable when the absence of intent reduces the seriousness of the crime. See Actus non facit reum, etc.; Mens rea.

Non est singulis concedendum, quod per magistra tum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi /nón ès singýýalas kýnsódéndám kwód pár májóþréýýam póólsáýy póósst fárýýay, níy skéýžíyíyíow sit májóþás támtúts fóshíyénday/. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults.
Non exemplis sed legibus judicandum est /nón agzémplas séd liyíjásbá júwákáíndóm ést/. Not by the facts of the case, but by the law must judgment be made.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usi, nomina exaudiri debent /nón éks apíiníyównabás siggyálórom séd éks kamyúwnay yüwsýjuw nómána éksédýray dýbent/. The names of things ought to be understood, not according to the opinions of individuals, but according to common usage.

Non facias malum, ut inde fiat bonum /nón féyshiyías málóm at índiy fáyot bównm/. You are not to do evil, that good may be or result therefrom.

Nonfeasance /nónfýyzans/. Non-performance of some act which person is obligated or has responsibility to perform; omission to perform a required duty at all; or, total neglect of duty. Desmarais v. Wachusett Regional School Dist., 360 Mass. 591, 276 N.E.2d 691, 693. As respects public officials, "nonfeasance" is substantial failure to perform a required legal duty, while "misfeasance" is the doing in a wrongful manner that which the law authorizes or requires a public officer to do. Schumacher v. State ex rel. Furlong, 78 Nev. 167, 370 P.2d 209, 211.

There is a distinction between "nonfeasance" and "misfeasance" or "malfeasance"; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent's liability to third persons. "Nonfeasance" means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do; "misfeasance" means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and "malfeasance" is a doing of an act which he ought not to do at all.

Compare Malfeasance; Misseasance.

Non fecit /nón fyisst/. Lat. He did not make it. A plea in an action of assumpit on a promissory note.

Non fecit vastum contra prohibitionem /nón fyisst vàstám kóntrá prów(h)blíshiyównam/. He did not commit waste against the prohibition. A plea to an action founded on a writ of estreptement for waste.

Non-freehold estates. All estates in real property without seisin; hence, all estates except the fee simple, fee tail and life estates are non-freehold.

Non hac in fœdore veni /nón hýyk in fédaro viýnay/. I did not agree to these terms.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ad eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituuntur /nón impíyädát klóz(y)alas dórógyöríywa klów máýnas séd iyéydam pówtstéstíýi ríyí dâzolviýántar ey kwéy kanstíty(w)ántar/. A derogatory clause does not impede things from being dissolved by the same power by which they are created.

Non impedivit /nón impédayst/. Lat. He did not impede. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. The Latin form of the law French "ne disturba pas."

Non implicatando aliquem de libero tenemento sine brevi /nón implástándó dlákwem dlí liýbrow ténméntów sáinyi bryivray/. A writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impounding any man touching his freehold without the king's writ.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo legis consistunt /nón in líjendo séd in in líjendo líyziyównám/. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood.

Noninsurable risk. A hazard or risk for which insurance will not be written because not subject to evaluation by actuarial computations; such risk being too uncertain.

Non-intercourse. The refusal of one state or nation to have commercial dealings with another; similar to an embargo (q.v.).

The absence of access, communication, or sexual relations between husband and wife. See Non-access.

Non interfui /nón intárfi(w)áwy/. I was not present. A reporter's note.

Non-intervention will. A term sometimes applied to a will which authorizes the executor to settle and distribute the estate without the intervention of the court and without giving bond.

Non intromittand clause /nón intromítánt klóz/. In English law, a clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county.

Non intromittendo, quando breve praecipe in capite subdole impetratur /nón intromítendo, kwoñdow bryiyvé préáspiy in képsítíy sôballyy impértéyátyırl/. In old English law, a writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one, who, under color of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called "praecipe in capite," any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right.
Non-issuable pleas. Those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement.

Non-joinder. See Joinder.

Non-judicial day. Day on which process cannot ordinarily issue or be executed or returned, and on which courts do not usually sit. Vidal v. Backs, 218 Cal. 99, 21 P.2d 952.

Non juridicus /non juridikas/. Not judicial; not legal. Dies non juridicus is a day on which legal proceedings cannot be had.

Non-jurors. In English law, persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. Originally those who refused to swear allegiance to the successors on the throne of the falsely deposed Stuarts.

Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure /nón jáx èks régyala séd régyala eks járry/. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law.

Non jus, sed seisin, facit stipatem /nón jáx séd sëysana féysat stipatam/. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock. It is not a mere right to enter on lands, but actual seisin, which makes a person the root or stock from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived.

Non-leviable /nón léviyabal/. Not subject to be levied upon. Property exempt from seizure, forfeiture or sale in bankruptcy, attachment, garnishment, etc. Non-leviable assets are assets upon which an execution cannot be levied. See also Exemption; Homestead.

Non licet quod dispendio licet /nón lisat kwód dáspeedióli wisat/. That which may be [done only] at a loss is not allowed [to be done]. The law does not permit or require the doing of an act which will result only in loss. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, changeable, and unprofitable.

Non liquet /nón likwat/ "láykwat//. Lat. It is not clear.

In the Roman courts, when any of the judges, after the hearing of a cause, were not satisfied that the case was made clear enough for them to pronounce a verdict, they were privileged to signify this opinion by casting a ballot inscribed with the letters "N. L.," the abbreviated form of the phrase "non liquet."

Nonliquidating distribution. A payment made by a partnership or corporation to the entity's owner when the entity's legal existence does not cease thereafter. Compare Distribution in liquidation.

Non-mailable. A term applied to all letters and parcels which are by law excluded from transportation in the United States mails, whether on account of the size of the package, the nature of its contents, its obscene character, or for other reasons.

Non merchandizanda victualia /nón mærchandzánda víktyuwéyl(i)ya/. An ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did.

Non-merchantable title. The title to realty need not be bad in fact to render it "non-merchantable", but it is sufficient, if an ordinarily prudent man with knowledge of facts and aware of legal questions involved would not accept it in ordinary course of business. Ghormley v. Kleeden, 155 Kan. 319, 124 P.2d 467, 470. Compare Merchantable title.

Non molestando /nón mówlastândow/. A writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him.

Non nasci, et natum mori, paria sunt /nón násay ét néytn moray páirya sánt/. Not to be born, and to be dead-born, are the same.

Non-navigable. At common law, streams or bodies of water not affected by tide were "non-navigable". Luscher v. Reynolds, 153 Or. 625, 56 P.2d 1158, 1162. Bodies of water other than navigable waters (q.v.).

Non-negotiable. Not negotiable; not capable of passing title or property by indorsement and delivery. Any document of title that is not a negotiable document. An instrument which may not be transferred by indorsement and delivery or by delivery alone, though it may be assigned. The transferee does not become a holder unless it is negotiated. Compare Negotiable.

Non obligat lex nisi promulgata /nón oblaga léks náysay prómalgéyta/. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

Non obstante /nón absténtiy/. Lat. Notwithstanding.

Words antiquely used in public and private instruments, intended to preclude, in advance, any interpretation contrary to certain declared objects or purposes.

A clause frequent in old English statutes and letters patent (so termed from its initial words), importing a license from the crown to do a thing which otherwise a person would be restrained by act of parliament from doing. A power in the crown to dispense with the laws in any particular case. This was abolished by the bill of rights at the Revolution.

Non obstante veredicto /nón absténtiy véhradiktow/. Notwithstanding the verdict. A judgment entered by order of court for the plaintiff (or defendant) although there has been a verdict for the defendant (or plaintiff). Judgment non obstante veredicto in its broadest sense is a judgment rendered in favor of one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party. A motion for a directed verdict is a prerequisite to a subsequent grant of judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed.R. Civil P. 50.

Judgment non obstante veredicto originally, at common law, was a judgment entered for plaintiff "notwithstanding the verdict" for defendant; which could be done only, after verdict and before judgment, where it appeared that defendant's plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which, although verified by the verdict, were insufficient to constitute a defense or bar to the action. But either by statutory enactment or because of relaxation of the early common-law rule, the generally prevailing rule now is that either plaintiff or defendant may have a judgment non obstante veredicto in proper cases.

Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus /nón ōfis$t kwisy uwd$ta d$y$wa$y km$doh$. An attempt does not have meaning unless a consequence follows.

Non omittas /nón amít$as/>. A clause usually inserted in a writ of execution, in England, directing the sheriff “not to omit” to execute the writ by reason of any liberty, because there are many liberties or districts in which the sheriff has no power to execute process unless he has special authority.

Non omne damnum inducit injuriam /nón ömny di$m$nm an$ý$wst anju$riyam/>. It is not every loss that produces an injury.

Non omne quod licet honestum est /nón ömny kwód lí$t (h)ánést$tm es$. It is not everything which is permitted that is honorable.

Non omnium que a majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest /nón ömnyu$m kwí$y é$y m$jóárabas nónst$rw kónst$t(y)úw$ts $ánt rá$h(y)ów ré$dáy pów$t$. There cannot be given a reason for all the things which have been established by our ancestors.

Nonpayment. The neglect, failure, or refusal of payment of a debt or evidence of debt when due.

Non-performance. Neglect, failure, or refusal to do or perform an act stipulated or contracted to be done. Failure to keep the terms of a contract or covenant, in respect to acts or doings agreed upon. The failure or neglect to render performance called for in a contract, performing an act stipulated or contracted to be done.

Non pertinet ad judicem secularem cognoscere de iis quae sunt mere spiritualia annexa /nón pértin$ ét d$ md w$sm sęký$l$á$rm kág$m$ésaríy dy$ á$y$w kwí$y s$ánt m$rióy spírá(y)uwxéy(y)$ya anék$s$. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things which are merely spiritual.

Non plevin /nón plé$v/. In old English law, default in not replevying land in due time, when the same was taken by the king upon a default. The consequence thereof (loss of seisin) was abrogated by St. 9 Edw. III, c. 2.

Non ponendis in assisis et juratis /nón pón$nd$s in së$ý$sa st jë$réyt$s/. A writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere /nón pów$zs$ráy ink$á$mb$t nasé$st$és práb$é$day páz$ší$hy$ónnyi$z é$d síy p$rá$ti$níy/. A person in possession is not bound to prove that the possessions belong to him.

Non potest adducii exceptio ejus rei cuius petitur dissoluto /nón pówtst ad(y)í$wy$sw ak$$é$sh(y)ów fy$as rí$y$w kuyùw$jas pé$tst dá$ly(ý)úw$$sh(y)ów/. An exception of the same thing whose avoidance is sought cannot be made.

Non potest probari quod probatum non relevat /nón pówtst prb$é$ray kwód prb$é$ta$m nón rél$va$t/. That cannot be proved which, if proved, is inapplicable.

Non potest quis sine brevi agere /nón pówtst kwy$s sá$niy b$$y$vy$w d$ý$riy$. No one can sue without a writ. A fundamental rule of old practice.

Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuria et damno allorum /nón pówtst ré$k g$$é$$sh(y)ó$am f$$s$$r$ó$ry ka$m í$ñ$ji$ry é$t d$$m$ñw e$$yli$y$ran$. The king cannot confer a favor on one subject which occasions injury and loss to others.

Non potest rex subditum renitentem onerare imposi$tionibus /nón pówtst ré$k sáb$dt$tm ré$n$nt$tm ó$nwr$ry imp$z$$jší$hyówny$bas$. The king cannot load a subject with imposition against his consent.

Non potest videri desisse habere qui nunquam ha$bu$t /nón pówtst vé$dr$rá d$$s$$á$zy$h h$á$b$riy kwá$y n$$g$k$w$ms h$$b$$uy$w$. He cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing who never had it.

Non praestat impedimentum quod de jure non sortetur effectum /nón pr$é$$t$tm á$p$md$$nt$tm kwó$d díy jú$riy nón s$$t$td$ d$¨f$kt$$. A thing which has no effect in law is not an impediment.

Non procedendo ad assissam rege inconsiderito /nón pró$sw$dé$nd$am d$$s$áz$y$ $r$î$j$y ink$n$sl$t$t/. A writ to put a stop to the trial of a cause appertaining unto one who is in the king’s service, etc., until the king’s pleasure respecting the same be known.

Non-profit association. A group organized for purposes other than generating profit, such as a charitable, scientific, or literary organization. See also Non-profit corporation.

Non-profit corporation. A corporation not a part of the income of which is distributable to its members, directors or officers. Corporation organized for other than profit-making purposes. Corporations may be organized under the Revised Model Non-Profit Corporation Act (1986) “for any lawful activity unless a more limited purpose is set forth in the articles of incorporation”. Id. § 3.01(A).

For purposes of federal income taxation, an organization may be exempt as an “exempt organization” if it is organized and operated exclusively for one or more of the following purposes: (a) religious, (b) charitable, (c) scientific, (d) testing for public safety, (e) literary, (f) educational, (g) prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or (h) to foster national or international sports. See I.R.C. § 501(c) for a list of exempt organizations.
Non prosequitur /nón próːsiktur/ (q.v.).

Non prosequitur /nón prəˌsɛkwətər/. Lat. He does not follow up, or pursue. If, in the proceedings in an action at law, the plaintiff neglects to take any of those steps which he ought to take within the time prescribed by the practice of the court for that purpose, the defendant may enter judgment of non pros against him, whereby it is adjudged that the plaintiff does not follow up (non prosequitur) his suit as he ought to do, and therefore the defendant ought to have judgment against him. Under current rules practice, such failure would result in a dismissal of the action or in a default judgment for defendant. Fed.R. Civil P. 41, 55.

Non quieta movere /nón kwəˈjətə movərə/. Lat. Not to disturb what is settled. A rule expressing the same principle as that of stare decisis (q.v.).

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est inspiciatur /nón kwod diktsm est ː səd kwod fəktəm est ˈɪnspiˈkətər/. Not what is said, but what is done, is regarded.

Nonrecourse. Status of person who holds an instrument which gives him no legal right against prior endorsers or the drawer to compel payment if the instrument is dishonored. See also Recourse; Without recourse; With recourse.

Nonrecourse debt. Debt secured by the property that it is used to purchase. The purchaser of the property is not personally liable for the debt upon default. Rather, the creditor’s recourse is to repossess the related property. Nonrecourse debt generally does not increase the purchaser’s at-risk amount.

Nonrecourse loan. Type of security loan which bars the lender from action against other assets of the borrower if the security value of the specified collateral for the loan falls below the amount required to repay the loan. It is used by the U.S. in loans to farmers on surplus crops.

Non refer an quis assensum suum prefert verbis, aut rebus ipsis et factis /nón rəˈfɜːr ən kwɪs əˈsɛnsəm ət ˈrɪbəs ˈɪpsɪz ət ˈfæktɪz/. It matters not whether a man gives his assent by his words or by his acts and deeds.

Non refer quid ex æquipollentibus fiat /nón rəˈfɜːr kwɪd eks əˌkwɪpəˈpɔləntəbəs fɪət/. It matters not which of [two] equivalents happen.

Non refer quid notum sit judici, si notum non sit in forma judicii /nón rəˈfɜːr kwɪd nəˈtʊm sɪt ˈdʒudɪʃi əˌsɪt fəˈmoʊrə ˈdʒudɪʃi əˌsɪt/. It matters not what is known to a judge, if it be not known in judicial form.

Non refer verbis an factis fit revocatio /nón rəˈfɜːr ˈvɜːrˌbɪz ən fəkˈtɪz fɪt ˈrɛvəˌkəʃəˈʃiʊs/. It matters not whether a revocation is made by words or deeds.

Non-residence. Residence beyond the limits of the particular jurisdiction.

In ecclesiastical law, the absence of spiritual persons from their benefits.

Non resident. One who does not reside within jurisdiction in question; not an inhabitant of the state of the forum. Special rules govern service of process on non-residents; e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(e). See Long arm statutes.

For the distinction between “residence” and “domicile,” see Domicile.

Non-resident alien. One who is neither a resident nor a citizen of the United States. Citizenship is determined under the federal immigration and naturalization laws (U.S.Code Title 8.)

Non-resident decedent. Decedent domiciled in another jurisdiction at the time of his death. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(26).

Non-resident motorist statutes. State laws governing the liability and obligations of non-residents who use the state’s highways.

Non residentio pro clericro regis /nón rezəˈdɛnʃ(ə)ˈriˌkɝr ˈrɛɡɪs/. A writ, addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his domicile; in which case he is to be discharged.

Non respondent minor nisi in causa dotis, et hoc pro favore doti /nón rəˈspɔndənt ˈmiːnər nɪsɪ ˈkaʊsa ˈdɒtɪs, ət hɒk prəʊ ˈfəʊvər ðətə/.

A minor shall not answer unless in a case of dower, and this in favor of dower. See also Insanity.

Non sanz mentis /nón səˈziː ðəntɪs/. Lat. Of unsound mind.

Non-sane. As “sane,” when applied to the mind, means whole, sound, in a healthful state, “non-sane” means not whole, not sound, not in a healthful state; that is, broken, impaired, shattered, infirm, weak, diseased, unable, either from nature or accident, to perform the rational functions common to man upon the objects presented to it. See also Insanity.

Non sequitur /nón sekwəˈtər/. Lat. It does not follow. E.g., the concepts of foster care and custody in a natural parent are mutually exclusive. The concept of foster care placement of a child with a natural parent is non sequitur. Matter of Lucinda G., 122 Misc.2d 416, 471 N.Y.S.2d 376, 379.

Non solen que abundant vitiare scripturas /nón səˈloʊn kə əˈbʌndənt ˈvɪʃəriə ˈskrɪpt(y)əˈrəs/. Superfluities [things which abound] do not usually vitiate writings.

Non solum licet, sed quid est conveniens, est considerandum; quia nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum /nón səˈləm lɪˈkɛt, səd kwɪd əˌsɪt kənˈvɛnənəs, əˌsɪt ˈkənsɪdərənənd, kwaɪə ˈnɪliə kwɪd əˌsɪt ɪnˈkɒnˌvɛnənəs, əˌsɪt ˈlɪkɪtəm/. Not only what is lawful, but what is proper or convenient, is to be considered; because nothing that is inconvenient is lawful.

Non solvendo pecuniæ ad quam clericus multatur pro non-residentia /nón səˈlʊvəndəʊ ˈpɛkənɪəˌe əd kwəm ˈklerɪks ˈmʌltətər pɾəʊ nənˌrezəˈdɛnʃəˌiə/. A writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary Non-stock corporation. Species of corporation in which the members hold no shares of stock as in the case of mutual companies and religious and charitable corporations. Ownership is through the membership charter or agreement rather than through the usual issuance of stock.

Non submissit /nón səˈmɪsɪt/. Lat. He did not submit. A plea to an action of debt, on a bond to perform an award, to the effect that the defendant did not submit to the arbitration.

Non sui juris /nón s(y)uˈwai jʊɻəs/. Lat. Not his own master. The opposite of sui juris (q.v.). Lacking legal capacity to act for oneself as in the case of a minor or mentally incompetent person.

Nonsuit. A term broadly applied to a variety of terminations of an action which do not adjudicate issues on the merits. McCollan v. Jones, Hubbard & Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 243, 78 P.2d 1010, 1011. Name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove a case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to trial and leaves the issue undetermined. Type of judgment rendered against party in legal proceeding on his inability to maintain his cause in court, or when he is in default in prosecuting his suit or in complying with orders of court. Jaquith v. Revon, 159 Conn. 427, 270 A.2d 559, 561.

A plaintiff suffers a "non-suit" when a court order finally terminates the cause without prejudice. Gray v. Chrysler Corp., Mo.App., 715 S.W.2d 282, 285.

Action in form of a judgment taken against a plaintiff who has failed to appear to prosecute his action or failed to prove his case. Under civil rules practice, the applicable term is "dismissal". Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

See also Default judgment; Directed verdict; Dismissal. Judgment of nonsuit (i.e. "dismissal") is of two kinds, voluntary and involuntary. When plaintiff abandons his case, and consents that judgment go against him for costs, it is voluntary. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(a). But when he, being called, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict, or when his case is put out of court by some adverse ruling precluding a recovery, it is involuntary. Rule 41(b).

A peremptory nonsuit is a compulsory or involuntary nonsuit, ordered by the court upon a total failure of the plaintiff to substantiate his claim by evidence.

Non sum informatus /nón səm ɪnˈfɔrˌmætəs/. Lat. I am not informed; I have not been instructed.

Non-summons, wager of law of. In common law pleading, the mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time.

Non sunt longa ubi nihil est quod demere possis /nón sənt ˈlɒŋɡə ˈjuːwəbəi nɛˈðəɻ ɛst kwɔd dɛməri pəˈsɪs/. There is no proxility where there is nothing that can be omitted.

Non-support. The failure or neglect unreasonably to support those to whom an obligation of support is due; e.g. duty of parents to support children; duty to support spouse. Such failure to support is a criminal offense in most states. See e.g. Model Penal Code § 230.5.

Nonsupport of a child is a parent's failure, neglect or refusal without lawful excuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her child in necessitous circumstances. Nonsupport of a spouse is an individual's failure without just cause to provide for the support of his or her spouse in necessitous circumstances.

See also Necessitous circumstances; Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act; Support.

Non tenere credere est nervus sapientiae /nón tɛnərə ˈkredərə ɛst nɛrvəs səˈpiɛntiəjɪə/. Not to believe rashly is the nerve of wisdom.

Non tenent insimul /nón tɛnənt ɪnˈsɪməl/. Lat. In old pleading, a plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denied that he and the plaintiff were joint tenants of the estate in question.

Non tenuit /nón tɛnʊət/. Lat. He did not hold. A plea in bar in replevin, by which the plaintiff alleges that he did not hold in manner and form as averred, being given in answer to an avowry for rent in arrear.

Non-tenure. A common law plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserts, either as to the whole or as to some part of the land mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, that he does not hold it.

Non-term. The vacation between two terms of a court.

Non-terminus /nón tərˈmɪnəs/. The vacation between term and term, formerly called the time of days of the king's peace.

Non-user. Neglect to use. Neglect to use a franchise; neglect to exercise an office. Neglect or omission to use an easement or other right. A right acquired by use may be lost by non-user.

Non usurpavit /nón ˈjuːwəsrəˈpɛvət/. Lat. He has not usurped. A form of traverse, in an action or proceeding against one alleged to have usurped an office or franchise, denying the usurpation charged.

Non valebit felonis generatio, nec ad hereditatem paternum vel maternam; si autem ante feloniam perpetrata /nón vələˈbɪt fəˈlənəs dʒəˈrɛstɛdəˌtɛm pəˈtɛriːnəm vəl ˈmeɪtərəm; si ətəm ɛntɪ ˈfələwəˌnɪzm dʒəˈrɛstɛdəˌtɛtɪˌjʊənəm ˈfɛsərət təˈtɛləs dʒəˈrɛstɛdəˌtɛtɪˌjʊələm ˈsəksəˌlɛdət ɪn həˈrɛstɛdəˌtɛtɪˌpəˈtɛrəm vəl mɛˈtərəs ɛj kwəʊn ˈfyːwərət fəˈləwəˌnɪlə pərˈpɛrtəˌrɛtə/. The offspring of a felon cannot succeed either to a maternal or paternal inheritance; but, if he had offspring before the felony, such offspring may succeed as to the inheritance of the father or mother by whom the felony was not committed.
Non valet confirmation nisi ille, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmationem; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio sit in possessione non valet confirmationem quod de jure non sortitur. Confirmation is not valid unless he who confirms is either in possession of the thing itself or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless he to whom confirmation is made is in possession.

Non valet donatio nisi subsequatur traditio. A gift is not valid unless accompanied by possession.

Non valet exceptio ejusdem rei cuius petitionem dissolvit. An impediment which does not derive its effect from law is of no force.

Non verbis, sed ipsis rebus, leges imponimus. We impose laws, not upon words, but upon things themselves.

Non videntur qui errant consentire. They are not considered as losing a thing through menaces.

Non videntur rem amittere quibus propria non fuit. They are not considered as losing a thing whose own it was not.

Non videtur consensum retinuiisse si quis ex praescripto minantis aliquid immutavit. He does not appear to have retained consent, who has changed anything for the party using the term for any reimbursement in case of loss or damage or failure of consideration in that which was the cause, the motive, or the object, of the undertaking or contract.

Non videtur perfecte cujusque id esse, quod ex casu auferri potest. That does not seem to be completely one's own which can be taken from him on occasion.

Non videtur quisquam id capere quod ei necesse est alli restitutere. No one is considered entitled to recover that which he must give up to another.

Non videtur vim facere, qui jure suo utitur et ordinaria actione experit. He is not deemed to use force who exercises his own right, and proceeds by ordinary action.

Non vult. A plea similar to nolo contendere (q.v.) and carrying the implications of a plea of guilty.

Non vult cont credere. A plea legally equivalent to that of guilty, being a variation of the form "nolo contendere" (q.v.), and sometimes abbreviated "non vult."

Non-waiver agreement. Such agreement reserves to insurer every right under policy not previously waived, and to the insured every right which had not been forfeited.

Nook of land. In English law, twelve acres and a half.

No par. Said of stock without a par value.

No protest. Term used to describe the waiver of any right of protest when an instrument is not paid. Protest of dishonor is necessary, unless excused, to charge a drawer and endorser on any draft payable outside the United States.

No recourse. No access to; no return; no coming back upon; no assumption of any liability whatsoever; no looking to the party using the term for any reimbursement in case of loss or damage or failure of consideration in that which was the cause, the motive, or the object, of the undertaking or contract.

Normal. According to, constituting, or not deviating from an established norm, rule, or principle; conform to a type, standard or regular form; performing the proper functions; regular; average; natural.

Normal law. A term employed by modern writers on jurisprudence to denote the law as it affects persons who are in a normal condition; i.e., sui juris and sound in mind.

Normally. As a rule; regularly; according to rule, general custom, etc.

Normal mind. One which in strength and capacity ranks reasonably well with the average of the great body of men and women who make up organized human society in general and are by common consent recognized as sane and competent to perform the ordinary duties and assume the ordinary responsibilities of life.

Normal school. See School.

Norman French. The tongue in which several formal proceedings of state in England are still carried on. The language, having remained the same since the date of the Conquest, at which it was introduced into England, is very different from the French of this day, retaining all the peculiarities which at that time distinguished every province from the rest. A peculiar mode of pronunciation (considered authentic) is handed down and preserved by the officials who have, on particular occasions, to speak the tongue. Norman French was the Nosocomial provision commonly found in public.

No-strike clause. Provision commonly found in public labor-management agreements to the effect that the employees will not strike for any reason; with labor disputes to be resolved by binding arbitration.

North. Means due north; opposite direction of south. Same with word northerly.

Northwest territory. A name formerly applied to the territory northwest of the Ohio river.

Noscitur a sociis. It is known from the accompanying words. Under the doctrine of "noscitur a sociis", the meaning of questionable words or phrases in a statute may be ascertained by reference to the meaning of other words or phrases associated with it. C.A.Hawaii, 236 F.2d 622, 626.

Nosicur ex socio, qui non cognoscitur ex se. He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate.

Nosocomial. In the civil law, persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers.

No-strike clause. Provision commonly found in public labor-management agreements to the effect that the employees will not strike for any reason; with labor disputes to be resolved by binding arbitration.

Nota. In the civil law, a mark or brand put upon a person by the law.

Note. In civil and old European law, shorthand characters or marks of contraction, in which the emperors' secretaries took down what they dictated.

Notarial. Taken by a notary; performed by a notary in his official capacity; belonging to a notary and evidencing his official character, as, a notarial seal.

Notarization. Official acts of notary public (q.v.).

Notarial will. A will executed by the testator in the presence of a Notary Public and two witnesses.

Notarius. In old English law, a scribe or scrivener who made short draughts of writings and other instruments; a notary.

In Roman law, a draughtsman; an amanuensis; a shorthand writer; one who took notes of the proceedings in the senate or a court, or of what was dictated to him by another; one who prepared draughts of wills, conveyances, etc.

Notary public. A public officer whose function it is to administer oaths; to attest and certify, by his hand and official seal, certain classes of documents, in order to give them credit and authenticity in foreign jurisdictions; to take acknowledgments of deeds and other conveyances, and certify the same; and to perform certain official acts, chiefly in commercial matters, such as the protesting of notes and bills, the noting of foreign drafts, and marine protests in cases of loss or damage. One who is authorized by the state or federal government to administer oaths, and to attest to the authenticity of signatures.

Notation credit. A credit which specifies that any person purchasing or paying drafts drawn or demands for payment made under it must note the amount of the draft or demand on the letter or advise of credit. U.C.C. § 5–108(1).

Note, v. To make a brief written statement; to enter a memorandum, as to note an exception.

Note, n. An instrument containing an express and absolute promise of signer (i.e. maker) to pay to a specified person or order, or bearer, a definite sum of money at a specified time. An instrument that is a promise to pay other than a certificate of deposit. U.C.C. § 3–104(2)(d).

Two party instrument made by the maker and payable to payee which is negotiable if signed by the maker and contains an unconditional promise to pay sum certain in money, on demand or at a definite time, to order or bearer. U.C.C. § 3–104(1). A note not meeting these requirements may be assignable but not negotiable.

An abstract; a memorandum; an informal statement in writing.

See also Balloon note; Coal note; Judgment note; Promissory note; Sold note; Treasury note.

Circular note. See Letter of credit.

Collateral note. Two party instrument containing promise to pay and secured by pledge of property such as securities, real estate, etc.

Demand note. Note payable on demand as contrasted with a time note which is payable at a definite time in the future.

Installment note. One of a series of notes payable at regular intervals or a single note calling for payment in installments at fixed periods of time.

Joint and several note. A note signed by persons as makers who agree to be bound both jointly and severally; i.e. they may be joined in a suit or they may be sued separately.

Joint note. Note evidencing an indebtedness in which two or more persons agree to be liable jointly and for payment of which all such persons must be joined in an action to recover.

Mortgage note. A note evidencing a loan for which real estate has been offered as security.

Negotiable note. To qualify as negotiable, the note must be signed by the maker, contain an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money and be payable on demand or at a definite time to order or bearer. U.C.C. § 3–104(1).

Secured note. A note for which security in the form of either real or personal property has been pledged or mortgaged. See also Collateral note, above.
Time note. Note payable at a definite future time as contrasted with a demand note.

Unsecured note. Note evidencing an indebtedness for which no security has been pledged or mortgaged.

Note of a fine. In old English conveyancing, one of the parts of a fine of lands, being an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement.

Note of allowance. In English practice, a note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings, allowing him to bring error.

Note of hand. A popular name (now obsolete) for a promissory note.

Note of protest. A memorandum of the fact of protest, indorsed by the notary upon the bill, at the time, to be afterwards written out at length.

Note or memorandum. Under statute of frauds, an informal minute or memorandum made on the spot. It must contain all the essential elements and substantial parts of the contract. Stanley v. A. Levy & J. Zentner Co., 60 Nev. 432, 112 P.2d 1047, 1053.

Notes payable. In bookkeeping, an account reflecting the aggregate indebtedness evidenced by promissory notes; the notes themselves are liabilities.

Notes receivable. In bookkeeping, an account containing evidence of indebtedness for which promissory notes have been given to the account of the party making the entry; the notes themselves are assets.

Not found. These words, indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, have the same effect as the indorsement "Not a true bill", "No bill," or "Ignoramus." See also Non est inventus.

Not-for-profit corporation. See Non-profit corporation.

Not guilty. Plea entered by the accused to criminal charge. If the defendant refuses to plead, the court will enter a plea of not guilty. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11. Also, the form of the verdict in criminal cases where the jury acquits the defendant; i.e. finds him "not guilty". For defense of not guilty by reason of insanity, see Insanity.

In common law pleadings, a plea of the general issue in the actions of trespass and case.

Not guilty by statute. In old English practice, a plea of the general issue by a defendant in a civil action, when he intends to give special matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament, in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether such acts are public or otherwise. But, if a defendant so plead, he will not be allowed to plead any other defense, without the leave of the court or a judge.

Nothys /nòthiːs/. Lat. In Roman law, a natural child or a person of spurious birth.

Notice. Information; the result of observation, whether by the senses or the mind; knowledge of the existence of a fact or state of affairs; the means of knowledge. Intelligence by whatever means communicated. Koehn v. Central Nat. Ins. Co. of Omaha, Neb., 187 Kan. 192, 354 P.2d 352, 358. Any fact which would put an ordinarily prudent person on inquiry. State ex rel. Gleason v. Rickhoff, Mo.App., 541 S.W.2d 47, 50. That which imports information to one to be notified. Greene v. Ives, 25 Conn.Sup. 356, 204 A.2d 412, 415.

Notice in its legal sense is information concerning a fact, actually communicated to a person by an authorized person, or actually derived by him from a proper source, and is regarded in law as "actual" when the person sought to be affected by it knows thereby of the existence of the particular fact in question. United States v. Tuteur, C.A.III., 215 F.2d 415. It is knowledge of facts which would naturally lead an honest and prudent person to make inquiry, and does not necessarily mean knowledge of all the facts. Wayne Bldg. & Loan Co. of Wooster v. Yarborough, 11 Ohio St.2d 195, 228 N.E.2d 841, 847, 40 O.0.2d 182. In another sense, "notice" means information, an advice, or written warning, in more or less formal shape, intended to apprise a person of some proceeding in which his interests are involved, or informing him of some fact which it is his right to know and the duty of the notifying party to communicate.

Fed.R. Civil P. 5(a) requires that every written notice be served upon each of the parties.

A person has notice of a fact if he knows the fact, has reason to know it, should know it, or has been given notification of it. Restatement, Second, Agency § 9.

Notice may be either (1) statutory, i.e., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) Where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited; and (b) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice.

See also Adequate notice; Charged; Due notice; Immediate notice; Imputed notice; Judicial notice; Knowledge; Legal notice; Publication; Reasonable notice.

Actual notice. Actual notice has been defined as notice expressly and actually given, and brought home to the party directly. The term "actual notice," however, is generally given a wider meaning as embracing two classes, express and implied; the former includes all knowledge of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon the party the further duty of inquiry; the latter imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge. In this sense actual notice is such notice as is positively proved to have been given to a party directly and personally, or such as he is presumed to have received personally because the evidence within his knowledge was sufficient to put him upon inquiry.

Averment of notice. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

Commercial law. A person has “notice” of a fact when: (a) he has actual knowledge of it; or (b) he has received a notice or notification of it; or (c) from all the facts and circumstances known to him at the time in question he has reason to know that it exists. A person "knows" or has "knowledge" of a fact when he has actual knowledge of it. "Discover" or "learn" or a word or phrase of similar import refers to knowledge rather than to reason to know. The time and circumstances under which a notice or notification may cease to be effective are not determined by the U.C.C. U.C.C. § 1–201(25).

A person "notifies" or "gives" a notice or notification to another by taking such steps as may be reasonably required to inform the other in ordinary course whether or not such other actually comes to know of it. A person "receives" a notice or notification when: (a) it comes to his attention; or (b) it is duly delivered at the place of business through which the contract was made or at any other place held out by him as the place for receipt of such communications. U.C.C. § 1–201(26).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, the law on "notice," actual or inferable, is precisely the same whether the instrument is issued to a holder or negotiated to a holder. Eldon’s Super Fresh Stores, Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 296 Minn. 130, 207 N.W.2d 282, 287.

Constructive notice. Constructive notice is information or knowledge of a fact imputed by law to a person (although he may not actually have it), because he could have discovered the fact by proper diligence, and his situation was such as to cast upon him the duty of inquiring into it. Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact.

Express notice. Express notice embraces not only knowledge, but also that which is communicated by direct information, either written or oral, from those who are cognizant of the fact communicated. See also Actual notice, above.

Implied notice. Implied notice is one of the varieties of actual notice (not constructive) and is distinguished from "express" actual notice. It is notice inferred or imputed to a party by reason of his knowledge of facts or circumstances collateral to the main fact, of such a character as to put him upon inquiry, and which, if the inquiry were followed up with due diligence, would lead him definitely to the knowledge of the main fact. "Implied notice" is a presumption of fact, relating to what one can learn by reasonable inquiry, and arises from actual notice of circumstances, and not from constructive notice. Or as otherwise defined, implied notice may be said to exist where the fact in question lies open to the knowledge of the party, so that the exercise of reasonable observation and watchfulness would not fail to apprise him of it, although no one has told him of it in so many words.

Personal notice. Communication of notice orally or in writing (according to the circumstances) directly to the person affected or to be charged, as distinguished from constructive or implied notice, and also from notice imputed to him because given to his agent or representative. See Actual notice; Express notice, above.

Public notice. Notice given to the public generally, or to the entire community, or to all whom it may concern. Such must commonly be published in a newspaper of general circulation. See also Publication.

Reasonable notice. Such notice or information of a fact as may fairly and properly be expected or required in the particular circumstances.

Notice of action. See Lis pendens.

Notice of appearance. See Appearance.

Notice of deficiency. See Ninety (90) day letter.

Notice of dishonor. Notice of dishonor may be given to any person who may be liable on the instrument by or on behalf of the holder or any party who has himself received notice, or any other party who can be compelled to pay the instrument. In addition an agent or bank in whose hands the instrument is dishonored may give notice to his principal or customer or to another agent or bank from which the instrument was received. U.C.C. § 3–508(1). See also Dishonor.

Notice of issue. See Notice of trial.

Notice of lis pendens /nówtæs əv lis pèndæns/. See Lis pendens.

Notice of motion. A notice in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose or object stated. Such notice is required to be served upon all parties. Fed.R.Civil P. 5(a).

Notice of orders or judgments. Immediately upon the entry of an order or judgment the clerk shall serve notice of the entry by mail upon each party who is not in default for failure to appear, and shall make a note in the docket of the mailing. Fed.R. Civil P. 77(d). See also Fed.R.Crim.P. 49(c).

Notice of pendency. See Lis pendens.

Notice of protest. See Protest.

Notice of tax deficiency. See Ninety (90) day letter.

Notice of trial. A notice given by one of the parties in an action to the other, after an issue has been reached, that he intends to bring the cause forward for trial at the next term of the court.
Notice race statutes. In some jurisdictions, in recording of documents of title to real estate, the first grantee or mortgagee to record in the chain of title without actual notice of a prior unrecorded deed or mortgage prevails. Also known as Race-Notice Statute. See also Notice recording statutes; Recording acts.

Notice recording statutes. An unrecorded conveyance or other instrument is invalid as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser (creditor or mortgagee if the statute so provides) for value and without notice. Under this type of statute the subsequent bona fide purchaser prevails over the prior interest whether the subsequent purchaser records or not. Insofar as the subsequent purchaser is concerned, there is no premium on his race to the recorder's office. His priority is determined upon his status at the time he acquires his deed or mortgage. See also Recording acts.

Notice to appear. Shorthand expression for the form of summons or order of notice in which the defendant is ordered to appear and show cause why judgment should not be entered against him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(b). See also Show cause order; Summons.

Notice to creditors. Formal notification in bankruptcy proceeding to creditors of the bankrupt that a meeting will be held, or that proof of claims must be filed on or before a certain date, or that an order for relief has been granted. See Bankruptcy Code, § 342.

Notice to plead. A notice which, in the practice of the federal courts, and most state courts, is prerequisite to the taking judgment by default. It proceeds from the plaintiff, and warns the defendant that he must plead to the declaration or complaint within a prescribed time. Such notice is required in the summons. Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(b).

Notice to produce. Document by which party to civil or criminal action requests opposing party to submit specified papers, evidence, etc. needed for preparation of case and use at trial. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 30(b); Fed.R.Crim.P. 15(a), 26.2. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500. See Discovery; Inspection of documents.

Notice to quit. A written notice given by a landlord to his tenant, stating that the former desires to repossess himself of the demised premises, and that the latter is required to quit and remove from the same at a time designated, either at the expiration of the term, if the tenant is in under a lease, or immediately, if the tenancy is at will or by sufferance. The term is also sometimes applied to a written notice given by the tenant to the landlord, to the effect that he intends to quit the demised premises and deliver possession of the same on a day named.

Notification. See Notice.

Notify. To give notice to; to inform by words or writing, in person or by message, or by any signs which are understood; to make known. To "notify" one of a fact is to make it known to him; to inform him by notice. Fast v. Scruggs, 164 Okl. 196, 23 P.2d 383. See Notice.

Notio /nówshiyow/. Lat. In the civil law, the power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing causes and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction.

Notitia /nowshiyow/. Lat. Knowledge; information; intelligence; notice.

Notitia dictor a noscendo; et notitia non debet claudicare /nowshiyow disátor éy nášéndow ét nowshiyow nón débót klódákéry/. Notice is named from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt (i.e., be imperfect).

Not later than. "Within" or "not beyond" time specified.

Not less than. The words "not less than" signify in the smallest or lowest degree, at the lowest estimate; at least.

Notoriety /nowtárády/. The state of being notorious or universally well known.

Notorious /nowtoriá/. Generally known and talked of; well or widely known; forming a part of common knowledge, or universally recognized. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267. Open; generally or commonly known and spoken of.

Notorious cohabitation. The statutory offense in some jurisdictions committed by two persons who live together openly while not being married to each other. Such laws are seldom enforced.

Notorious insolvency. A condition of insolvency which is generally known throughout the community or known to the general class of persons with whom the insolvent has business relations.

Notorious possession. As a requisite of adverse possession, such possession that is so conspicuous that it is generally known and talked of by the public or the people in the neighborhood. Possession or character of holding in its nature having such elements of notoriety that the owner may be presumed to have notice of it and of its extent. See also Adverse possession.

Not possessed. A special traverse used in an action of trover, alleging that defendant was not possessed, at the time of action brought, of the chattels alleged to have been converted by him.

Not satisfied. A return sometimes made by sheriffs or constables to a writ of execution; but it is not a technical formula, and has been criticized by the courts as ambiguous and insufficient. See Nulla bona.

Not to be performed within one year. The clause "not to be performed within one year" includes any agreement which by a reasonable interpretation in view of all the circumstances does not admit of its performance, according to its language and intention, within one year from the time of its making.

N.O.V. See Non obstante veredicto.

Nova constituto futuris formam imponere debet non præteritis /nówvá kôngstátyowshiyow fyuwytyúras formam impónwariy debót nón præteríts/. A new state of the law ought to affect the future, not the past.
Novelise /nɔvəliz/ (or novelise constitute) /nɔvəli con- stət). The title given in English to the New Constitutions (Novellae Constitutiones) of Justinian and his successors, now forming a part of the Corpus Juris Civilis. See Novella.

Novel assignment. See New assignment.

Novatio non praesumitur /nɔvətʃiə疫情期间 nɔn prəsəmətər/. Novation is not presumed. See Restatement of Contracts, Second, § 280.

The requisites of a novation are a previous valid obligation, an agreement of all the parties to a new contract, the extinguishment of the old obligation, and the validity of the new one. Blythe v. Pentagon Federal Credit Union, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 892, 894.

In the civil law, there are three kinds of novation: where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one; where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted; where the debt and debtor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. Wheeler v. Wardell, 173 Va. 168, 3 S.E.2d 377, 380.

Novatio praesumitur /nɔvətʃiə疫情期间 prəsəmətər/. Novation is not presumed. See New assignment.

Novel dispositit. See Assise or assise (Assize of novel dispositit).

Novelle (or novelle constitutiones) /nɔvəli kənəstətɪkəs疫情期间 nɔvəli lyəʊnəs疫情期间). New constitutions; generally translated in English, "Novels." The Latin name of those constitutions which were issued by Justinian after the publication of his Code; most of them being originally written in Greek. After his death, a collection of 168 Novels was made, 154 of which had been issued by Justinian, and the rest by his successors. These were afterwards included in the Corpus Juris Civilis (q.v.), and now constitute one of its four principal divisions.

Novelle leonis /nɔvəli lyəʊnəs疫情期间/. The ordinances of the Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection con-tion the law is newly revealed which was for a long time hidden.

Novus homo /nówsəs hówmə/. Lat. A new man. This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, and so made, as it were, a "new man."

Now. At this time, or at the present moment; or at a time contemporaneous with something done. At the present time.

"Now" as used in a statute ordinarily refers to the date of its taking effect, but the word is sometimes used, not with reference to the moment of speaking but to a time contemporaneous with something done, and may mean at the time spoken of or referred to as well as at the time of speaking.

Word "now" used in will normally refers to time of testator's death; but, in light of context, may apply to date of will.

N.O.W. account. Negotiable Order of Withdrawal account. Form of interest bearing checking account.

Noxa /nóksə/. Lat. In the civil law, any damage or injury done to persons or property by an unlawful act committed by a man's slave or animal. An action for damages lay against the master or owner, who, however, might escape further responsibility by delivering up the offending agent to the party injured. "Noxa" was also used as the designation of the offense committed, and of its punishment, and sometimes of the slave or animal doing the damage.

Noxalis actio /noksəliəs əkəsh(i)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action which lay against the master of a slave, for some offense (as theft or robbery) committed or damage or injury done by the slave, which was called "noxa." Usually translated "noxious action."

Noxia /nóks(i)ya/. Lat. In the civil law, an offense committed or damaged done by a slave.

Noxious. Hurtful; offensive; offensive to the smell. The word "noxious" includes the complex idea both of insalubrity and offensiveness. That which causes or tends to cause injury, especially to health or morals.

N.P. An abbreviation for "notary public."

N.R. An abbreviation for "New Reports;" also for "not reported," and for "nonresident."

N.S. An abbreviation for "New Style."

NSF Check. Banking term meaning that there are "not sufficient funds" to cover check drawn on account. A check that is dishonored on presentment for payment because the drawer does not have sufficient funds in his or her account to cover its payment. See also Overdraft.

N.T.S.B. National Transportation Safety Board.

Nubilis /n(y)ùwbaləs/. Lat. In the civil law, marriageable; one who is of a proper age to be married.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit /n(y)ùwda pəksh(i)yow õbləgə́ʃiə̆liwə̀nəm nɔn pərət/. A naked agreement [i.e., without consideration] does not beget an obligation.

Nuda patientia /n(y)ùwda pəshəlikə̆n(ə)liwə̀/. Lat. Mere sufferance.

Nuda possession /n(y)ùwda pəzəsh(i)yow/. Lat. Bare or mere possession.

Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligan aequum debitor em /n(y)ùwda rəsh(i)yow ət n(y)ùwda pəksh(i)yow nɔn ligan ələkwə̀m dəbətorəm/. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor.

Nude. Naked. This word is applied metaphorically to a variety of subjects to indicate that they are lacking in some essential legal requisite.

Nude contract. One made without any consideration; upon which no action will lie, in conformity with the maxim "ex nudo pacto non oritur actio." 2 Bl.Comm. 445.

Nude matter. A bare allegation of a thing done, unsupported by evidence.

Nude pact. One without consideration; an executory contract without a consideration; a naked promise.

Nudum pactum /n(y)ùwdam pəkktəm/. A voluntary promise, without any other consideration than mere goodwill, or natural affection.

A naked pact; a bare agreement; a promise or undertaking made without any consideration for it.

Roman law. Informal agreements not coming within any of the privileged classes. They could not be sued on. The term was sometimes used with a special and rather different meaning to express the rule that a contract without delivery will not pass property.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa præter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fìt obligatio, et parit actionem /n(y)ùwdam pəkktəm ēst yùwbay nàla səbəst kɔəz pəytər kənvənəliwə̀nəm, səd yùwbay səbəst kəəz fìt õləgə́əliwə̀yow ət pərət əkəshə́liwə̀nəm/. A naked contract is where there is no consideration except the agreement; but, where there is a consideration, it becomes an obligation and gives a right of action.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio /n(y)ùwdam pəkktəm əks kwɔ əwə nɔn ɔrətər əkəsh(i)yow/. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises.

Nugatory /n(y)ùwɡəˈtɛrəri/. Futile; ineffectual; invalid; destitute of constraining force or vitality. A legislative act may be "nugatory" because unconstitutional. Avery & Co. v. Sorrell, 157 Ga. 476, 121 S.E. 828, 829.

Nuisance. Nuisance is that activity which arises from unreasonable, unwarranted or unlawful use by a person of his own property, working obstruction or injury to right of another, or to the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience and discomfort that law will presume resulting damage. State ex rel. Herman v. Cardon, 23 Ariz.App. 78, 530 P.2d 1115, 1118. That which annoys and disturbs one in possession of his property, rendering its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable to him; e.g., smoke, odors, noise, or vibration. Patton v. Westwood Country Club Co., 18 Ohio App.2d 137, 247 N.E.2d 761, 763, 47 O.O.2d 247. The term is incapable of exhaustive definition which will fit all cases, as it is very comprehensive and includes everything that endangers life or health, gives offense to senses, violates laws of decency, or obstructs reasonable and comfortable use of property. U.S. v. County Board of Arlington County, D.C.Va., 487 F.Supp. 137, 143. An offensive, annoying, unpleasant, or obnoxious thing or practice; a cause or source of annoyance, especially a continuing or repeated invasion or disturbance of another's right, or anything that works a hurt, inconvenience or damage. Renken v. Harvey Aluminum (Inc.), D.C.Or., 226 F.Supp. 169, 175.

Nuisances are commonly classed as public, private, and mixed. A public nuisance is one which affects an indefinite number of persons, or all the residents of a particular locality, or all people coming within the extent of its range or operation, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal. Maintaining a public nuisance is by act, or by failure to perform a legal duty, intentionally causing or permitting a condition to exist which injures or endangers the public health, safety or welfare. An invasion of a person's interest in the private use and enjoyment of land by any type of liability-forming conduct is termed a private nuisance. It is a tort against a private person, and actionable by him as such. As distinguished from public nuisance, a private nuisance includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of an individual or of a few persons or interferes with their lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which unreasonably hinders them in the enjoyment of a common or public right and causes them a special injury different from that sustained by the general public. Therefore, although the ground of distinction between public and private nuisances is still the injury to the community at large or, on the other hand, to a single individual, it is evident that the same thing or act may constitute a public nuisance and at the same time a private nuisance. A mixed nuisance is of the kind last described; that is, it is one which is both public and private in its effects,—public because it injures many persons or all the community, and private in that it also produces special injuries to private rights. Kelley v. New York, 6 Misc. 516, 27 N.Y.S. 164.

See also Anticipatory nuisance; Attractive nuisance doctrine; Common nuisance; Legalized nuisance; Offensive; Private nuisance; Public nuisance.

Abatement of a nuisance. The removal, stoppage, prostration, or destruction of that which causes a nuisance, whether by breaking or pulling it down, or otherwise removing, destroying, or effacing it. See also Abatable nuisance.

Actionable nuisance. See Actionable.

Assize of nuisance. In old English practice, this was a judicial writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which a nuisance existed, in which it was stated that the party injured complained of some particular fact done ad nocumementum liberi tenementi sui (to the nuisance of his freehold), and commanding the sheriff to summon an assize (that is, a jury) to view the premises, and have them at the next commission of assizes, that justice might be done, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 221.

Common nuisance. One which affects the public in general, and not merely some particular person; a public nuisance.

Continuing nuisance. An uninterrupted or periodically recurring nuisance; not necessarily a constant or unceasing injury, but a nuisance which occurs so often and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of that it can fairly be said to be continuous.

Maintaining a nuisance. To "maintain" a nuisance means something more than having knowledge of its existence; it means, in addition, preserving and continuing its existence either by some positive act or by acquiescence. People v. Campbell, 45 Misc.2d 201, 256 N.Y. S.2d 467.

Permanent nuisance. A nuisance of such a character that its continuance is necessarily an injury which will continue without change. One that cannot be readily abated at small expense.

Qualified nuisance. As distinguished from an "absolute nuisance," may consist of anything lawfully done or permitted to be done, so as to create a potential and reasonable risk of damage, which in due course results in injury to another. Wayman v. Board of Ed. of Akron City School Dist., 6 Ohio App.2d 94, 216 N.E.2d 637, 638. Compare, Absolute nuisance, above.

Temporary nuisance. A nuisance which can be corrected by the expenditure of labor or money. Pate v. City of Martin, Tenn., 614 S.W.2d 46, 48.

Nuisance at law. See Nuisance per se.

Nuisance in fact. Acts, occupations or structures which are not nuisances per se but may become nuisances by reason of the circumstances of the location and surroundings or manner in which it is performed or operated. Robichaux v. Happunbauer, 258 La. 139, 245 So.2d 385, 389.

Nuisance per accidentum /n(y)úwans pər áksadéns/. See Nuisance in fact.

Nuisance per se /n(y)úwans pər səj/. An act, occupation, or structure which is a nuisance at all times and under all circumstances, regardless of location or surroundings. Martin v. Martin v. State, 129 Mich.App. 100, 341 N.W.2d 239, 243; as, things prejudicial to public morals or dangerous to life or injurious to public rights; distinguished from things declared to be nuisances by statute, and also from things which constitute nuisances only when considered with reference to their particular location or other individual circumstances. The difference between a "nuisance per se" and a "nuis-sance per accidens" is that in the former, injury in some form is certain to be inflicted, while in the latter, the injury is uncertain or contingent until it actually occurs. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Feezell, 218 Tenn. 17, 400 S.W.2d 716, 719.

Nul. No; none. A law French negative particle commencing many phrases.

Nul agar à/nal agàrd/ No award. The name of a plea in an action on an arbitration bond, by which the defendant traverses the making of any legal award.

Nul charter, nul vente, ne nul done vault perpetual—

Nul disseisin /nal dasiyan/. In pleading, means no property. A plea of the general issue in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin.

Nul and void. Naught; of no validity or effect. Usual.

Nul disseisin /nal dasiyan/. In pleading, means no property. A plea of the general issue in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin.

Nul and void. Naught; of no validity or effect. Usually coupled with the word "void," as "null and void." The words "null and void," when used in a contract or statute are often construed as meaning "voidable." Burns Mortg. Co. v. Schwartz, C.C.A.N.J., 72 F.2d 991, 992. "Null and void" means that which binds no one or is incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances, or that which is of no effect. Zogby v. State, 53 Misc.2d 740, 279 N.Y.S.2d 665, 668. See also Void; Voidable.

Nulla bona /nala bowna/. Lat. No goods. The name of Nulla bona is incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances, or that which is of no effect.

Nul nulla bona /nala bowna/. Lat. No goods. The name of Nulla bona is incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances, or that which is of no effect.

Nul tiel corporation /nál tiyó kóparéyshàn/. No such corporation [exists]. The form of a plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation.

Nul tiel record /nál tiyó rékórd/. No such record. A plea denying the existence of any such record as that alleged by the plaintiff. It is the general plea in an action of debt on a judgment.

Judgment of nul tiel record occurs when some pleading denies the existence of a record and issue is joined thereon; the record being produced is compared by the court with the statement in the pleading which alleges it; and if they correspond, the party asserting its existence obtains judgment; if they do not correspond, the other party obtains judgment of nul tiel record (no such record).

Nul tort. In pleading, a plea of the general issue to a nul tort.

"Numbers" or the numbers game is Numbers game. No waste. The name of a plea in an action of waste. Denying the committing of waste, and forming the general issue.

Numbers game. "Numbers" or the numbers game is that game wherein the player wagers or plays that on a certain day a certain series of digits will appear or "come out" in a series such as the United States Treasury balance or pari-mutuel payoff totals of particular races at a certain racetrack for the day used as a reference, and though number of digits is fixed, usually at three, any player is free to select any number or quantity of numbers within the range of those digits, and designate amount of his wager upon each, and in such game neither number of players nor amount of money wagered nor total amount of payoffs can be predicted in any one day. U. S. v. Baker, C.A.Pa., 364 F.2d 107, 111. Federal and state laws regulate such activities (see e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1953). See also Lottery.

Numerata pecunia /néyúwmaréyta pсыýwñf(i)yá/. Lat. In the civil law, money told or counted; money paid by tale.

Numerical lottery. See Genoese lottery.

Nummata /náméyta/. The price of anything in money, as denariata is the price of a thing by computation of pence, and librata of pounds.

Nummata terræ /náméyta téhríy/. An acre of land.

Numciiatio /nánshiyéshiyów/. Lat. In the civil law, a solemn declaration, usually in prohibition of a thing; a protest.

Nuncto /nánshiyów/. The permanent official representative of the Pope at a foreign court or seat of government. They are called "ordinary" or "extraordinary," according as they are sent for general purposes or on a special mission.

Nuncius /nénsh(i)yá/š/. In international law, a messenger; a minister; the pope’s legate, commonly called a "nuncio."

Nunc pro tunc /nánk prów tánk/. Lat. Now for then. A phrase applied to acts allowed to be done after the time when they should be done, with a retroactive effect, i.e., with the same effect as if regularly done. Nunc pro tunc entry is an entry made now of something actually previously done to have effect of former date; office being not to supply omitted action, but to supply omission in record of action really had but omitted through inadvertence or mistake. Seabolt v. State, Okl. Cr., 357 P.2d 1014.

Nunc pro tunc merely describes inherent power of court to make its records speak the truth, i.e., to correct record at later date to reflect what actually occurred at trial. Simmons v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., D.C.S.C., 235 F.Supp. 325, 330. Nunc pro tunc signifies now for then, or, in other words, a thing is done now, which shall have same legal force and effect as if done at time when it ought to have been done. State v. Hatley, 72 N.M. 377, 384 P.2d 252, 254.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(b) permits amendment of pleadings to conform to evidence. Clerical mistakes in judgments, orders, or other parts of the record can be made by the court under Rule 60(a).

Nuncupare /néyúk(ý)apéry/. Lat. In the civil law, to pronounce orally or in words without writing.

Nuncupate /néyúkspéyť/. To declare publicly and solemnly.

Nuncupative will. An oral will declared or dictated by the testator in his last sickness before a sufficient number of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. A will made by the verbal declaration of the testator, and usually dependent merely on oral testimony for proof. Such wills are invalid in certain states, and in others are valid only under certain circumstances.

Nundinae /nándâniy/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a fair. In nundinis et mercatis /nándänés ét markéysh(i)yá/, in fairs and markets.

Nundination /nándänéysháni/. Traffic at fairs and markets; any buying and selling.

Nunquam crescit ex post facto praeteriti delicti aestimatio /nánshwem krésé éks pówst fíkkot póréhráty dalkéyt éstaméysh(i)yów/. The character of a past offense is never aggravated by a subsequent act or matter.

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarius /nánshwem dákhártar séd ékstr(3)dr-ordonéríyam séd yúwbay defásat ordáneríyam/. We are never to resort to what is extraordinary, but [until] what is ordinary fails.

Nunquam fictio sine lege /násíkwm físh(i)yów sányiy lílýyí/. There is no fiction without law.

Nunquam indebitatus /násíkwm indébétrytá/. Lat. Never indebted. The name of a plea in an action of indebitatus assumptis, by which the defendant alleges that he is not indebted to the plaintiff.
Nunquam nimis dicitur quod nunquam satis dicitur /nőŋkwem nimos disator kwōd nāŋkwem sēyts disator/. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much.

Nunquam res humane prospere succedunt ubi negliguntur divine /nāŋkwem rīy huu̯wmēniy próspariy saksīydant yūwbay nēlagāntar dāvāniy/. Human things never prosper where divine things are neglected.

Nuntius /nōŋshiyas/. In old English practice, a messenger. One who was sent to make an excuse for a party summoned, or one who explained as for a friend the reason of a party's absence. An officer of a court; a summoner, apparitor, or beadle.

Nuper obiit /n(y)ūwpər ōbiyat/. Lat. In practice, the name of a writ (now abolished) which, in the English law, lay for a sister coheiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee-simple.

Nuptiae secundae /nāpshiyiŋ səkəndiŋ/. Lat. A second marriage. In the canon law, this term included any marriage subsequent to the first.

Nuptial /nāpshal/. Pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit /nāpshiyas nōn kankyūwb̥ot̥as sēd kānšēn̥s fēysat̥/. Not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage.

Nurture. To give nourishment to, to feed; to bring up, or train; to educate. The act of taking care of children, bringing them up, and educating them.

Nurus /n(y)ūras/. Lat. In the civil law, a son's wife; a daughter-in-law.

Nycthemeron /nīktəmərōn/. The whole natural day, or day and night, consisting of twenty-four hours.

N.Y.S.E. New York Stock Exchange.
OASDI. Old Age, Survivors' and Disability Insurance. See Social Security Administration.

Oath. Any form of attestation by which a person signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform an act faithfully and truthfully, e.g. President's oath on entering office, Art. II, Sec. 1, U.S.Const. Vaughn v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 586, 177 S.W.2d 59, 60. An affirmation of truth of a statement, which renders one willfully asserting untrue statements punishable for perjury. An outward pledge by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of responsibility to God. A solemn appeal to the Supreme Being in attestation of the truth of some statement. An external pledge or asseveration, made in verification of statements made, or to be made, coupled with an appeal to a sacred or venerated object, in evidence of the serious and reverent state of mind of the party, or with an invocation to a supreme being to witness the words of the party, and to visit him with punishment if they be false. In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

See also Affirmation; Attestation; False swearing; Jurat; Loyalty oath; Pauper's oath; Verification.

Affirmation in lieu of oath. Fed.R.Civil P. 43 provides that whenever an oath is required under the rules, a solemn affirmation may be accepted in lieu thereof. See also Art. II, Sec. 1, and Art. VI, U.S.Const.

Assertory oath. One relating to a past or present fact or state of facts, as distinguished from a "promissory" oath which relates to future conduct; particularly, any oath required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office, such, for example, as an oath to be made at the custom-house relative to goods imported.

Corporal oath. See Corporal oath.

Decisive or decisory oath. In the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his charge, offered to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, which the adversary was bound to accept, to tender the same proposal back again, otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him.

Extrajudicial oath. One not taken in any judicial proceeding, or without any authority or requirement of law, though taken formally before a proper person.

False oath. See False swearing; Perjury.

Judicial oath. One taken in some judicial proceeding or in relation to some matter connected with judicial proceedings. One taken before an officer in open court, as distinguished from a "non-judicial" oath, which is taken before an officer ex parte or out of court. See also Witnesses, below.

Loyalty oath. See Oath of allegiance.

Oath of office. Various declarations of promises, made by persons who are about to enter upon the duties of a public office, concerning their performance of that office. An oath of office is required, by federal and state constitutions, and by various statutes, to be made by major and minor officials. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 544 (U.S. attorneys). See also Oath of allegiance; and Official oath, below.

Official oath. One taken by an officer when he assumes charge of his office, whereby he declares that he will faithfully discharge the duties of the same, or whatever else may be required by statute in the particular case. See Art. VI, U.S. Const. See also Oath of office above.

Poor debtor's oath. See Pauper's oath.

Promissory oaths. Oaths which bind the party to observe a certain course of conduct, or to fulfill certain duties, in the future, or to demean himself thereafter in a stated manner with reference to specified objects or obligations; such, for example, as the oath taken by a high executive officer, a legislator, a judge, a person seeking naturalization, an attorney at law. A solemn appeal to God, or, in a wider sense, to some superior sanction or a sacred or revered person in witness of the inviolability of a promise or undertaking.

Purgatory oath. An oath by which a person purges or clears himself from presumptions, charges or suspicions standing against him, or from a contempt.

Solemn oath. A corporal oath.

Suppletory oath. In the civil and ecclesiastical law, the testimony of a single witness to a fact is called "half-proof," on which no sentence can be founded; in order to supply the other half of proof, the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) is admitted to be examined in his own behalf, and the oath administered to him for that purpose is called the "suppletory oath," because it supplies the necessary quantum of proof on which to found the sentence. This term, although without application in American law in its original sense, is sometimes used as a designation of a party's oath required to be taken in authentication or support of some piece of documentary authentication or support of some piece of documentary evidence which he offers, for example, his books of account.

Voluntary oath. Such as a person may take in extrajudicial matters, and not regularly in a court of justice, or before an officer invested with authority to administer the same.

Witnesses. Before testifying, every witness shall be required to declare that he will testify, truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so. Fed.Evid.R. 603. See also Affirmation in lieu of oath, above.

Oath against bribery. In England, one which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854.

Oath ex officio. In old English law, the oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offense was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence.

Oath in litem. In the civil law, an oath permitted to be taken by the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the value of the subject-matter in controversy, when there was no other evidence on that point, or when the defendant fraudulently suppressed evidence which might have been available.

Oath of allegiance or loyalty. An oath by which a person promises and binds himself to bear true allegiance to a particular sovereign or government (e.g., the United States), and to support its Constitution, administered generally to certain public officers or officials, to members of the armed services, to attorneys on being admitted to the bar, to aliens applying for naturalization (8 U.S.C.A. § 1448), etc. Such oaths which are not overbroad have been upheld. Elfrandt v. Russell, 384 U.S. 11, 86 S.Ct. 1238, 16 L.Ed.2d 321; Cole v. Richardson, 405 U.S. 676, 92 S.Ct. 1332, 31 L.Ed.2d 593. As to oath of allegiance to the Constitution as required of President, members of Congress, and executive and judicial officers, see Art. II, Sec. 1, and Art. VI, U.S. Const. It is commonly provided that an affirmation may be given in lieu of an oath.

Oath of calumny. In the civil law, an oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not prompted by malice or trickery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action.

Oath-rite. The form used at the taking of an oath.

Ob. Lat. On account of; for. Several Latin phrases and maxims, commencing with this word, are more commonly introduced by "in" (q.v.).

Oberratus. Lat. In Roman law, a debtor who was obliged to serve his creditor until his debt was discharged.

Ob continentiam delicti. On account of contiguity to the offense, i.e., being contaminated by conjunction with something illegal.

Ob contingentiam. On account of connection; by reason of similarity.

Obedience. Compliance with a command, prohibition, or known law and rule of duty prescribed. The performance of what is required or enjoined by authority, or the abstaining from what is prohibited, in compliance with the command or prohibition.

Obedientia. An office, or the administration of it; a kind of rent; submission; obedience.

Obedientia est legis essentia. Obedience is the essence of the law.

Obediential obligation. See Obligation.

Obedientiarius; obedientiary. A monastic officer.

Ob favorem mercatorum. In favor of merchants.

Ob infamiam non solet juxta legem terras aliquis per legem apparentem se purgare, nisi prius convictus fuerit vel confessus in curia. On account of evil report, it is not usual, according to the law of the land, for any person to purge himself, unless he have been previously convicted, or confessed in court.

Obit. A funeral solemnity, or office for the dead. The anniversary of a person's death; the anniversary of a year.

Obiter. Lat. By the way; in passing; incidentally; collaterally.

Obiter dictum. Words of an opinion entirely unnecessary for the decision of the case. See Olds, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 155, 138 F.2d 581, 586. A remark made, or opinion expressed, by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, "by the way," that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon the question before him, or upon a point not necessarily involved in the determination of the cause, or introduced by way of illustration, or analogy or argument. Such are not binding as precedent. See Dicta; Dictum.

Obit sine prole. [He] died without issue.

Object. In legal proceedings, to object (e.g., to the admission of evidence) is to interpose a declaration to the effect that the particular matter or thing under consideration is not done or admitted with the consent of the party objecting, but is by him considered improper or illegal, and referring the question of its propriety or legality to the court. See also Objection.

Object. End aimed at, the thing sought to be accomplished; the aim or purpose, the thing sought to be attained.

Anything which comes within the cognizance or scrutiny of the senses, especially anything tangible or visible. Moore v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Vt. 218, 22
Objection. Act of objecting; that which is, or may be, presented in opposition; an adverse reason or argument; a reason for objecting or opposing; a feeling of disapproval.

The act of a party who objects to some matter or proceeding in the course of a trial, or an argument or reason urged by him in support of his contention that the matter or proceeding objected to is improper or illegal. Used to call the court's attention to improper evidence or procedure. Such objections in open court are important so that such will appear on the record for purposes of appeal. See Fed.Evid.R. 103(a)(1); Fed.R.Civ.P. 46, and Fed.R.Crim.P. 51. See also Contemporary objection rule; Object (b).

Objection to jury. See Challenge.

Objective symptom. Those which a surgeon or physician discovers from an examination of his patient; "subjective symptoms" being those which he learns from what his patient tells him. Schroeder v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Mo.App., 129 S.W.2d 917, 922.

Object of an action. Legal relief to prevent or redress the wrong. The thing sought to be obtained by the action; the remedy demanded or the relief or recovery sought or prayed for; not the same thing as the cause of action or the subject of the action.

Object of a statute. Aim, intent or purpose of its enactment. End or design which it is meant to accomplish, while the "subject" is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. Matter or thing forming groundwork of statute.

Objects of a power. Those among whom donee is given power to appoint.

Objurgatrix /objürjærtytraks/. In old English law, scolds or unquiet women were referred to as objurgatrices and were punished with the cucking-stool (q.v.).

Oblata /obléyta/. Gifts or offerings made to the king by any of his subjects; old debts, brought, as it were, together from preceding years, and put on the present sheriff's charge.

Oblata terre /obléyta téhrj/. Half an acre, or, as some say, half a perch, of land.

Oblate. See Oblati.

Oblate Rolls. Chancery Rolls (1199-1641), called also Fine Rolls, containing records of payments to the king by way of oblate or fine for the grant of privileges, or by way of amercement for breach of duty.

Oblati /obléytay/. In old European law, voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries.

Oblati actio /obléyta aésh(iy)ow/. In the civil law, an action given to a party against another who had offered to him a stolen thing, which was found in his possession.

Oblatio /obléysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a tender of money in payment of a debt made by debtor to creditor. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious.

Oblation. Oblations, or obventions, are offerings or customary payments made, in England, to the minister of a church, including fees on marriages, burials, mortuaries, etc. (q.v.), and Easter offerings. They may be commuted by agreement.

Oblationes dicuntur quæcunque a piis fideli­busque christianis offeruntur deo et ecclesiæ, sive res solidae sive mobiles /obléyshiyowniyz dákñàtor kwikjákwyw i½ páyas fádlíyabískwiw krisišiyow nas fárántar diyow ét aklíyiwyi, sáviy ríyz sôldíy sáviy mówbélyiyz/. Those things are called "oblations" which are offered to God and to the Church by pious and faithful Christians, whether they are movable or immovable.

Obligate. To bind or constrain; to bind to the observance or performance of a duty; to place under an obligation. To bind one's self by an obligation or promise; to assume a duty; to execute a written promise or covenant; to make a writing obligatory.

Obligatio /obléysh(iy)ow/. Lat. In Roman law, a legal bond which obliges the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. It corresponded nearly to our word contract. The legal relation existing between two certain persons whereby one (the creditor) is authorized to demand of the other (the debtor) a certain performance which has a money value. In this sense obligatio signifies not only the duty of the debtor, but also the right of the creditor. The fact establishing such claim and debt, as also the instrument evidencing it, is termed "obligation."

Obligatio civilis /obléysh(iy)ow sívalas/. An obligation enforceable by action, whether it derives its origin from the jus civilis, as the obligation engendered by formal contracts or the obligation enforceable by bilaterally penal suits, or from such portion of the jus gentium as had been completely naturalized in the civil law and protected by all its remedies, such as the obligation engendered by formless contracts.

Obligatio ex contractu /obléysh(iy)ow èks kontráct(y)uw/. An obligation arising from contract, or an antecedent jus in personam. In this there are two stages—first, a primary or sanctioned personal right antecedent to wrong, and, afterwards, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong.

Obligatio ex delicto, or obligatio ex maleficio /obléysh(iy)ow èks dalíkto/n /málafsh(iy)ow/. An obligation founded on wrong or tort, or arising from the invasion of a jus in rem. In this there is the second stage, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong, but the first stage is not a personal right (jus in personam), but a real right (jus in rem), Obligation. A generic word, derived from the Latin substantive “obligatio,” having many, wide, and varied meanings, according to the context in which it is used. That which a person is bound to do or forbear; any duty imposed by law, promise, contract, relations of society, courtesy, kindness, etc. Helvering v. British-American Tobacco Co., C.C.A., 69 F.2d 528, 530. Law or duty binding parties to perform their agreement. An undertaking to perform. That which constitutes a legal or moral duty and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it; a word of broad meaning, and the particular meaning intended is to be gained by consideration of its context. An obligation or debt may exist by reason of a judgment as well as an express contract, in either case there being a legal duty on the part of the one bound to comply with the promise. Schwartz v. California Claim Service, 52 Cal.App.2d 47, 125 P.2d 883, 888. Liabilities created by contract or law (i.e. judgments). Rose v. W. B. Worthen Co., 186 Ark. 205, 53 S.W.2d 15, 16. As legal term word originally meant a sealed bond, but it now extends to any certain written promise to pay money or do a specific thing. Lee v. Kenan, C.C.A.Fla., 78 F.2d 425. A formal and binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain sum or do a certain thing. United States v. One Zumstein Briefmarken Katalog 1938, D.C. Pa., 24 F.Supp. 516, 519. The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract, or of law, civil, political, or moral, independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty. See also Contract; Duty; Liability.

Absolute obligation. One which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfillment according to the engagement.

Conjunctive or alternative obligation. The former is one in which the several objects in it are connected by a copulative, or in any other manner which shows that all of them are severally comprised in the contract. This contract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects; and the debtor, when he wishes to discharge himself, may force the creditor to receive them separately. But where the things which form the object of the contract are separated by a disjunctive, then the obligation is alternative, and the performance of either of such things will discharge the obligor. The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of an alternative obligation. Civ.Code La. arts. 2063, 2066, 2067.

Contractual obligation. One which arises from a contract or agreement. See Contract; Impairing the obligation of contracts.

Current obligation. See Current obligations.

Determinate or indeterminate obligation. A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus, in which case the obligation can be discharged only by delivering the identical horse. An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

Divisible or indivisible obligation. A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided, with or without the consent of the parties. An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share.

Express or implied obligation. Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation, while implied obligations are such as are raised by the implication or inference of the law from the nature of the transaction.

Failure to meet obligations. See Failure to meet obligations.

Joint or several obligation. A joint obligation is one by which two or more obligors bind themselves jointly for the performance of the obligation. A several obligation is one where the obligors promise, each for himself, to fulfill the engagement.

Moral obligation. A duty which is valid and binding in conscience and according to natural justice, but is not recognized by the law as adequate to set in motion the machinery of justice; that is, one which rests upon ethical considerations alone, and is not imposed or enforced by positive law. A duty which would be enforceable by law, were it not for some positive rule, which, with a view to general benefit, exempts the party in that particular instance from legal liability. See also Love and affection.

Natural or civil obligation. A natural obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice. As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished. Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U.S. 213, 337, (12 Wheat.) 6 L.Ed. 606. A civil obligation is a legal tie, which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law.

Obediential obligation. One incumbent on parties in consequence of the situation or relationship in which they are placed.

Perfect or imperfect obligation. A perfect obligation is one recognized and sanctioned by positive law; one of which the fulfillment can be enforced by the aid of the law. But if the duty created by the obligation operates only on the moral sense, without being enforced by any positive law, it is called an "imperfect obligation," and creates no right of action, nor has it any legal operation. The duty of exercising gratitude, charity, and the other merely moral duties are examples of this kind of obligation. Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U.S. 595, 600, 24 L.Ed. 793.

Personal or heritable obligation. An obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. It is personal when none but the obligee can enforce the performance, or when it can be enforced only against the obligor. An obligation may be personal as to the obligee, and heritable as to the obligor, and it may in like manner be heritable as to the obligee, and personal as to the obligor. For the term personal obligation, as used in a different sense, see the next paragraph.

Personal or real obligation. A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance. A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

Primary or secondary obligation. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract. For example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or secondary obligation to pay damages for non-doing so. The words “primary” and “direct,” contrasted with “secondary,” when spoken with reference to an obligation, refer to the remedy provided by law for enforcing the obligation, rather than to the character and limits of the obligation itself.

A primary obligation, which in one sense may also be called a principal obligation, is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled. A secondary obligation is one which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primary cannot be. For example, if one sells his house, he binds himself to give a title; but if he finds he cannot, as when the title is in another, then his secondary obligation is to pay damages for non-performance of the obligation.

Principal or accessory obligation. A principal obligation is one which arises from the principal object of the engagement of the contracting parties; while an accessory obligation depends upon or is collateral to the principal. For example, in the case of the sale of a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on the part of the vendor is to make title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver all the title-papers which the vendor has relating to it, to take care of the estate until it is delivered, and the like. See, further, the title Accessory obligation.

Pure obligation. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been accomplished. See Simple or conditional obligation, below.

Simple or conditional obligation. Simple obligations are such as are not dependent for their execution on any event provided for by the parties, and which are not agreed to become void on the happening of any such event. Conditional obligations are such as are made to depend on an uncertain event. If the obligation is not to take effect until the event happens, it is a suspensive condition; if the obligation takes effect immediately, but is liable to be defeated when the event happens, it is then a resolutory condition. A simple obligation is also defined as one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, the condition has been fulfilled; and a conditional obligation is also defined as one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

Single or penal obligation. A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. A single obligation is one without any penalty, as where one simply promises to pay another one hundred dollars. This is called a single bill, when it is under seal.

Solidary obligation. In the law of Louisiana, one which binds each of the obligors for the whole debt, as distinguished from a “joint” obligation, which binds the parties each for his separate proportion of the debt. Groves v. Sentell, 153 U.S. 465, 14 S.Ct. 898, 38 L.Ed. 785. See Solidary.

Obligatio naturalis. An obligation not immediately enforceable by action; one deriving its validity from the law of nature, or one imposed by that portion of the jus gentium which is only imperfectly recognized by civil law.

Obligationes ex delicto or ex maleficio. Obligations arising from the commission of a wrongful injury to the person or property of another.

"Delictum" is not exactly synonymous with "tort," for, while it includes most of the wrongs known to the common law as torts, it is also wide enough to cover some offenses (such as theft and robbery) primarily injurious to the individual, but now only punished as crimes. Such acts gave rise to an obligatio, which consisted in the liability to pay damages.

Obligationes ex variis causarum figuris. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to four classes, namely obligationes ex contractu, quasi ex contractu, ex maleficio and quasi ex maleficio, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and gave to this class the above designation.

Obligationes quasi ex contractu. Often persons who have not contracted with each other, under a certain state of facts, are regarded by the Roman law as if they had actually concluded a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a contract Obligation, is therefore termed oblataio quasi ex contractu. Obligations in the nature of a contract called quasi contract or implied in law contract. See Contract.

Such a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority (negotiorum gestion) or unauthorized agency; from the management of property that is in common when the community arose from casualty (communio incident) from the payment of what was not due (solutio indebiti); from tutorship and curatorship (tutela et cura); resembling the relation of guardian and ward; from taking possession of an inheritance (additto hereditatis and agnotio bonorum possessionis); and in many other cases.

Obligationes quasi ex delicto, or obligationes quasi ex maleficio /oblageshioyowniiz kwazyay ekdak-tow/*mælafish(y)ow/. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract.

Obligation of a contract. That which the law in force when contract is made obliges parties to do or not to do, and the remedy and legal means to carry it into effect. The "obligation of a contract" is the duty of performance. The term includes everything within the obligatory scope of the contract, and it includes the means of enforcement.

Obligation solidaire /oblagesyown solidër/. This, in French law, corresponds to joint and several liability in English law, but is applied also to the joint and several rights of the creditors and parties to the obligation.

Oblatio Prætoriz /oblagesh(y)ow pratoriyiy/. The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civile. In the course of time, however, the praeatorial jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them; hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles and obligationes prætoriz.

Obligatory pact. See Pact.

Obligatory rights. See Right.

Obligatory writing. See Writing obligatory.

Obligee /obbje/. A promisee. The person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. The party to whom such person else is obligated under a contract. Thus, if C loans money to D, C is the obligee and D is the obligor under the loan. The party to whom a bond is given.

Obligor /öblagor/öblagor/. A promisor. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Person obligated under a contract or bond.

Obesignare /ōbsignāri/. Lat. In the civil law, to seal up; as money that had been tendered and refused.

Obsignatory /ōbsigna(t)sīri/. Ratifying and confirming.

Obsolence. Condition or process of falling into disuse. The diminution in value of property caused by changes in technology, public taste, and new inventions rendering the property less desirable on the market. A decline in market value of an asset caused by improved alternatives becoming available that will be more cost-effective; such decline in market value is unrelated to physical changes in the asset itself. The process whereby property, because of causes other than physical deterioration, loses its economic usefulness to taxpayer. Anaconda Co. v. Property Tax Dept., App., 94 N.M. 202, 608 P.2d 514, 619. See also Economic obsolescence; Functional obsolescence.

Obsolent. Becoming obsolete; going out of use; not entirely disused, but gradually becoming so. See Obsolescence.

Obsolete. That which is no longer used. Becker v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 403, 416. Disused; neglected; not observed. See also Obsolescence.

Obstreperous. Another word for Obstructing mails. See see also Censor; Censorship; Lewd; Obscene; Pander (Pandering of obscenity); Profanity.

Obscurantism. The belief in one's ignorance and the ignorance of others, which is manifested by opposing all knowledge, truth, and progress. Obscurantism is often characterized by a lack of openness to new ideas and a resistance to evidence-based decision-making. Obscurantism manifests itself in a range of ways, from rejecting scientific knowledge to promoting alternative explanations for phenomena that are supported by overwhelming evidence. Obscurantism can be found in many forms, including religious beliefs, political ideologies, and cultural traditions, all of which may manifest themselves in a resistance to the advancement of science and technology. Obscurantism is often used to describe situations where knowledge and evidence are suppressed or denied, and where the pursuit of knowledge is obstructed or hindered.
Obstructing process. In criminal law, the act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent or do prevent the execution of lawful process. Obstructing legal process or official duty is knowingly and willfully obstructing, resisting or opposing any person authorized by law to serve process or order of a court, or in the discharge of any official duty. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1501 et seq. See also Obstructing justice.

Obstruction. A hindrance, obstacle, or barrier. Delay, impeding or hindering. See also Obstruct.

Obstruction to navigation. Any unnecessary interference with the free movements of vessels.

Obtain. To get hold of by effort; to get possession of; to procure; to acquire, in any way. State v. Bowdry, 346 Mo. 1090, 145 S.W.2d 127, 129. See also False pretenses. Obtaining money or property by false pretenses. See False pretenses.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi /obtémperándam ét kóstwati(y)úwdanay räsh(i)yánéybaly ténkwam liýjay/. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed as a law.

Obtest /abtést/. To protest.

Obtulit se /óbtlát síy/. Offered himself. In old English practice, the emphatic words of entry on the record where one party offered himself in court against the other, and the latter did not appear.

Octroi /oktryoi/oktrwai/. Fr. In French law, originally, a toll or duty, which, by the permission of the seigneur, any city was accustomed to collect on liquors and some other goods, brought within its precincts, for the consumption of the inhabitants. Afterwards appropriated to the use of the king.

Odal /odiyl/. Complete property, as opposed to feudal tenure. Blackstone notes the relation of this word to "alodial".

Odal right /odiyl raity/. An alodial right.

Odd lot. An amount of stock less than the established 100-share unit or 10-share unit of trading: from 1 to 99 shares for the great majority of issues, 1 to 9 for so-called inactive stocks. Compare Round lot.

Odd lot doctrine. Doctrine which permits finding of total disability where claimant is not altogether incapacitated for any kind of work but is nevertheless so handicapped that he will not be able to obtain regular employment in any well-known branch of the competitive labor market absent superhuman efforts, sympathetic friends or employers, a business boom, or temporary good luck. Vester v. Diamond Lumber Co., 21 Or.App. 587, 535 P.2d 1373, 1376. Under the "odd-lot doctrine", worker's compensation claimant will be considered to be totally disabled if it appears probable that claimant cannot sell his services in a competitive labor market. Hill v. U. S. Plywood-Champion Co., 12 Or.App. 1, 503 P.2d 728, 730.

Odd lot order. Order for less than 100 shares of stock.

Odiosa et inhonestas sunt in lege presumption /owdiowwos et in(h)anestha non sain in liyjiy pr(e)z(y)omenda/. Odius and dishonest acts are not presumed in law.

Odiosa non presumption /owdiowwos non prez(y)omanted/. Odious things are not presumed.

Odius /owd(i)yas/. Synonymous with infamous; hateful; repugnant.

Odium /owdiyam/. Condition or fact of being subjected to hatred and dislike. In venue statute, it implies such a general ill-feeling toward a party to an action as will render it uncertain whether the cause can be tried by impartial triers, free from an atmosphere impregnated with malice or corrupting prejudices.

(Economicus /iykonomakos/. L. Lat. In old English law, the executor of a last will and testament.

(Economus /iykonomay/. Lat. In the civil law, a manager or administrator.

Of. A term denoting that from which anything proceeds; indicating origin, source, descent, and the like; as, he is of noble blood. Associated with or connected with, usually in some causal relation, efficient, material, formal, or final. The word has been held equivalent to after; at, or belonging to; in possession of; manufactured by; residing at; from.

Of age. See Legal age; Majority.

Of counsel. A phrase commonly applied in practice to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, and particularly to one employed to assist in the preparation or management of an action, or its presentation on appeal, but who is not the principal attorney of record for the party. United States attorney is "of counsel" to United States in all criminal prosecutions brought within his district, for purposes of mandatory judicial disqualification statute requiring judge to disqualify himself in any case in which he has been of counsel. Barry v. U.S., C.A.III., 528 F.2d 1094, 1098.

Term is also used to refer to retired or semi-retired member of a law firm, or outside attorney that only does occasional or special legal work for the firm.

Of course. As a matter of right. Jones v. McGonigle, 327 Mo. 457, 37 S.W.2d 892. Any action or step taken in the course of judicial proceedings which will be allowed by the court upon mere application, without any request or contest, or which may be effectually taken without having to apply to the court for leave to take such action; e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 15(a) permits a party to amend his pleadings once as a matter "of course" at any time before a responsive pleading is served.

Off-board. This term may refer to transactions over-the-counter in unlisted securities, or to a transaction involving listed shares which was not executed on a national securities exchange.

Offender. Commonly used in statutes to indicate person implicated in the commission of a crime and includes person guilty of a misdemeanor or driving offense. State ex rel. Smith v. Jameson, 70 S.D. 503, 19 N.W.2d 505, 508.

Offense. A felony or misdemeanor; a breach of the criminal laws; violation of law for which penalty is prescribed. The word "offense," while sometimes used in various senses, generally implies a felony or a misdemeanor infringing public as distinguished from mere private rights, and punishable under the criminal laws, though it may also include the violation of a criminal statute for which the remedy is merely a civil suit to recover the penalty. An act clearly prohibited by the lawful authority of the state, providing notice through published laws. State v. Sykes, Fla., 434 So.2d 325, 328.

Criminal offenses may be classified into general categories as felonies and misdemeanors and as offenses against the person (e.g. murder, manslaughter), against habitation and occupancy (e.g. burglary, arson), against property (e.g. larceny), against morality and decency (e.g. adultery), against public peace, against government (e.g. treason). See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1. Also, for sentencing purposes, offenses may be classified by letter grades, as e.g. class A, B, C, etc. felonies or misdemeanors. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3559.

See also Anticipatory offense; Civil offense; Continuing offense; Crime; Degrees of crime; Delict; Felony; Grad ed offense; Included offense; Index offenses; Joint offense; Lesser included offense; Misdemeanor; Multiple offenses; Petty offense; Same offense; Tort.

Continuing offense. A transaction or a series of acts set on foot by a single impulse, and operated by an uninter mittent force, no matter how long a time it may occupy. Conspiracy is an example of a continuing offense. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3237; 21 U.S.C.A. § 848.

Criminal offense. Includes misdemeanors as well as felonies. It is an offense which subjects the offender to imprisonment, and/or fine. See Crime; Degrees of crime; Felony; Misdemeanor.

Joinder of offenses. See Joinder.

Same offense. As used in a provision against double jeopardy, the term means the same crime, not the same transaction, acts, circumstances, or situation.

Second offense. One committed after conviction for a first offense. It is the previous conviction, and not the indictment, which is the basis of the charge of a second offense. People v. Boardman, 172 App.Div. 733, 159 N.Y.S. 577.

Offensive. In the law relating to nuisances and similar matters, this term means noxious, causing annoyance, discomfort, or painful or disagreeable sensations. In ordinary use, the term is synonymous with "obnoxious" and means objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing and distasteful.

Offensive and defensive league. In international law, a league binding the contracting powers not only to aid each other in case of aggression upon either of them by a third power, but also to support and aid each other in active and aggressive measures against a power with which either of them may engage in war.

Offensive language. Language adapted to give offense; displeasing or annoying language. See Defamation; Libel; Slander.

Offensive weapon. As occasionally used in criminal law and statutes, a weapon primarily meant and adapted for attack and the infliction of injury, but practically the term includes anything that would come within the description of a "deadly" or "dangerous" weapon (q.v.).

Offer. v. To bring to or before; to present for acceptance or rejection; to hold out or proffer; to make a proposal to; to exhibit something that may be taken or received or not. To attempt or endeavor; to make an effort to effect some object, as, to offer to bribe; in this sense used principally in criminal law.

In trial practice, to "offer" evidence is to state its nature and purport, or to recite what is expected to be proved by a given witness or document, and demand its admission. See Offer of proof.

Offer, n. A proposal to do a thing or pay an amount, usually accompanied by an expected acceptance, counter offer, return promise or act. A manifestation of willingness to enter into a bargain, so made as to justify another person in understanding that his assent to that bargain is invited and will conclude it. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 24. A promise; a commitment to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future. An act on the part of one person whereby that person gives to another the legal power of creating the obligation called contract. McCarty v. Verson Allsteel Press Co., 44 Ill.Dec. 570, 576, 89 Ill.App.3d 498, 411 N.E.2d 936, 942. The offer creates a power of acceptance permitting the offeree by accepting the offer to transform the offeror's promise into a contractual obligation. See also Offer and acceptance.

An attempt; endeavor.

With respect to securities, the price at which a person is ready to sell. Opposed to bid, the price at which one is ready to buy. See also Offering.

See also Bid; Counteroffer; Firm offer; Issue; Offer and acceptance; Offer of proof; Promise; Proposal; Tender; Utter.

Irrevocable offer. One which may not be withdrawn after it has been communicated without the consent of the offeree.

Public exchange offer. A technique by which an aggressor corporation seeks to obtain control over a target corporation by offering to exchange a package of its securities for the target corporation's voting shares. Usually, a specified number of target corporation shares must be presented for exchange before the exchange will take place.

Offer and acceptance. In a bilateral contract, the two elements which constitute mutual assent, a requirement of the contract. In a unilateral contract, the acceptance is generally the act or performance of the offeree, though, in most jurisdictions, a promise to perform is inferred if the offeree commences the undertaking and the offeror attempts to revoke before the offeree has had an opportunity to complete the act. See also Offer; Parol evidence rule.

Offeree. In contracts, the person to whom an offer is made by the offeror.

Offering. An issue of securities offered for sale to the public or private group. Securities offerings are generally of two types: primary (proceeds going to the company for some lawful purpose) and secondary (where the funds go to a person other than the company; i.e., selling stockholders). Primary offerings are also termed "new issues" as they involve the issuance of securities not previously offered and sold. See also Issue; Letter of comment; Prospectus; Red herring; Registration statement; Secondary distribution; Secondary offering; Tombstone ad; Underwrite.

Interstate offerings. A public securities offering made or which may be made to residents of more than one state. Such offerings are regulated by federal securities laws and regulations.

Intrastate offerings. A restricted public securities offering which is made by an issuer organized under the laws of a state, doing its principal business in such state and offered solely to bona fide residents of such state with substantially all of the proceeds of the offering remaining in the state.

Private offerings. An offering made to a limited number of persons, who are so well-informed concerning the affairs of a company, through the possession of information which would be found in a registration statement, that they do not require the protection afforded by the disclosure provisions of the Securities Act of 1933. Sale of unregistered stock which is exempt from securities laws. U.S. v. Custer Channel Wing Corp., D.C.Md., 247 F.Supp. 461, 487. See also Private offering.

Public offerings. The offering of securities at random and in general to anyone who will buy, and whether solicited or unsolicited. Sale of stock to the public in contrast to a "private" offering or placement. Public offerings are generally regulated by federal and state laws and regulations. See also Underwrite.

Undigested offering. Newly issued shares and bonds that remain undistributed because there is insufficient public demand at the offer price. See also Underwrite.

Offering circular. An offering circular is required to be filed with the S.E.C. and distributed with any securities offerings. The content of such is similar to the prospectus (q.v.) and is governed by S.E.C. rules and regulations. See also Prospectus.

Offering price. Per share price at which new or secondary offering of stock is sold.

Offerings. In English ecclesiastical law, personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of a parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, churching of women, burials, etc., or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, etc. See Oblation; Obventio.

Offering statement. See Offering circular.

Offer of compromise. An offer to settle a dispute or difference amicably for the purpose of avoiding a lawsuit and without admitting liability. A tender or offer to settle or compromise a claim. The fact that such offer has been made is generally not admissible at the trial of the action as an admission of liability. See Fed.Evid. Rule 408.

Offer of judgment. See Judgment.

Offer of proof. At a trial or hearing, when an objection to a question has been sustained, the party aggrieved by the ruling may indicate for the record (out of the presence of the jury) the answer which would have been given if the question had not been excluded. The appellate court is then in a position to determine from the record the correctness of the ruling and the prejudice in its exclusion, if any. See Fed.Evid.Rule 103(a)(2).

Offeror. In contracts, the party who makes the offer and looks for acceptance from the offeree.

Offertorium /əˈfɔːtərɪəm/. In English ecclesiastical law, the offerings of the faithful, or the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of the Communion.

Office. A right, and correspondent duty, to exercise a public trust. A public charge or employment. An employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental. The most frequent occasions to use the word arise with reference to a duty and power conferred on an individual by the government; and, when this is the connection, "public office" is a usual and more discriminating expression. But a power and duty may exist without immediate grant from government, and may be properly called an "office;" as the office of executor. Here the individual acts towards legatees in performance of a duty, and in exercise of a power not derived from their consent, but devolved on him by an authority which quoad hoc is superior.

An "assigned duty" or "function." Synonyms are "post," "appointment," "situation," "place," "position," and "office" commonly suggests a position of (especially public) trust or authority. Also right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. A public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. Although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act, or to perform a service, without becoming an officer. But, if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rule prescribed by the government, which an individual is appointed by the government to perform, who enters upon the duties appertain to his status, without any contract defining them, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duty from an officer. In the constitutional sense, the term implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power, either in making, executing, or administering the laws.

A place for the regular transaction of business or performance of a particular service.

As to various particular offices, see Home office; Land offices; Public office, etc.

County office. Public office filled by the electorate of the entire county.

Judicial office. See Judicial.

Lucrative office. See Lucrative.

Ministerial office. One which gives the officer little or no discretion as to the matter to be done, and requires him to obey mandates of a superior. It is a general rule that a judicial office cannot be exercised by a deputy, while a ministerial office may. See Ministerial.

Office audit. An audit by the Internal Revenue Service of a taxpayer's return which is conducted in the agent's office. It may be distinguished from a correspondence audit or a field audit. See also Audit.

Office copy. A copy or transcript of a deed or record or any filed document, made by the officer having it in custody or under his sanction, and by him sealed or certified.

Office grant. A designation of a conveyance made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title; such, for example, as a tax-deed.

Office hours. That portion of the day during which offices are usually open for the transaction of business.

Office of honor. See Honor.

Office of judge. In old English law, a criminal suit in an ecclesiastical court, not being directed to the reparation of a private injury, was regarded as a proceeding emanating from the office of the judge, and could be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But, in practice, these suits were instituted by private individuals, with the permission of the judge or his surrogate; and the private prosecutor in any such case was, accordingly, said to "promote the office of the judge."

Principal office. The principal office of a corporation is its headquarters, or the place where the chief or principal affairs and business of the corporation are transacted. Usually it is the office where the company's books are kept, where its meetings of stockholders are held, and where the directors, trustees, or managers assemble to discuss and transact the important general business of the company; but no one of these circumstances is a controlling test. Synonymous with "principal place of business," being the place where the principal affairs of a corporation are transacted.

The office (in or out of the state of incorporation) so designated in the annual report where the principal executive offices of a domestic or foreign corporation are located. Rev.Model Bus.Corp.Act, § 1.40.

Public office. The right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of government for the benefit of the public. An agency for the state, the duties of which involve in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, either great or small.

State office. Public offices to be filled by the electorate of the entire state.

Office-block ballot. A form of ballot in which the names of candidates, with or without party designations, are grouped under the offices for which they are contesting; also called "Massachusetts" ballot.

Office of Personnel Management. Created in 1978, the Office of Personnel Management is responsible for the nationwide recruiting and examining of applicants for positions in the Federal civil service. The OPM also administers the Qualifications Review Board examining process for career Senior Executive Service appointments and examines for administrative law judges. Personnel investigations are used in support of the selection and appointment processes.

Office of Thrift Supervision. An office in the Treasury Department charged with providing for the examination, safe and sound operation, and regulation of savings associations.

Officer. Person holding office of trust, command or authority in corporation, government, armed services, or other institution or organization.

In corporations, a person charged with important functions of management such as president, vice president, treasurer, etc.

In determining whether one is an "officer" or "employee," important tests are the tenure by which a position is held, whether its duration is defined by the statute or ordinance creating it, or whether it is temporary or transient or for a time fixed only by agreement; whether it is created by an appointment or election, or merely by a contract of employment by which the rights of the parties are regulated; whether the compensation is by a salary or fees fixed by law, or by a sum agreed upon by the contract of hiring.

For definitions of the various classes and kinds of officers, see the titles Commissioned office; Constitutional; Corporate; Executive; Fiscal; Judicial; Legislative; Ministerial; Municipal; Naval; Non-commissioned; Peace; Public; State; Subordinate.
OFFICER

Civil officer. The word “civil,” as regards civil officers, is commonly used to distinguish those officers who are in public service but not of the military. Hence, any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the armed services.

Military officer. Commissioned officer in armed services. Officer who has command in armed forces.

Officer de facto. As distinguished from an officer de jure; this is the designation of one who is in the actual possession and administration of the office, under some colorable or apparent authority, although his title to the same, whether by election or appointment, is in reality invalid or at least formally questioned. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178. One who actually assumes and exercises duties of public office under color of known and authorized appointment or election, but who has failed to comply with all requirements of law prescribed as precedent to performance of duties of the office. State v. Whelan, 103 Idaho 651, 651 P.2d 916, 920.

Officer de jure. One who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office. One who is clothed with the full legal right and title to the office; he is one who has been legally elected or appointed to an office, and who has qualified himself to exercise the duties thereof according to the mode prescribed by law. Trost v. Tynatishon, 12 Ill.App.3d 406, 299 N.E.2d 14, 17.

Officer of justice. A general name applicable to all persons connected with the administration of the judicial department of government, but commonly used only of the class of officers whose duty is to serve the process of the courts, such as sheriffs, constables, bailiffs, marshals, sequestrators, etc.

Officer of the United States. An officer nominated by the President and confirmed by the senate or one who is appointed under an act of congress, by the President alone, a court of law, or a head of a department. U.S. v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 8 S.Ct. 505, 31 L.Ed. 463. See also United States officer.

Public officer. An officer of a public corporation; that is, one holding office under the government of a municipality, state, or nation. One occupying a public office created by law. One of necessary characteristics of “public officer” is that he performs public function for public benefit and in so doing he be vested with exercise of some sovereign power of state.

Warrant officer. Officer of armed forces, with rank between commissioned and non-commissioned officer, holding rank by virtue of warrant.

Officia judicialia non concedantur antequam vacant /jëdëshiyëlyly nôn könësdántör ântak-wom véyànt/. Judicial offices should not be granted before they are vacant.

Official, n. An officer; a person invested with the authority of an office. See also Officer.

In Canon law, a person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction.

In Civil law, the minister or appraiser of a magistrate or judge.

Official, adj. Pertaining to an office; invested with the character of an officer; proceeding from, sanctioned by, or done by, an officer. Authorized act.

As to official Bond; Liquidator; Log Book; Newspaper; Oath; Use, see those titles.

Demi-official. Partly official or authorized. Having color of official right.

Official act. One done by an officer in his official capacity under color and by virtue of his office. Authorized act.

Official misconduct. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in its character, including any willful or corrupt failure, refusal, or neglect of an officer to perform any duty enjoined on him by law. See Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Official bond. Type of fidelity bond required to be posted by certain public officials to indemnify the government, municipality or court in the event of defalcation by the officer.

Official Gazette. Weekly publication of U.S. Patent and Trademark Office containing patent and trademark notices and applications, as well as mark registrations.

Official immunity doctrine. Doctrine of “official immunity” provides that government officials enjoy an absolute privilege from civil liability should the activity in question fall within the scope of their authority and if the action undertaken requires the exercise of discretion, and this rule of immunity is not limited to the highest executive officers of the government. Watson v. Barker, D.C.Pa., 428 F.Supp. 590, 592. See Sovereign immunity.

Official map. In zoning and land use, the authorized map for the determination of proper land use in the city or town, showing the zones and areas and their authorized uses.

Official record. Records kept in the performance of official duty by an officer even if not specifically required by statute. State v. Biscoe, 112 Ariz. 98, 537 P.2d 968, 969.

Fed.Evid.R. 803(8) provides, without regard to availability of the declarant, a hearsay exception for: “Records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies . . .” Proof of official records at trial is governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 44 and Fed.Evid.R. 1005. Admissibility of official records at administrative proceedings is governed by the Official Records Act (q.v.).

Official Records Act. Federal statute applicable to cases in which the Federal Rules of Evidence do not apply (i.e. administrative proceedings) providing that books and records of account and minutes of any department or agency of the U.S. shall be admissible to prove the act or transaction as a memorandum of which it was made or kept. Properly authenticated copies are equally admissible with the originals. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1736(a).

Official reports or reporters. Publication of court decisions as directed by statute; e.g. United States Supreme Court Reports. 28 U.S.C.A. § 411. See Reports or reporters.

Officiality. The court or jurisdiction of which an official is head.

Oficia magistratus non debent esse vennalia /sfišš(i)y(ò) mæjastréytas nón débant éšiy vanéy(l)i(ò)y/. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold.

Officiariis non faciendis vel amovendis /šfišš(i)yéyíyas nón fás(h)íýéndas wél éymavéndas/. A writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has, until inquiry is made of his manners, etc.

Officina justitias /šfis(h)íyeyas jastíshiyíy/. The workshop or office of justice. The chancery was formerly so called. 3 Bl.Comm. 273.

Officio, ex, oath /òwθ éks sfišš(i)yow/. An oath whereby a person may be obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offense, or to confess or accuse himself of any criminal matter or thing whereby he may be liable to any censure, penalty, or punishment. 3 Bl.Comm. 447.

Officious will /šfis(h)í òwil/. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Inofficious testament.

Officit conatus si effectus sequatur /òfaset kanéyítas say sfektas skwéyítar/. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows.

Of force. In force; extant; not obsolete; existing as a binding or obligatory power.

Offset. A deduction; a counterclaim; a contrary claim or demand by which a given claim may be lessened or canceled. A claim that serves to counterbalance or to compensate for another claim. Steinmeyer v. Warner Consolidated Corp., 42 Cal.App.3d 515, 116 Cal.Rptr. 57. See also Counterclaim; Recoupment; Set-off.

Type of entry in bookkeeping which counters the effect of a prior entry. See Offset account.

Offset account. In bookkeeping, a ledger account which has a corresponding account to be washed against it when the books are closed.

Offshore transactions. Refers to transactions in locations outside the United States, e.g. 31 CFR § 540.401.

Offspring. Children; issue.

Of grace. This phrase had its origin in an age when kings dispensed their royal favors at the hands of chancellors. A term applied to any permission or license granted to a party in the course of a judicial proceeding which is not claimable as a matter of course or of right, but is allowed by the favor or indulgence of the court. See Act of grace.

Of record. Recorded; entered on the records; existing and remaining in or upon the appropriate records; e.g. a mortgage to be "of record" must normally be recorded in the county in which it is properly and legally recordable for purpose of constructive notice. Riley v. Commonwealth, 275 Ky. 370, 121 S.W.2d 921. See also Attorney (Record); Court (Record); Record.

Of right. As a matter of course. See Of course; Right.

Of the blood. A technical legal phrase meaning to be descended from the person referred to or from the same common stock and from a common ancestor. In re Easter's Estate, 24 Cal.2d 191, 148 P.2d 601. See Descendant; Next of kin.

Oil and gas lease. Grant of right to extract oil and/or gas from land.

O.K. A conventional symbol often used in commercial practice and occasionally in indorsements on legal documents, signifying "correct," "approved," "accepted," "satisfactory," or "assented to."

Okay. The colloquial expression means correct, all right, to approve, and is of such common usage that it immediately conveys to the mind of person to whom it is addressed that a proposition submitted is agreed to. Muegler v. Crosthwait, 239 Mo.App. 801, 179 S.W.2d 761, 763. See also O.K.

Old Age, Survivors' and Disability Insurance. A system established under the Federal Social Security Act providing for retirement, disability, widows', widowers', and dependent benefits. Such program is funded by employer, employee and self-employed contributions. See Social Security Administration.

Old natura brevium /òwl’d natyúr’ bryviyíym/. The title of a treatise written in the reign of Edward III, containing the writs which were then most in use, annexing to each a short comment concerning their nature and the application of them, with their various properties and effects.

Old tenures. A treatise, so called to distinguish it from Littleton's book on the same subject, which gives an account of the various tenures by which land was held, the nature of estates, and some other incidents to landed property in the reign of Edward III. It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littleton's famous work.

Oleron, Laws of /òl’z ov ówlaron/. A code of maritime laws published at the island of Oleron in the twelfth century by Eleanor of Guienne. They were adopted in England successively under Richard I, Henry III, and Edward III, and are often cited before the admiralty courts.

Oligarchy /òlagárkiy/. A form of government wherein the administration of affairs is lodged in the hands of a few persons.
Oligopoly /ɒlɪɡəˈpɒlɪ/. Economic condition where only a few companies sell substantially similar or standardized products. U.S. v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., D.C.Del., 118 F.Supp. 41, 49. Oligopoly markets often exhibit the lack of competition, high prices and low output of monopoly markets. Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp., C.A.Ariz., 850 F.2d 477, 490. See also Conscientious parallelism; Monopoly.

Omissio eorum qua facit ac tinctor nihil operatur /ɔmɪˈsi.o əˈrʊm kuːkə təˈtʃɪŋkɔ tɪnˈtʃʊ təˈnɪl əˈpərəˈtʊr/. The omission of those things which are tacitly implied is of no consequence.

Omission. The neglect to perform what the law requires. The intentional or unintentional failure to act which may or may not impose criminal liability depending upon the existence, vel non, of a duty to act under the circumstances. See also Neglect.

Omissio omnibus aliis negotiis /ˈɔmɪʃi.o ɔˈmɪnib.əs ˈæliːs nəˈɡɛt.iːz/. Lat. Laying aside all other businesses.

Omittance /ˈɒmɪtəns/. Forbearance; omission.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum /ˈɔmniː əktəm əb ɪntɪʃənəni ˈeɡəntɪs ðət ˈdʒudɪkəndəm/. Every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer.

Omne crimen ebruetas et incendit et detegit /ˈɔmniː kriˈmən ɪˈbrjuːtəs ət ɪnˈsɛndɪt ət dɛˈtɛɡɪt/. Drunkenness both inflames (or aggravates) and reveals every crime.

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit aut firmavit consuetudo /ˈɔmniː jʊs ət kənˈsaːnsəs ˈfɛkt, ət ˈnɛseˌnθəs ˈkɔnˈsɪstjuːtət ət ˈfɜrmaɪvɪt ˈkɔnʃjuˈtuːdʊ/. Every right is either made by consent or is constituted by necessity, or is established by custom.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquus /ˈɔmniː meɪˈɡɪs dɪˈɡʌm trəˈhɪt əd ˈse miˈnəs dɪˈɡʌm sɪt əˈtɪŋkwɪs meɪˈnəs dɪˈɡʌm sɪt əˈtɪŋkwɪs/. Every worthier thing draws to itself the less worthy, though the less worthy be the more ancient.

Omne magnum exemplum habet alicuius ex iniquo, quod publica utile compensatur /ˈɔmniː ˈmæɡnəm əˈkzəmpləm ˈhæbət əˈliːkiəs əks ɪəniˈkuo, kuːd ˈpʌbliːkə ˈjuːtəl ˈkəmpənsəˈtʊər/. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by the public utility.

Omne maximis continet in se minus /ˈɔmniː mæˈziːs ˈkɒntənət ɪn ˈse miˈnəs/. Every greater contains in itself the less. The greater always contains the less.

Omne majus dignum continet in se minus dignum /ˈɔmniː meɪˈʒəs dɪˈɡʌm kəˈtɪnət ɪn ˈse miˈnəs dɪˈɡʌm/. The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy.

Omne majus minus in se complectitur /ˈɔmniː meɪˈʒəs miˈnəs ɪn ˈse kəˌmplektɪˈtʊər/. Every greater embraces in itself the less.

Omne principale trahit ad se accessorium /ˈɔmniː pɹɪnˈspeɪli ˈtrəhɪt əd ˈse əˈkɛsəˈrɪəm/. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory.

Omne quod solo inzidificatur solo cedit /ˈɔmniː kwɒd səʊʊ ləˌsəʊ ləʊˌsəʊ kəˌdət/. Everything which is built upon the soil belongs to the soil.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia /ˈɔmniː səˈkrəməntəm də ˈsɛr.tə ˈsɛntʃənə/. It is a rule of the ancient law that all persons shall have liberty to renounce those privileges which have been conferred for their benefit.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora habent limitationem /ˈɒmniːz əˈkʃənaʊz ɪn ˈmʊndu ɪnˈfro ˈsɜːr.tə ˈtempərə ˈhæbənt lɪˈtɪməˈʃənɪəm/. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods.

Omnes homines aut liberis sunt aut servi /ˈɒmniːs ˌhəˈmɪnəs ət ˈlɪbrɪz sʊnt ət ˈsərvɪ/. All men are free-men or slaves.

Omnes licentiam habere his que pro se indulta sunt, renunciare /ˈɒmniːs lɪˈsɛntɪəm həˈbɛrə ˈhɪz ˈkwɪ prə ˈsɛ ɪnˈdʌltə sʊnt ˈrənənˈsɪərə/. It is a rule of the ancient law that all persons have liberty to renounce those privileges which have been conferred for their benefit.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solet que proban tur ils qui arte sua bene versati sunt /ˈɒmniːs prəˈdɛntəs ɪlə ədˌmɪtəri ˈsoʊlət ˈkwɪ prəˈbæntər ˈɛls kwi ərˈti ˈswɑː ˈbɛn ˈvɜːrˈsætəri ˈsʊnt/. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art.

Omnes sorores sunt quasi unus haeres de una haereditate /ˈɒmniːs sɔrɔrəz sʊnt ˈkwɑːsi ˈwʌn həˈrɛrətət ˈde ˈwənə həˈrɛrədəˈtiːtə/. All sisters are, as it were, one heir to one inheritance.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est /ˈɔmniː tɛstəˈməntəm mərtə kəˌsəʊməˈmeɪtəm əst/. Every will is completed by death.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt /ˌɒmniə daˌliktə ˈɪn əˈper.tərə ləˈvɪərə ˈsʊnt/. All crimes openly are lighter [or have a less odious appearance than those committed secretly].

Omnia performavit /ˌɒmniə pərˈfɜrməvɪt/. He has done all. In pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative.

On call. There is no legal difference between an obligation payable "when demanded" or "on demand" and one payable "on call" or "at any time called for." In each case the debt is payable on demand. See On demand.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. This rule or maxim signifies that an instrument originally intended as a mortgage, and not a deed, cannot be converted into anything else than a mortgage by any subsequent clause or agreement.

Once in jeopardy. A phrase used to express the condition of a person charged with crime, who has once already, by legal proceedings, been put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. See also Jeopardy.

Oncumne. L. Fr. Accused.

On default. In case of default; upon failure of stipulated action or performance; upon the occurrence of a failure, omission, or neglect of duty.

On demand. Note payable on request. If no due date is stated in note, such is payable on demand. Instruments payable "on demand" include those payable at sight or on presentation and those in which no time for payment is stated. U.C.C. § 3-108.

One person, one vote. Expression used to describe state legislative districting which gives equal legislative representation to all citizens of all places. The rule was established in Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 568, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 1385,12 L.Ed.2d 506, which required that the seats in both houses of a bicameral state legislature be apportioned on a population basis. Gray v. Sanders, 372 U.S. 368, 83 S.Ct. 801, 9 L.Ed.2d 821; Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 526, 11 L.Ed.2d 481; Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Apportionment; Reapportionment.

Onerando pro rata portionis /ownerándow prów réyta poršyiónás/. A writ that lay for a joint tenant or tenant in common who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to.

Onerari non /owneráray nón/. In pleading, the name of a plea, in an action of debt, by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged.

Onratio /ownerýash(i)yow/. Lat. A lading; a cargo.

Oneratur nisi /ownerárayt násyay/. See O.Ni.

Oneris ferendi /ownerás farénday/. In the civil law, the servitude of support; a servitude by which the wall of a house is required to sustain the wall or beams of the adjoining house.

Onerous /ownerás/. A contract, lease, share, or other agreement. The one is said to be on all fours with the other when the facts are similar and the same questions of law are involved.

O.N.B. An abbreviation for "Old Natura Brevium."
also means based upon, supported by, or relating to a good and valuable consideration, i.e., one which imposes a burden or charge in return for the benefit conferred.

Onerous contract. See Contract.

Onerous gift. A gift made subject to certain charges imposed by the donor on the donee.

Onerous title. A title acquired by the giving of a valuable consideration, as the payment of money or rendition of services or the performance of conditions or assumption or discharge of liens or charges.

One sided. See Unconscionability.

On file. Filed; entered or placed upon the files; existing and remaining upon or among the proper files.

O.Ni. In old English practice it was the course of the exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon each head "O. Ni.," which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc.

Only. Solely; merely; for no other purpose; at no other time; in no otherwise; along; of or by itself; without anything more; exclusive; nothing else or more.

Onomastick /ônômâstık/. A term applied to the signature of an instrument, the body of which is in a different handwriting from that of the signature.

On or about. A phrase used in reciting the date of an occurrence or conveyance, or the location of it to escape the necessity of being bound by the statement of an exact date, or place; approximately; about; without substantial variance from; near. For purpose of pleading, term "on or about," with respect to specified date, means generally in time around date specified. Fortner v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., Tex.App. 5 Dist., 687 S.W.2d 8, 11.

On or about the person. As used in statutes making it an offense to carry a weapon "on or about" the person, it is generally held that the word "on" means connected with or attached to, and that "about" is a comprehensive term having a broader meaning than "on," and conveying the idea of being nearby, in close proximity, within immediate reach, or conveniently accessible.

On or before. These words, inserted in a stipulation to do an act or pay money, entitle the party stipulating to perform at any time before the day; and upon performance, or tender and refusal, he is immediately vested with all the rights which would have attached if performance were made on the day.

On sale. In context of patent law, an invention may be placed "on sale" in two ways: first, it may be placed on sale by an actual and completed transaction and, alternatively, an invention is placed "on sale" whenever its inventor or his company engages in any activity to sell the invention, including making an offer for sale; under the first situation, an inventor must construct a physical specimen of his invention and deliver it to a third party who accepts it. General Motors Corp. v. Toyota Motor Co., Ltd., D.C.Ohio, 467 F.Supp. 1142, 1165.

On the brief. Phrase which refers to the names of all persons who participated in writing the brief, whether or not such persons are attorneys of record.

On the merits. See Merits; Judgment (Merits, judgment on).

On the person. In common parlance, when it is said that someone has an article on his person, it means that it is either in contact with his person or is carried in his clothing. See also On or about.

Onus /ônas/. Lat. A burden or load; a weight. Burden of responsibility or proof. The lading, burden, or cargo of a vessel. A charge; an incumbrance. Cum onere (q.v.), with the incumbrance.

Onus episcopale /ônas ekiskopâyliy/. Ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, etc.

Onus probandi /ônas probánday/. Burden of proving; the burden of proof. The strict meaning of the term "onus probandi" is that, if no evidence is adduced by the party on whom the burden is cast, the issue must be found against him.

OPEC. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Ope consilio /ôpiy (ê) kansiliyow/. Lat. By aid and counsel. A civil law term applied to accessaries, similar in import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Often written "ope et consilio."

Open. v. To render accessible, visible, or available; to submit or subject to examination, inquiry, or review, by the removal of restrictions or impediments.

Open a case. In practice, to open a case is to begin it; to make an initiatory explanation (i.e. opening statement) of its features to the court, jury, referee, etc., by outlining the nature of the occurrence or transaction on which it is founded, the questions involved, and the character and general course of the evidence to be adduced. See also Opening statement of counsel.

Open a commission. To enter upon the duties under a commission, or commence to act under a commission. Thus, in England the judges of assize and nisi prius derived their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose; and, when they commenced acting under the powers so committed to them, they were said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commenced their proceed-
Open a court. To open a court is to make a formal announcement, usually by the crier or bailiff, that its session has now begun and that the business before the court will be proceeded with.

Open a judgment. To lift or relax the bar of finality and conclusiveness which it imposes so as to permit a re-examination of the merits of the action in which it was rendered. This is done at the instance of a party showing good cause why the execution of the judgment would be inequitable. It so far annuls the judgment as to subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way.

Open a rule. To restore or recall a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute under a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way.

Open a street or highway. To establish it by law and make it passable and available for public travel.

Open the door. If one party to litigation puts in evidence part of document or correspondence or conversation which is detrimental to the opposing party, the latter may introduce balance of document, correspondence or conversation in order to explain or rebut adverse inferences which might arise from the fragmentary or incomplete character of evidence introduced by his adversary. This is known as Rule of Completeness.

Open bulk. In the mass; exposed to view; not tied or sealed up.

Open court. Common law requires a trial in open court; "open court" means a court to which the public have a right to be admitted. People v. Rose, 82 Misc.2d 429, 368 N.Y.S.2d 387, 390. This term may mean either a court which has been formally convened and declared open for the transaction of its proper judicial business, or a court which is freely open to spectators. For accused's right to an open/public trial, see Public trial.

Open credit. Line of credit extended up to a certain amount by a merchant, bank or supplier so as to permit borrowings or purchases to such amount without posting security or reestablishing credit limit. See also Open account; Open-end credit plan.

Open-end contract. Contract which permits buyer to make purchases over a period of time without change in the price or terms by the seller.

Open-end credit plan. Credit extended pursuant to a plan providing for and contemplating continuing or repetitive transactions on credit. Town & Country Co-op v. Lang, N.D., 286 N.W.2d 482, 487. For purposes of Truth in Lending Act, "open end credit plan" is one in which credit terms are initially established with the opening of the account, but no fixed amount of debt is incurred at that time with purchases made from time to time instead being added to the outstanding balance in the account; each new purchase represents an additional extension of credit. Goldman v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, C.A.III., 532 F.2d 10, 17. Examples are credit cards and "revolving charges" where one can pay a part of what he owes each month on several different purchases.

Open-end investment company. A mutual fund which will buy back its shares at net asset value and which is continuously offering to sell new shares to the public. See Mutual fund.
Open-end investment trust. Type of trust in which the trustees are permitted to make on-going investments for its portfolio.

Open-end lease. Lease with no fixed termination date. BNO Leasing Corp. v. Hollins & Hollins, Inc., et al., La.App., 448 So.2d 1329, 1333.

Open-end mortgage. A mortgage that allows the borrowing of additional sums, usually providing that at least the stated ratio of assets to the debt must be maintained. A mortgage which provides for future advances on the given mortgage and increases the amount of the existing mortgage.

Open-end transaction. Generic term to describe a loose transaction in which the parties may add to or amend the original bargain or agreement. It may include an open-end mortgage or open-end credit arrangement.

Open fields doctrine. This doctrine permits police officers to enter and search a field without a warrant. The term "open fields" may include any unoccupied or undeveloped area outside of the curtilage. Oliver v. U.S., 466 U.S. 170, 104 S.Ct. 1735, 80 L.Ed.2d 214. See also Dow Chemical Co. v. U.S., 476 U.S. 227, 106 S.Ct. 1819, 90 L.Ed.2d 226, U.S. v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294, 107 S.Ct. 1134, 94 L.Ed.2d 326.

Opening statement of counsel. Outline or summary of nature of case and of anticipated proof presented by attorney to jury at start of trial, before any evidence is submitted. Speer v. Shipley, 149 Kan. 15, 85 P.2d 999, 1001. Its purpose is to advise the jury of facts relied upon and of issues involved, and to give jury a general picture of the facts and the situations so that jury will be able to understand the evidence. State v. Erwin, 101 Utah 365, 120 P.2d 285, 313. Opening statement in criminal case is outline of facts which prosecution in good faith expects to prove. People v. Roberts, 100 Ill.App.3d 469, 55 Ill.Dec. 779, 426 N.E.2d 1104, 1109.

Open letter of credit. An unrestricted letter of credit which will be paid on a simple draft without the need of documentary title. See also Letter of credit.

Open listing. A type of real estate listing contract whereby any agent who has a right to participate in the open listing is entitled to a commission if he produces the sale. See also Listing.

Open mortgage clause. See Union mortgage clause.

Open order. An order to buy securities or commodities at or below or above a certain price and such order remains viable until canceled by the customer.

Open price term. The parties if they so intend can conclude a contract for sale even though the price is not settled. In such a case the price is a reasonable price at the time for delivery if: (a) nothing is said as to price; or (b) the price is left to be agreed by the parties and they fail to agree; or (c) the price is to be fixed in terms of some agreed market or other standard as set or recorded by a third person or agency and it is not so set or recorded. U.C.C. § 2-305.

Open sea. The expanse and mass of any great body of water, as distinguished from its margin or coast, its harbors, bays, creeks, inlets.

Open possession. See Notorious possession. Open and notorious.

Open season. That portion of the year wherein the laws for the preservation of game and fish permit the killing of a particular species of game or the taking of a particular variety of fish.

Open shop. A business in which union and non-union workers are employed indiscriminately. Business in which union membership is not a condition of securing or maintaining employment. See Right to work laws. Contrast Closed shop.

Open space. Any parcel or area of land or water essentially unimproved and set aside, dedicated, designated or reserved for public or private use or enjoyment or for the use and enjoyment of owners and occupants of land adjoining or neighboring such open spaces.

Common open space. An open space area within or related to a site designated as a development and designed and intended for the use or enjoyment of residents and owners of the development. Common open space may contain such complementary structures and improvements as are necessary and appropriate for the use or enjoyment of residents and owners of the development.

Open trial. See Public trial.

Open union. A labor union without restrictive membership provisions. See also Open shop.

Operarii /operationi/. Such tenants, under feudal tenures, as held some little portions of land by the duty of performing bodily labor and servile works for their lord.

Operate. To perform a function, or operation, or produce an effect. See Operation.

Operating budget. A collection of individual budgets that combine to form a part of a firm's integrated business plan, usually for the next year. It is normally composed of a sales budget and a production budget.

Operating expenses. Those expenses required to keep the business running, e.g. rent, electricity, heat. Expenses incurred in the course of ordinary activities of an entity.

Operating lease. A lease agreement, usually cancellable, which provides the lessee with the use of an asset for a period of time which is considerably shorter than the useful life of the asset. Unlike a capital lease, the lessee in an operating lease does not assume the economic risks of ownership, and the lessor generally provides all of the maintenance and services on the leased asset.

Operating margin. Net operating income divided by sales for the period.

Operating profit. Deducting the cost of goods sold from sales gives gross profit. Deducting the operating expense (overhead) from the gross profit gives the operating profit.

Opinio est duplex, scilicet, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et que vultum veritatis habet; et opinio tantum inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis /spin(i)yow est d(y)úwp-leks sìllsì spin(i)yow valgéras, órta intar grévyjyz ét dskrítjowts, ét kwìy vèltom vèhratéytas hèybat; ét spin(i)yow tèntam, órta intar liyvijyz ét valgérijyz hòmànlyz, ìbskwìy spìshy(i)y vèhratéytas/. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth.

Opinion. A document prepared by an attorney for his client, embodying his understanding of the law as applicable to a state of facts submitted to him for that purpose; e.g. an opinion of an attorney as to the marketability of a land title as determined from a review of the abstract of title and other public records.

The statement by a judge or court of the decision reached in regard to a cause tried or argued before them, expounding the law as applied to the case, and detailing the reasons upon which the judgment is based.

An expression of the reasons why a certain decision (the judgment) was reached in a case. A majority opinion is usually written by one judge and represents the principles of law which a majority of his colleagues on the court deem operative in a given decision; it has more precedential value than any of the following. A separate opinion may be written by one or more judges in which he or they concur in or dissent from the majority opinion. A concurring opinion agrees with the result reached by the majority, but disagrees with the precise reasoning leading to that result. A dissenting or minority opinion disagrees with the result reached by the majority and thus disagrees with the reasoning and/or the principles of law used by the majority in deciding the case. A plurality opinion is agreed to by less than a majority as to the reasoning of the decision, but is agreed to by a majority as to the result. A per curiam opinion is an opinion "by the court" which expresses its decision in the case but whose author is not identified. A memorandum opinion is a holding of the whole court in which the opinion is very concise.

In accounting, a document prepared by a certified public accountant regarding the audited financial statements of an entity. There are four types of opinions:

Unqualified: The financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) and are presented in a manner consistent with the prior year. An unqualified opinion is considered a clean opinion.

Qualified: The financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with GAAP applied on a basis consistent with the prior year, "except for" a particular transaction, or "subject to" a certain event.

Disclaimer: The CPA is unable to render an opinion on the financial statements due to insufficient competent evidential matter.

Adverse: The financial statements are not presented fairly in conformity with GAAP, or do not present fairly the financial position, results of operation, and changes in the financial position of the entity. An adverse opinion is uncommon and generally results when the CPA is unable to convince the client to present the financial statements fairly and in conformity with GAAP. See also Adverse opinion.

See also Audit (Audit opinion).

See also Advisory opinion; Letter ruling; Majority opinion; Opinion evidence or testimony; Plurality; Slip opinion; Title opinion; Unqualified opinion.
Opinion evidence or testimony. Evidence of what the witness thinks, believes, or infers in regard to facts in dispute, as distinguished from his personal knowledge of the facts themselves. The rules of evidence ordinarily do not permit witnesses to testify as to opinions or conclusions. An exception to this rule exists as to “expert witnesses”. Witnesses who, by education and experience, have become expert in some art, science, profession, or calling, may state their opinions as to relevant and material matter, in which they profess to be expert, and may also state their reasons for the opinion.

By expert witness. If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise. Fed.Evid. Rule 702. See also Expert testimony; Expert witness.

By lay witness. If the witness is not testifying as an expert, his testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. Fed.Evid. Rule 701.

Opinio que favet testamento est tenenda /amp])iyow kwiy feyvat testamentow est tanenda/. The opinion which favors a will is to be followed.

Oportet quad certa sit res que venditur /aportat kwod sartata sit riyyz kwliy vendstar/. It is necessary that there should be a certain thing which is sold. To make a valid sale, there must be certainty as to which thing is sold.

Oppignerare /apignareriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to pledge.

Opposer /spowzar/. An officer formerly belonging to the green-wax in the exchequer.

Opposite. An old word for “opponent.”

Opposite party. Within statutes providing that opposite party shall be incompetent to testify as to matters equally within knowledge of deceased is one whose personal and financial interests, either immediate or remote, are antagonistic to like interests of protected party.

Opposition. Act of opposing or resisting; antagonism; state of being opposite or opposed; antithesis. Also, a position confronting another or placing in contrast; that which is or furnishes an obstacle to some result. Political party opposed to ministry or administration; or might be construed to include peaceful and orderly opposition to government.

Oppression. The misdemeanor committed by a public officer, who under color of his office, wrongfully inflicts upon any person any bodily harm, imprisonment, or other injury. An act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exacti, or excessive use of authority. An act of subjecting to cruel and unjust hardship; an act of domination.

Oppression which justifies award of punitive damages means act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exacti, or excessive use of authority and results from acts done in manner which violates right of another person with unnecessary harshness or severity as by misuse or abuse of authority or power. Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 Mont. 447, 720 P.2d 1148, 1155.

See Coercion; Cruelty; Threat.

Oppressor. A public officer who unlawfully uses his authority by way of oppression (q.v.).

That law is the best which leaves least to the discretion of the judge; that judge is the best who leaves least to his own. That system of law is best which confines as little as possible to the discretion of the judge; that judge the best who relies as little as possible on his own opinion.

Optimam esse legem, qua minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certitudo ejus praestat /óptamam ésiy liyjam kwá mínamam raliqwá kwó yúwdsas; id kwó sartat(y)uwdow iyjas préstát/. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particularis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum /óptamo stóyútwat intérprétyotkros ést (ómnavbas partikylas iyjísdam insékptas) ipsum stóyútwat/. The best interpreter of a statute is (all its parts being considered) the statute itself.
Optimus interpres rerum usus /óptamás antárpiyiz rirom yúwás/. Use or usage is the best interpreter of things.

Optimus interpretandī modus est sic leges interpretāri ut leges legibus concordant /óptamás intárpratánday mówás ést sík liyiýyz intárpratáray át liyiýyz liyjbas kağórdant/. The best mode of interpretation is to so interpret laws that they may accord with each other.

Optimus judex, qui minimum sibi /óptamás júwdeks, kwáy mínamam síbay/. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo /óptamás liygam antárpiyiz kónswat(y)úwдов/. Custom is the best interpreter of the laws.

Option. Right of election to exercise a privilege. Contract made for consideration to keep an offer open for prescribed period. A right, which acts as a continuing offer, given for consideration, to purchase or lease property at an agreed upon price and terms, within a specified time. An option is an agreement which gives the optionee the power to accept an offer for a limited time. Kelman v. Bohi, 27 Ariz.App. 24, 550 P.2d 671, 675. An option to purchase or to sell is not a contract to purchase or sell, as optionee has the right to accept or to reject the offer, in accordance with its terms, and is not bound. Catmull v. Johnson, Utah, 541 P.2d 793, 796.

An option contract is a promise which meets the requirements for the formation of a contract and limits the promisor's power to revoke an offer. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 25.

A privilege existing in one person, for which he has paid money, which gives him the right to buy certain commodities or certain specified securities from another person, if he chooses, at any time within an agreed period, at a fixed price, or to sell such commodities or securities to such other person at an agreed price and time. If the option gives the choice of buying or not buying, it is denominated a "call." If it gives the choice of selling or not, it is called a "put." If it is a combination of both these, and gives the privilege of either buying or selling or not, it is called a "straddle" or a "spread eagle."

The sale or exchange of an option to buy or sell property results in capital gain or loss if the property is a capital asset.

See also Call; Cash value option; Local option; Option to purchase; Put.

Commodity futures option. The right—but not the obligation—to buy or sell a futures contract at a specified price within a fixed period, say, three, six, nine months or longer. The option buyer pays a premium to the dealer for this right, plus the usual commission and nothing else. The option buyer does not have to be concerned about margin calls. All he can lose is the premium paid and commission.

Commodity option. A right that is purchased by the option holder entitling him either to buy ("call option") from or to sell ("put option") at a stated price and within a stated time an underlying physical commodity (such as a specific quantity of gold, a train carload of coffee, etc.), or a commodity futures contract relating to that commodity. The price paid for the option right is referred to as the "premium," and the price at which the option purchaser is entitled to buy or sell the underlying commodity for futures contract is referred to as the "striking price." "Exercise" is the decision of an option holder to require performance by the grantor of his obligation with respect to the underlying commodity or futures contract. The period during which an option may be exercised is specified in the contract. The "exercise date" or "expiration date" is the final day on which the option holder may exercise the option.

Index option. A type of security in which the holder has the right to buy or sell, for a specified price at a specified future date, a theoretical interest in stocks making up the index. The option is exercised in cash, in an amount equal to the difference between the closing level of the index on the exercise date and the exercise price of the option, multiplied by the index "multiplier." Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. v. Yang, C.A.Cal. 679 F.Supp. 981, 983.

Naked options. Options sold by investors granting others the right to buy stock from them even though they own no stock to back up those commitments.

Option premium. The consideration paid to keep a contractual offer to buy or sell open for a specified period of time.

Stock option. The right to buy stock in the future at a price fixed in advance. See also Stock.

Incentive stock option. See Qualified stock option, below.

Non-qualified stock option. Stock option which does not meet the qualifications of a restricted stock option. See Restricted stock option, below.

Qualified stock option. An option to purchase shares provided to an employee of the corporation under terms that qualify the option for special tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code. I.R.C. § 421 et seq.

Restricted stock option. A right granted to an employee prior to 1964 which allows such an employee to buy stock at a fixed price established in advance. The options are restricted with respect to the option price, time of exercise, amount owned by the optionee, non-transferability, and minimum holding period. Restricted stock options were replaced by Qualified Stock Options in 1964, and Incentive Stock Options in 1981. I.R.C. § 424.

Optional writ. In old English practice, that species of original writ, otherwise called a "praecipe," which was framed in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he had not done it.

Optionee. One who receives an option.

Option spread. In securities trading, the difference between the option price and the fair market value of

Option to purchase. A bilateral contract in which one party is given the right to buy the property within a period of time for a consideration paid to the seller. A right acquired by contract to accept or reject a present offer within a limited or reasonable time and is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have the right to buy his property at a fixed price within a certain time. Crockett v. Lowther, Wyo., 549 P.2d 303, 305. See also Option.

Opus /ˈowpəs/. Lat. Work; labor; the product of work. Opus novum /ˈowpas nowvam/. In the civil law, a new work. Opus manificum /owpas maenafishCiybm/. In old English law, labor done by the hands; manual labor; such as making a hedge, digging a ditch.

Or, n. A term used in heraldry, and signifying gold; n. Or, conj. A disjunctive particle used to express an alternative or to give a choice of one among two or more things. It is also used to clarify what has already been said, and in such cases, means "in other words," "to wit," or "that is to say." The word "or" is to be used as a function word to indicate an alternative between different or unlike things. City of Toledo v. Lucas County Budget Commission, 33 Ohio St.2d 62, 294 N.E.2d 661, 663. In some usages, the word "or" creates a multiple rather than an alternative obligation; where necessary in interpreting an instrument, "or" may be construed to mean "and." Atchison v. City of Englewood, Colo., 568 P.2d 13, 18.

Oraculum /ˈorəkaləm/. In the civil law, the name of a kind of response or sentence given by the Roman emperors.

Oral. Uttered by the mouth or in words; spoken, not written.

Oral argument. Presentation of reasons for affirmance, reversal, modification, etc. by appellee and appellant before appellate court; generally limited in time by court rule; e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 34.

Statement before court in support of, or in objection to, motion or other legal relief sought.

Oral confession. Statement given orally by defendant in which he admits the commission of the crime. Its admissibility in evidence is dependent upon its voluntariness, the condition of the defendant at the time of the confession, the length of time during which the defendant was held by the police before being brought before a magistrate and other factors. Federal courts generally hold that the burden of establishing the constitutional admissibility of a confession rests upon the prosecution. Pea v. United States, 130 U.S.App.D.C. 66, 397 F.2d 627. See also Confession; Miranda Rule; Self-incrimination.

Oral contract. One which is partly in writing and partly depends on spoken words, or none of which is in writing; one which, so far as it has been reduced to writing, is incomplete or expresses only a part of what is intended, but is completed by spoken words; or one which, originally written, has afterwards been changed orally. See also Contract (Parol contract).

Oral evidence. Evidence given by word of mouth; the oral testimony of a witness. See Parol evidence.

Oral pleading. Pleading by word of mouth, in the actual presence of the court. This was the ancient mode of pleading in England, and continued to the reign of Edward III.

Oral trust. The transfer of property in trust informally through an oral declaration in contrast to a formal trust which is in writing. Real estate trusts may not be created orally. See Frauds, Statute of.

Oral will. See Nuncupative will.

Orando pro rege et regno /ərəndəʊ prɒ rɪˈdʒiːj et re'nəʊ/. An ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing court for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.

Oratrix /ɔːrətrɪks/. A female petitioner; a female plaintiff in a bill of chancery was formerly so called. This term is obsolete. See also Petitioner.

Ordain. To institute or establish; to make an ordinance; to confer on a person the holy orders of priest or deacon.

Ordeal. The most ancient species of trial, in Saxon and old English law, being peculiarly distinguished by the appellation of "judicium Dei," or "judgment of God," it being supposed that supernatural intervention would rescue an innocent person from the danger of physical harm to which he was exposed in this species of trial.
The ordeal was of two sorts,—either fire ordeal or water ordeal; the former being confined to persons of higher rank, the latter to the common people.

Fire ordeal. The ordeal by fire or red-hot iron, which was performed either by taking up in the hand a piece of red-hot iron, of one, two, or three pounds weight, or by walking barefoot and blindfolded over nine red-hot plowshares, laid lengthwise at unequal distances.

Water ordeal. In Saxon and old English law, the ordeal or trial by water. The hot-water ordeal was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby. The cold-water ordeal was performed by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, when, if he floated therein, without any action of swimming it was deemed an evidence of his guilt; but, if he sunk, he was acquitted. 4 Bl.Comm. 343.

Ordeiffe, or ordelife /ór'delf/. A liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land.

Ordels /'ór-dils/. In old English law, the right of administering oaths and adjudging trials by ordeal within a precinct or liberty.

Order. A mandate; precept; command or direction authoritatively given; rule or regulation. Brady v. Interstate Commerce Commission, D.C.W.Va., 43 F.2d 847, 850. Direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment, which determines some point or directs some step in the proceedings. An application for an order is a motion.

In commercial law, a designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid. An "order" is a direction to pay and must be more than an authorization or request. It must identify the person to pay with reasonable certainty. It may be addressed to one or more such persons jointly or in the alternative but not in succession. U.C.C. § 3-102(1)(b). With respect to documents of title, is a direction to deliver goods to a specified person or to his or her order.

Term is also used to designate a rank, class, or division of men; as the order of nobles, order of knights, order of priests, etc.

See also Appealable order; Back order; Decision; Decree; Executive order; Intermediate order; Judgment; Limit order; Payable to order; Percentage order; Restraining order.

Day order. Order from a customer to a broker to buy or sell a security on the particular day and such order is automatically cancelled at the end of that day.

Decretal order. In chancery practice, an order made by the court of chancery, in the nature of a decree, upon a motion or petition. An order in a chancery suit made on motion or otherwise not at the regular hearing of a cause, and yet not of an interlocutory nature, but finally disposing of the cause, so far as a decree could then have disposed of it.

Discretionary order. An order from a customer to a broker to sell a security at a price deemed acceptable by the broker.

Final order. One which either terminates the action itself, or finally decides some matter litigated by the parties, or operates to divest some right; or one which completely disposes of the subject-matter and the rights of the parties. See also Final decision rule.

General orders. Orders or rules of court, promulgated for the guidance of practitioners and the regulation of procedure in general, or in some general branch of its jurisdiction; as opposed to a rule or an order made in an individual case. General orders have generally been replaced by rules of court.

Interlocutory order. An order which decides not the cause, but only settles some intervening matter relating to it or affords some temporary relief (e.g. temporary restraining order).

Limit order. An order from a customer to a broker in which the customer places a lower limit on the price at which the security may be sold and a ceiling on the price at which the security may be bought.

Market order. An order from a customer to a broker to buy or to sell a security at the market price then prevailing and hence the order must be executed promptly.

Money order. See Money.

Open order. An order from a customer to a broker to buy or to sell a security and the order remains in force until it is either executed or cancelled by the customer.

Percentage order. See that title.

Restraining order. An order which may issue upon the filing of an application for an injunction forbidding the defendant to do the threatened act until a hearing on the application can be had. Though the term is sometimes used as a synonym of "injunction," a restraining order is properly distinguishable from an injunction, in that the former is intended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of granting an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined, and it does no more than restrain the proceedings until such determination. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65. See also Injunction; Restraining order; Temporary restraining order.

Speaking order. An order which contains matter which is explanatory or illustrative of the mere direction which is given by it is sometimes thus called.

Stop order. Order to stockbroker to wait until the market price of the particular security reaches a specified figure, and then to "stop" the transaction by either selling or buying, as the case may be, as well as possible.

Stop payment order. Order from the drawer of a check to the drawee bank to stop payment on a check which has been drawn and given to the payee or lost.

Order bill of lading. A negotiable bill of lading directing that the goods be delivered to the person named or his order upon indorsement.
Order document. A document of title that runs to a named person, either because the document was so issued or because the document was specially indorsed, which can therefore be negotiated only by the named person indorsing it. See U.C.C. § 7-501(1)-(3).

Order instrument. A negotiable instrument that is payable to order either because the instrument was so issued, or because the instrument was specially indorsed. See U.C.C. §§ 3-110 (when instruments originally payable to order); 3-204(1).

Order nisi. A provisional or conditional order, allowing a certain time within which to do some required act, on failure of which the order will be made absolute.

Order of Coif. See Coif.

Order of filiation. An order made by a court or judge having jurisdiction, fixing the paternity of a child born out of wedlock upon a given man, and requiring him to provide for its support.

Order paper. A negotiable instrument which is payable to a specific payee or to any person the payee, by his or her indorsement, designates. See U.C.C. § 3-104(1)(d); § 3-110. See also Order document; Order instrument.

Orders. The directions as to the course and purpose of a voyage given by the owner of the vessel to the captain or master. For other meanings, see Order.

Order to show cause. See Show cause order.

Ordinance. A rule established by authority; a permanent rule of action; a law or statute. In its most common meaning, the term is used to designate the enactments of the legislative body of a municipal corporation. It designates a local law of a municipal corporation, duly enacted by the proper authorities, prescribing general, uniform, and permanent rules of conduct relating to the corporate affairs of the municipality. Morris v. Town of Newington, 36 Conn.Sup. 74, 411 A.2d 939, 943. An ordinance is the equivalent of a municipal statute, passed by the city council, or equivalent body, and governing matters not already covered by federal or state law. Ordinances commonly govern zoning, building, safety, etc. matters of municipality.

The name has also been given to certain enactments, more general in their character than ordinary statutes, and serving as organic laws, yet not exactly to be called "constitutions." Such was the "Ordinance for the government of the North-West Territory," enacted by congress in 1787.

See also Municipal ordinance. Compare Resolution.

Ordinance of 1647. A law passed by the Colony of Massachusetts, still in force, in a modified form, whereby the state owns the great ponds within its confines, which are held in trust for public uses. Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548, 18 N.E. 465.

Ordinance of 1787. A statute for the government of the Northwest Territory. Religious and legal freedom, encouragement of education, just treatment of the Indians, the future division into States, and the exclusion of slavery were ordained.

Ordinandi lex /ɔrˈdɪnændi lɛks/. Lat. The law of procedure, as distinguished from the substantial part of the law.

Ordinarius ita dicitur quia habet ordinariam jurisdictionem, in jure proprio, et non propter deputationem /ɔrˈdɪnəriərɪs ˈaɪtə ˈdɪskət kɹəˈwaɪə hɛbət oˈrdɪnərɪərɪs ˈʤɜɹstrɪdᵻʃənɪm ɪn ˈdʒɜɹstrɪdᵻʃənɪm ˈeɪtə ˈdɪskət kɹəˈwaɪə ˈhɛbət oˈrdɪnərɪərɪs/ in jùrɪ frəʊˈprɪwprɪwɪət ɛt ˌnɒn prəˈprɪtər dɪpəˈraɪtɪʃənɪm /. The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one.

Ordinary, n. At common law, one who had exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical. Also a bishop; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions. Also a commissary or official of a bishop or other ecclesiastical judge having judicial power; an archdeacon; officer of the royal household.

In American law, a judicial officer, in several of the states, clothed by statute with powers in regard to wills, probate, administration, guardianship, etc. See also Court of Ordinary.

Former term for a public house where food and lodging were furnished to the traveler and his beast, at fixed rates, open to whoever may apply for accommodation, and where intoxicating liquor was sold at retail.

In the civil law, a judge who has authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation.

Ordinary, adj. Regular; usual; normal; common; often recurring; according to established order; settled; customary; reasonable; not characterized by peculiar or unusual circumstances; belonging to, exercised by, or characteristic of, the normal or average individual.

As to ordinary Care; Diligence; Negligence, see those titles.

Ordinary and necessary expenses. The phrase "ordinary and necessary expenses", as found in business deduction section of Internal Revenue Code, implies that the expenses are reasonable and bear proximate relation to management of property held for production of income. National Can Corp. v. U.S., D.C.I11., 520 F.Supp. 567, 579. "Ordinary" means normal and expected and "necessary" means appropriate and helpful. McCabe v. C.I.R., C.A.2, 688 F.2d 102, 105. For an item to qualify as an "ordinary and necessary expense" deductible under Internal Revenue Code section, five requirements must be met: item must be paid or incurred during taxable year, must be for carrying on any trade or business, must be an expense, must be necessary, and must be ordinary. Iowa–Des Moines Nat. Bank v. C.I.R., C.A.8, 592 F.2d 433, 435. See also Necessary; and Ordinary expenses, below.

Ordinary calling. Those things which are repeated daily or weekly in the course of business.

Ordinary care. That degree of care which ordinarily prudent and competent person engaged in same line of business or endeavor should exercise under similar circumstances, and in law means same as "due care" and "reasonable care." Warner v. Kiowa County Hospital Authority, Okl.App., 551 P.2d 1179, 1188. That care which reasonably prudent persons exercise in the management of their own affairs, in order to avoid injury to themselves or their property, or the persons or property of others. Ordinary care is not an absolute term, but a relative one. Thus, in deciding whether ordinary care was exercised in a given case, the conduct in question must be viewed in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, as shown by the evidence in the case. See also Care.

Ordinary course of business. The transaction of business according to the common usages and customs of the commercial world generally or of the particular community or (in some cases) of the particular individual whose acts are under consideration. Term used in connection with sales made by a merchant as part of his regular business and in contrast with a sale in bulk which is regulated by statute, e.g., U.C.C. § 6-102(1). In general, any matter which transpires as a matter of normal and incidental daily customs and practices in business.

Ordinary dangers incident to employment. Those commonly and usually pertaining to and incident to it, which a reasonably prudent person might anticipate, and do not include danger by acts of negligence, unless habitual and known to the servant.

Ordinary expenses. Common and accepted in the general business in which the taxpayer is engaged. It comprises one of the tests for the deductibility of normal and expected expenses incurred or paid in connection with a trade or business; for the production or collection of income; for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income; or in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax. I.R.C. § 162(a). See also Necessary; and Ordinary and necessary expenses, above.

Ordinary income. As tax term used in connection with a business, means earnings from the normal operations or activities of a business. In terms of an individual, ordinary income is income from such sources as wages, commissions, interest, etc.

Ordinary loss. A loss on the sale or exchange of an item used in a trade or business which is not considered a capital asset. In taxation, ordinary losses reduce ordinary income such as; salaries, interest, etc., while capital losses serve to reduce capital gains and those in excess of capital gains may reduce ordinary income up to a certain amount.

Ordinary negligence. The failure to use that degree of care which the ordinary or reasonably prudent person would have used under the circumstances and for which the negligent person is liable. Term is used in contrast to gross negligence which is more serious and a more flagrant lack of care. See also Negligence, and Ordinary care, above.

Ordinary persons. Men of ordinary care and diligence in relation to any particular thing.

Ordinary proceeding. Such a proceeding as was known to the common law and was formerly conducted in accordance with the proceedings of the common-law courts, and as is generally known under the current Rules of Civil Procedure and Codes to be such a proceeding as is started by the issuance of a summons, and results in a judgment enforceable by execution.

Ordinary repairs. Such as are necessary to make good the usual wear and tear or natural and unavoidable decay and keep the property in good condition. Compare Improvements.

Ordinary risks. Those incident to the business, and do not imply the result of the employer's negligence. The expression "extraordinary risks" is generally used to describe risks arising from the negligence of the employer, and they are generally held not to be assumed unless known or obvious.

Ordinary seaman. A sailor who is capable of performing the ordinary or routine duties of a seaman, but who is not yet so proficient in the knowledge and practice of all the various duties of a sailor at sea as to be rated as an "able" seaman.

Ordinary services of administrators. Include all the services incident to the closing and distribution of an estate, and not merely the receiving and disbursing of the funds and if the administrator must have rendered services of an extraordinary character necessary to the protection of the estate, and, if he employs another to perform services which he is required to perform under the law, he cannot charge such services as an expense of administration.

Ordinary skill in an art. That degree of skill which men engaged in that particular art usually employ; not that which belongs to a few men only, of extraordinary endowments and capacities.

Ordinary written law. Law made, within constitutional restrictions, by the Legislature; i.e. statutes.

Ordination. Ceremony by which a bishop confers on a person the privileges and powers necessary for the execution of sacerdotal functions in the church.

Ordinatum est. In old practice, it is ordered. The initial words of rules of court when entered in Latin.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. When the order of pleading is observed, the law also is observed.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus servatótv, servéýât et jás/. A general chapter or other solemn convention of the religious of a particular order.

Ordinis beneficium. In the civil law, the benefit or privilege of order; the privilege which a surety for a debtor had of requiring that his principal should be discussed, or thoroughly prosecuted, before the creditor could resort to him.

Ordo attachiamentorum. In old English practice, the order of attachments.
Ordo judiciorum /ördow jadishýorom/. In the canon law, the order of judgments; the rule by which the due course of hearing each cause was prescribed.

Ordonnance /ördownon(t)s/örðsan(t)s/. Fr. In French law, an ordinance; an order of a court; a compilation or systematized body of law relating to a particular subject-matter, as, commercial law or maritime law. Particularly, a compilation of the law relating to prizes and captures at sea.

Ore-leave. A license or right to dig and take ore from land.

Ore tenus /őri tínas/. Lat. By word of mouth; orally. Pleading was ancienly carried on ore tenus, at the bar of the court. 3 Bl.Comm. 293.

Ore tenus rule. Under the "ore tenus rule," reviewing court must affirm the trial court unless its findings are plainly and palpably erroneous. Hamaker v. Hamaker, 57 Ala.App. 333, 328 So.2d 588, 592.

Orfgild /örfgild/. In Saxon law, the price or value of a beast. A payment for a beast. The payment or forfeiture of a beast. A penalty for taking away cattle.

A statute by which a municipal corporation is organized and created is its "organic act" and the limit of its power, so that all acts beyond the scope of the powers there granted are void.

Organic law. The fundamental law, or constitution, of a state or nation, written or unwritten. That law or system of laws or principles which defines and establishes the organization of its government.

Organization. As term is used in commercial law, includes a corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, business trust, estate, trust, partnership or association, two or more persons having a joint or common interest, or any other legal or commercial entity. U.C.C. § 1-201(28). See also Charitable organizations.

Organize. To establish or furnish with organs; to systematize; to put into working order; to arrange in order for the normal exercise of its appropriate functions. City of Beaumont v. City of Beaumont Independent School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 753, 756.

Organized county. A county which has its lawful officers, legal machinery, and means for carrying out the powers and performing the duties pertaining to it as a quasi municipal corporation. City of Beaumont v. City of Beaumont Independent School Dist., Tex.Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 753, 757.

Organized labor. Segments of labor force represented by unions; e.g., AFL-CIO.

Orgild /örfgild/. In Saxon law, without recompense; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain.

Original. Primitive; first in order; bearing its own authority, and not deriving authority from an outside source; as original jurisdiction, original writ, etc. As applied to documents, the original is the first copy or archetype; that from which another instrument is transcribed, copied, or imitated. See also Original evidence, below.

In copyright law means that the work owes its creation or origin to the author and this in turn means that the work must not consist in actual copying. L. Batlin & Son Inc. v. Jeffrey Snyder and Etna Products Co. Inc., C.A.N.Y., 536 F.2d 466, 489.

Original bill. In equity pleading, a bill which relates to some matter not before litigated in the court by the same persons standing in the same interests. The ancient mode of commencing actions in the English court of King's bench. See Bill.

Original contractor. One who for a fixed price agrees with owner to perform certain work or furnish certain material.

Original conveyances. Those conveyances at common law, otherwise termed "primary," by which a benefit or estate is created or first arises; comprising feoffments, gifts, grants, leases, exchanges, and partitions. 2 Bl. Comm. 309.

Original estate. See Estate.

Original evidence. An original document, writing, or other material object introduced in evidence as distinguished from a copy of it or from extraneous evidence of its content or purport.

An "original" of a writing or recording is the writing or recording itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it. An "original" or a photograph includes the negative or any print therefrom. If data are stored in a computer or similar device, any printout or other output readable by sight shown to reflect the data accurately, is an "original". Fed.Evid.R. 1001(3). See also Copy; Duplicate.

Original inventor. In patent law, a pioneer in the art; one who evolves the original idea and brings it to some successful, useful and tangible result; as distinguished from an improver.

Original jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to consider a case in the first instance. Jurisdiction of court to take cognizance of a cause at its inception, try it, and pass judgment upon the law and facts. Distinguished from appellate jurisdiction.

Original package. A package prepared for interstate or foreign transportation, and remaining in the same condition as when it left the shipper, that is, unbroken and undivided. A package of such form and size as is used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce. Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U.S. 343, 21 S.Ct. 132, 45 L.Ed. 224. See also Original package doctrine.

Original plat. The first plat of a town from the subsequent additions, and "original town" is employed in the same way.

Original process. See Process.

Original promise. An original promise, without the statute of frauds, is one in which the direct and leading object of the promisor is to further or promote some purpose or interest of his own, although the incidental effect may be the payment of the debt of another.

Original writ. See Writ.

Single original. An original instrument which is excuted singly, and not in duplicate.

Original document rule. The best evidence of the contents of a document is the original of that document.
The party bearing the burden of proving the contents of document is required to introduce the original unless he is excused from its production because of its nonavailbility; and in this instance, secondary evidence is admissible. There are no degrees of secondary evidence. See also Best evidence.

Original grade doctrine. This doctrine relieves public body from any liability for property damaged in the reduction of the surface of the street to the grade line for the first time established. Dickson v. City of Pull-Originalia /orijinalia/. In Old English, transcripts sent to the remembrancer's office in the exchequer out of the chancery, distinguished from records, which contain the judgments and pleadings in actions tried before the barons. The treasurer-remembrancer's office was abolished in 1833.

Original issue. The first issue of stocks or bonds of a particular kind or series.

Original package doctrine. In Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 6 L.Ed. 673, a landmark case under the commerce clause of the U.S.Const., the Supreme Court held that a state was free to levy a tax or license fee on imports only after the original package had been broken because at this juncture the goods no longer were in the flow of interstate commerce and therefore no longer subject to federal regulation.

Origination clause. Article I, Section 7 or U.S. Constitution provides that "All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

Origination fee. Charge to borrower (of e.g., mortgage loan) to cover costs of issuing loan, including credit and title checks, property appraisals, etc.

Origine propria neminem posse voluntate sua eximi manifestum est /orijini própríya nénamam pósisy vönlontétyiy s(y)úwa mánaféstom ést/. It is evident that no one is able of his own pleasure, to do away with his proper origin.

Origo rei inspici debet /ôbragow riay inspoonsay débad/.
The origin of a thing ought to be regarded.

Ornament. In Old English law, the trial by battle, which does not seem to have been usual in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the kingdoms of the north, where it was practiced under the name of "holmgang," from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm.

ORP. Ordinary, reasonable and prudent (man). See Negligence. The standard of care on which negligence cases are based. See Reasonable man doctrine or standard.

Orphan /ôrfan/. Any person (but particularly a minor or infant) who has lost both (or, sometimes, one) of his or her parents.

Orphanotrophi /ôrfanotrófay/. In the civil law, mangagers of houses for orphans.

Orphan's courts. Courts in several New England states with probate jurisdiction.

Orphan's deduction. Deduction from the taxable estate of the decedent permitted if the decedent does not have a surviving spouse, and is survived by a minor child who, immediately after the death of the decedent, has no known parent. The amount of the deduction is governed by I.R.C. § 2057.

Orwige, sine wita. In Old English law, without war or foul, such security being provided by the laws, for homicides under certain circumstances, against the foehth, or deadly feud, on the part of the family of the slain.

O.S. An abbreviation for "Old Style," or "Old Series."

OSHA. Occupational Safety and Health Act.

Ostendit vobis /ôstendit vówbiss/. Lat. In old pleading, "shows to you." Formal words with which a demandant began his count.

Ostensible agency. An implied or presumptive agency, which exists where one, either intentionally or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, though he never in fact employed him. It is, strictly speaking, no agency at all, but is in reality based entirely upon estoppel.

Ostensible authority. Such authority as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe that the agent possesses.

Ostensible agency. An implied or presumptive agency, which exists where one, either intentionally or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, though he never in fact employed him. It is, strictly speaking, no agency at all, but is in reality based entirely upon estoppel.

Ostensible authority. Such authority as a principal,
intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe that the agent possesses.

National Cash Register Co. v. Wichita Frozen Food Lock-

Ostensible ownership. Apparent ownership derived from conduct or words. Theory of "ostensible ownership" estops an owner of property who clothes another with apparent title from later asserting his title against an innocent third party who has been induced to deal with apparent owner. Domarad v. Fisher & Burke, Inc., Osteopathic. One whose name appears to the world as such, though he has no interest in the firm.

Ostensible partner. One who practices osteopathy.

Ostensio /ôstînsh(y)ōw/. A tax or charge formerly imposed by the state for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets.

Osteopathe /ôstîyopaθ/. One who practices osteopathy.

Osteopathy /ôstîyôpəθi/. A system of complete medical practice based on the maintenance of proper relationships among the various parts of the body. Osteopathic physicians, licensed in all 50 states, are complete therapists, using manipulative therapy, drugs, surgery, X-ray, and other accepted therapeutic methods in the treatment of disease and injury.

Osteopathic medicine focuses special attention on the biological mechanisms by which the musculoskeletal system, through the nervous and circulatory systems, interacts with all body organs and systems in both health and disease. D.O.S., or Doctors of Osteopathy, diagnose and treat disorders of the musculoskeletal system through palpation and appropriately applied manipulative procedures. See Holt v. College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, 61 Cal.2d 750, 40 Cal.Rptr. 244, 394 P.2d 932.

OTB. Off-track betting.

O.T.C. See Over-the-counter market.

Other. Different or distinct from that already mentioned; additional, or further. Following an enumeration of particular classes "other" must be read as "other such like," and includes only others of like kind and character.

Other income. In taxation, income from sources other than in the operation of a business. An example of "other income" of a corporation includes, but is not limited to, interest and dividend income.

Otherwise. In a different manner; in another way, or in other ways.

Othesworthie /ôwθ(h)əswɔrθ/. In Saxon law, oathsworth; oathworthy; worthy or entitled to make oath.

Ought. This word, though generally directory only, will be taken as mandatory if the context requires it.

OUI. Abbreviation for state statutes involving operation of motor vehicles, etc., for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets.

Outbuilding. Something used in connection with a main building. A small building appurtenant to a main building, and generally separated from it; e.g. outhouse; storage shed. See also Outhouse.

Outcome test. In a diversity of citizenship action in the federal court, the result should be the same as if the action had been commenced in the state court. Guaranty Trust Co. of N.Y. v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 1470, 89 L.Ed. 2079.

Outbuilding. Something used in connection with a main building. A small building appurtenant to a main building, and generally separated from it; e.g. outhouse; storage shed. See also Outhouse.

Ouster. A putting out; dispossession; amotion of possession. A species of injuries to things real, by which the wrong-doer gains actual occupation of the land, and compels the rightful owner to seek his legal remedy in order to gain possession. An "ouster" is a wrongful dispossession or exclusion of a party from real property and involves a question of intent. Hamilton v. MacDonald, C.A.Ariz., 503 F.2d 1138, 1146. Notorious and unequivocal act by which one cotenant deprives another of right to common and equal possession and enjoyment of property. Young v. Young, 37 Md.App. 211, 376 A.2d 1151, 1158. See also Ejectment.

Ouster le main /ôwstər laméyn/. L. Fr. Literally, out of the hand.

Ouster le mer /ôwstər lamér/. L. Fr. Beyond the sea; a cause of excuse if a person, being summoned, did not appear in court. Spurious form for "Ouster le mer".

Ouster of jurisdiction. A condition which exists when a court which once had jurisdiction over a matter ceases to retain its jurisdiction.

Outer bar. Refers to those barristers in the English court system who sit in the "outer" or "utter" bar; called junior barristers as distinguished from the King's counsel.

Outer continental shelf. All lands lying submerged seaward and not including lands beneath navigable waters. The subsoil and sea bed of such lands are subject to the jurisdiction and control of the United States. 43 U.S.C.A. § 1331.

Outer door. In connection with the rule, statutory or otherwise, forbidding an officer to break open the outer door to serve civil process, this term designates the door of each separate apartment, where there are different apartments having a common outer door.

Outfinghthef /ôwtʃ(ə)fŋθef/. A liberty or privilege in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. See infangathel.

Outgo. Expenditures.

Outhouse. A building subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal dwelling, located either within or without the curtilage. A smaller or subordinate building connected with a dwelling, usually detached from it and standing at a little distance from it, not intended for persons to live in, but to serve some purpose of convenience or necessity; as a barn, outside privy, a dairy, a toolhouse, and the like. Under statutes, such a building... may be subservient to and adjoin a business building as well as a dwelling house. See also Outbuilding.

Outland. The Saxon thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use, and outland, which lay beyond the demesnes, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts. One part they disposed among those who attended their persons, called “theodans,” or lesser thanes; the other part they allotted to their husbandmen, or churls.

Outlaw. In English law, one who is put out of the protection or aid of the law. 3 Bl.Comm. 233, 284. Popularly, a person violating the law; a fugitive.

Outlawry. In old English law, a process by which a defendant or person in contempt on a civil or criminal process was declared an outlaw. If for treason or felony, it amounted to conviction and attainder.

In the United States, the process of outlawry seems to be unknown, at least in civil cases. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Outline. The line which marks the outer limits of an object or figure; an exterior line or edge; contour.

Outlot. In early American land law (particularly in Missouri), a lot or parcel of land lying outside the corporate limits of a town or village but subject to its municipal jurisdiction or control. Term now generally refers to an area of land on a plat which is to be used for a purpose other than a building site.

Out of benefit. A term descriptive of insurance policyholders who have been suspended for nonpayment of premiums.

Out-of-court settlement. The phrase is used with reference to agreements and transactions in regard to a pending suit which are arranged or take place between parties or their counsel privately and without being referred to the judge or court for authorization or approval. Thus, a case which is compromised, settled, and withdrawn by private agreement of the parties, after its institution, is said to be settled “out of court.” See Settlement (Structured settlement).

Out-of-pocket loss. As measure of damages, is the difference between the value of what the purchaser parted with (i.e., the purchase price paid by him) and the value of what he has received (i.e., the actual market value of the goods). Otte v. Ron Tonkin Chevrolet Co., 264 Or. 265, 503 P.2d 716, 720. Also called “out-of-pocket loss rule.”

Out of term. At a time when no term of the court is being held; in the vacation or interval which elapses between terms of the court.

Out of the state. In reference to rights, liabilities, or jurisdictions arising out of the common law, this phrase is equivalent to "beyond sea" (q.v.). In other connections, it means physically beyond the territorial limits of the particular state in question, or constructively so, as in the case of a foreign corporation. But a foreign corporation maintaining an agent within the state is not deemed to be “out of the state,” within various statutes dealing with jurisdiction over foreign corporations “doing business” within state.

Out of time. A mercantile phrase applied to a ship or vessel that has been so long at sea as to justify the belief of her total loss. In another sense, a vessel is said to be out of time when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. The phrase is identical with “missing ship.”

Outparters /áwt pápart/ə/. Stealers of cattle. A spurious form for “outputters”.

Output contract. See Contract; Entire output contract.

Outrage. A grave injury; injurious violence. The tort of “outrage” (intentional infliction of serious mental distress) requires that defendant engage in outrageous and extreme conduct which results in intentionally or recklessly inflicted severe emotional distress. Spencer v. King County, 39 Wash.App. 201, 692 P.2d 874, 880.

Outriders. In old English law, bailiffs-errant employed by sheriffs or their deputies to ride to the extremities of their counties or hundreds to summon men to the county or hundred court.

Outright. Free from reserve or restraint; direct; positive; down-right; altogether; entirely; openly.

Outroper /áwtr ówp'ar/. A person to whom the business of selling by auction was confined by statute.

Outs. In banking parlance, are conditions or warranties, failure to comply with which by the prospect give the banker a right to escape from a contract and to terminate negotiations. Cray, McFawn & Co. v. Hegarty, Conroy & Co., D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 93, 100.

Outside. To the exterior of; without; outward from.

Outside director. A member of a corporate board of directors who is not an employee or company officer and does not participate in the corporation’s day-to-day management. Outside directors, however, may include investment bankers, attorneys, or others who provide advice or services to incumbent management and thus have financial ties with management.

Outside salesmen. An outside salesman is one who solicits business away from the employer’s place of business on a full-time basis. If an employee qualifies as an outside salesman, all employment related expenses are deductible.

Outstanding. Remaining undischarged; unpaid; uncollected; as an outstanding debt. Constituting an effective obligation. When said of stock, the shares issued less treasury stock. When said of checks, it means a check issued but not yet presented for payment; a check that did not clear the drawer's bank prior to the bank statement date.

Existing as an adverse claim or pretension; not united with, or merged in, the title or claim of the party; as an outstanding title.

Outstanding and open account. In legal and commercial transactions it is an unsettled debt arising from items of work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and other open transactions, not reduced to writing, and subject to future settlement and adjustment and usually disclosed by account books of the owner of the demand and does not include express contracts or obligations which have been reduced to writing such as bonds, bills of exchange, or notes. Lee v. De Forest, 22 Cal.App.2d 351, 71 P.2d 285, 291.

Outstanding balance. Current amount owed on debt.

Outstroke. To mine by outstroke is to take out mineral from adjoining property through the tunnels and shafts of the demised premises.

Ouverture des successions /əvʊrvɛʁt də sɛkˈsɛsəs/o. In French law, the right of succession which arises to one upon the death, whether natural or civil, of another.

Ovell /ˈoʊvəl/. L. Fr. Equal.

Ovelty /ˈoʊvəlti/. In old English law, equality.

Over. Above; overhead; more than; in excess of.

Continued;—sometimes written on one page or sheet to indicate a continuation of matter on a separate page or sheet.

In conveyancing, the word is used to denote a contingent limitation intended to take effect on the failure of a prior estate. Thus, in what is commonly called the "name and arms clause" in a will or settlement there is generally a proviso that if the devisee fails to comply with the condition the estate is to go to some one else. This is a limitation or gift over.

Overawe /ˈoʊvərɔː/. To subjugate or restrain by awe, or profound reverence.

Overbreadth doctrine. This doctrine, which derives from First Amendment, serves to invalidate legislation so sweeping that, along with its allowable proscriptions, it also restricts constitutionally protected rights of free speech, press or assembly. McCrery v. State, Ala.Cr.App., 429 So.2d 1121, 1123. The doctrine requires that a statute be invalidated if it is fairly capable of being applied to punish people for constitutionally protected speech or conduct. A law is void on its face if it "does not aim specifically at evils within the allowable area of [government] control, but ... sweeps within its ambit other activities that constitute an exercise" of protected expressive or associational rights. Thomhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 97, 60 S.Ct. 296, 84 L.Ed. 460. A plausible challenge to a law as void for overbreadth can be made only when (1) the protected activity is a significant part of the law's target, and (2) there exists no satisfactory way of severing the law's constitutional from its unconstitutional applications so as to excise the latter clearly in a single step from the law's reach.

Overcharge. With respect to public carriers or public utilities, a charge collected above a lawful tariff rate; a charge of more than is permitted by law. As regards interest rates, see Usury.

Overcome. As used in a statute providing that a presumption may be overcome by other evidence, this term is not synonymous with overbalance or outweigh, but requires merely that such evidence counterbalance the presumption, where the party relying on it has the burden of proof.

Overcited, or overcysed. Proved guilty or convicted.

Overdraft. A check written on a checking account containing less funds than the amount of the check. Term may also refer to the condition which exists when vouchers or purchase orders are drawn in amounts in excess of budgeted or appropriated amount. See also Kiting; NSF check.

Overdraw. To draw upon a person or a bank in an amount in excess of the funds remaining to the drawer's credit with the drawee, or to an amount greater than what is due. See also Overdraft.

Overdue. Due and more than due; delayed or unpaid. Bliss v. California Co-op Producers, Cal.App., 156 P.2d 259, 260. The circumstance of an instrument that has not been paid despite arrival of the time for paying it, as by arrival of a date specified for payment or by acceleration or demand. A negotiable instrument or other evidence of debt is overdue when the day of its maturity is past and it remains unpaid.

A vessel is said to be overdue when she has not reached her destination at the time when she might ordinarily have been expected to arrive.

Overflowed lands. Those that are covered by nonnavigable waters (not including lands between high and low water mark of navigable streams or bodies of water, nor lands covered and uncovered by ordinary daily ebb and flow of normal tides of navigable waters).

Overhaul. To inquire into; to review; to disturb. To examine thoroughly, as machinery, with a view to repairs.

Overhead. All administrative or executive costs incident to the management, supervision, or conduct of the capital outlay, or business; distinguished from "operating charges," or those items that are inseparably connected with the productive end and may be seen as the work progresses, and are the subject of knowledge from observation. Continuous expenses of a business; the expenses and obligations incurred in connection with operation; expenses necessarily incurred in organization, office expenses, engineering, inspection, supervision, and management during construction; and general expenditures in financial or industrial enterprise which cannot be attributed to any one department or product, excluding cost of materials, labor, and selling. Guillot v.
State Highway Commission of Montana, 102 Mont. 149, 56 P.2d 1072, 1075.

Any cost not specifically or directly associated with the production of identifiable goods and services, sometimes called "burden" or "indirect costs" and, in Britain, "oncosts." Frequently limited to manufacturing overhead.

Overernissa /ˈoʊvərnɪsə/. In Saxon law, contumacy or contempt of court.

Over-insurance. See Double insurance.

Overissue. To issue in excessive quantity; to issue in excess of fixed legal limits. Thus, "overissued stock" of a corporation is capital stock issued in excess of the amount limited and prescribed by the charter or certificate of incorporation. U.C.C. § 8-104(2). See also Over-subscription.

Overload. To cause to bear too heavy a burden; to load too heavily.

Overlying right. Right of owner of land to take water from ground underneath for use on his land within basin or watershed. Right is based on ownership of land and is appurtenant thereto. City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, 28.

Overplus. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the surplus; the remainder of a thing.

Overrate. In its strictest signification, a rating by way of overplus. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the surplus; the remainder of a thing.

Overreaching. In connection with commercial and consumer transactions, is that which results from an inequality of bargaining power or other circumstances in which there is an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties. Leprino v. Intermountain Brick Co., Colo. 759 P.2d 835, 836; Hertz Corp. v. Attorney General of New York, 136 Misc.2d 420, 518 N.Y.S.2d 704, 708. See also Adhesion contract; Unconscionability.

Overreaching clause. In a resettlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the original settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the resettlement. The clause is so called because it provides that the resettlement shall be overreached by the exercise of the old powers. If the resettlement were executed without a provision to this effect, the estate of the tenant for life and the annexed powers would be subject to any charges for portions, etc., created under the original settlement.

Override. An estate carved out of working interest under an oil or gas lease. Commissions paid to managers on sales made by subordinates. Provision in real estate brokers listing agreement giving him right to certain commission for a reasonable period of time after expiration of listing in event owner sells to purchaser with whom broker negotiated during term of listing.

Overriding royalty. As applied to an existing oil and gas lease is a given percentage of the gross production payable to some person other than the lessor or persons claiming under him. Royalty interest carved out of working interest created by oil and gas lease, and is interest in oil and gas produced at surface free of expense of production and its outstanding characteristic is that its duration is limited by duration of lease under which it is created. Cline v. Angle, 216 Kan. 328, 532 P.2d 1093, 1097.

Overrule. To supersede; annul; reverse; make void; reject by subsequent action or decision. A judicial decision is said to be overruled when a later decision, rendered by the same court or by a superior court in the same system, expresses a judgment upon the same question of law directly opposite to that which was before given, thereby depriving the earlier opinion of all authority as a precedent. The term is not properly applied to conflicting decisions on the same point by co-ordinate or independent tribunals. It also signifies that a majority of the judges of a court have decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the minority judges are said to be overruled. See Reverse; Vacate.

To refuse to sustain, or recognize as sufficient, an objection made in the course of a trial, as to the introduction of particular evidence, etc.

Overs. In the meat packing business, the increase in the weight of meat resulting from salt put on it.

Oversamessa. In old English law, a forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor.

Over sea. Beyond the sea; outside the limits of the state or country. See Beyond the seas.

Overseer /ˈoʊvəsɛr/. A superintendent or supervisor; a public officer whose duties involve general superintendence of routine affairs. Member of a University board. See also Regent.

Overseers of highways. The name given, in some of the states, to a board of officers of a city, township, or county, whose special function is the construction and repair of the public roads or highways.

Oversubscription. Condition which exists when there are more orders or subscriptions for corporate stock than can be issued. See also Overissue.

Overt. Open; manifest; public; issuing in action, as distinguished from that which rests merely in intention or design.

Market overt. See Market.

Overt act. An open, manifest act from which criminality may be implied. An outward act done in pursuance and manifestation of an intent or design. An open act, which must be manifestly proved.

An overt act essential to establish an attempt to commit a crime is an act done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect the result unless prevented by some extraneous cause. It must be something done that directly moves toward the crime, and brings the accused nearer to its commission than mere acts of preparation or of planning, and will apparently result, in the usual and natural course of events, if Overtake. To come or catch up with in a course of action.

Overtime. After regular working hours; beyond the regular fixed hours.

Over-the-counter market. Refers to the broad securities market consisting of brokers who purchase or sell securities by computer hook-up or telephone rather than through the facilities of a securities exchange. At one time completely unorganized, the over-the-counter market is now relatively organized with computerized quotation and transaction reporting services. See NASD; NASDAQ.

Overtime wage. Portion of wages paid employee for services rendered beyond regularly fixed working hours.

Overture. An opening; a proposal.

Overt word. An open, plain word, not to be misunderstood.

Owe. To be bound to do or omit something, especially to pay a debt. May also refer to a moral or social obligation.

Owlety /ˈow(ə)ləti/. Equality; an equalization charge.

This word is used in law in several compound phrases, as follows:

Owlety of exchange. A sum of money given, when two persons have exchanged lands, by the owner of the less valuable estate to the owner of the more valuable, to equalize the exchange.

Owlety of partition. A sum of money paid by one of two coparceners or co-tenants to the other, when a partition has been effected between them, but, the land not being susceptible of division into exactly equal shares, such payment is required to make the portions respectively assigned to them of equal value. The power to grant owlety has been exercised by the courts of equity from time immemorial.

Owlety of services. In the feudal law, the condition obtaining when there is lord, mesne, and tenant, and the tenant holds the mesne by the same service that the mesne holds over the lord above him.

Owing. Unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not.

Owling /ˈəʊ(ə)lɪŋ/. In English law, the offense of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom; so called from its being usually carried on in the night. 4 Bl.Comm. 154.

Own. To have a good legal title; to hold as property; to have a legal or rightful title to; to have; to possess.

Owner. The person in whom is vested the ownership, dominion, or title of property; proprietor. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases, even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right.

The term is, however, a nomen generalissimum, and its meaning is to be gathered from the connection in which it is used, and from the subject-matter to which it is applied. The primary meaning of the word as applied to land is one who owns the fee and who has the right to dispose of the property, but the term also includes one having a possessor right to land or the person occupying or cultivating it.

The term “owner” is used to indicate a person in whom one or more interests are vested for his own benefit. The person in whom the interests are vested has “title” to the interests whether he holds them for his own benefit or for the benefit of another. Thus the term “title,” unlike “ownership,” is a colorless word; to say without more that a person has title to certain property does not indicate whether he holds such property for his own benefit or as trustee. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2, Comment (d); Restatement of Property, § 10.

See also Ownership.

Beneficial owner. See Beneficial owner; also Equitable owner, below.

Equitable owner. One who is recognized in equity as the owner of property, because the real and beneficial use and title belong to him, although the bare legal title is vested in another, e.g., a trustee for his benefit. One who has a present title in land which will ripen into legal ownership upon the performance of conditions subsequent. There may therefore be two “owners” in respect of the same property, one the nominal or legal owner, the other the beneficial or equitable owner. See also Beneficial owner.

General and beneficial owner. The person whose interest is primarily one of possession and enjoyment in contemplation of an ultimate absolute ownership;—not the person whose interest is primarily in the enforce¬ ment of a collateral pecuniary claim, and does not con¬ template the use or enjoyment of the property as such. See also Beneficial owner.

General owner. He who has the primary or residuary title to it; as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien.
One who has both the right of property and of posses¬ sion.

Joint owners. Two or more persons who jointly own and hold title to property, e.g., joint tenants, and also part¬ ers and tenants in common. In its most comprehen¬ sive sense, the term embraces all cases where the prop¬ erty in question is owned by two or more persons regard¬ less of the special nature of their relationship or how it came into being. An estate by entirety is a “joint ownership” of a husband and wife as at common law notwithstanding legislative enactments touching joint tenancy. Cullum v. Rice, 236 Mo.App. 1113, 162 S.W.2d 342, 344. See also Joint estate; Tenancy.

Legal owner. One who is recognized and held respon¬ sible by the law as the owner of property. In a more particular sense, one in whom the legal title to real estate is vested, but who holds it in trust for the benefit of another, the latter being called the “equitable” own¬ er.

Part owners. Joint owners; co-owners; those who have shares of ownership in the same thing. See Joint own¬ ers, above.

Record owner. This term, particularly used in statutes requiring notice of tax delinquency or sale, means the owner of record, not the owner described in the tax roll;
the owner of the title at time of notice.

Reputed owner. One who has to all appearances the title to, and possession of, property; one who, from all appearances, or from supposition, is the owner of a thing. He who has the general credit or reputation of being the owner or proprietor of goods.

Riparian owner. See Riparian.

Sole and unconditional owner. An expression com¬ monly used in fire insurance policies, in which the word “sole” means that no one else has any interest in the property as owner, and “unconditional” means that the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition. To be “unconditional and sole,” the interest or ownership of the insured must be completely vested, not contingent or conditional, nor in common or jointly with others, but of such nature that the insured must alone sustain the entire loss if the property is destroyed; and this is so whether the title is legal or equitable. It is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of “sole and unconditional ownership” that the insured is the sole equitable owner and has the full equitable title. It is enough that the insured is equitably entitled to immedi¬ ate and absolute legal ownership. The term contemnplates beneficial and practical proprietorship and not necessarily technical title.

Special owner. One who has a special interest in an article of property, amounting to a qualified ownership of it, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien; as distin¬ guished from the general owner, who has the primary or residuary title to the same thing. Some person holding property with the consent of, and as representative of, the actual owner.

Ownership. Collection of rights to use and enjoy prop¬ erty, including right to transmit it to others. Trustees of Phillips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, 92 N.H. 473, 33 A.2d 666, 673. The complete dominion, title, or proprietary right in a thing or claim. The entirety of the powers of use and disposal allowed by law.

The right of one or more persons to possess and use a thing to the exclusion of others. The right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the exclusion of all other persons. The exclusive right of possession, enjoyment, and disposal; involving as an essential at¬ tribute the right to control, handle, and dispose.

Ownership of property is either absolute or qualified.
The ownership of property is absolute when a single person has the absolute dominion over it, and may use it or dispose of it according to his pleasure, subject only to general laws. The ownership is qualified when it is shared with one or more persons, when the time of enjoyment is deferred or limited, or when the use is

There may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery; of all domestic animals; of all obligations; of such products of labor or skill as the composition of an author, the goodwill of a business, trademarks and signs, and of rights created or granted by statute. Calif.Civil Code, § 655.

In connection with burglary, “ownership” means any possession which is rightful as against the burglar.

See also Equitable ownership; Exclusive ownership;
Hold; Incident of ownership; Interest; Interval ownership;
Ostensible ownership; Owner; Possession; Title.

Oxfild /’oksfild/. In old English law, a restitution an¬ ciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same.

Oxgang. In old English law, as much land as an ox could till. A measure of land of uncertain quantity. In the north of England a division of a carucate. Accord¬ ing to some, fifteen acres.

Oyer /’oier/. In old English practice, hearing; the hear¬ ing of a deed read, which a party sued on a bond, etc., might pray or demand, and it was then read to him by the other party; the entry on the record being, “et ei legitur in hoc verba” (and it is read to him in these

A copy of a bond or specialty sued upon, given to the opposite party, in lieu of the old practice of reading it.

Oyer and terminer /’oier an t’arman/’. A half French phrase applied in England to the assizes, which are so called from the commission of oyer and terminer directed to the judges, empowering them to “inquire, hear, and determine” all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. This commission is now issued regularly, but was formerly used only on particular occasions, as upon sudden outrage or insurrection in any place. In the United States, certain higher criminal courts were called “courts of oyer and terminer.”

Oyer de record /ˈɔːr dərɪk/ A petition made in court that the judges, for better proof’s sake, will hear or look upon any record.

Oyez /ˈɔːɪz/ (t)s. Hear ye. A word used in courts by the public crier to command attention when a proclamation is about to be made. Usually pronounced “O yes.”

P.A. Professional Association.

Paage /péyaj/ In old English law, a toll for passage through another’s land. The same as “pedage.”

PAC. Political Action Committee. Committees, clubs, associations or other groups of persons formed to receive contributions for use in election campaigns. The organization, registration, reporting, and other activities of such organizations is regulated by federal and state laws. See e.g., 2 U.S.C.A. § 431 et seq.

Pacare /pakér/ L. Lat. To pay.

Pacatio /pakéysh(i)yow/. Payment.

Pace. A measure of length containing two feet and a half, being the ordinary length of a step. The geometrical pace is five feet long, being the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

Paceatur /péysiyéytar/. Lat. Let him be freed or discharged.

Pacification. The act of making peace between two hostile or belligerent states; reestablishment of public tranquillity.

Pacifist. One who seeks to maintain peace and to abolish war. One who refuses or is unwilling for any purpose to bear arms because of conscientious considerations, and who is disposed to encourage others in such refusal. U. S. v. Schwimmer, Ill., 279 U.S. 644, 49 S.Ct. 448, 451, 73 L.Ed. 889. A conscientious objector.

Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria /peysay sant máksamí kantrériya vis et anjuriyí/. Violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace.

Pack. To decide by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude; to put together in sorts with a fraudulent design. To pack a jury is to use unlawful, improper, or deceitful means to have the jury made up of persons favorably disposed to the party so contriving, or who have been or can be improperly influenced to give the verdict he seeks. The term imports the improper and corrupt selection of a jury sworn and impaneled for the trial of a cause.

Package. A bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling, a thing in form to become, as such, an article of merchandise or delivery from hand to hand. A parcel is a small package; “parcel” being the diminutive of “package.” Each of the words denotes a thing in form suitable for transportation or handling, or sale from hand to hand. As ordinarily understood in the commercial world, it means a shipping package. See also Parcel.

Original package. See Original.

Packed parcels. The name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones (each bearing a different address), collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together.

Packing list. Document which contains the contents, weight and other information concerning the package to be shipped. It accompanies the package and is available for inspection.

Pact. A bargain; compact; agreement. An agreement between two or more nations or states usually less elaborate than a treaty but nearly equivalent thereto. See also Compact; Pactum; Treaty.

Nude pact. A translation of the Latin “nudum pactum,” a bare or naked pact, that is, a promise or agreement made without any consideration on the other side, which is therefore not enforceable.

Obligatory pact. In civil law, an informal obligatory declaration of consensus, which the Roman law refused to acknowledge.

Pact de non alienando /pěkt diy nón élyiyonándow/. An agreement not to alienate incumbent (particularly mortgaged) property. This stipulation, sometimes found in mortgages made in Louisiana, and derived from the Spanish law, binds the mortgagor not to sell or incumber the mortgaged premises to the prejudice of the mortgagee; it does not avoid a sale made to a third person, but enables the mortgagee to proceed directly against the mortgaged property in a proceeding against the mortgagor alone and without notice to the purchaser.

Pacta conventa que neque contra leges neque dolom inita sunt omnino modo observanda sunt /pěktá konvènta kwí yí nekwyí kontra liyjyz někwyí dołom mělom iníta sint ótmnyí mówdow obzárwánda sint/. Agreements which are not contrary to the laws nor entered into with a fraudulent design are in all respects to be observed.

Pacta dant legem contractui /pěktá děnt llyjám kontráktyuyuy/. The stipulations of parties constitute the law of the contract. Agreements give the law to the contract.

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. /pêktam prêyvêyô jôray pôlbâkôw dirigèrenti non possônt/. Private compacts cannot derogate from public right.

Pacta que contra leges constitutionesque, vel contra bonos mores fiunt, nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. /pêktam kôôra liôyiyiz kônôstâ(y)ûwshiyânî-yzkwi, vêl kôôra böônows mûriyzy fàyônt, nûlâm vîm hâbîrîy, induyûbêtôyât jûrûs êst/. That contracts which are made against law or against good morals have no force is a principle of undoubted law.

Pacta que turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. /pêktam tûrpêm kôôsâm kôôntannûn sônt ôôbôrûvânda/. Agreements founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed.

Pacta sunt servanda. /pêktam sânt sârvânda/. Agreements (and stipulations) of the parties (to a contract) must be observed.

Pactio. /pêksh(y)ôw/. Lat. In the civil law, a bargaining or agreeing of which pactum (the agreement itself) was the result. It is used, however, as the synonym of "pactum."

Pactional. /pêkshânaal/. Relating to or generating an agreement; by way of bargain or covenant.

Pactions. /pêkshanz/. In international law, contracts between nations which are to be performed by a single act, and of which execution is at an end at once.

Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. /pêktäs prâyvatôrim jôray pôlbâkôw nôn dirigéyôter/. Private contracts do not derogate from public law.

Pactitious. /pêktishôs/. Settled by covenant.

Pacto aliquid licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur. /pêktôw âlîkwôd lîsîtam êst kwôd sàniyî pêktôw nôn admîditaî/. By special agreement things are allowed which are not otherwise permitted.

Pactum. /pêktôm/. Lat. Civil law. A pact. An agreement or convention without specific name, and without consideration, which, however, might, in its nature, produce a civil obligation.

Nudum pactum. A bare or naked pact or agreement; a promise or undertaking made without any consideration for it, and therefore not enforceable.

Roman law. With some exceptions, those agreements that the law does not directly enforce, but which it recognizes only as a valid ground of defense, were called "pacta." Those agreements that are enforced, in other words, are supported by actions, are called "contractus."

The exceptions are few, and belong to a late period.

Pactum commissorium. /pêktam kôômsôrôiyâm/. An agreement of forfeiture.

Pactum constitutus pecunia. /pêktam kônôstâ(y)ûwtyi pôkûwînyîly/. In the Civil law, an agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or term may be defined as simply an agreement by which a person promises a creditor to pay him. There is a striking conformity between the pactum constitutus pecunia, as above defined, and our indebitatus assumptus.

Pactum de non alienando. /pêktam diô nôn éyi-lyôyânândôw/. A pact or agreement binding the owner of property not to alienate it, intended to protect the interests of another; particularly an agreement by the mortgagee of real estate that he will not transfer the title to a third person until after satisfaction of the mortgage. A clause inserted in mortgages in Louisiana to secure to the mortgage creditor the right to foreclose his mortgage by executory process directed solely against the mortgagee, and to give him the right to seize and sell the mortgaged property, regardless of any subsequent alienations. Shields v. Schiff, 124 U.S. 351, 355, 8 S.Ct. 510, 31 L.Ed. 445.

Pactum de non petendo. /pêktam diô nôn psiênôw/. In the civil law, an agreement not to sue. A simple convention whereby a creditor promises the debtor that he will not enforce his claim.

Pactum de quota litis. /pêktam diô kwôtyta láyta/. In the civil law, an agreement by which a creditor promised to pay a portion of a debt difficult to recover to a person who undertook to recover it.

Padder. A robber; a foot highwayman; a foot-pad.

Pagarchus. /pàgârka/. A petty magistrate of a pagus or little district in the country.

Pagus. /pêygas/. A county.

Paid-in-capital. Money or property given to a corporation in exchange for the corporation's capital stock; as distinguished from capital obtained from the earnings or donations to the corporation. See also Surplus (Paid-in surplus).

Paid-in-surplus. The amount paid for the stock of a corporation in excess of its par or stated value. See Capital (Capital surplus); Paid-in-capital; Surplus (Paid-in surplus).

Paid-up insurance. Insurance coverage for which no additional premiums are due.

Paid-up stock. Shares of stock for which full payment has been received by the corporation.

Pain and suffering. Term used to describe not only physical discomfort and distress but also mental and emotional trauma which are recoverable as elements of damage in torts. Recovery for pain and suffering is restricted by statute in certain states. See Cap.

Paine forte et dure. /pêyn foôt e dyûr/. See Peine fort et dure.

Pains and penalties, bills of. The name given to acts of parliament to attain particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties beyond or contrary to the common law, to serve a special purpose. They are in fact new laws, made pro re nata. See also Bill of pains and penalties.
PAIRING-OFF. In the practice of legislative bodies, a species of negative proxies, by which two members, who belong to opposite parties or are on opposite sides with regard to a given question, mutually agree that they will both be absent from voting, either for a specified period or when a division is had on the particular question. By this mutual agreement a vote is neutralized on each side of the question, and the relative numbers on the division are precisely the same as if both members were present. It is said to have originated in the house of commons in Cromwell’s time.

Pais, pays /pey(s)/. Fr. The country; the neighborhood.

A trial per pais signifies a trial by the country; that is, by jury.

An assurance by matter in pais is an assurance transmitted between two or more private persons “in the country,” that is, upon the very spot to be transferred.

Matter in pais signifies matter of fact, probably because matters of fact are triable by the country; i.e., by jury.

Estoppels in pais are estoppels by conduct, as distinguished from estoppels by deed or by record.

Conveyances in pais are ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country; i.e., upon the land to be transferred.

See also in pais; Matter in pais.

Palace court. See Court of the Steward and Marshal.

Palam /pələm/. Lat. In the civil law, openly; in the civil law, a conditional fee for professional services in addition to the lawful charge.

Palmarium /pəlməriyum/. In civil law, a conditional fee for professional services in addition to the lawful charge.

Palmer Act. A name given to the English statute 19 & 20 Vict., c. 16, enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the central criminal court, to be tried in that court.

Palmistry /pəməstrə/. The practice of telling fortunes by a feigned interpretation of the lines and marks on the hand. Also, a trick with the hand.

Palm off. Refers to the conduct of selling goods as the goods of another or doing business as the business of another such that the public is misled by the conduct and believes it is purchasing the goods of another or doing business with someone other than the actual seller. Laser Industries, Ltd. v. Eder Instrument Co., Inc., D.C.Ill., 573 F.Supp. 987, 991.

Palm prints. The impression made by a person’s palm on a smooth surface. They may be used for purpose of identification in criminal cases.

Palpable. Easily perceptible, plain, obvious, readily visible, noticeable, patent, distinct, manifest. People v. Hughey, 382 Ill. 136, 47 N.E.2d 77, 80.

Palsgraf Rule. The rule derived from the case of Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99, to the effect that one who is negligent is liable only for the harm or injury which is within the orbit of foreseeability and not for every injury which follows from his negligence. See also Foreseeability.

Pandects /pəndɛkts/. A compilation of Roman law, consisting of selected passages from the writings of the most authoritative of the older jurists, methodically arranged, prepared by Tribonian with the assistance of sixteen associates, under a commission from the emperor Justinian. This work, which is otherwise called the “Digest,” because in his compilation the writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digestia comprises fifty books, and is one of the four great works composing the Corpus Juris Civilis. It was first published in A.D. 533, when Justinian gave to it the force of law.

Pander, n. One who caters to the lust of others; a male bawd, a pimp, or procurer.

Pander, v. To pimp; to cater to the gratification of the lust of another. To entice or procure a female, by promises, threats, fraud, or artifice, to enter any place in which prostitution is practiced, for the purpose of prostitution. Pandering is established when evidence shows that accused has succeeded in inducing his victim to become engaged in prostitution. People v. Charles, 218 Cal.App.2d 812, 32 Cal.Rptr. 653, 658.

Pandering of obscenity. Business of purveying textual, pictorial or graphic matter openly advertised to appeal to prurient interest of customers, or potential customers, by either blatant and explicit advertising or subtle and sophisticated advertising. U.S. v. Baranov, 418 F.2d 1051, 1053. Such conduct is not protected by the First Panel. A list of jurors summoned to serve in a particular court, or for the trial of a particular action. Group of judges (smaller than the entire court) which decides a case; e.g., a nine member appellate court might be divided into three, three member panels with each panel hearing and deciding cases. May also refer to members of a commission.

See also impanel; Jury-list; Jury panel.

Prepaid legal services. "Open panel" legal services is a plan in which legal services are paid for in advance (usually by a type of insurance) and members can choose their own lawyer. Under a "closed panel", however, all legal services are performed by a group of attorneys previously selected by the insurer, union, etc. See Prepaid legal services.

Pannellation /pənəˈlɛʃən/. The act of impaneling a jury.

Papal supremacy. The supremacy which the Pope claimed not only over the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, but over all other Christian princes. The theory was that they stood to the Pope as feudal vassals to a supreme lord; as such, the Pope claimed the right to enforce the duties due to him from his feudal subordinates through an ascending scale of penalties culminating in the absolution of the prince's subjects from the bonds of allegiance, and in the disposition of the sovereign himself. The papal supremacy was overthrown in England by acts of the Parliament which met in 1529 and was dissolved in 1536, ending in the Act of Supremacy which substituted the King for the Pope.

Paper. A written or printed document or instrument. A document filed or introduced in evidence in a suit at common law, as, in the phrase "papers in the case" and in "papers on appeal." Any writing or printed document, including letters, memoranda, legal or business documents, and books of account, as in the constitutional provision which protects the people from unreasonable searches and seizures in respect to their "papers" as well as their houses and persons. A written or printed evidence of debt, particularly a promissory note or a bill of exchange, as in the phrases "accommodation paper" and "commercial paper" (q.v.). See also Bearer paper; Chattel paper; Commercial paper; Document; Instrument.

Paper money. Bills drawn by a government against its own credit, engaging to pay money, but which do not profess to be immediately convertible into specie, and which are put into compulsory circulation as a substitute for coined money. See Federal reserve notes; Legal tender.

Paper patent. Term used derisively to refer to a discovery or invention which has never been put to commercial use nor recognized in the trade. Coltman v. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., C.C.A.Ind., 104 F.2d 508.

Paper profit (or loss). An unrealized profit (or loss) on a security or other investment still held. Paper profits (or losses) become realized profits (or losses) only upon the sale of the security.

Paper standard. A money system based on pure paper which is not convertible into gold or other metal of intrinsic value.

Papian popææn law. See Lex Papia Poppea.

Par. In commercial law, equal; equality. An equality subsisting between the nominal or face value of a bill of exchange, share of stock, etc., and its actual selling value. When the values are thus equal, the instrument or share is said to be "at par;" if it can be sold for more than its nominal worth, it is "above par;" if for less, it is "below par." See also Par of exchange; Par value.

Any standard or norm of conduct which is expected of people.

Parachronism /pərəkronɪzəm/. Error in the computation of time.

Paracrium /pərəˈkriəm/. In old English law, the tenure between parencers, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service.

Parage /pərɑːj/ or paragram /pərəˈɡræm/. In old English law, an equality of blood or dignity, but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between co-heirs. More properly, however, an equality of condition among nobles, or persons holding by a noble tenure. Thus, when a fief is divided among brothers, the younger hold their part of the elder by parage; i.e., without any homage or service. Term from which "disparagement", meaning inequality, is derived. Also the portion which a woman may obtain on her marriage.

Paragraph. A distinct part of a discourse or writing; any section or subdivision of writing or chapter which relates to particular point, whether consisting of one or many sentences.

A part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, will, trust, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete.

Fed.R.Civil P. 10(b) provides that: "All averments of claim or defense shall be made in numbered paragraphs, the contents of each of which shall be limited as far as practicable to a statement or of a single set of circumstances; and a paragraph may be referred to by number in all succeeding pleadings ...."

Paralegal. A person with legal skills, but who is not an attorney, and who works under the supervision of a lawyer in performing various tasks relating to the practice of law or who is otherwise authorized by law to use those legal skills. Paralegal courses leading to degrees in such specialty are now afforded by many schools.

Parallel citation. A citation reference to the same case printed in two or more different reports. See e.g. the case citation to U.S. Supreme Court decisions in this Dictionary.
Paraprofessional. One who assists a professional person, either in readiness to be brought into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he returned cepi corpus and bailbond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body.

Paratus est verificare /pareytas est vehrafakeriy/. Lat. He is ready to verify. The Latin form for concluding a pleading with a verification (q.v.).

Paravail /pēravēyl/pēravēyl/. Inferior; subordinate. In old English law, tenant paravail signified the lowest tenant of land, being the tenant of a mesne lord. He was so called because he was supposed to make "avail" or profit of the land for another.

Parcel, (v. To divide an estate.

Parcella terra /parsēla tēhriy/ A parcel of land.

Parcella makers /pārsal meykarz/. In old English law, two officers in the exchequer who formerly made the parcels or items of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charged them with everything they had levied for the king during the term of their office.

Parcels. A description of property, formally set forth in a conveyance, together with the boundaries thereof, in order to provide for easy identification.

Parcels, bill of. An account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser. See, Bill of parcels under Bill.

Parcenary /pārsanēhriy/ The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by parceners, before the common inheritance has been divided.

Parcener /pārsanar/. A joint heir; one who, with others, holds an estate in co-parcenary (q.v.). Gibson v. Johnson, 331 Mo. 1198, 56 S.W.2d 783.

Parchment. Sheep-skins dressed for writing, so called from Pergamus, Asia Minor, where they were invented. Used for deeds, and used for writs of summons in England previous to the Judicature Act of 1875. The skin of a lamb, sheep, goat, young calf, or other animal, prepared for writing on; also, any of various papers made in imitation thereof.

Parco fracto /pārkow frēktow/ Pound-breach; also the name of an old English writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

Par delictum /pār daliktam/ (In pari delicto.) Equal guilt.
Pardon. An executive action that mitigates or sets aside punishment for a crime. An act of grace from governing power which mitigates the punishment the law demands for the offense and restores the rights and privileges forfeited on account of the offense. Verneco, Inc. v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 253 La. 721, 219 So.2d 508, 511. A pardon releases offender from entire punishment prescribed for offense and from disabilities consequent on his conviction; it reinstates his civil liberties. State ex rel. Herman v. Powell, 139 Mont. 583, 367 P.2d 553, 556.

The power to pardon for non-federal crimes is generally invested in state governors, while the President has the power to pardon for federal offenses (Art. II, Sec. 2, U.S.Const.).

See also Amnesty; Board of pardons; Clemency; Commutation; Condonation; Parole; Reprieve.

Distinguished from amnesty. The distinction between amnesty and pardon is one rather of philological interest than of legal importance. Knote v. U. S., 95 U.S. 149, 153, 24 L.Ed. 442, 443. This is so as to their ultimate effect, but there are incidental differences of importance. They are of different character and have different purposes. The one overlooks offense; the other remits punishment. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the state, to political offenses, forgiveness being deemed more expedient for the public welfare than prosecution and punishment. The second condones infractions of the peace of the state. Amnesty is usually general, addressed to classes or even communities—a legislative act, or under legislation, constitutional or statutory—the act of the supreme magistrate. There may or may not be distinct acts of acceptance. If other rights are dependent upon it and are asserted, there is affirmative evidence of acceptance. Burdick v. U. S., 236 U.S. 79, 271, 35 S.Ct. 267, 59 L.Ed. 476. "Pardon" applies only to the individual, releases him from the punishment fixed by law for his specific offense, but does not affect the criminality of the same or similar acts when performed by other persons or repeated by the same person.

Distinguished from commutation. A pardon, to be effective, must be accepted, Burdick v. U. S., 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 268, 59 L.Ed. 476; but a commutation is merely a cessation of the exercise of sovereign authority, and does not obliterates guilt nor restore civil rights, and need not be accepted by the convict to be operative. A commutation is simply a remission of a part of the punishment, a substitution of a lesser penalty for the one originally imposed; while a "pardon" avoids or terminates penalty for crime. U. S. v. Commissioner of Immigration at Port of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 5 F.2d 162, 165.

Distinguished from parole. A "pardon" releases the offender from the entire punishment prescribed for the offense, and from all the disabilities consequent on his conviction, while a "parole" a convict is merely released before the expiration of his term, to remain subject during the remainder thereof to supervision by the public authority, and to return to imprisonment on violation of the condition of the parole.

Types of Pardons

Absolute or unconditional pardon. One which frees the criminal without any condition whatever. That which reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender. It obliterates in legal contemplation the offense itself. It goes no further than to restore to the accused his civil rights and remit the penalty imposed for the particular offense of which he was convicted in so far as it remains unpaid. State v. Cullen, 14 Wash.2d 105, 127 P.2d 257, 259.

Conditional pardon. One to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. A pardon which does not become operative until the grantee has performed some specific act, or where it becomes void when some specific event transpires. One granted on the condition that it shall only endure until the voluntary doing of some act by the person pardoned, or that it shall be revoked by a subsequent act on his part, as that he shall leave the state and never return.

Executive pardon. See Executive pardon.

Full pardon. One freely and unconditionally absolving party from all legal consequences, direct and collateral, of crime and conviction. Warren v. State, 127 Tex.Cr.R. 71, 74 S.W.2d 1006, 1008.

General pardon. One granted to all the persons participating in a given criminal or treasonable offense (generally political), or to all offenders of a given class or against a certain statute or within certain limits of time. But "amnesty" is the more appropriate term for this. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute. See Amnesty.

Partial pardon. That which remits only portion of punishment or absolves from only portion of legal consequences of crime. Warren v. State, 127 Tex.Cr.R. 71, 74 S.W.2d 1006, 1008.

Unconditional pardon. Pardon that frees a prisoner without any conditions attached. A full pardon.

Pardon attorney. Official of Justice Department who considers applications for federal pardons and makes recommendations for the exercise of Presidential clemency.

Pardoners /pár'danərz/. In old English law, persons who carried about the pope’s indulgences, and sold them to any who would buy them.

Parens /pær'نز, 'pær'نز/. Lat. In Roman law, a parent; originally and properly only the father or mother of the person spoken of; but also, by an extension of its meaning, any relative, male or female, in the line of direct ascent.

"Parens" est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis /pær'نز est nōmen jenarely əd ōmniy ʃjyns kagnéshiyównas/. “Parent” is a name general for every kind of relationship.

Parens patriae /pərɛns pætriɪə or pɛrɛnz pétryiə/. “Parens patriae,” literally “parent of the country,” refers traditionally to role of state as sovereign and guardian of persons under legal disability, such as juveniles or the insane, State of W.Va. v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., C.A. N.Y., 440 F.2d 1079, 1089, and in child custody determinations, when acting on behalf of the state to protect the interests of the child. It is the principle that the state must care for those who cannot take care of themselves, such as minors who lack proper care and custody from their parents. It is a concept of standing utilized to protect those quasi-sovereign interests such as health, comfort and welfare of the people, general economy, the state, etc. Gibbs v. Titelman, D.C.Pa., 369 F.Supp. 38, 54.

Parens patriae originates from the English common law where the King had a royal prerogative to act as guardian to persons with legal disabilities such as infants. In the United States, the parens patriae function belongs with the states.

State attorney generals have parens patriae authority to bring actions on behalf of state residents for anti-trust offenses and to recover on their behalf. 15 U.S.C.A. § 15c. See also Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act.

The use of this power to deprive a person of freedom has been limited by recent laws and decisions; e.g. Kent v. U. S., 383 U.S. 541, 554–555, 86 S.Ct. 1045, 1054, 16 L.Ed.2d 84.

See also Surrogate parent.

Parent. The lawful father or mother of a person. In common and ordinary usage the word comprehends much more than mere fact of who was responsible for child’s conception and birth and is commonly understood to describe and refer to person or persons who share mutual love and affection with a child and who supply child support and maintenance, instruction, discipline and guidance. Solberg v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 50 Wis.2d 746, 185 N.W.2d 319, 323.

By statute, “parent” has been defined to include (1) either the natural father or the natural mother of a child born of their valid marriage to each other, if no subsequent judicial decree has divested one or both of them of their statutory coguardianship as created by their marriage; (2) either the adoptive father or the adoptive mother of a child jointly adopted by them, if no subsequent judicial decree has divested one or both of them of their statutory coguardianship as created by the adoption; (3) the natural mother of an illegitimate child, if her position as sole guardian of such a child has not been divested by a subsequent judicial decree; (4) a child’s putative blood parent who has expressly acknowledged paternity and contributed meaningfully to the child’s support; (5) any individual or agency whose status as guardian of the person of the child has been established by judicial decree.

Includes any person entitled to take, or who would be entitled to take if the child died without a will, as a parent under the Uniform Probate Code by intestate succession from the child whose relationship is in question and excludes any person who is only a stepparent, foster parent, or grandparent. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(28).

See also Adoption; Loco parentis; Parens patriae; Surrogate parent.

Parentage. Kindred in the direct ascending line. The state or condition of being a parent.

Parental consent. Consent required of minor from parent to marry or undertake other legal obligations.

Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act. Federal law which imposes a duty on the states to enforce a child custody determination entered by a court of a sister state if the determination is consistent with provisions of the Act. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1738A.

Parental liability. By statute in certain states, the parents may be held liable up to a specified amount for damages caused to property of others by their children if such damage is found to have resulted from negligent control of parent over acts of child.

Parental rights. The sum total of the rights of the parent or parents in and to the child as well as the rights of the child in and to the parent or parents. Anguis v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 6 Ariz.App. 68, 429 P.2d 702, 705. The following are “parental rights” protected to varying degrees by constitution: physical possession of child, which, in case of custodial parent, includes day-to-day care and companionship of child; right to discipline child, which includes right to inculcate in child parent’s moral and ethical standards; right to control and manage minor child’s earnings; right to control and manage minor child’s property; right to be supported by adult child; right to have child bear parent’s name; and right to prevent adoption of child without parents’ consent. L. A. M. v. State, Alaska, 547 P.2d 827, 835.

Parent-child immunity. In some jurisdictions a parent is immune from liability for negligence in an action brought by his or her child, though the trend has been to abolish or restrict such immunity.

Parent company or corporation. Company owning more than 50 percent of the voting shares, or otherwise a controlling interest, of another company, called the subsidiary. Compare Holding company.

Parentela /pɛrantila/. The sum of those persons who trace descent from one ancestor.

In old English law, parentela, or de parentela se tolere, signified a renunciation of one’s kindred and family. This was, according to ancient custom, done in open court, before the judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a just cause. After such abjuration, the person was incapable of inheriting anything from any of his relations, etc.
Pares /pariʒ/per/. Lat. In old English law, a person's peers or equals; as the jury for the trial of causes, who were originally the vassals or tenants of the lord, being the equals or peers of the parties litigant; and, as the lord's vassals judged each other in the lord's courts, so the sovereign's vassals, or the lords themselves, judged each other in the sovereign's courts.

Pares curie /pariʒ kyriiyit/. In old English law, peers of the court. Vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court.

Paresis /pariʒas/pàrəsəs/. Progressive general paralysis, involving or leading to the form of insanity known as "dementia paralytica." Popularity, but not very correctly, called "softening of the brain." See Insanity.

Pares regni /pariʒ régnay/. Peers of the realm.

Paria copulantur paribus /pariʒ kópyaléntar párabos/. Like things unite with like.

Paribus sententii reus absolvitur /pàrabos senténniʃiʃias riʃas szbolvʃar/. Where the opinions are equal [where the court is equally divided], the defendant is acquitted.

Pari causa /paray kóza/. Lat. With equal right; upon an equal footing; equivalent in rights or claims.

Pari delicto /paray daliktow/. Lat. In equal fault; in a similar offense or crime; equal in guilt or in legal fault. "Pari delicto" doctrine rests on rule that courts will not enforce an invalid contract and that no party can recover in any action in which it is necessary for him to prove an illegal contract in order to make out his case. Neal v. Pennsylvania Life Ins. Co., Okl., 480 F.2d 923, 925. Under this doctrine transgressor will not be allowed to profit from his own wrongdoing and party is barred from recovering damages if his losses are substantially caused by activities which the law forbade him to engage in. Recchion on Behalf of Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Kirby, D.C.Pa., 637 F.Supp. 1309, 1316. See in pari delicto.

Parys communis /pariʒ ymˌkwəns/. A common wall; a party-wall.

Pari materia /pariʒ matiriya/. Lat. Of the same matter; on the same subject; as, laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other.

Pari-mutuel betting /pariʒ myˌwʌtjuˈɪəl bɪˈtɪŋ/. A form of wagering, generally on the outcome of horse or dog races, whereby all bets made on a particular race are pooled and then paid, less a management fee, to holders of winning tickets. Cramer v. New York State Racing Ass'n, 136 A.D.2d 104, 525 N.Y.S.2d 938, 940. Such betting is allowed in most states, though it is heavily regulated. Cf. New York McKinney’s Racing, Pari-mutuel Wagering and Breeding Law, § 101 et seq.

Par in parem imperium non habet /pàr in pàɾəm əmˈpiːriəm nɔn həˈbɛt/. An equal has no dominion over an equal.

Pari passu /paray paʃ(ə)y/ /paray peʃ(ə)y/. Lat. By an equal progress; equably; ratably; without preference. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund without any precedence over each other.

Pari ratione /paray rəˈʃənə/. Lat. For the like reason; by like mode of reasoning.

Paris, declaration of /dekləˈreɪsən av pà�əs/ See Declaration.

Parish. In English ecclesiastical law a circuit of ground, committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein. 1 Bl.Comm. 111. The precinct of a parish church, and the particular charge of a secular priest. An ecclesiastical division of a town, city or district, subject to the ministry of one pastor.

In Louisiana, a territorial governmental division of the state corresponding to what is elsewhere called a "county."

Parish apprentice. In old English law, the children of parents unable to maintain them could, by law, be apprenticed, by the guardians or overseers of their parish, to such persons as may be willing to receive them as apprentices. Such children were called "parish apprentices."

Parish church. This expression has various significations. It is applied sometimes to a select body of Christians, forming a local spiritual association, and sometimes to the building in which the public worship of the inhabitants of a parish is celebrated; but the true legal notion of a parochial church is a consecrated place, having attached to it the rights of burial and the administration of the sacraments.

Parish court. The name of a court established in each parish in Louisiana, and corresponding to the county courts or common pleas courts in the other states. It has a limited civil jurisdiction, besides general probate powers.

Parishioners. Members of a parish. In England, for many purposes they form a body politic.

Par items. Items which a drawee bank will remit to another bank without charge.

Parity. Equality in amount or value. Equivalence of prices of farm products in relation to those existing at some former date (base period) or to the general cost of living. Parity prices are important in establishing government price support programs for farmers.

Equivalence of prices of goods or services in two different markets.
The relationship between two currencies such that they are exchangeable for each other at the par or official rate of exchange. See Exchange rate.

Parity ratio. A relationship developed between the index of prices received by farmers for their crops and the index of costs of the farmers for the items which they buy.

Parium eadem est ratio, idem jus /părıiyam iỵę́ydam ḗst réỵsh(y)ow, āỳdam jăs/. Of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law.

Parliamentum religiosorum /părıiyam raḷjịyowsōṛam/. In most convents there has been a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; conferences there being termed "parliamentum." Likewise, the societies of the two temples, or inns of court, call that assembly of the benchers or governors wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several houses a "parliament."

Parochial. Relating or belonging to a parish.

Par of exchange. The precise equality or equivalency of any given sum or quantity of money of one country, and the like sum or quantity of money of any other foreign country into which it is to be exchanged. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other. See Exchange rate.

Parol. A word; speech; hence, oral or verbal. Expressed or evidenced by speech only; as opposed to by writing or by sealed instrument.

As to parol Agreement; Arrest; Demurrer; Lease; and Promise; see those titles.

Parol contract. An oral contract as distinguished from a written or formal contract. See also Oral contract.

Parole /părōvl/. Release from jail, prison or other confinement after actually serving part of sentence. See parole. "Parole" relates to executive action taken after the door has closed on a convict. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476, 479.

"Parolee" gains his conditional freedom as result of exercise of discretion by parole board which may grant parole when it is of opinion there is reasonable probability that prisoner will live and remain at liberty without violating laws. Birch v. Anderson, C.A.D.C., 358 F.2d 764, 766. Conditional release from imprisonment which entitles parolee to serve remainder of his term outside confines of an institution, if he satisfactorily complies with all terms and conditions provided in parole order. Thomas v. Arizona State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, 115 Ariz. 128, 564 P.2d 79, 81.

In military law, a promise given by a prisoner of war, when he has leave to depart from custody, that he will return at the time appointed, unless discharged. An engagement by a prisoner of war, upon being set at liberty, that he will not again take up arms against the government by whose forces he was captured, either for a limited period or while hostilities continue.

Compare Amnesty; Pardon.

Probation distinguished. "Probation" relates to judicial action taken before the prison door is closed, whereas "parole" relates to executive action taken after the door has closed on a convict. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476, 479.

Revocation hearing. Parole revocation hearing is in the nature of an administrative proceeding for the purpose of determining whether a parolee has violated the conditions of his parole. State ex rel. McNeil v. New York State Bd. of Parole, 87 Misc. 2d 497, 385 N.Y.S. 2d 731, 734.

Parole board or commission. The state and federal administrative bodies empowered to decide whether inmates shall be conditionally released from prison before completion of their sentences. Called "Correctional Boards" in some states.

The U.S. Parole Commission consists of nine members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It has sole authority to grant, modify, or revoke paroles of all U.S. prisoners. It is responsible for the supervision of parolees and prisoners released upon the expiration of their sentences with allowances for statutory good time. U.S. probation officers supervise parolees and mandatory releases.

The former federal Board of Parole was abolished in 1976 with its functions transferred to the U.S. Parole Commission. With implementation of the 1987 federal Sentencing Guidelines, the federal parole system will be phased out and replaced by release under the supervision of the judge who imposed the sentence—rather than by a parole board.

Parolee. Ex-prisoner who has been placed on parole.

Parole officers. Parole system is administered by parole officers whose duties include supervision of parolees. Normally, parolees must periodically report to such officers.

Parol evidence. Oral or verbal evidence; that which is given by word of mouth; the ordinary kind of evidence given by witnesses in court. In a particular sense, and with reference to contracts, deeds, wills, and other writings, parol evidence is the same as extraneous evidence or evidence aliunde. See also Aliunde; Extraneous evidence; Oral evidence.

Parol evidence rule. This evidence rule seeks to preserve integrity of written agreements by refusing to permit contracting parties to attempt to alter import of their contract through use of contemporaneous oral declarations. Rose v. Food Fair Stores, Inc., 437 Pa. 117, 262 A.2d 851. Under this rule when the parties to a contract embody their agreement in writing and intend the writing to be the final expression of their agreement, the terms of the writing may not be varied or contradicted by evidence of any prior written or oral agreement in the absence of fraud, duress, or mutual mistake. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. First Mortgage Investors, 76 Wis. 2d 151, 250 N.W. 2d 362, 365. But rule does not forbid a resort to parol evidence not inconsistent with the matters stated in the writing. Elkins v. Super-Cold Southwest Co., Tex.Civ.App., 157 S.W.2d 946, 947. Also, as regards sales of goods, such written agreement may be explained or supplemented by course of dealing or usage of trade or by course of conduct, and by evidence of consistent additional terms unless the court finds the writing to have been intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement. U.C.C. § 2-202.

This rule is also applicable to wills and trusts.

Parola de ley /paróləl de lē/. L. Fr. Words of law; technical words.

Parola fons plea /pərəwləs fənts plə/. Words make the plea.

Parricide /pərəsəyd/. The crime of killing one's father; also a person guilty of killing his father.

Parricidium /pərəsəsidium/. Lat. In the civil law, parricide; the murder of a parent.

 Pars /parz/. Lat. A part; a party to a deed, action, or legal proceeding.

Pars entita /parz ənˈtɪtə/. In old English law, the privilege or portion of the eldest child in the partition of lands by lot.

Pars gravata /parz ɡrəˈveɪtə/. A party aggrieved; the party aggrieved.

Parson. The rector of a church; one that has full possession of all the rights of a parochial church.

Parson mortal. In old English law, a rector instituted and inducted for his own life. But any collegiate or conventional body, to whom a church was forever appropriated, was termed "persona immortalis."

Pars rationabilis /parz ˈræʃənəˌbəlis/. That part of a man's goods which the law gave to his widow and children.

Pars rea /parz riˈə/. A party defendant.

Pars viserum matris /parz ˈvɪsərəm məˈtrɪs/. Part of the bowels of the mother; i.e., an unborn child.

Part. An integral portion, something essentially belonging to a larger whole; that which together with another or others makes up a whole. First-Mechanics Nat. Bank of Trenton v. Norris, 134 N.J.Eq. 229, 34 A.2d 746, 749. A portion, share, or purpart. One of two duplicate originals of a conveyance or covenant, the other being called "counterpart." Also, in composition, partial or incomplete; as part payment, part performance.

Partage /pərtəzh/. In French law, a division made between co-proprietors of a particular estate held by them in common. It is the operation by means of which the goods of a succession are divided among the co-heirs; while licitation (q.v.) is an adjudication to the highest bidder of objects which are not divisible.

Parte inaudita /pərtə ɪnˈɔdətə/. Lat. One side being unheard. Spoken of any action which is taken ex parte.

Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterm atque iterum, perlegerit /pərtəm əˈlɪkwəm rɛktəˈliːdʒəri ənˈtɛkwəm ˈtɒtəm ɪtər əˈlɪkwəm pərˈliːlərət/. No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again.

Parte non comparente /pərtiˌ nəʊn ˈkɒmpərəntiˌ/. Lat. The party not having appeared. The condition of a cause called "default."

Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum /pərtiˌ kwəkəmˈkwɪtiˌ ɪntəˈɡræntiˌ səˈblɛtə tɔˈtlɔtə."
Partial eviction. That which takes place when the possessor is deprived of only a portion of his rights in the premises. Such may result in constructive eviction.

Partial evidence. That which goes to establish a detached fact, in a series tending to the fact in dispute. It may be received, subject to be rejected as incompetent, unless connected with the fact in dispute by proof of other facts; for example, on an issue of title to real property, evidence of the continued possession of a remote occupant is partial, for it is of a detached fact, which may or may not be afterwards connected with the fact in dispute.

Partial incapacity. Such occurs when injury disables a workman to perform part of the usual tasks of his job, though such disablement does not prevent him from procuring and retaining employment reasonably suitable to his physical condition and ability to work, or when because of his injury he is only able to perform labor of a less remunerative class than he performed before the injury, and as a consequence he suffers a depression or reduction in his earning capacity. Commercial Ins. Co. of Newark, New Jersey v. Puente, Tex.Civ.App., 353 S.W.2d 948, 967.

Partial limitation. Provision found in some insurance policies in which the insurer agrees to pay a total loss if the actual loss exceeds a certain amount.

Partial loss. A loss of a part of a thing or of its value, or any damage not amounting (actually or constructively) to its entire destruction; as contrasted with total loss. Partial loss is one in which the damage done to the thing insured is not so complete as to amount to a total loss, either actual or constructive. In every such case the underwriter is liable to pay such proportion of the sum which would be payable on total loss as the damage sustained by the subject of insurance bears to the whole value at the time of insurance. Partial loss implies a damage sustained by the ship or cargo, which falls upon the respective owners of the property so damaged; and, when happening from any peril insured against by the policy, the owners are to be indemnified by the underwriters, unless in cases excepted by the express terms of the policy.

Partial payment. See Payment.

Partial release. Clause in blanket mortgage directing mortgagee to release specified parcels from lien upon payment of certain sum.

Partial taking. See Eminent domain.

Partial verdict. See Verdict.

Partiarius /parshiyeriyas/. Lat. In Roman law, a legatee who was entitled, by the directions of the will, to receive a share or portion of the inheritance left to the heir.

Partible lands. Lands which might be divided; lands held in gavelkind.

Particeps /partisapeyt/. To receive or have a part or share of; to partake of; to participate in an estate. To take as tenants in common.

Participation. Provision in insurance policies by which the insured shares or participates in each loss incurred and covered by the policy on a specified percentage basis. Sometimes loosely referred to as coinsurance but latter term is not strictly applicable.

To prove "participation" in a criminal enterprise, for purpose of convicting for aiding and abetting, there must be evidence to establish that defendant engaged in some affirmative conduct, that is, that defendant committed an overt act designed to aid in success of the venture; proof of mere negative acquiescence will not suffice. U.S. v. Cowart, C.A.Ga., 595 F.2d 1023, 1035.

Participation loan. As a loan risk safeguard, and because of statutory and regulatory limitations on the amount which a single bank may lend to a single borrower, two or more banks will join in larger loans with each bank lending a portion of the amount to the borrower. Such loans are usually arranged for and serviced by a "lead" bank-lender.
Participes plures sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod umum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus /partispipiz plu'riyz saint kwéyxay yuwnam kórrpas in iyow kwód yuwnam jés héybañt, ét spórfat kwód kórrpas síd intagrum ét kwód in nálá pártyi síd daféktes/. Many parceners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part.

Particula /partikyala/. A small piece of land.

Particular. Relating to a part or portion of anything; separate; sole; single; individual; specific; local; comprising a part only; partial in extent; not universal. Opposed to general. State v. Patterson, 60 Idaho 67, 88 P.2d 493, 497. Of, or pertaining to, a single person, class or thing. Albin v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 304 S.W.2d 371, 372.

As to particular Average; Customs; Estate; Malice; and Partnership; see those titles.

Particularity. In a pleading, affidavit, or the like, is the detailed statement of particulars.

Particular lien. A particular lien is a right to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing. Right to retain property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property, and such lien may arise by implication of law, usages of a trade, or by express contract.

Particulars. The details of a claim, or the separate items of an account. When these are stated in an orderly form, for the information of a defendant, the statement is called a "bill of particulars". See Particulars of criminal charges.

Particulars, bill of. See Particulars of criminal charges.

Particulars of breaches and objections. In an action brought, in England, for the infringement of letters patent, the plaintiff is bound to deliver with his declaration (now with his statement of claim) particulars (i.e., details) of the breaches which he complains of.

Particulars of criminal charges. A prosecutor, when a charge is general, is frequently ordered to give the defendant a statement of the specific acts charged (bill of particulars). Fed.R.Crim.P. 7. See Bill (Bill of particulars).

Particulars of sale. When property such as land, houses, shares, reversions, etc., is to be sold by auction, it is usually described in a document called the "particulars," copies of which are distributed among intending bidders. They should fairly and accurately describe the property.

Particular tenant. The tenant of a particular estate. See Estate.

Participation mortgage. Type of mortgage where lender participates in profits of venture beyond or in addition to normal interest rate.

Parties. The persons who take part in the performance of any act, or who are directly interested in any affair, contract, or conveyance, or who are actively concerned in the prosecution and defense of any legal proceeding. Green v. Bogue, 158 U.S. 478, 15 S.Ct. 975, 39 L.Ed. 1061. See also Party.

In the Roman civil law, the parties were designated as "actor" and "reus". In civil actions they are called "plaintiff" and "defendant"; in equity, "complainant", or "plaintiff", and "defendant"; in admiralty practice, "libelant" and "respondent" or "libellee"; in appeals, "appellant" and "respondent" or "appellees", or sometimes, "plaintiff in error" and "defendant in error"; in criminal proceedings, "State of —", or "United States of America", and "defendant".

See also Coparties; Identity of parties; Indispensable parties; Interpleader; Intervention; Joiner; Necessary parties; Party; Proper party; Real party in interest; Substitution of parties; Third-party practice.

Indispensable parties. See Joiner.

Joiner of parties. See Joiner.

Necessary parties. See Joiner.

Parties to crime. See Accessory; Accomplice; Principal.

Proper parties. See Joiner.

Real party in interest. See Party.

Parties and privies. Parties to a deed or contract are those with whom the deed or contract is actually made or entered into. By the term "privies," as applied to contracts, is frequently meant those between whom the contract is mutually binding, although not literally parties to such contract. Thus, in the case of a lease, the lessor and lessee are both parties and privies, the contract being literally made between the two, and also being mutually binding; but, if the lessee assign his interest to a third party, then a privity arises between the assignee and the original lessor, although such assignee is not literally a party to the original lease.

Parties in interest. See Party (Real party in interest).

Partisan. An adherent to a particular party or cause as opposed to the public interest at large.

Partitio /partish(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, partition; division. This word did not always signify dimidium, a dividing into halves.

Partitio legata /partish(i)yow lagéyta/. In the civil law, a testamentary partition. This took place where the testator, in his will, directed the heir to divide the inheritance and deliver a designated portion thereof to a named legatee.

Partition. The dividing of lands held by joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common. Gibson v. Gibson, 264 Ark. 420, 572 S.W.2d 148, 149. And, in a less technical sense, any division of real or personal property between co-owners, resulting in individual ownership of the interests of each. Division between several persons of property which belongs to them as co-owners; it may be compulsory (judicial) or voluntary. O'Brien v.
Partnership. A business owned by two or more persons to the individual partners and their profits and losses are reported on their personal income tax returns. See also Partnership (Limited partnership) and Collapsible partnership below.

Partnerships are treated as a conduit and are, therefore, not subject to taxation. The various items of partnership income, gains and losses, etc. flow through to the individual partners and are reported on their personal income tax returns. See Articles of partnership.

Commercial partnership. See Commercial partnership.

Family partnership. One which family members control by being partners. Children may be partners but for tax purposes they should be given complete control over their interests; otherwise, the entire profits will be considered income of the active adult partners. See Family partnership.

General partnership. A partnership in which the parties carry on all their trade and business, whatever it may be, for the joint benefit and profit of all the parties concerned, whether the capital stock be limited or not, or the contributions thereto be equal or unequal. One in which all the partners share the profits and losses as well as the management equally, though their capital contributions may vary.

Implied partnership. One which is not a real partnership but which is recognized by the court as such because of the conduct of the parties; in effect, the parties are estopped from denying the existence of a partnership.

Limited partnership. A partnership consisting of one or more general partners, jointly and severally responsible as ordinary partners, and by whom the business is conducted, and one or more special partners, contributing in cash payments a specific sum as capital to the common stock, and who are not liable for the debts of the partnership beyond the fund so contributed. See also Limited partnership.

Mining partnership. See that title.

Particular partnership. One existing where the parties have united to share the benefits of a single individual transaction or enterprise.

Partnership assets. Property of any kind belonging to the firm as such (not the separate property of the individual partners) and available to the recourse of the creditors of the firm in the first instance.

Partnership at will. One designed to continue for no fixed period of time, but only during the pleasure of the parties, and which may be dissolved by any partner without previous notice.

Partnership by estoppel. Two or more persons who hold themselves out as partners to a third person, when in fact they are not partners, are barred from claiming they are not partners.

Partnership debt. One due from the partnership or firm as such and not (primarily) from one of the individual partners.

Partnership in commendam. A partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more.

Secret partnership. One where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed to the public by any of the partners. See Partner (Dormant partners).

Special partnership. At common law, one formed for the prosecution of a special branch of business, as distinguished from the general business of the parties, or for one particular venture or subject. A joint adventure under state statutes; such are usually considered "limited partnerships".

Statutory partnership association. A statutory creation in some states (e.g. Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio) which resembles a corporation more than a partnership, but which has many attributes of the limited partnership.

Subpartnership. One formed where one partner in a firm makes a stranger a partner with him in his share of the profits of that firm. It is not a partnership but an arrangement in which the subpartner shares in the profits and losses of a partner.

Tiered partnership. An ownership arrangement wherein one partnership (the parent or first tier) is a partner in one or more partnerships (the subsidiary/subsidiaries or second tier). Frequently, the first tier is a holding partnership and the second tier is an operating partnership.

Trading partnership. See that title.

Universal partnership. One in which the partners jointly agree to contribute to the common fund of the partnership the whole of their property, of whatever character, and future, as well as present.

Partnership agreement. The document embodying the terms and conditions of a partnership and sometimes referred to as the articles of partnership.

Partnership articles. See Articles of partnership.

Partnership association. Type of business association which resembles in part a partnership and a joint stock company. Its salient feature is the limited liability of the members and is seldom used today.

Partnership certificate. A document evidencing the participation of the partners in a partnership and commonly furnished to financial institutions when the partnership borrows money.

Partnership insurance. See insurance.

Part performance. A plaintiff who renders partial performance of a contract relying on the promised performance of the other party may successfully resist the defense of the statute of frauds under certain conditions. In order to establish part performance taking an oral contract for the sale of realty out of the statute of frauds, the acts relied upon as part performance must be of such a character that they can reasonably be naturally accounted for in no other way than that they were performed in pursuance of the contract, and they must be in conformity with its provisions. Camerota v. Wisniewski, 21 Conn.Sup. 88, 145 A.2d 139, 141. See U.C.C. § 2–201(3). See also Performance.

Partus /partás/. Lat. Child; offspring; the child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth.

Partus ex legito thor oz non certius noscl matrem quam genitorem suum /partas eks lajtimow 0orow non sarsh(iy)as nosat meytram kwaem jenatoram s(y)yúwom/. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father.

Partus sequitur ventrem /partas sekwatar ventram/. The offspring follows the mother; the brood of an animal belongs to the owner of the dam; the offspring of a slave belongs to the owner of the mother, or follows the condition of the mother. A maxim of the civil law, which has been adopted in the law of England in regard... to animals, though never allowed in the case of human beings.

Party, n. A person concerned or having or taking part in any affair, matter, transaction, or proceeding, considered individually. A "party" to an action is a person whose name is designated on record as plaintiff or defendant. M & A Elec. Power Co-op. v. True, Mo.App., 480 S.W.2d 310, 314. Term, in general, means one having right to control proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from judgment. City of Chattanooga v. Swift, 223 Tenn. 46, 442 S.W.2d 257, 258.

"Party" is a technical word having a precise meaning in legal parlance; it refers to those by or against whom a legal suit is brought, whether in law or in equity, the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals and whether natural or legal persons; all others who may be affected by the suit, indirectly or consequently, are persons interested but not parties. Golatte v. Mathews, D.C.Ala., 394 F.Supp. 1203, 1207. See also Nominal defendant; Parties; Prevailing party.

For indispensable parties, joinder of parties, necessary parties, proper parties, see Joiner.

Party aggrieved. Under statutes permitting any party aggrieved to appeal, is one whose right has been directly and injuriously affected by action of court. Singer v. Allied Factors, 216 Minn. 443, 13 N.W.2d 378, 380. One whose pecuniary interest in subject matter of an action is directly and injuriously affected or whose right of property is either established or divested by complained of decision. Whitman v. Whitman, Okl., 397 P.2d 664, 667.

To be "party aggrieved" by judgment, appellant's interest must be immediate, pecuniary and substantial and not nominal or remote consequence of judgment. Leoke v. San Bernardino County, 249 C.A.2d 767, 57 Cal.Rptr. 770, 772, 773. See also Aggrieved party.

Party in interest. Primary meaning ascribed the term "party in interest" in bankruptcy cases is one whose pecuniary interest is directly affected by the bankruptcy proceeding. In re Kutner, Bkrtcy.Tex., 3 B.R. 422, 425.

Party to be charged. A phrase used in the statute of frauds, meaning the party against whom the contract is established and not injuriously affected or whose right of property is either established or divested by complained of decision. Whitman v. Whitman, Okl., 397 P.2d 664, 667.

Party wall. A wall erected on a property boundary as a common support to structures on both sides, which are under different ownerships. A wall built partly on the land of one owner, and partly on the land of another, for the common benefit of both in supporting the construction of contiguous buildings. A division wall between two adjacent properties belonging to different persons and used for mutual benefit of both parties, but it is not necessary that the wall should stand upon each of two adjoining lots, and it may stand wholly upon one lot. Soma Realty Co. v. Romeo, 31 Misc.2d 20, 220 N.Y.S.2d 752, 755.

In the primary and most ordinary meaning of the term, a party-wall is (1) a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common. But it may also mean (2) a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighboring owners; (3) a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements (the term is so used in some of the English building acts); or (4) a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross-easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety.

Parum /pərəm/. Lat. Little; but little.

Parum cavisse videtur /pərəm kəvɪ̃sɪ̃ vədɪˈtʊər/. Lat. Roman law. He seems to have taken too little care; he seems to have been incautious, or not sufficiently upon his guard. A form of expression used by the judge or magistrate in pronouncing sentence of death upon a criminal.

Parum differunt quae re concordant /pərəm dɪˈfərənt kwəɪ re kənˈkɔrdənt/. Things which agree in substance differ but little.

Parum est latam esse sententiam nisi mandetur executioni /pərəm ɛst ˈleɪtəm ˈɛsi sɛnˈtɛntʃɪəm nɪʃi mənˈdɛtrə ɛksəˈkjuːʃəni/. It is little for to little Par value. The face or stated value of a share of stock or bond. With reference to mortgages or trust deeds, the value of the mortgage based on the balance owing, without discount.

In the case of a common share, par means an arbitrary or nominal dollar amount assigned to the share by the issuing company. Par value may also be used to compute the dollar amount of the common shares on the balance sheet. Par value has little significance so far as market value of common stock is concerned. Many companies today issue no-par stock but give a stated per share value on the balance sheet. In the case of preferred shares and bonds, however, par is important. It often signifies the dollar value upon which dividends on preferred stocks, and interest on bonds, are figured. In the case of bonds and stock, the face value appearing on the certificate is the par value. Those stocks not containing such a statement have no par value.

Bonds are issued at or very near par value, and subsequently trade at either a discount or a premium to this figure, based on the direction of interest rates. Bonds mature at par.

Par value or stated value. The Revised Model Business Corporation Act and the statutes of many states have eliminated the concept of par value.

Parva serjeantia /párva sérjyánt(.iy)ə/. Petty serjeanty (q.v.).

Parvum cape /párvum cáyp(.iy)/. See Petit cape.

Pass /pá/. In French. Precedence; right of going foremost.

Pass, v. To utter or pronounce, as when the court passes sentence upon a prisoner. Also to proceed; to be rendered or given, as when judgment is said to pass for the plaintiff in a suit.

In legislative parlance, a bill or resolution is said to pass when it is agreed to or enacted by the house, or when the body has sanctioned its adoption by the requisite majority of votes; in the same circumstances, the body is said to pass the bill or motion. See also Passage.

When an auditor appointed to examine into any accounts certifies to their correctness, he is said to pass them; i.e., they pass through the examination without being detained or sent back for inaccuracy or imperfection.

The term also means to examine into anything and then authoritatively determine the disputed questions which it involves. In this sense a jury is said to pass upon the rights or issues in litigation before them.

In the language of conveyancing, the term means to move from one person to another; i.e. to be transferred or conveyed from one owner to another.

To publish; utter; transfer; circulate; impose fraudulently. This is the meaning of the word when the offense of passing counterfeit money or a forged paper is spoken of.

"Pass," "utter," "publish," and "sell" are in some respects convertible terms, and, in a given case, "pass" may include utter, publish, and sell. The words "uttering" and "passing," used of notes, do not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine. The words include any delivery of a note to another for value, with intent that it shall be put into circulation as money. When used in connection with negotiable instrument means to deliver, to circulate, to hand from one person to another. State v. Beaver, 266 N.C. 115, 145 S.E.2d 330, 331. See Delivery; Negotiation; Transfer; Utter.

Pass, n. Permission to pass; a license to go or come; a certificate, emanating from authority, wherein it is declared that a designated person is permitted to go beyond certain boundaries which, without such authority, he could not lawfully pass. Also a ticket issued by a railroad or other transportation company, authorizing a designated person to travel free on its lines, between certain points or for a limited time.

Passage. Act of passing; transit; transition. A way over water or land or through the air. An easement giving the right to pass over a piece of private water. Travel by sea; a voyage over water; the carriage of passengers by water; price paid for such carriage. Enactment; the act of carrying a bill or resolution through a legislative or deliberative body in accordance with the prescribed forms and requisites. The emergence of the bill in the form of a law, or the motion in the form of a resolution. Passage may mean when bill has passed either or both houses of legislature or when it is signed by President or Governor.

Passaggio /pásséjy(i)yow/. An ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea.

Passator /pásséyt(i)yə/. In old English law, he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage.

Passbook. Document issued by a bank in which the customer's transactions (i.e. savings deposits and withdrawals) are recorded.

Passenger. In general, a person who gives compensation to another for transportation. Shapiro v. Bookspan, 155 Cal.App.2d 353, 318 P.2d 123, 126. The word passenger has however various meanings, depending upon the circumstances under which and the context in which the word is used; sometimes it is construed in a restricted legal sense as referring to one who is being carried by another for hire; on other occasions, the word is interpreted as meaning any occupant of a vehicle other than the person operating it. American Mercury Ins. Co. v. Bifulco, 74 N.J.Super. 191, 181 A.2d 20, 22.
The essential elements of "passenger" as opposed to "guest" under guest statute are that driver must receive some benefit sufficiently real, tangible, and substantial to serve as the inducing cause of the transportation so as to completely overshadow mere hospitality or friendship; it may be easier to find compensation where the trip has commercial or business flavor. Friedhoff v. Engberg, 82 S.D. 522, 149 N.W.2d 759, 761, 762, 763.

A person whom a common carrier has contracted to carry from one place to another, and has, in the course of the performance of that contract, received under his care either upon the means of conveyance, or at the point of departure of that means of conveyance.

Passenger mile. In statistics of transportation, a unit of measure equal to the transport of one passenger over one mile of route.

Passim /paasim/. Lat. Everywhere. Often used to indicate a very general reference to a book or legal authority.

Passion. In the definition of manslaughter as homicide committed without premeditation but under the influence of sudden "passion" or "heat of passion", this term means any of the emotions of the mind known as rage, anger, hatred, furious resentment, or terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection. See also Heat of passion.

Passive. As used in law, this term means inactive; permissive; consisting in endurance or submission, rather than action; and in some connections it carries the implication of being subjected to a burden or charge.

As to passive Debt; Negligence; Title; Trust; and Use; see those titles.

Passive activity. A term introduced with the Tax Reform Act of 1986. A passive activity generally refers to an activity in which a taxpayer does not materially participate. An example includes an investment in a limited partnership. See Passive income; Passive loss.

Passive income. Income earned in an activity in which an individual does not materially participate. An example of "passive income" includes: income from an interest in a limited partnership in contrast to "active income" which is salaries and wages, or earnings from a trade or business. Rental income is always considered passive regardless of material participation. See also Passive loss.

Passive investment income. As defined in I.R.C. § 1362(d)(3)(D), passive investment income means gross receipts from royalties, certain rents, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale or exchange of stock and securities.

Passive loss. In tax law, any loss from (1) activities in which the taxpayer does not materially participate, (2) rental activities (with certain exceptions for individuals who actively participate in rental activities), or (3) tax shelter activities. The deductibility of passive losses are limited based upon when the activity was acquired, as well as the type of activity involved. Any passive losses which are limited in the year incurred are fully deductible in the year the investment activity is disposed. Passive loss limitations were phased in beginning in 1987. See also Passive income; Portfolio income.

Passport. A document identifying a citizen, in effect requesting foreign powers to allow the bearer to enter and to pass freely and safely, recognizing the right of the bearer to the protection and good offices of American diplomatic and consular offices. U.S. v. Laub, U.S.N.Y., 385 U.S. 475, 87 S.Ct. 574, 578, 17 L.Ed.2d 526. A passport is evidence of permission from sovereign to its citizen to travel to foreign countries and to return to land of his allegiance, as well as request to foreign powers that such citizen be allowed to pass freely and safely. Worthy v. U.S., C.A.Fla., 328 F.2d 386, 391. See also Visa.

Any travel document issued by competent authority showing the bearer's origin, identity, and nationality if any, which is valid for the entry of the bearer into a foreign country. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101.

In international law. A license or safe-conduct, issued during the progress of a war, authorizing a person to remove himself or his effects from the territory of one of the belligerent nations to another country, or to travel from country to country without arrest or detention on account of the war.

Maritime. A document issued to a neutral merchant vessel, by her own government, during the progress of a war, to be carried on the voyage, to evidence her nationality and protect her against the cruisers of the belligerent powers. This paper is otherwise called a "pass," "sea-pass," "sea-letter," "sea-brief." It usually contains the captain's or master's name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

Past consideration. In contracts, a detriment suffered by a contracting party at a time antecedent to the formation of a contract and hence, except in unusual cases, is not legally sufficient consideration to support a contract. In law of negotiable instruments, past consideration is sufficient to support a note or other negotiable instrument.

Past recollection recorded. A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly, is not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party. Fed.Evid.R. 803(5).

Under the "past recollection recorded" doctrine, written report is properly admissible into evidence if witness has testified that on examination of the report he had no independent recollection of the matters contained therein. Lawson v. Belt Ry. Co. of Chicago, 34 Ill.
Pastus /pástas/. In feudal law, the procuration or provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money.

Pateat universis per presentes /páteat ywewnávars pár prazentiyz/. Know all men by these presents.

Patent, adj. Open; manifest; evident; unsealed. Used in this sense in such phrases as "patent ambiguity," "patent writ," "letters patent."

Letters patent. Open letters, as distinguished from letters close. An instrument proceeding from the government, and conveying a right, authority, or grant to an individual, as a patent for a tract of land, or for the exclusive right to make and sell a new invention. See Letters patent; Patent and Trademark Office.

Patent, n. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals.

The instrument by which a state or government grants public lands to an individual.

A grant of right to exclude others from making, using or selling one's invention and includes right to license others to make, use or sell it. Valmont Industries, Inc. v. Yuma Mfg. Co., D.C.Colo., 296 F.Supp. 1291, 1294. A grant from the government conveying and securing for an inventor the exclusive right to make, use, and sell an invention for seventeen years. 35 U.S.C.A. § 154. See Board of Patent Appeals and Inferences; Patent and copyright clause; Patent and Trademark Office.

See also Assignor estoppel; Basic or pioneer patent; Combination patent; File wrapper estoppel; Identity; Invent; Invention; Lapse patent; Letters patent; License; Official Gazette; On sale; Paper patent; Process patent; Prosecution history estoppel; Public use; Scope of a patent; Shop right rule; Useful; Utility.

Design patent. The unique appearance or design of an article of manufacture may be protected against duplication by a design patent if it is original, non-obvious and ornamental. Design patents may be issued for both surface ornamentation or the overall configuration of an object. Such patents last for a term of 14 years. Material that is eligible for design patent protection may also be copyrightable. 35 U.S.C.A. § 171.

Land patent. A muniment of title issued by a government or state for the conveyance of some portion of the public domain.

Mining claims. The instrument by which title to mining claims is conveyed by the federal government subject to any existing liens and any vested and accrued water rights and in conformity with conditions imposed by state statutes. Roberts v. Morton, D.C.Colo., 389 F.Supp. 87, 91.

Patent pending. Designation (often abbreviated "Pat. Pend.") describing the legal status of patent application, after patent application has been filed and while patent examination is being conducted by U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to determine whether the claimed invention is in fact new, useful and non-obvious.

Patent-right. A right secured by patent; usually meaning a right to the exclusive manufacture, use and sale of an invention or patented article.

Patent-right dealer. Any one whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, patent-rights.

Patent suit. A suit with issues affecting the validity, enforcement or infringement of a patent.

Pioneer patent. A patent for an invention covering a function never before performed, or a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfecting of what has gone before. Westinghouse v. Boyden Power-Brake Co., 170 U.S. 537, 18 S.Ct. 707, 42 L.Ed. 1136; Sealed Air Corp. v. U.S. Intern. Trade Comp., 645 F.2d 976.

Plant patent. A patent granted to person who invents or discovers and sexuoxually reproduces any distinct and new variety of plant, including cultivated sports, mutants, hybrids, and newly found seedlings, other than a tuber propagated plant or a plant found in an uncultivated state. 35 U.S.C.A. § 161.

Reissued patent. A patent may be reissued whenever it is, through error without any deceptive intention, deemed wholly or partly inoperative or invalid, by reason of a defective specification or drawing, or by reason of the patentee claiming more or less than he had a right to claim in the patent. 35 U.S.C.A. § 231.

Tax treatment. A patent is an identifiable intangible asset which may be amortized over the remaining life of the patent. The sale of a patent usually results in capital gain treatment. I.R.C. § 1235. If developed internally by a company, the development costs are expensed as incurred under generally accepted accounting principles.

Utility patent. The customary type of patent issued to any novel, non-obvious, and useful machine, article of manufacture, composition of matter or process. This is one of three types of patents provided for by the statute, the others being design and plant patents. See also Utility.

Patentable. Suitable to be patented; entitled by law to be protected by the issuance of a patent. And to be patentable, a device must embody some new idea or principle not before known, and it must be a discovery as distinguished from mere mechanical skill or knowledge. In re Herthel, Cust. & Pat.App., 104 F.2d 824, 826.
Patent ambiguity. An ambiguity apparent on face of instrument and arising by reason of any inconsistency or inherent uncertainty of language used so that effect is either to convey no definite meaning or confused meaning. Ohio Cas. Group of Ins. Companies v. Gray, C.A.Ind., 746 F.2d 381, 383. See also Ambiguity. Compare Latent ambiguity.

Patent and copyright clause. Art. I, Sec. 8, cl. 8, U.S. Constitution, which provides for promoting the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

Patent and Trademark Office. Federal agency in the Department of Commerce headed by the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. In addition to the examination of patent and trademark applications, issuance of patents, and registration of trademarks, the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) sells printed copies of issued documents; records and indexes documents transferring ownership; maintains a scientific library and search files containing over 20 million documents, including U.S. and foreign patents and U.S. trademarks; provides search rooms for the public to research their applications; hears and decides appeals from prospective inventors and trademark applicants; participates in legal international efforts to cooperate on patent and trademark registrations; helps represent the United States in international efforts to cooperate on patent and trademark policy; compiles the Official Gazettes—a weekly list of all patents and trademarks issued by the PTO; and maintains a roster of agents and attorneys qualified to practice before the PTO.

Patent defect. In sales of personal property, one which is plainly visible or which can be discovered by such an inspection as would be made in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. U.C.C. § 2-605(1).

A patent defect in a legal description is one which cannot be corrected on its face, and a new description must be used. Compare Latent defect.

Patentee. He to whom a patent has been granted. The term is usually applied to one who has obtained letters patent for a new invention.

Patent pooling. An arrangement in which a number of manufacturers agree to an interchange of patent licenses among the members of the pooling group.

Pater /pætər/. Lat. A father; the father. In the civil law, this word sometimes included avus (grandfather).

Paterfamilias /pætərfæmilɪəs/. The father of a family.

In Roman law, the head or master of a family.

This word is sometimes employed, in a wide sense, as equivalent to sui juris. A person sui juris is called "paterfamilias" even when under the age of puberty. In the narrower and more common use, a paterfamilias is any one invested with potestas over any person. It is thus as applicable to a grandfather as to a father.

Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant /pætər ɪz ə st kwɛm nɑːptʃiːə dɪstəmˈɒnstrænt/. The father is he whom the marriage points out.

Paternal. That which belongs to the father or comes from him.

Paternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the father.

Paternal power. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. This phrase is also used to translate the Latin "patria potestas" (q.v.).

Paternal property. That which descends or comes to one from his father, grandfather, or other ascendant or collateral on the paternal side of the house.

Paternity. The state or condition of a father; the relationship of a father.

Paternity suit or action. A court action to determine whether a person is the father of a child born out of wedlock for the purpose, commonly, of enforcing support obligations. See also HLA test; Multiple access.

Pater patriae /pætər pætəriə/. Father of the country. See Pàrens patriae.

Pathologist. One trained in the scientific study of disease, its causes, development and consequences.

Pathology. The science or doctrine of diseases. That part of medicine which explains the nature of diseases, their causes, and their symptoms.

Patiens /pætʃiˈɛns/. Lat. One who suffers or permits; one to whom an act is done; the passive party in a transaction.

Patient. Person under medical or psychiatric treatment and care. Person may be "patient" and physician-patient privilege may apply, where physician attends person for purpose of giving professional aid, even though person attended is unconscious or unaware of physician’s presence and does not consent, or actually objects to being treated. State v. Pitchford, 10 Kan.App.2d 293, 697 P.2d 896, 900.

Patient-physician privilege. The right of one who is a patient to refuse to divulge, or have divulged by his physician, the communications made between he and his physician. This privilege is provided for by statute in most states, and, where recognized, it belongs to the patient and not to the physician and hence, it may be waived by the patient.

Patient's bill of rights. A general statement of patient rights voluntarily adopted by most health care providers, covering matters such as access to care, patient dignity and confidentiality, personal safety, consent to treatment and explanation of charges. Similar rights have been statutorily adopted in several states (cf. Minn. Stat. § 144.651) and by the federal government (cf. Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1975, 42 U.S.C.A. § 6010).

Pat. Pend. See Patent (Patent pending).

Patria /pætriya/péytriya/. Lat. The country, neighborhood, or vicinage; the men of the neighborhood; a jury of the vicinage. Synonymous, in this sense, with "pals."

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari /pætriya laborbos as ekspènson nòn débat fætægriy/. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses.

Patria potestas /pætriya potéstas/. Lat. In Roman law, paternal authority; the paternal power. This term denotes the aggregate of those peculiar powers and rights which, by the civil law of Rome, belonged to the head of a family in respect to his wife, children (natural or adopted), and any more remote descendants who sprang from him through males only. Anciently, it was of very extensive reach, embracing even the power of life and death, but was gradually curtailed, until finally it amounted to little more than a right in the paterfamilias to hold as his own any property or acquisitions of one under his power.

Patria potestas in pieta debet, non in atrocitate, consistere /pætriya potéstis in pæytétyiy débòt, nòn in strósstétyiy konsistétry/. Paternal power should consist [or be exercised] in affection, not in atrocity.

Patricide /pætrisaid/. One who has killed his or her father. The act of killing one's father.

Patrimonial /pætrəmányal/. Pertaining to a patrimony; inherited from ancestors, but strictly from the direct male ancestors.

Patrimonium /pætrəmóniyum/. In civil law, that which is capable of being inherited. The private and exclusive ownership or dominion of an individual. Things capable of being possessed by a single person to the exclusion of all others (or which are actually so possessed) are said to be in patrimonio; if not capable of being so possessed (or not actually so possessed), they are said to be extra patrimonium.

Patrimony /pætrəmən/i/. Such estate as has descended in the same family. Estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor. It has been held that the word is not necessarily restricted to property inherited directly from the father.

Patrimony is the total mass of existing or potential rights and liabilities attached to a person for the satisfaction of his economic needs and patrimony is always attached to a natural or juridical person. Creech v. Capitol Mack, Inc., La., 287 So.2d 497, 503.

Patrimony of a debtor is totality of assets and liabilities susceptible of pecuniary evaluation; as practical matter, debtor's patrimony consists of assets which are subject to execution for benefit of creditor. Hastings v. Dinning, La.App., 314 So.2d 744, 746.

Patrocinium /pætrəsninyym/. In Roman law, patronage; protection; defense. The business or duty of a patron or advocate.

Patrolman. A policeman assigned to duty in patrolling a certain beat or district; also the designation of a grade or rank in the organized police force of large cities, a patrolman being generally a private in the ranks, as distinguished from sergeants, lieutenants, etc. See also Police officer.

Patron. In ordinary usage one who protects, countenances, or supports some person or thing. One who habitually extends material assistance; a regular customer; a protector or benefactor.

Patronage /pætroseyni/péytr/. Collective term to describe the customers of a business. Also, the practice of a public official in making appointments to public (non-civil service) offices and to confer honors. The right of appointing to office, considered as a perquisite, or personal right; not in the aspect of a public trust.

Patronize /pætrosniyz/peytr/. To act as a patron, extend patronage, countenance, encourage, favor.

Patronum faciunt dos, adificatio, fundus /patrownam feysh(i)ant dów, iydafakeysh(i)ow, fándas/. Endowment, building, and land make a patron.

Patruelis /pætrwölzi/. Lat. In the civil law, a cousin-german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother.

Patruus /pætruwa/. Lat. An uncle by the father's side; a father's brother.

Patruus magnus /pætruwas mågnas/. A grandfather's brother; granduncle.

Patruus major /pætruwas méjaar/. A great-grandfather's brother.

Patruus maximus /pætruwas máksəməs/. A great-grandfather's father's brother.

Pattern. A reliable sample of traits, acts or other observable features characterizing an individual. Richerson v. Superior Court In and For Sacramento County, App., 70 Cal.Rptr. 350, 352.

The words "pattern or practice" within the Civil Rights Act provision which permits the Attorney General to seek relief when there is a pattern or practice of resistance to the Act is more than isolated or accidental instance of conduct in violation of the Act; it means an intentional, regular or repeated violation of the right granted by the Act. U. S. v. Hunter, C.A.Md., 459 F.2d 205, 217.

Pattern of racketeering activity. As used in the racketeering statute (RICO), 18 U.S.C.A. § 1962, a "pattern of racketeering activity" includes two or more related criminal acts that amount to, or threaten the likelihood of, continued criminal activity. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195. A single illegal scheme can constitute a "pattern of racketeering activity," so long as the racketeering acts meet the "continuity plus relationship" requirement. A combination of specific factors, such as the number of unlawful acts, the length of time over which the acts were committed, the similarity of the acts, the number of victims, the number of perpetrators, and the character of the unlawful activity can be considered in determining whether a pattern existed. Barticheck v. Fidelity Union Bank, C.A.N.J., 832 F.2d 36, 39. See also RICO laws.

Pauper /pɔˈpær/. A person so poor that he must be supported at public expense. A suitor who, on account of poverty, is allowed to sue or defend without being chargeable with costs; also, an indigent criminal defendant who has a right to assigned defense counsel. Fed. R.Crim.P. 44; Fed.R.App.P. 24; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3006A; 28 U.S.C.A. § 1915. See Counsel, right to; Indigent; In forma pauperis; Pauper's oath.

Dispauper. To deprive one of the status of a pauper and of any benefits incidental thereto: particularly, to take away the right to sue in forma pauperis because the person so suing, during the progress of the suit, has acquired money or property which would enable him to sustain the costs of the action.

Pauperies /pɔˈpərɪz/. Lat. In Roman law, damage or injury done by an irrational animal, without active fault on the part of the owner, but for which the latter was bound to make compensation.

Pauper's oath. Affidavit, verification, or oath by person seeking public assistance, appointment of counsel, waiver of court fees, or other free services or benefits, that he or she is in fact impoverished and as such unable to pay for such. See e.g. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1915. See also Poverty affidavit.

Paw, n. To discharge a debt by tender of payment due; to deliver to a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, for his acceptance. U.C.C. §§ 2–511, 3–604. To compensate for goods, services or labor. See also Discharge; Payment.

Pawable. Capable of being paid; suitable to be paid; admitting or demanding payment; justly due; legally enforceable. A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obligation to pay it. Payable may therefore signify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, term normally means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to "owing."

Payable after sight. Means that instrument is payable after acceptance of bill or protest for nonacceptance.

Payable on demand. Instruments payable on demand include those payable at sight or on presentation and those in which no time for payment is stated. U.C.C. § 3–108.

Payables. See Account (Account payable).

Payable to bearer. A negotiable instrument is payable to bearer when by its terms it is payable to (a) bearer or the order of bearer; or (b) a specified person or bearer; or (c) "cash" or the order of "cash", or any other indication which does not purport to designate a specific payee. U.C.C. § 3–111. See also Negotiation.

Payable to order. A negotiable instrument is payable to order when by its terms it is payable to the order or assigns of any person therein specified with reasonable certainty, or to him or his order, or when it is conspicuously designated on its face as "exchange" or the like and names a payee. U.C.C. § 3–110. See also Negotiation.

Pay any bank. After an item has been indorsed with the words "pay any bank" or the like, only a bank may acquire the rights of a holder: (a) until the item has been returned to the customer initiating collection; or (b) until the item has been specially indorsed by a bank to a person who is not a bank. U.C.C. § 4–201(2).

Paydown. Repayment of loan but in an amount less than entire principal of loan. See also Payment (Part payment).
Payee. The person in whose favor a bill of exchange, promissory note, or check is made or drawn; the person to whom or to whose order a bill, note, or check is made payable; the person to whom an instrument is payable upon issuance. The entity to whom a cash payment is made or who will receive the stated amount of money on a check. One to whom money is paid or is to be paid. See Draft; fictitious payee.

Payer, or payor. One who pays, or who is to make a payment; particularly the person who is to make payment of a check, bill or note. Correlative to “payee.”

Paying quantities. This phrase, as used in oil and gas leases, when applied to the production of oil, means such a quantity as will pay a profit on the cost of operating the well. Sufficient quantities to pay a reasonable profit on the cost of operating the well. See Draft; fictitious payee.

Payment. The performance of a duty, promise, or obligation, or discharge of a debt or liability, by the delivery of money or other thing so delivered. U.C.C. §§ 2-511, 3-604.

Payment is a delivery of money or its equivalent in either specific property or services by one person from whom it is due to another person to whom it is due. Sizemore v. E. T. Barwick Industries, Inc., 225 Tenn. 226, 465 S.W.2d 873, 875. A discharge of an obligation or debt owing by one person to another, and is made by debtor's delivery to creditor of money or some other valuable thing, and creditor's receipt thereof, for purpose of extinguishing debt. Allmon v. Allmon, Mo.App., 306 S.W.2d 651, 655.

Under Internal Revenue Code provision allowing deduction for charitable contribution of which payment is made within taxable year, “payment” need not be in money, but subject matter must have been placed beyond dominion and control of donor. Pauley v. U. S., C.A.Cal., 459 F.2d 624, 626.

The execution and delivery of negotiable papers is not payment unless it is accepted by the parties in that sense. U.C.C. § 3-410.

See also Compulsory payment; Conditional payment; Constructive payment; Down payment; Final payment; Guaranty of payment; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale; Involuntary payment; Liquidation; Lump-sum payment; Pay.

Affirmative defense. Payment is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded under Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Balloon payment. See Balloon payment.

Part payment. The reduction of any debt or demand by the payment of a sum less than the whole amount originally due.

The rule of partial payments is to apply the payment, in the first place, to the discharge of the interest then due. If the payment exceeds the interest, the surplus goes toward discharging the principal, and the subsequent interest is to be computed on the balance of principal remaining due. If the payment be less than the interest, the surplus of the interest must not be taken to augment the principal; but interest continues on the former principal until the period of time when the payments, taken together, exceed the interest then due, to discharge which they are applied, and the surplus, if any, is to be applied toward the discharge of the principal, and the interest is to be computed on the balance as aforesaid, and this process continues until final settlement.

Payment into court. The act of a defendant in depositing the amount which he admits to be due, with the proper officer of the court, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim. Fed.R. Civil P. 67.

Voluntary payment. A payment made by a debtor of his own will and choice, as distinguished from one exacted from him by process of execution or other compulsion.

Payment bond. See Miller Act; Performance bond.

Payment guaranteed. “Payment guaranteed” or equivalent words added to a signature mean that the signer engages that if the instrument is not paid when due he will pay it according to its tenor without resort by the holder to any other party. U.C.C. § 4-416.

Payment in due course. With respect to negotiable instruments, means payment at or after the instrument’s maturity date to the holder in good faith and without notice that the title is defective. Under the Negotiable Instruments Law, a negotiable instrument could be discharged by payment in due course by or on behalf of the principal debtor; see e.g. Bourg v. Wiley, La., 398 So.2d 13, 15. The Uniform Commercial Code § 3-603 eliminates any reference to payment in due course. It is now covered by § 3-601(3).

Payment into court. The deposit of funds or other things capable of delivery with the court during the pendency of a lawsuit. Fed.R.Civil P. 67.

Payor. The person by whom a bill or note has been or should have been paid.

Payor bank. A bank by which an item is payable as drawn or accepted, U.C.C. § 4-105(b), which includes the drawee of a check. Term includes drawee bank and also bank at which item is payable if item constitutes order on bank to pay. Phelan v. University Nat. Bank, 85 Ill.App.2d 56, 229 N.E.2d 374, 377.

Payroll tax. A tax on an employee's salary or on the income of a self-employed individual. Federal and state income taxes are paid by the employee or the self-employed individual; social security taxes are paid both by the employer and employee and paid solely by the self-employed individual. Unemployment taxes are paid by the employer.

PBGC. See Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Peace. For purposes of breach of the peace statute, peace is that state and sense of safety which is necessary to the comfort and happiness of every citizen, and which government is instituted to secure. State v. Boles, 5 Conn.Cir. 22, 240 A.2d 920, 927. Term, within law of breach of the peace, means tranquility enjoyed by citizens of the municipality or community where good order reigns among its members. State v. Edwards, 239 S.C. 339, 123 S.E.2d 247, 249.

The tranquility enjoyed by a political society internally, by the good order which reigns among its members, and externally by the good understanding it has with all other nations. Applied to the internal regulations of a nation, peace imports, in a technical sense, not merely a state of repose and security as opposed to one of violence or warfare, but likewise a state of public order and decorum. Catlette v. U. S., C.C.A.W.Va., 132 F.2d 902, 906.

Articles of the peace. See Articles.

Bill of peace. See Bill.

Breach of peace. See Breach.

Justice of the peace. See that title.

Peace and quietude. Public tranquility and obedience to law, and that public order and security which is commanded by the laws of a particular sovereign.

Peace officers. This term is variously defined by statute in the different states; but generally it includes sheriffs and their deputies, constables, marshals, members of the police force of cities, and other officers whose duty is to enforce the local government laws and ordinances and preserve the public peace. In general, any person who has been given general authority to make arrests. Generally a "peace officer" is a person designated by public authority to keep the peace and arrest persons guilty or suspected of crime and he is a conservator of the peace, which term is synonymous with the term "peace officer". Vandyer v. Manning, 215 Ga. 874, 114 S.E.2d 121, 124. See also Police officer.

Peace of God and the church. In old English law, that rest and cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms and on Sundays and holidays.

Public peace. The peace or tranquility of the community in general; the good order and repose of the people composing a state or municipality. That invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and which for which all governments are instituted.

Public peace and quiet. Peace, tranquility, and order and freedom from agitation or disturbance; the security, good order, and decorum guaranteed by civil society and by the law.

Peaceable. Free from the character of force, violence, or trespass; as, a "peaceable entry" on lands. Peaceable possession of real estate is such as is acquiesced in by all other persons, including rival claimants, and not disturbed by any forcible attempt at ouster nor by adverse suits to recover the possession or the estate. Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U.S. 508, 13 S.Ct. 418, 37 L.Ed. 259. Compare Adverse possession.

Peace bond. Type of surety bond required by a judge or magistrate of one who has threatened to breach the peace or has a history of such misconduct.

Peace officer. See Police officer.

Peculiar, adj. /pékâywil(i)yar/. Particular or special. Wolf v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, 336 Mo. 746, 81 S.W.2d 323, 330.

Peculium /pékâywil(i)wam/. Lat. In Roman law, such private property as might be held by a slave, wife, or son who was under the patria potestas, separate from the property of the father or master, and in the personal disposal of the owner.

Pecunia /pékâywil(i)wa/. In old English law, goods and chattels.

In the civil law, property in general, real or personal; anything that is actually the subject of private property. In a narrower sense, personal property; fungible things. In the strictest sense, money. This has become the prevalent, and almost the exclusive, meaning of the word.

Pecunia constituta /pékâywil(i)wa konst(y)âtr(y)líwta/. In Roman law, money owing (even upon a moral obligation) upon a day being fixed (constituta) for its payment, became recoverable upon the implied promise to pay on that day, in an action called "de pecunia constituta," the Pecuniary interest. A direct interest related to money in an action or case as would, for example, require a judge to disqualify himself from sitting on a case if he owned stock in corporate party.

Pecuniary legacy. See Legacy.

Pecuniary loss. A loss of money, or of something by which money or something of money value may be acquired. As applied to a dependent’s loss from death pecuniary loss means the reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of the deceased: such includes loss of services, training, nurture, education, guidance, and society. Sea Land Services, Inc. v. Gaudet, 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 39 L.Ed.2d 9.

Pecuniary loss within Wrongful Death Act means what the life of decedent was worth, in a pecuniary sense, to the survivors, including lost of care, love, and affection. Flynn v. Vancil, 89 Ill.App. 368, 232 N.E.2d 473, 474.

See also Pecuniary injury.

Pecunia non numerata /pakyuw(n)yə nəmər(ə)tiə/. In the civil law, money not paid. The subject of an exception or plea in certain cases.

Pecunia numerata /pakyuw(n)yə n(y)əmərətiə/. Money numbered or counted out; i.e., given in payment of a debt.

Pecunary /pakyu(w)nərəriə/. Monetary; relating to money; financial; consisting of money or that which can be valued in money.

Pecuniary condition. Within statute relative to obtaining goods by false pretenses, comprehends, not only money in hand, but property and all other assets of value constituting an existing fact that go to make up financial responsibility as a basis of credit.

Pecuniary consideration. See Consideration.

Pecuniary damages. See Damages; Pecuniary loss.

Pecuniary formulas. In federal estate taxation, a gift to a surviving spouse of an amount equal to the maximum marital deduction to which the estate is entitled, less the value of any other interests passing to the surviving spouse that qualify for the marital deduction. See also Marital deduction.

Pecuniary injury. Within meaning of wrongful death statute providing that damages may be awarded “taking into consideration the pecuniary injury or injuries resulting from such death to the surviving party, or parties entitled to the judgment,” term “pecuniary injury” means a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefits from the continued life of the deceased. Stang v. Hertz Corp., App., 81 N.M. 69, 463 P.2d 45, 48. Such compensation includes damages for deprivation of support, of companionship, guidance, advice, love and affection of deceased. Hall v. Gillins, 13 Ill.2d 26, 147 N.E.2d 352, 355. See also Consortium; Damages (Pecuniary damages); Loss; Pecuniary loss.

pédastéɪ/. In criminal law, the unnatural carnal copulation of male with male, particularly of a man with a boy; a form of sodomy (q.v.).

Pedestrian. An itinerant trader; person who goes about seeking sales and deliveries of articles to possible customers. Case v. Comptroller of State of Md., 219 Md. 282, 149 A.2d 6, 9. A person who sells small goods which he carries with him in traveling about from place to place, and whose activities generally require that he be licensed by the city or town within which he peddles. See also Hawker.

Pedester. An itinerant trader; person who sales seeking sales and deliveries of articles to possible customers. See also Hawker.

Pedester. An itinerant trader; person who sales seeking sales and deliveries of articles to possible customers. See also Hawker.
include persons standing upon the highway as well as those traversing it. See v. Willett, 58 Wash.2d 39, 360 P.2d 592, 593. Person on foot does not cease to be "pedestrian" within policy covering injuries sustained while a pedestrian merely because he is not in motion. Peterson v. Continental Cas. Co., 25 Utah 2d 408, 483 P.2d 445, 446.

Pedigree /pědəˈɡri/. Lineage, descent, and succession of families; line of ancestors from which a person descends; genealogy. An account or register of a line of ancestors. Family relationship.

Evidence. The "pedigree exception" to hearsay rule allows consideration of hearsay evidence regarding a person’s family relationship as proof of existence of the relationship. Smith v. Givens, 223 Va. 455, 290 S.E.2d 844, 846. Statements of fact concerning genealogy are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness. Fed.Evid.R. 803.

Pedis abscessio /pëdəs əbˈsɛs(i)əʊ/ . Lat. In Roman law, a concubine.

Pedis positio /pëdəs pəˈzɪʃ(i)əʊ/ . Lat. In old English law, a putting or placing of the foot. A term used to denote the possession of lands by actual corporeal entry upon them.

Pedis possessio /pëdəs pəˈzɪʃ(i)əʊ/ . Lat. A foothold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure.

Doctrine which normally only governs rights prior to discovery of valuable minerals while party is still prospecting; it protects prospector from intervention by another prospector, but only so long as he remains in actual possession of the claim and is diligently searching for minerals. Goldfield Mines, Inc. v. Hand, App., 147 Ariz. 498, 711 P.2d 637, 644.

Peeping tom. As used in reference to, e.g., "Peeping Tom" statute, has commonly understood meaning as one who sneaks up to window and peeps in for purpose of spying on and invading privacy of inhabitants. Matter of Banks, 295 N.C. 236, 244 S.E.2d 386, 389.

Peering /ˈpɪərɪŋ/. The rank or dignity of a peer or nobleman. Also the body of nobles taken collectively. In England, by the Life Peerages Act of 1958 the House of Lords exercises original jurisdiction over all matters and claims regarding peerage.

Peers /ˈpɜər/. In feudal law, the vassals of a lord who sat in his court as judges of their co-vassals, and were called "peers," as being each other's equals, or of the same condition. The nobility of Great Britain, being the lords temporal having seats in parliament, and including dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. Equals; those who are a man's equals in rank and station; thus "trial by a jury of his peers" means trial by jury of citizens. For Judgment of his peers, see Judgment.

Peers of fees. Vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function. These were termed "peers of fees," because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees; but, if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers.

Peg. To fix the price of something, as the government may stabilize the price of gold by offering to buy all the gold offered at a stated price. Speculators in stocks may peg the price of securities by frequent buying and selling at the pegged price, though today such manipulation is illegal.

Peine fort et dure /ˈpiːn feɪrt ət ˈdjʊər/. L. Fr. In old English law, a special form of punishment for those who, being arraigned for felony, obstinately "stood mute," that is, refused to plead or to put themselves upon trial. It is described as a combination of solitary confinement, slow starvation, and crushing the naked body with a great load of iron. This atrocious punishment was vulgarly called "pressing to death."

Peles /ˈpəlz/. Issues arising from or out of a thing.

Pelf, or pelfre /ˈpɛlf(ə)r/. Booty; also the personal effects of a felon convict.

PELLAGE /ˈpɛləj/. The custom or duty paid for skins of leather.

Pellex /ˈpɛlɛks/. Lat. In Roman law, a concubine.

Pells, clerk (or master) of the /ˈklærk əv ˈpɛls/ /məˈstər/ . Formerly, an officer in the English exchequer, who entered every teller's bill on the parchments, i.e., "pells," commonly two in number, one being the pell or roll of receipts, and the other the pell or roll of disbursements.

Penal. Punishable; inflicting a punishment; containing a penalty, or relating to a penalty.

Penal action. In its broadest context, it refers to criminal prosecution. More particularly, it refers to a civil action in which a wrongdoer is subject to a fine or penalty payable to the aggrieved party (e.g., for a criminal damage). The word "penal" is inherently a much broader term than "criminal" since it pertains to any punishment or penalty and relates to acts which are not necessarily delineated as criminal. State v. Lowry, 95 N.J.Super. 307, 230 A.2d 907, 913. Action is essentially "penal" if

An action upon a penal statute; an action for the recovery of a penalty given by statute. Smith Engineering Works v. Custer, 184 Okl. 318, 151 P.2d 404, 407, 408. In a broad sense, the term has been made to include all actions in which there may be a recovery of exemplary or vindictive damages, as suits for libel and slander, or in which special, double, or treble damages are given by statute, such as actions to recover money paid as usury or for violation of antitrust laws. But in a more particular sense it means (1) an action on a statute which gives a certain penalty to be recovered by any person who will sue for it, or (2) an action in which the judgment against the defendant is in the nature of a fine or is intended as a punishment, actions in which the recovery is to be compensatory in its purpose and effect not being penal actions but civil suits, though they may carry special damages by statute. See Damages (Exemplary or punitive damages, Treble damages).

Penal bond. An instrument formerly in use, by which a party bound himself to pay a certain sum or sums of money, or to do certain acts, or, in default thereof, to pay a certain specified sum by way of penalty; thence termed a "penal sum." These instruments have been superseded by the use of a bond in a penal sum, with conditions. See Penal bond.

Penal bond. A promise to pay a named sum of money, the penalty, in the event of nonperformance, with a condition underwritten that, if a stipulated collateral thing, other than the payment of money, be done or forborne, the obligation shall be void. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Kansas City, Mo., C.C.A.Mo., 128 F.2d 998, 1004. Bond conditioned upon forfeiture of penalty for its breach. See Penalty.

Penal clause. A secondary obligation entered into for purpose of enforcing performance of a primary obligation, and nature of penalty is by way of compensation for damages and not as punishment for failure to perform obligation. Also a clause in a statute declaring a penalty for a violation of the preceding clauses. See Penal clause.

Penal code. Bringing together and codification of substantive criminal laws of state or federal government; e.g. California Penal Code; Title 18 of U.S. Code. Several state Penal or Criminal Codes are patterned on the A.L.I. Model Penal Code.

Penal institutions. Generic term to describe all places of confinement for those convicted of crime such as jails, prisons, workhouses, houses of correction, and other correctional institutions.

Penal laws. Term, in general, refers to state and federal statutes that define criminal offenses and specify corresponding fines and punishment. Statutes imposing a penalty, fine, or punishment for certain offenses of a public nature or wrongs committed against the state.

Strictly speaking, statutes giving a private action against a wrongdoer are not penal in their nature, neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given being penal. If the wrong done is to the individual, the law giving him a right of action is remedial, rather than penal, though the sum to be recovered may be called a "penalty" or may consist in double or treble damages. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U.S. 657, 13 S.Ct. 224, 36 L.Ed. 1123.

Where a statute is both penal and remedial, as where it is penal in one part and remedial in the other, it should be considered as a "penal statute" when it is sought to enforce the penalty, and as a "remedial statute" when it is sought to enforce the remedy. Collins v. Kidd, D.C.Tex., 38 F.Supp. 634, 637.

See also Penal code.

Penal servitude. In English criminal law, is a punishment which consists in keeping an offender in confinement, and compelling him to labor.

Penal statutes. See Penal code; Penal laws.

Penal sum. A sum agreed upon in a bond, to be forfeited if the condition of the bond is not fulfilled. See also Penal bond; Penalty.

Penalty. An elastic term with many different shades of meaning; it involves idea of punishment, corporeal or pecuniary, or civil or criminal, although its meaning is generally confined to pecuniary punishment. Allied v. Graves, 261 N.C. 31, 134 S.E.2d 186, 192.

The sum of money which the obligation of a bond undertakes to pay in the event of his omitting to perform or carry out the terms imposed upon him by the conditions of the bond. A penalty is a sum inserted in a contract, not as a measure of compensation for its breach, but rather as punishment for default, or by way of security for actual damages which might be sustained by reason of nonperformance. Stein v. Bruce, Mo.App., 366 S.W.2d 732, 735. The sum a party agrees to pay in the event of a contract breach, but which is fixed, not as a pre-estimate of probable actual damages, but as a punishment, the threat of which is designed to prevent the breach. Westmount Country Club v. Kameny, 82 N.J. Super. 200, 197 A.2d 379, 382.

A penalty provision operates to compel performance of act and usually becomes effective only in event of default on which a forfeiture is compelled without regard to actual damages sustained by party aggrieved by breach. Garrett v. Coast and Southern Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 9 C.3d 731, 108 Cal.Rptr. 845, 850. See Penalty clause.

A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts payment of by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited or for not doing some act which is required to be done. Hidden Hollow Ranch v. Collins, 146 Mont. 321, 406 P.2d 365, 368. A statutory liability imposed on wrongdoer in amount which is not limited to damages suffered by party wronged. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. v. Standard Industries, Inc., 192 Kan. 381, 388 P.2d 632, 634.
Penalty clause. Provision in contract, loan agreement, savings instrument or the like providing penalties for default, late or missed payments, early withdrawals, etc. Such clauses are generally not enforceable by the courts. A provision for liquidated damages, however, will be enforced by the courts but the liquidated damages must be a reasonable estimate at the time of contracting of the likely damages from breach. Whether a provision for damages is a penalty clause or a liquidated damages clause is a question of law. Lake River Corporation v. Carborundum Co., C.A.I1L, 769 F.2d 1284, 1288-92.

Penance. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense.

Pendency. Suspense; the state of being pendent or undecided; the state of an action, etc., after it has been begun and before the final disposition of it.

Pendente lite /pêndénty léáty/ Lat. Pending; as lis pendens, a pending suit.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur /pêndéntiy látyi nâyh(ü)l inâvîtyâr/. During a litigation nothing new should be introduced.

Pendent jurisdiction. A principle applied in federal courts that allows state created causes of action arising out of the same transaction to be joined with a federal cause of action even if diversity of citizenship is not present. Pendent jurisdiction is discretionary matter whereby federal court may allow assertion of nonfederal claim for which no independent jurisdictional ground exists along with recognized federal claim between same parties who are properly before the court, provided relationship between federal claim and state claim permits conclusion that entire action before court comprises but one constitutional case. Schwab v. Erie Lackawanna R. Co., D.C.Pa., 303 F.Supp. 1398, 1399. The doctrine permits federal court under some circumstances to determine state cause of action which otherwise would have to be heard in state court; if state court would be without authority to award damages under state law, the doctrine can give the federal district court no greater power to do so. Local 20, Teamsters, Chauffeurs and Helpers Union v. Morton, 377 U.S. 252, 84 S.Ct. 1253, 1257, 12 L.Ed.2d 280.

Pendent jurisdiction pertains to the concept whereby a federal district court, in the exercise of jurisdiction over a federal law claim properly before it, may also, in its discretion, proceed to extend jurisdiction over a related state law claim where both claims arise from a common nucleus of operative facts. Barnes v. Childs, D.C.Miss., 63 F.R.D. 628, 630.

Pending. Begun, but not yet completed; during; before the conclusion of; prior to the completion of; unsettled; undetermined; in process of settlement or adjustment. Awaiting an occurrence or conclusion of action, period of continuance or indeterminacy. Thus, an action or suit is "pending" from its inception until the rendition of final judgment.

An action is "pending" after it is commenced by either filing a complaint with the court or by the service of a summons. Johnson v. McCaughan, Carter & Scharrer, Colo.App., 672 P.2d 221, 222.

See also Pendente lite.

Penetration. A term used in criminal law, and denoting (in cases of alleged rape) the insertion of the male part into the female parts to however slight an extent; and by which insertion the offense is complete without proof of emission.

Penitentiary. A prison, correctional institution, or other place of confinement where convicted felons are sent to serve out the term of their sentence.

Pennoyer Rule. A rule to the effect that a court which has no personal jurisdiction over a defendant may not issue an in personam judgment or decree against him. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565.

Pennsylvania Rule. Under the "Pennsylvania Rule," when one party has committed a statutory violation that is claimed to have caused a collision, the rule requires the alleged violator to show, if he is to be freed from fault, that the violation could not have been a cause of the collision. Crown, Zellerbach Corp. v. Willamette-Western Corp., C.A.Or., 519 F.2d 1327, 1329.

Penny stocks. Low-priced stock issues often highly speculative, selling at less than $1 a share.

Pennweight. A Troy weight, equal to twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce.

Penology. The science of prison management and rehabilitation of criminals.

Pen register. A mechanical device that records the numbers dialed on a telephone by monitoring the electrical impulses caused when the dial on the telephone is released. It does not overhear oral communications and does not indicate whether calls are actually completed; thus, there is no recording or monitoring of the conversation. For regulation of use of pen registers, see 18 U.S.C.A. § 3121 et seq. See also Wiretapping.

Pensam /pênsam/. The full weight of twenty ounces.

Pensio /pênsi(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a payment, properly, for the use of a thing. A rent; a payment for the use and occupation of another's house.

Pension. Retirement benefit paid regularly (normally, monthly), with the amount of such based generally on length of employment and amount of wages or salary of pensioner. Deferred compensation for services rendered. Waite v. Waite, 6 C.3d 461, 99 Cal.Rptr. 325, 330, 492 P.2d 13. See also Pension plan; Vested pension.

Pension fund. Fund established by corporations, unions, governmental bodies, etc. to pay pension benefits to its retired workers. See Pension plan.

Pension plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer primarily to provide systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to his employees, or their beneficiaries, over a period of years (usually for life) after retirement. Retirement benefits are measured by, and based on, such factors as years of service and compensation received by the employees. The Employees Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) governs plan qualification, operation, and administration, and specifically such matters as participation requirements, funding, vesting and filing and reporting with the Internal Revenue Service and Labor Department. Pension benefits under qualified plans are guaranteed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

A stated allowance out of the public treasury granted by government to an individual, or to his representatives, for his valuable services to the country, or in compensation for loss or damage sustained by him in the public service. Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U.S. 160, 15 S.Ct. 586, 39 L.Ed. 657.

See also Individual retirement account; Keogh Plan; Money-purchase plan; Pension trust.

Contributory pension plan. A plan funded with both employer and employee contributions.

Defined-contribution plan. Pension plan that provides benefits as determined by the accumulated contributions and the return on the fund's investment performance; the contributions are specified, but the benefits are not.

Defined pension plan. A pension plan where the employer promises specific benefits to each employee. The employer's cash contributions and pension expense are adjusted in relation to investment performance of the pension fund. Sometimes called a "fixed-benefit" pension plan.

Funded pension plan. See Funded.

Noncontributory plan. A pension plan where only the employer makes payments to fund the plan. Compare Contributory pension plan, above.

Qualified pension plan. An employer-sponsored plan that meets the requirements of I.R.C. § 401. If these requirements are met, none of the employer's contributions to the plan are taxed to the employee until distributed to him or her [§ 402]. The employer will be allowed a deduction in the year the contributions are made [§ 404].

Pension trust. Type of funded pension plan in which the employer transfers to trustees an amount sufficient to cover cost of pensions to employees who are the beneficiaries of the trust.

Peonage /piˈyan/ /ˈpiən̩ədʒ/. A condition of servitude (prohibited by 13th Amendment) compelling persons to perform labor in order to pay off a debt.

People. A state; as the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. The aggregate or mass of the individuals who constitute the state. Loi Hoa v. Nagle, C.C.A.Cal., 13 F.2d 80, 81. In a more restricted sense, and as generally used in constitutional law, the entire body of those citizens of a state or nation who are invested with political power for political purposes. See also Citizen; Person.

Peppercorn. A dried berry of the black pepper. In English law, the reservation of a merely nominal rent, on a lease, was sometimes expressed by a stipulation for the payment of a peppercorn.

Per /ˈpɜːr/. Lat. By, through, or by means of.

Perambulation /ˌpərəmˈbjuːləʃən/ /ˈpɜərmˌbjuːˌləشن/. The act or custom of walking over the boundaries of a district or piece of land, either for the purpose of determining them or of preserving evidence of them. Thus, in many parishes in England, it is the custom for the parishioners to perambulate the boundaries of the parish in rotation week in every year. Such a custom entitles them to enter any man's land and abate nuisances in their way. The custom has now largely fallen into disuse.

Perambulatione facienda, writ de /ˌpərəmˌbjuːləˈʃənəˌfaɪʃəndə/. In old English law, the name of a writ which was sued by consent of both parties when they were in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates. It was directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty.

Per and post /ˈpɜər ənd ˈpɔːst/. In old English law, to come in in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate; as the heirs or assigns of the grantee. To come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title; as the lord by escheat.

Per annum /ˈpɜər əˈnəm/. By the year; annually; yearly.

Per autre vie /ˌpɜər ɒˈtwɔr vɪˈvɛ/ /ˈpɜər əˈtwɔr vɪˈvɛ/. L. Fr. For or during another's life; for such period as another person shall live.

Per aversionem /ˈpɜər əˈvɜːrʃ(ə)nəm/. Lat. In the civil law, by turning away. A term applied to that kind of sale where the goods are taken in bulk, and not by weight or measure, and for a single price; or where a piece of land is sold as containing in gross, by estimation, a certain number of acres. So called because the buyer acts without particular examination or discrimination, turning his face, as it were, away.

Per bouche /ˈpɜər ˈbuʃ/. L. Fr. By the mouth; orally.
A method of reckoning or determining share and share alike. This term, derived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descent and distribution, and denotes that method of dividing an intestate estate by which an equal share is given to each of a number of persons, all of whom stand in equal degree to the decedent, without reference to their stocks or the right of representation. It is the antithesis of per stirpes (q.v.).

Percentage of completion method. A method of reporting income or loss on certain long-term contracts. Under this method of accounting, revenue is recognized as reported income or loss within a construction period.

Percentage depletion. Percentage order. A market or limited price order to buy (or sell) a stated amount of a certain stock after a half, or sixteen feet and a half in length; otherwise comprehending.

Percentage of completion method. A lease, usually on a retail business property, using a percentage of the gross or net sales to determine the rent. There is usually a minimum or "base" rental, in the event of poor sales.

Percentage depletion. See Depletion.

Percentage lease. A lease, usually on a retail business property, using a percentage of the gross or net sales to determine the rent. There is usually a minimum or "base" rental, in the event of poor sales.

Per cent. An abbreviation of the Latin "per centum," meaning by the hundred, or so many parts in the hundred, or so many hundreds.

Percentage depletion. See Depletion.

Peremptory day. A day assigned for trial or hearing in court, absolutely and without further opportunity for postponement.

Peremptory exceptions. In the civil law, any defense which denies entirely the ground of action. Those exceptions which tend to the dismissal of the action.

Peremptory instruction. See Jury instruction.

Peremptory rule. In practice, an absolute rule; a rule without any condition or alternative of showing cause.
Ruling made by a trial judge or hearing magistrate "on the spot" and without taking the matter under advisement.

Peremptory undertaking. In English law, an undertaking by a plaintiff to bring on a cause for trial at the next sittings or assizes.

Per eundem /pər ɪˈəʊndəm/. Lat. By the same. This phrase is commonly used to express "by, or from the mouth of, the same judge." So "per eundem in eadem" means "by the same judge in the same case."

Perfect or perfected. Complete; finished; executed; enforceable; without defect; merchantable; marketable.
Brought to a state of perfection.

As to perfect Equity; Obligation; Ownership; Title; and Usufruct, see those titles.

Perfect attestation clause. One that asserts performance of all acts required to be done to make valid testamentary disposition.

Perfected. See Perfect or perfected; Perfection of security interest.

Perfecting bail. Term describing certain qualifications of a property character being required of persons who tender themselves as bail, when such persons have justiified, i.e., established their sufficiency by satisfying the court that they possess the requisite qualifications; a rule or order of court is made for their allowance, and the bail is then said to be perfected, i.e., the process of giving bail is finished or completed.

Perfect instrument. An instrument such as a deed or mortgage is said to become perfect or perfected when recorded (or registered) or filed for record, because it then becomes good as to all the world.

Perfection of security interest. In secured transactions law, the process whereby a security interest is protected, as far as the law permits, against competing claims to the collateral, which usually requires the secured party to give public notice of the interest as by filing in a government office (e.g. in office of Secretary of State). Perfection of a security interest deals with those steps legally required to give a secured party an interest in subject property against debtor's creditors. Bramble
Transp., Inc. v. Sam Senter Sales, Inc., Del.Super., 294
A.2d 97, 102.

The minimum meaning of this term in connection with a security interest is that the secured party has done whatever is necessary in the way of giving notice to make his security interest effective at least against liens creditors of the debtor. Depending upon the type of collateral and the method of perfection, it may mean more; e.g. it may mean that the interest is good even against all purchasers. The methods for attaining perfecion are stated in U.C.C. Sections 9-302 through 9-306. In most cases the secured party may obtain perfection either by filing (i.e. with Secretary of State) or by taking possession of the collateral. When the collateral is held by a bailee who has not issued a negotiable document of title, perfection by notification is possible;
e.g. the secured party may obtain perfection by notifying the bailee of the secured party's interest. For a few special situations the Code provides that a security interest is perfected without any of the above actions on the part of the secured party. Such perfection is called automatic perfection, or perfection by attachment.

Perfect trust. An executed trust (q.v.).

Perfictum est cui nihil deest secundum sue perfec-tionis vel nature modum /pərˈfɪktəm ɛst kɪˈwɪʃər nəˈtʃɪəri məˈdʊm/. That is perfect to which nothing is wanting, according to the measure of its perfection or nature.

Perfidy /pərˈfɪdi/. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Faithlessness, treachery, violation of a promise or vow or a trust reposed.

Perform. To perform an obligation or contract is to execute, fulfill, or accomplish it according to its terms.
This may consist either in action on the part of the person bound by the contract or in omission to act, according to the nature of the subject-matter; but the term is usually applied to any action in discharge of a contract other than payment. See Performance.

In copyright law, to "perform" a work means to recite, render, play, dance, or act it, either directly or by means of any device or process or, in the case of a motion picture or other audiovisual work, to show its images in any sequence or to make the sounds accompanying it

Per formam doni /pər fɔːrˈmæm dəʊnə/. L. Lat. In English law, by the form of the gift; by the designation of the giver, and not by the operation of law.

Performance. The fulfillment or accomplishment of a promise, contract, or other obligation according to its terms, relieving such person of all further obligation or liability thereunder. See also Execute; Execution; Part performance; Payment; Substantial performance doctrine.

Non performance. See Commercial frustration; Default; Impossibility.

Part performance. The doing some portion, yet not the whole, of what either party to a contract has agreed to do.

Part performance of an obligation, either before or after a breach thereof, when expressly accepted by the creditor in writing, in satisfaction, or rendered in pursuance of an agreement in writing for that purpose, though without any new consideration, extinguishes the obligation.
As regards the sale of goods, the statute of frauds requirement is dispensed with by partial performance for the goods which have been accepted or for which payment has been made and accepted. U.C.C. § 2-201(3). See also Part performance.

Specific performance. The remedy of requiring exact performance of a contract in the specific form in which it was made, or according to the precise terms agreed upon. The actual accomplishment of a contract by a party bound to fulfill it. The doctrine of specific performance is that, where money damages would be an inadequate compensation for the breach of an agreement, the contractor or vendor will be compelled to perform specifically what he has agreed to do; e.g., ordered to execute a specific conveyance of land. See Fed.R. Civil P. 70.

With respect to sale of goods, specific performance may be decreed where the goods are unique or in other proper circumstances. The decree for specific performance may include such terms and conditions as to payment of the price, damages, or other relief as the court may deem just. U.C.C. §§ 2-711(2)(b), 2-716.

As the exact fulfillment of an agreement is not always practicable, the phrase may mean, in a given case, not literal, but substantial performance.

Performance bond. Surety bond which guarantees that contractor will fully perform contract and guarantees against breach of contract. Isaac v. Reliance Ins. Co., 201 Kan. 288, 440 P.2d 600, 605. Proceeds of bond are used to complete contract or compensate for loss in the event of nonperformance. See also Bond; Bid bond; Miller Act.

Per fraudem /pər frɒdəm//. Lat. By fraud. In common law pleading, where a plea alleges matter of discharge, and the replication avers that the discharge was fraudulently obtained and is therefore invalid, it is called a "replication per fraudem."

Periculosum existimo quod bonorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo /pərɪkɪəlɒwswəm əɡzɪstəmɔw kwɔd ɒnɔrəm vəˈɹɔːrm nɒn kəmˈprɛbɨtər ˈɛgzɛmpləw//. I consider that dangerous which is not approved by the example of good men.

Periculosus /pərɪkɪəlɒwsws//. Lat. Dangerous; perilous.

Periculum /pərɪkɪləlm//. Lat. In the civil law, peril; danger; hazard; risk.

Peril. The risk, hazard, or contingency insured against by a policy of insurance. In general, the cause of any loss such as may be caused by fire, hail, etc. See also Imminent peril.

Perils of the lakes. As applied to navigation of the Great Lakes, this term has the same meaning as "perils of the sea (q.v.)."

Perils of the sea. In maritime and insurance law, natural accidents peculiar to the sea, which do not happen by the intervention of man, nor are to be prevented by human prudence. Hence to recover on marine policy insuring against loss by perils of sea, vessel must be seaworthy when it is sent to sea. Perils of the sea are from (1) storms and waves; (2) rocks, shoals, and rapids; (3) other obstacles, though of human origin; (4) changes of climate; (5) the confinement necessary at sea; (6) animals peculiar to the sea; (7) all other dangers peculiar to the sea. All losses caused by the action of wind and water acting on the property insured under extraordinary circumstances, either directly or mediate¬ly, without the intervention of other independent active external causes, are losses by "perils of the sea or other perils and dangers," within the meaning of the usual clause in a policy of marine insurance. In an enlarged sense, all losses which occur from maritime adventure may be said to arise from the perils of the sea; but underwriters are not bound to this extent. They insure against losses from extraordinary occurrences only; such as stress of weather, winds and waves, lightning, tempests, etc. These are understood to be meant by the phrase "the perils of the sea," in a marine policy, and not those ordinary perils which every vessel must encounter.

Peril of the sea within a marine policy envisions extraordinary and unusual perils which vessel may not reasonably expect to encounter; circumstances which are ordinarily encountered such as predictable winds, tides, wave actions and conditions of the water do not fall within such classification. Vining v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, La.App., 252 So.2d 754, 757. Under Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, "perils of the sea" are understood to mean those perils which are peculiar to sea and which are of extraordinary nature or arise from irresistible force or overwhelming power, and which cannot be guarded against by ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. New Rotterdam Ins. Co. v. S. S. Loppersum, D.C.N.Y., 215 F.Supp. 563, 566, 567.

Per incuriam /pər ɪnˈkɜːriəm//. Lat. Through inadvertence.

Per industrias hominis /pər ɪndˈʃɛstriəs həˈmeɪnɪs//. Lat. In old English law, by human industry. A term applied to the reclaiming or taming of wild animals by art, industry, and education.

Per infortunium /pər ɪnˈfɔːrtjuːniəm//. Lat. By misadventure. In criminal law, homicide per infortunium is committed where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. See Homicide.

Period. Any point, space, or division of time.

Periodic. Recurring at fixed intervals; to be made or done, or to happen, at successive periods separated by determined intervals of time, as periodic payments of interest on a bond, or periodic alimony payments.

Periodic alimony. A form of support alimony which may be modified for changed circumstances of either party. An allowance payable by one spouse to the other at intermittent times, usually by the week or by the month, in a definite amount over a definite or indefinite period of time. An award of periodic alimony is appropriate according to the needs of the spouse requesting... alimony and the corresponding ability of the other spouse to pay. Cann v. Cann, Fla.App., 334 So.2d 325, 328. This is also known in some jurisdictions as permanent alimony. Maxcy v. Estate of Maxcy, 485 So.2d 1077, 1078. State statutes which provide for alimony payments only from husbands, and not wives, have been held unconstitutional. Orr v. Orr, 99 S.Ct. 1102. See also Alimony; Permanent alimony.

Periodic tenancy. Generic term descriptive of a tenancy from week to week, month to month, or year to year. Periodic tenancy is one continuing tenancy subject to termination at various rental periods rather than a series of individual and new tenancies. Rossow Oil Co., Inc. v. Heiman, 72 Wis.2d 696, 242 N.W.2d 176, 180. An estate that continues for successive periods unless terminated at end of a period by notice. State v. Fin & Feather Club, Me., 316 A.2d 351, 357.

Peripheral rights. Those rights which surround or spring from other rights.

Periphrasis. Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one.

Perish. To come to an end; to cease to be; to die.

Perishable. Subject to speedy and natural decay (e.g. fruits, vegetables, dairy products, meat). But, where the time contemplated is necessarily long, the term may embrace property liable merely to material depreciation in value from other causes than such decay.

Perishable commodity. A relative term used to describe a product, like fruit or fresh vegetables, which quickly deteriorates in quality and value. In re Rosenbaum Grain Corporation, C.C.A.III., 83 F.2d 391, 393.

Perishable goods. Goods which quickly decay and lose their value if not put to their intended use within a short period of time.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt /porjúray sánt kway sarvstéyás vörbas jurmmentáy daspipáy oríy jyóram kway akspípyánt/. They are perjured, who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it.

Perjury. In criminal law, the willful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being material to the issue or point of inquiry and known to such witness to be false. A false statement knowingly made in a proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction or concerning a matter wherein an affiant is required by law to be sworn as to some matter material to the issue or point in question. Henry v. Deen, 310 N.C. 75, 310 S.E.2d 326, 335.

A person is guilty of perjury if in any official proceeding he makes a false statement under oath or equivalent affirmation, or swears or affirms the truth of a statement previously made, when the statement is material and he does not believe it to be true. Model Penal Code, § 241.1. See also 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1621, 1623.

Suboration of perjury is procuring another to commit perjury. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1622.

For unsworn declarations under penalty of perjury, see 28 U.S.C.A. § 1746. See also False swearing; Two witness rule.

Perks. See Perquisites.

Per legem terre /pør lijam téhri/. Lat. By the law of the land; by due process of law.

Permanent. Continuing or enduring in the same state, status, place, or the like, without fundamental or marked change, not subject to fluctuation, or alteration, fixed or intended to be fixed; lasting; abiding; stable; not temporary or transient. Hiatt v. Department of Labor and Industries, 48 Wash.2d 843, 297 P.2d 244, 246. Generally opposed in law to "temporary," but not always meaning "perpetual."

As to permanent Injunction; Nuisance, and Trespass, see those titles.

Permanent abode. A domicile or fixed home, which the party may leave as his interest or whim may dictate, but which he has no present intention of abandoning. See also Domicile; Residence.

Permanent alimony. An allowance for the support and maintenance of a spouse during his or her lifetime, and its purpose is to provide nourishment, sustenance and the necessities of life to a former spouse who has neither the resources nor ability to be self-sustaining. Cann v. Cann, Fla.App., 334 So.2d 325, 329. See also Alimony; Periodic alimony.

Within insurance policies does not mean that disability must continue throughout life of insured, but it connotes idea that disability must be something more than temporary, and at least presumably permanent. See also Disability; Permanent injury.

Permanent employment. As provided for by contract, means only that employment is to continue indefinitely and until either party wishes to sever relation for some good reason. Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters of Pacific, Cal.App., 155 P.2d 426, 429.

Permanent financing. Long term loan which replaces bridge or interim financing; e.g., mortgage loan used to repay construction loan.

Permanent injury. One where situation has stabilized and permanent damage is reasonably certain. Haugen Trust v. Warner, 204 Mont. 508, 665 P.2d 1132, 1135. Physical or mental impairment or disability which will last throughout life, or injury reasonably certain to be followed by permanent impairment of earning capacity or one producing permanent irremediable pain. Driver v. Anheuser, Mo.App., 397 S.W.2d 11, 16. See also Permanent disability.

Permanent law. An act which continues in force for an indefinite time.

Permit card. A document given by a union to a non-union member which allows an employer to hire him for a job for which the union is unable to supply sufficient members.

Per mitter le droit /pər mɪtər le drɔ̃/. L. Fr. By passing the right. One of the modes by which releases at common law were said to inure was "per mitter le droit," as where a person who had been disseised released to the disseisor or his heir or feoffee. In such case, by the release, the right which was in the releasor was added to the possession of the releasee, and the two combined perfected the estate.

Per mitter l'estate /pər mɪtər lə stɛt/. L. Fr. By passing the estate. At common law, if two or more are seised, either by deed, devise, or descent, as joint tenants or coparceners of the same estate, and one of them releases to the other, this is said to inure by way of "per mitter l'estate."

Permutatio /pɜrmjuːteɪʃən/. The exchange of one movable subject for another; barter.

Permutation /pɜrmjuːteɪʃən/. The exchange of one movable subject for another; barter.

Per my et per tout /pər mi ey pər tuw(t)/. L. Fr. By the half and by the whole. A phrase descriptive of the mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal.

Pernance. Taking; a taking or receiving; as of the profits of an estate. Actual pernancy of the profits of an estate is the taking, perception, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

Pernor of profits /pɜrnɔr əv prɒfəts/. He who receives the profits of lands, etc.; he who has the actual pernancy of the profits.

Pernour /pɜnrər/. L. Fr. A taker. Le pernour ou le detenour, the taker or the detainer.

Per pais, trial /trə(a)l pər pey(s)/. Trial by the country; i.e., by jury.

Perpārs /pɜrpərəs/. L. Lat. A purpart; a part of the inheritance.

Perpetration. The act of one committing a crime either with his own hands, or by some means or instrument or through some innocent agent.

Perpetrator /pɜrpətrətər/. Generally, this term denotes the person who actually commits a crime or delict, or by whose immediate agency it occurs.

Perpetual /pɜrpətuəl/. Never ceasing; continuous; enduring; lasting; unlimited in respect of time; continuing without intermission or interval.

As to perpetual Injunction; Lease; and Statute, see those titles.

Perpetual edict. In Roman law, originally the term "perpetual" was merely opposed to "occasional" and was used to distinguish the general edicts of the praetors from the special edicts or orders which they issued in their judicial capacity. But under Hadrian the edict was revised by the jurist Julianus, and was republished as a permanent act of legislation. It was then styled "perpetual," in the sense of being calculated to endure
Perpetual succession. That continuous existence Perpetua lex est nullam legem humanam ac positivum perpetuum esse, et clausula qua abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet./perpetuam lex est non valet./ It is a perpetual law that no human and positive law can be perpetual, and a clause [in a law] which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio.

Perpetuating testimony. Means or procedure permit¬
ing the inalienability or property beyond the time of a life or lives in being plus twenty one years. A perpetui¬ty is a limitation which takes the subject-matter of the property out of commerce for a period greater than a ordinary period of gestation. Zahn v. National Bank of Commerce of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 328 S.W.2d 783, 789. See also Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuities, rule against. See Perpetuity; Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuity /pərˈpɛtjuəri/./ Continuing forever. Legally, pertaining to real property, any condition extending the inalienability or property beyond the time of a life or lives in being plus twenty one years. A perpetuity is a limitation which takes the subject-matter of the perpetuity out of commerce for a period greater than a life or lives in being and 21 years thereafter, plus ordinary period of gestation. Zahn v. National Bank of Commerce of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 328 S.W.2d 783, 789. See also Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuity of the king. That fiction of the English law which for certain political purposes ascribes to the king in his political capacity the attribute of immortality; for, though the reigning monarch may die, yet by this fiction the king never dies, i.e., the office is supposed to be reoccupied for all political purposes immediately on his death.

Per procuration /pərˈprɔkjuəˈreɪʃən/. By proxy; by one acting as an agent with special powers, as under a letter of attorney. These words give notice to all persons that the agent is acting under a special and limited authority. The phrase is commonly abbreviated to "per proc.," or "p.p.," and is more used in the civil law and in England than in American law. A proxy or signature of a principal executed by an agent who discloses his role as agent on the document.

Per quod servitium amisit /pər kwɔd sərvɪʃ(ɪ)əm ˈsʌmiət/. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the company [of his wife]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a husband for beating or ill using his wife, descriptive of the special damage he had sustained. Crocker v. Crocker, C.C.Mass., 98 F. 702, 703. See Consortium.

Per quod consortium amisit /pər kwɔd kɔnsəˈrəʊri(ə)m ˈsʌmiət/. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the company [of his wife]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a master for beating or ill using his servant, descriptive of the special damage he had sustained. This action was commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant was necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, had to be shown.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem /pər rəˈʃiəˌwəˌniəz pərvəˈlɪtnət əd ˈlæjitɪməm rəˌʃiəˈwənəm/. By reasoning we come to true reason.

Per rerum naturam factum negantis nulla probatio est /pər rɨrəm nətˈʃʊrəm ˈfæktəm ˈnɛɡəntəs nʌlə prəˈbəˌteɪʃən/.
bęyš(y)ow est/. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Per saltum /pər sältəm/. Lat. By a leap or bound; by a sudden movement; passing over certain proceedings.

Per sample /pər səmpl/. By sample. A purchase so made is a collateral engagement that the goods shall be of a particular quality. U.C.C. § 2-313(1)(c).

Per se /pər sē/ /sē/. Lat. By itself; in itself; taken alone; by means of itself; through itself; inherently; in isolation; unconnected with other matters; simply as such; in its own nature without reference to its relation.

In law of defamation, certain words and phrases that are actionable as slander or libel in and of themselves without proof of special damages, e.g. accusation of crime. Used in contrast to defamation per quod which requires proof of special damage. See Actionable per se; Libelous per se; Slanderous per se.

See also Negligence per se; Per se doctrine; Per se violations.

Persecution /pərsekwiən/. Lat. In the civil law, a following after; a pursuing at law; a suit or prosecution. Properly that kind of judicial proceeding before the prætor which was called "extraordinary." In a general sense, any judicial proceeding, including not only "actions" (actiones), properly so called, but other proceedings also.

Per se doctrine. Under the "per se doctrine," if an activity is blatant in its intent and pernicious in its effect, a court need not inquire into the reasonableness of the same before determining that it is a violation of the antitrust laws. Connecticut Ass'n of Clinical Laboratories v. Connecticut Blue Cross, Inc., 31 Conn.Sup. 10, 324 A.2d 286, 291. See Per se violations.

Per se violations. In anti-trust law, term that implies certain types of business agreements, such as price-fixing, are considered inherently anti-competitive and injurious to the public without any need to determine if the agreement has actually injured market competition. See Per se doctrine; Rule (Rule of reason).

Person. In general usage, a human being (i.e. natural person), though by statute term may include labor organizations, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, or receivers. See e.g. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(1), 29 U.S.C.A. § 152; Uniform Partnership Act, § 2.

Scope and delineation of term is necessary for determining those to whom Fourteenth Amendment of Constitution affords protection since this Amendment expressly applies to "person."

Aliens. Aliens are "persons" within meaning of Fourteenth Amendment and are thus protected by equal protection clause against discriminatory state action. Foley v. Connellie, D.C.N.Y., 419 F.Supp. 889, 891.

Commercial law. An individual or organization. U.C.C. § 1-201(30).

Corporation. A corporation is a "person" within meaning of Fourteenth Amendment equal protection and due process provisions of United States Constitution. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Ward, Ala., 470 U.S. 869, 105 S.Ct. 1676, 1683, 84 L.Ed.2d 751. The term "persons" in statute relating to conspiracy to commit offense against United States, or to defraud United States, or any agency, includes corporation. Alamo Fence Co. of Houston v. U.S., C.A.Tex., 240 F.2d 179, 181.

Foreign government. Foreign governments otherwise eligible to sue in U.S. courts are "persons" entitled to bring treble-damage suit for alleged antitrust violations under Clayton Act, Section 4. Pfizer, Inc. v. Government of India, C.A.Minn., 550 F.2d 396.

Interested person. Includes heirs, devisees, children, spouses, creditors, beneficiaries and any others having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of a decedent, ward or protected person which may be affected by the proceeding. It also includes persons having priority for appointment as personal representative, and other fiduciaries representing interested persons. The meaning as it relates to particular persons may vary from time to time and must be determined according to the particular purposes of, and matter involved in, any proceeding. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(20).

Labor unions. Labor unions are "persons" under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, Casey v. F.T.C., C.A.Wash., 578 F.2d 793, 797, and also under Bankruptcy Code, Highway and City Freight Drivers, Dockmen and Helpers, Local Union No. 600 v. Gordon Transports, Inc., C.A.Mo., 576 F.2d 1285, 1287.

Minors. Minors are "persons" under the United States Constitution, possessed of rights that governments must respect. In re Scott K., 24 C.3d 395, 155 Cal.Rptr. 671, 674, 595 P.2d 105.

Municipalities. Municipalities and other government units are "persons" within meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Local government officials sued in their official capacities are "persons" for purposes of Section 1983 in those cases in which a local government would be liable in its own name. Monell v. N.Y. City Department of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 98 S.Ct. 2038, 2035, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. See Color of law.
Definition of "person" or "persons" covered by antitrust laws includes cities, whether as municipal utility operators suing as plaintiffs seeking damages for antitrust violations or as operators being sued as defendants. City of Lafayette, La. v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., La., 436 U.S. 389, 98 S.Ct. 1123, 1128, 55 L.Ed.2d 364.

Protected person. One for whom a conservator has been appointed or other protective order has been made. Uniform Probate Code, § 5–103(18).

Resident alien. A resident alien is a "person" within the meaning of the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. C. D. R. Enterprises, Ltd. v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, D.C. N.Y., 412 F.Supp. 1164, 1168.

Unborn child. Word "person" as used in the Fourteenth Amendment does not include the unborn. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 729, 35 L.Ed.2d 147.

Unborn child is a "person" for purpose of remedies given for personal injuries, and child may sue after his birth. Weaks v. Mounter, 88 Nev. 118, 493 P.2d 1307, 1309. In some jurisdictions a viable fetus is considered a person within the meaning of the state's wrongful death statute, e.g. Summerfield v. Superior Court, 144 Ariz. 467, 698 P.2d 712, and within the meaning of the state's vehicular homicide statute, e.g. Comm. v. Cass, 392 Mass. 799, 467 N.E.2d 1324. See also Child; Children (Rights of unborn child); Unborn child; Viable child.

Persona /parsowna/. Lat. In the civil law, character in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man and certain duties are imposed upon him. Thus one man may unite many characters (personae), as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant.

Personable /parsowna/. Having the rights and powers of a person; able to hold or maintain a plea in court; also capacity to take anything granted or given.

Persona conjucta equipuratur interesse proprio /parsówna kaņņa̱kta eksw̱opo̱ṯar interes̱s̱ay̱s̱ prou̱priy̱ow/. A personal connection [literally, a united person, union with a person] is equivalent to one’s own interest; nearness of blood is as good a consideration as one’s own interest.

Persona designata /parsowna dēzagně́y̱ta/. A person pointed out or described as an individual, as opposed to a person ascertained as a member of a class, or as filling a particular character.

Persona ecclesie /parsowna aklīzyį̱y̱/. The person or personation of the church.

Persona est homo cum statu quodam consideratus /parsówna ėst hōwmow kām stātyųw kwōdawm kānį̱dorę́y̱ṯs̱/. A person is a man considered with reference to a certain status.

Person aggrieved. To have standing as a "person aggrieved" under equal employment opportunities provisions of Civil Rights Act, or to assert rights under any federal regulatory statute, a plaintiff must show (1) that he has actually suffered an injury, and (2) that the interest sought to be protected by the complainant is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute in question. Foust v. Transamerica Corp., D.C.Cal., 391 F.Supp. 312, 314.

As contemplated by federal rule governing standing to object to alleged illegal search and seizure is whether the victim of the search and seizure, as distinguished from one who claims prejudice only through the use of evidence gathered in a search directed at someone else. Cochran v. U.S., C.A.Colo., 389 F.2d 326, 327.

Test of whether a petitioner is a "person aggrieved" and thereby entitled to seek review of an order of referee in bankruptcy is whether his property may be diminished, his burden increased or his rights detrimentally affected by order sought to be reviewed. In re Capitano, D.C.La., 315 F.Supp. 105, 107, 108.

See also Aggrieved party; Standing to sue doctrine.

Personal. Appertaining to the person; belonging to an individual; limited to the person; having the nature or portaking of the qualities of human beings, or of movable property. In re Steines’ Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

As to personal Action; Assets; Chattel; Contract; Covenant; Credit; Demand; Disability; Franchise; Injury; Judgment; Knowledge; Liberty; Notice; Obligation; Property; Replevin; Representative; Right; Security; Servitude; Statute; Tax; Tithes; Tort; and Warranty, see those titles.

Personal belongings. In probate law, term is a broad classification and in absence of restriction may include most or all of the testator’s personal property. Goggans v. Simmons, Tex.Civ.App., 319 S.W.2d 442, 445. See also Personal effects.

Personal defenses. In commercial law, term usually refers to defenses that cannot be asserted against a holder in due course in enforcing an instrument. Also refers to defenses of a principal debtor against a creditor that cannot be asserted derivatively by a surety.

Personal effects. Articles associated with person, as property having more or less intimate relation to person of possessor; “effects” meaning movable or chattel property of any kind. Usual reference is to such items as the following owned by a decedent at the time of death: clothing, furniture, jewelry, stamp and coin collections, silverware, china, crystal, cooking utensils, books, cars, televisions, radios, etc.

Term “personal effects” when employed in a will enjoys no settled technical meaning and, when used in its primary sense, without any qualifying words, ordinarily embraces such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person, or tangible property having some intimate relation to the person of the testator or testatrix; where it is required by the context within which the term appears, it may enjoy a broader meaning. In re Stengel’s Estate, Mo.App., 557 S.W.2d 255, 260.
Personal holding company. Type of corporation subject to special Personal Holding Company Tax (I.R.C. § 541 et seq.) on undistributed income so as to preclude use of such organization by individuals in high tax brackets to avoid taxes. Typically, such corporations have a limited number of shareholders and the major sources of revenue are from passive income such as dividends, interest, annuities, royalties, rent, and the like.

Personal holding company income. Income as defined by I.R.C. § 543. Such income includes interest, dividends, certain rents and royalties, income from the use of corporate property by certain shareholders, income from certain personal service contracts, and distributions from estates and trusts. Such income is relevant in determining whether a corporation is a personal holding company and is therefore subject to the penalty tax on personal holding companies.

Personal holding company tax. Federal tax imposed on personal holding companies and designed to force the distribution of corporate earnings through the threat of a penalty tax on the corporation. I.R.C. § 541.

Petition. A written address, embodying an application or prayer from the person or persons preferring it, to the power, body, or person to whom it is presented, for the exercise of his or their authority in the redress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor, privilege, or license. A formal written request addressed to some governmental authority. The right of the people to petition for redress of grievances is guaranteed by the First Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

A written request to a board for action on some matter therein laid before it. McKillop v. County Bd. of Ed. of Sanborn County, 78 S.D. 587, 105 N.W.2d 671, 675. For example, a formal paper filed with the N.L. R.B. seeking a secret ballot election among a certain group of employees (bargaining unit).

Petition. A formal written application to a court requesting judicial action on a certain matter. A recital of facts which give rise to a cause of action. Matthews v. Simmons, Tex.Civ.App., 589 S.W.2d 156, 159. An application made to a court ex parte, or where there are no parties in opposition, praying for the exercise of the judicial powers of the court in relation to some matter which is not the subject for a suit or action, or for authority to do some act which requires the sanction of the court; as for the appointment of a guardian, for leave to sell trust property, etc. Formerly, in equity practice the original pleading was denominated a petition or bill. Today, in almost all jurisdictions, whether in law or equity, the initial pleading is a complaint.

Written request to the court for an order after notice. Uniform Probate Code, §§ 1-201(31), 5-103(15).

Petition de droit /patishan da droyt/. L. Fr. In old English practice, a petition of right; a form of proceeding to obtain restitution from the crown of either real or personal property, being of use where the crown is in possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition itself. 3 Bl.Comm. 256.

Petitioner. One who presents a petition to a court, officer, or legislative body. The one who starts an equity proceeding or the one who takes an appeal from a judgment. In legal proceedings commenced by petition, the person against whom action or relief is prayed, or who opposes the prayer of the petition, is called the "respondent." See also Plaintiff.

Petition in bankruptcy. A document filed in a court of bankruptcy, or with the clerk, by a debtor seeking the relief provided under the various chapters of the Bankruptcy Code. This is the manner in which a bankruptcy case is commenced. See Bankruptcy Code, § 301 et seq.

Petitioning creditor. The creditor at whose instance an adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a debtor.

Petition of right. In old English law, a proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king. See Petition de droit.

Petition of rights. A parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I, in 1629. It is to be distinguished from the bill of rights, (1689), which has passed into a permanent constitutional statute.

Petit jury. See Jury.

Petit larceny. See Larceny.

Petitory action /petɪt(ə)riː ēkʃan/. A driotural action; that is, one in which the plaintiff seeks to establish and enforce, by an appropriate legal proceeding, his right of property, or his title, to the subject-matter in dispute; as distinguished from a possessory action, where the right to the possession is the point in litigation, and not the mere right of property. In admiralty, suits to try title to property independent of questions concerning possession are referred to as "petitory suits," which suits must be based on a claim of legal title; the assertion of a mere equitable interest is not sufficient. Hunt v. A P.H.V. An abbreviation for "pro hac vice," for this turn, for this purpose or occasion.

Phylasist. A jailer.

Physical. Relating or pertaining to the body, as distinguished from the mind or soul or the emotions. Material, substantive, having an objective existence, as distinguished from imaginary or fictitious; real, having relation to facts, as distinguished from moral or constructive.

Piracy. Those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas which, if committed on land, would have amounted to a felony. Brigandage committed on the sea or from the sea. Whoever, on the high seas, commits the crime of piracy as defined by the law of nations, and is afterwards brought into or found in the United States, shall be imprisoned for life. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1651. See also Air piracy.

The term is also applied to the illegal reprinting or reproduction of copyrighted matter or to unlawful plagiarism from it; and, similarly, to the unlawful reproduction or distribution of property protected by patent and trademark laws. See also Infringement; Plagiarism.

Pirata est hostis humani generis /paréyta êst hóstas hyuwméynay jénaras/ . A pirate is an enemy of the human race.

Pirate. One guilty of the crime of piracy.

Piscary /piˈskəri/ . The right of fishing. Thus, common of piscary is the right of fishing in waters belonging to another person.

PITI. Principal, interest, taxes and insurance; the most common components of monthly mortgage payments.

P.J. An abbreviation for "presiding judge" (or justice).

PKPA. See Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act.

P.L. An abbreviation for "Pamphlet Laws" or "Public Laws."

Placard. An edict; a declaration; a manifesto. Also an advertisement or public notification.

Place. An old form of the word "pleas." Thus the "Court of Common Pleas" was sometimes called the "Court of Common Place."

Place, n. This word is a very indefinite term. It is applied to any locality, limited by boundaries, however large or however small. It may be used to designate a country, state, county, town, or a very small portion of a town. The extent of the locality designated by it must generally be determined by the connection in which it is used. In its primary and most general sense means locality, situation, or site, and it is also used to designate an occupied situation or building. See also Site; Situs.

Place, v. To arrange for something as to place a mortgage or to place an order. See also Placement.

Place lands. Lands granted which were within certain limits on each side of the road, and which became instantly fixed by the adoption of the line of the road. There is a well-defined difference between place lands and "indemnity lands." See Indemnity.
Placement. The act of selling a new issue of securities or arranging a loan or mortgage. The act of finding employment for a person as in the case of an employment agency. See also Finder; Offering.

Place of abode. One's residence or domicile (q.v.).

Place of business. The location at which one carries on his business or employment. Under many state statutes, service of process may be made at one's place of business and jurisdiction may be acquired by a court whose territorial district includes one's place of business. See also Domicile.

Place of contract. The place (country or state) in which a contract is made, and whose law must determine questions affecting the execution, validity, and construction of the contract. Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 412, 23 L.Ed. 246.

Place of delivery. The place where delivery is to be made of goods sold. If no place is specified in the contract, the articles sold must, in general, be delivered at the place where they are at the time of the sale. Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U.S. 124, 25 L.Ed. 554. See U.C.C. §§ 2-503, 2-504.

Place of employment. Within the safe place statutes, a place where active work, either temporary or permanent, is being conducted in connection with a business for profit; that is, where some process or operation related to such industry, trade or business is carried on and where any person is directly or indirectly employed by another.

Placer. In mining law, a superficial deposit of sand, gravel, or disintegrated rock, carrying one or more of the precious metals, along the course or under the bed of a watercourse, ancient or current, or along the shore of the sea. Under the acts of congress, the term includes all forms of mineral deposits, except veins of quartz or other rock in place. 30 U.S.C.A. § 35.

Placer claim. A mining claim located on the public domain for the purpose of placer mining, that is, ground within the defined boundaries which contains mineral in its earth, sand, or gravel; ground which includes valuable deposits not “in place,” that is, not fixed in rock, or which are in a loose state. U. S. v. Iron Silver Min. Co., 128 U.S. 673, 9 S.Ct. 195, 32 L.Ed. 571; Clipper Min. Co. v. Eli Min. Co., 194 U.S. 220, 24 S.Ct. 632, 48 L.Ed. 944.

Placer location. A placer claim located and occupied on the public domain.

Place where. A phrase used in the older reports, being a literal translation of locus in quo (q.v.).

Placit /plēsət/. See Placitum.

Placitum /plēsətəm/. Decree; determination.

Placita /plēsətə/. See Placitum.

Placitabile /plēsətəbəli/. In old English law, pleadable.

Placita communia /plēsətə komyúəniə/. Common pleas. All civil actions between subject and subject.

Placita corona /plēsətə korónə/. Pleas of the crown. All trials for crimes and misdemeanors, wherein the king is plaintiff, on behalf of the people.

Placita de transgressione contra pacem regis, in regno Angliae vi et armis facta, secundum legem et consuetudinem Angliae sine brevi regis placitari non debent /plēsətə dī trænzgrəshəniənən kɔntrə pəˈsəm rəjəs, in rɛˈɡənəʊ æŋˈɡəliə və ə ˈrɑːmz fəkta, ˈsɛkəndəm ˈlɛgəm ðə ˈkɒnsjuːtədənəm æŋˈɡəliə sənəi bɹərvɔi rəjəs pləˈsetərən nən ˈdɛbənt/ /plezətə dɪ trənsɡrəʃənən kəntrə pəˈsəm rɪˈdʒɪz, ɪn rɛˈɡənəʊ æŋˈɡəliə vɪ ə ˈɑːrmz fɛkta, sɛkəndəm ˈlɛɡəm ðə ˈkɒnsjuːtədənəm æŋˈɡəliə sənəi bɹərvɔi rɪˈdʒɪs pləˈsetərən nən ˈdɛbənt/. Pleas of trespass against the peace of the king in the kingdom of England, made with force and arms, ought not, by the law and custom of England, to be pleaded without the king's writ.

Placita juris /plēsətə dʒərəs/. Pleas or rules of law; particular and positive learnings of laws; grounds and positive learnings received with the law and set down; as distinguished from maxims or the formulated conclusions of legal reason.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt /plēsətə nəˈɡətəvə dju ˌɛkˈstəm nən ˈfæʃ(ə)nt/. Two negative pleas do not form an issue.

Placitare /plēsətərə/. To plead.

Plactory /plēsətəri/. Relating to pleas or pleading.

Placitum /plēsətəm/. In civil law, an agreement of parties; that which is their pleasure to arrange between them.

An imperial ordinance or constitution; literally, the prince's pleasure.

A judicial decision; the judgment, decree, or sentence of a court.

In old English law, a public assembly at which the king presided, and which comprised men of all degrees, met for consultation about the great affairs of the kingdom.

A court; a judicial tribunal; a lord's court. Placita was the style or title of the courts at the beginning of the old * nisi prius* record.

A suit or cause in court; a judicial proceeding; a trial. Placitum were divided into placita corona (crown cases or pleas of the crown, i.e., criminal actions) and placita communia (common cases or common pleas, i.e., private civil actions).

A fine, mulct, or pecuniary punishment.

A pleading or plea. In this sense, the term was not confined to the defendant's answer to the declaration, but included all the pleadings in the cause, being nomen generalissimum.

In the old reports and abridgments, “Placitum” was the name of a paragraph or subdivision of a title or page where the point decided in a cause was set out separately. It is commonly abbreviated “pl.”

Placitum aliud personale, aliud reale, aliud mixtum /plēsətəm əliud pərəˈsərnəl, əliud rəˈeɪl, əliud ˈmɪkstəm/. Pleas [i.e., actions] are personal, real, and mixed.
Plagiarism /pleyprizsm/. The act of appropriating the literary composition of another, or parts or passages of his writings, or the ideas or language of the same, and passing them off as the product of one's own mind. If the material is protected by copyright, such act may constitute an offense of copyright infringement.

To be liable for plagiarism it is not necessary to exactly duplicate another's literary work, it being sufficient if unfair use of such work is made by lifting of substantial portion thereof, but even an exact counterpart of another's work does not constitute plagiarism if such counterpart was arrived at independently. O'Rourke v. RKO Radio Pictures, D.C.Mass., 44 F.Supp. 490, 492, 493.

See also Copyright; Fair use doctrine; Infringement.

Plagiarist /pleyjarast/, or plagiary /pleyjiyehriy/. One who publishes the thoughts and writings of another as his own.

Plagiarius /pleyjiyeryas/. Lat. In the civil law, a kidnapper.

Plagium /pleyjiyom/. Lat. In the civil law, kidnapping. The offense of enticing away and stealing men, children, and slaves. The persuading a slave to escape from his master, or the concealing or harboring him without the knowledge of his master.

Plaudeur /pleydsyr/. Fr. An obsolete term for an attorney who pleaded the cause of his client; an advocate.

Plain error rule. This rule that plain errors affecting substantial rights may be considered on motion for new trial or on appeal though not raised in trial court if manifest injustice or miscarriage of justice has resulted, is invoked on case to case basis, but there must be sound, substantial manifestation, a strong, clear showing, that injustice or miscarriage of justice will result if the rule is not invoked. State v. Meiers, Mo., 412 S.W.2d 478, 480. For there to be "plain error" warranting reversal absent objection, there must be legal impropriety affecting defendant's substantial rights, sufficiently grievous to justify notice by reviewing court and to convince it that, of itself, error possessed clear capacity to bring about unjust result. State v. Harris, A.D., 174 A.2d 645, 646, 70 N.J.Super. 9. Doctrine which encompasses those errors which are obvious and highly prejudicial, which affect the substantial rights of the accused, and which, if uncorrected, would be an affront to the integrity and reputation of judicial proceedings. U. S. v. McCord, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 501 F.2d 334, 341.

Plain sight rule. See Plain view doctrine.

Plaint /pleynt/. In civil law, a complaint; a form of action, particularly one for setting aside a testament alleged to be invalid. This word is the English equivalent of the Latin "querela."

In English practice, a private memorial tendered in open court to the judge, wherein the party injured sets forth his cause of action. A proceeding in inferior courts by which an action is commenced without original writ. This mode of proceeding is commonly adopted in cases of replevin.

Plaintiff. A person who brings an action; the party who complains or sues in a civil action and is so named on the record. A person who seeks remedial relief for an injury to rights; it designates a complainant. City of Vancouver v. Jarvis, 76 Wash.2d 110, 455 P.2d 581, 593. The prosecution (i. e. State or United States) in a criminal case.

Plaintiff in error. In current nomenclature, "appellant" is the accepted word to indicate the party who seeks appellate review, and not plaintiff in error, as formerly.

Plain view doctrine. In search and seizure context, objects falling in plain view of officer who has the right to be in position to have that view are subject to seizure without a warrant and may be introduced in evidence. Harris v. U. S., 390 U.S. 234, 236, 88 S.Ct. 992, 993, 19 L.Ed.2d 1069. Under "plain view doctrine," warrantless seizure of incriminating evidence may be permitted when police are lawfully searching specified area if it can be established that police had prior justification for intrusion into area searched, that police inadvertently came across item seized, and that it was immediately apparent to the police that the item seized was evidence. Washington v. Chrisman, 455 U.S. 1, 5, 102 S.Ct. 812, 816, 70 L.Ed.2d 778. However, the plain view doctrine may not be used to extend a general exploratory search from one object to another until something incriminating at last emerges. Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 466, 91 S.Ct. 2022, 2038, 29 L.Ed.2d 564.

Plan. A delineation; a design; a draft, form or representation. The representation of anything drawn on a plane, as a map or chart; a scheme; a sketch. Also, a method of design or action, procedure, or arrangement for accomplishment of a particular act or object. Shainwald v. City of Portland, 153 Or. 167, 55 F.2d 1151, 1156. Method of putting into effect an intention or proposal.

Planned unit development (PUD). An area with a specified minimum contiguous acreage to be developed as a single entity according to a plan, containing one or more residential clusters or planned unit residential developments and one or more public, quasi-public, commercial or industrial areas in such ranges of ratios of nonresidential uses to residential uses as shall be specified in the zoning ordinance.

Area of land controlled by landowner to be developed as a single entity for a number of dwelling units, and commercial and industrial uses, if any, the plan for which does not correspond in lot size, bulk or type of dwelling or commercial or industrial use, density, lot coverage and required open space to the regulations established in any one or more districts, created from time to time, under the provisions of a municipal zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to the conventional zoning enabling act of the state.
Planning. In municipal law, term connotes systematic development of municipality to promote general welfare and prosperity of its people with greatest efficiency and economy, while zoning is concerned primarily with use of property. Forest Const. Co. v. Planning and Zoning Commission of Town of Bethany, 155 Conn. 169, 236 A.2d 917, 922.

Planning board or commission. The agency of a local government which recommends approval or disapproval of proposed building projects, real estate developments, and the like, in their jurisdiction. A higher authority such as the city council usually makes the final decision based on the recommendation of such board or commission.

Plantation. In English law, a colony; an original settlement in a new country.

In American law, a farm; a large cultivated estate. Term used chiefly in the southern states to refer to large farms on which cotton, tobacco, sugar, and like crops are grown.

Plat or plot. A map of a specific land area such as a town, section, or subdivision showing the location and boundaries of individual parcels of land subdivided into lots, with streets, alleys, easements, etc., usually drawn to a scale. See also Plat map.

Platform. A statement of principles and of policies adopted by a party convention as a basis for the party’s appeal for public support.

Plat map. A plat which gives legal descriptions of pieces of property by lot, street, and block numbers. A plat map is generally drawn after the property has been described by some other means, such as a Government Survey System. Once a plat map is set, legal descriptions are defined by referring to the given map, in a lot and block description.

Play-debt. Debt contracted by gaming.

Plea. In common law pleading (now obsolete with adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure) a pleading; any one in the series of pleadings. More particularly, the first pleading on the part of the defendant. In the strictest sense, the answer which the defendant in an action at law made to the plaintiff’s declaration, and in which he set up matter of fact as defense, thus distinguished from a demurrer, which interposed objections on grounds of law.

In equity pleading (now obsolete with adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure) a special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed or delayed or barred. A short statement, in response to a bill in equity, of facts which, if inserted in the bill, would render it demurrable.

Affirmative plea. In equity pleading, one which sets up a single fact, not appearing in the bill, or sets up a number of circumstances all tending to establish a single fact, which fact, if existing, destroys the complainant’s case. Such is obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Anomalous plea. One which is partly affirmative and partly negative. Obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Common pleas. In common law pleading, common causes or suits; civil actions brought and prosecuted between subjects or citizens, as distinguished from criminal cases. Such are obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Criminal pleas. The defendant’s response to a criminal charge (guilty, not guilty, or nolo contendere). If a defendant refuses to plead or if a defendant corporation fails to appear, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a). See also Affidavit plea; Arraignment; Guilty plea; Insanity plea; Nolo contendere; Not guilty; Plea bargaining; Standing mute.

Dilatory pleas. See Dilatory.

Double plea. In common law pleading, one having the technical fault of duplicity; one consisting of several distinct and independent matters alleged to the same point and requiring different answers. This does not present any problem under Rules of Civil Procedure which permits party to plead as many separate claims or defenses, regardless of consistency. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(e)(2).

False plea. A sham plea (q.v. infra).

Insanity plea. See Insanity.

Negative plea. In equity pleading, one which does not undertake to answer the various allegations of the bill, but specifically denies some particular fact or matter the existence of which is essential to entitle the complainant to any relief. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Denial.

Peremptory pleas. In common law pleading, “pleas in bar” are so termed in contradistinction to that class of pleas called “dilatory pleas.” The former, viz., peremptory pleas, are usually pleaded to the merits of the action, with the view of raising a material issue between the parties; while the latter class, viz., dilatory pleas, are generally pleaded with a view of retarding the plaintiff’s proceedings, and not for the purpose of raising an issue upon which the parties may go to trial and settle the point in dispute. Peremptory pleas are also called “pleas in bar,” while dilatory pleas are said to be in abatement only. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea agreements. See Plea bargaining.

Plea in abatement. In common law pleading, a plea which, without disputing merits of plaintiff’s claim, objects to place, mode, or time of asserting it. It allows plaintiff to renew suit in another place or form, or at another time, and does not assume to answer action on its merits, or deny existence of particular cause of action on which plaintiff relies. A plea in abatement sets forth facts extrinsic to merits which affect only manner in which action is framed or circumstances under which it is sought to be prosecuted, and does not destroy the right of action but merely suspends or postpones its Plea agreement. See Plea bargaining.

Plea agreement. See Plea bargaining.

Plea in bar. A plea which goes to bar the plaintiff's action; that is, to defeat it absolutely and entirely. A plea in bar sets forth matters which per se destroy right of action and bar its prosecution absolutely, such as bar of statute of limitations or constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination. U. S. v. Brodson, C.A.Wis., 234 F.2d 97, 99. A plea in bar is one that denies a plaintiff's right to maintain the action and which, if established, will destroy the action. Gillikin v. Gillikin, 248 N.C. 710, 104 S.E.2d 861, 862.

Plea in discharge. In common law pleading, one which admits that the plaintiff had a cause of action, but shows that it was discharged by some subsequent or collateral matter, as, payment or accord and satisfaction. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Plea of guilty. A confession of guilt in open court. See also Criminal pleas, above, and Guilty plea.

Plea of nolo contendere /ploy ov nólow kanténdari/. See Nolo contendere.

Plea of release. In common law pleading, one which admits the cause of action, but sets forth a release subsequently executed by the party authorized to release the claim. Abolished by Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Plea of guilty. A confession of guilt in open court. See also Criminal pleas, above, and Guilty plea.

Plea of nolo contendere /ploy ov nólow kanténdari/. See Nolo contendere.

Plea of release. In common law pleading, one which admits the cause of action, but sets forth a release subsequently executed by the party authorized to release the claim. Abolished by Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Sham plea. A false plea; a plea of false or fictitious matter, subtly drawn so as to entrap an opponent, or create delay. A vexatious or false defense, resorted to under the old system of pleading for purposes of delay and annoyance. Such a plea may be ordered stricken on motion under Rules of Civil P. 12(b).

Special plea. In common law pleading, a special kind of plea in bar, distinguished by this name from the general issue, and consisting usually of some new affirmative matter, though it may also be in the form of a traverse or denial. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Special plea in bar. In common law pleading, one which advances new matter. It differs from the general, in this: that the latter denies some material allegation, but never advances new matter. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea bargaining. The process whereby the accused and the prosecutor in a criminal case work out a mutually satisfactory disposition of the case subject to court approval. It usually involves the defendant's pleading guilty to a lesser offense or to only one or some of the counts of a multi-count indictment in return for a lighter sentence than that possible for the graver charge. Plea bargaining procedures in the federal courts are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(e).

Plead. To make, deliver, or file any pleading; to conduct the pleadings in a cause. To interpose any pleading in a civil action. More particularly, to deliver in a formal manner the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's declaration, complaint or to the indictment, as the case may be. See Pleadings.

Plead. To make, deliver, or file any pleading; to conduct the pleadings in a cause. To interpose any pleading in a civil action. More particularly, to deliver in a formal manner the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's declaration, complaint or to the indictment, as the case may be. See Pleadings.

Pleadr. A person whose business it was to draw pleadings. Formerly, when pleading at common law was a highly technical and difficult art, there was a class of men known as "special pleaders not at the bar," who held a position intermediate between counsel and attorneys. In current usage, the pleader is the party asserting a particular pleading.

Pleadings. The formal allegations by the parties to a lawsuit of their respective claims and defenses, with the intended purpose being to provide notice of what is to be expected at trial.

Rules or Codes of Civil Procedure. Unlike the rigid technical system of common law pleading, pleadings under federal and state rules or codes of civil procedure have a far more limited function, with determination and narrowing of facts and issues being left to discovery devices and pre-trial conferences. In addition, the rules and codes permit liberal amendment and supplementation of pleadings.

Pleading of judgment. The process performed by the parties to a suit or action, in alternately presenting written statements of their contention, each responsive to that which precedes, and each serving to narrow the field of controversy, until there evolves a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other, called the "issue," upon which they then go to trial.

The individual allegations of the respective parties to an action at common law proceeded from them alternately in the order and under the following distinctive names: The plaintiff's declaration, the defendant's plea, the plaintiff's replication, the defendant's rejoinder, the plaintiff's surrejoinder, the defendant's rebutter, the plaintiff's surrebutter; after which they have no distinctive names.

Pleading Fifth Amendment. See Self-incrimination.

Plead over. To pass over, or omit to notice, a material allegation in the last pleading of the opposite party; to pass by a defect in the pleading of the other party without taking advantage of it. In another sense, to plead the general issue, after one has interposed a demurrer or special plea which has been dismissed by a judgment of respondent outster. Obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea in abatement. See Plea (Plea in abatement).

Plea negotiations. See Plea bargaining.

Plea of privilege. In Texas, objection to venue is raised by a plea of privilege to be sued in the county of one's residence, and such plea if filed in due time, must be sustained unless the case falls within one of the exceptions in the venue statute.

Plebeity /plabiyotiy/ or plebitly /plébiatly/. The common or meaner sort of people; the plebeians.

Plebeys /plebeyows/. In Spanish law, commons; those who exercise any trade, or who cultivate the soil.

Plebiscite /plebtow/. In Spanish law, the pleadings in a cause. In time it became purely a formal matter, because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced for a false claim, and the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe became the universal pledges, or they might be omitted altogether; or inserted at any time before judgment; they are now omitted.

Pledgor /pléjar/. The party delivering goods to pledge; the party pledging.

Plegel de retorno habendo /pléjiyay diy rátornof habéndow/. In common law, pledges to return to the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin.

Plegis acquietandis /pléjiyay skáwyztándas/. A writ that anciently lay for a surety against him for whom he was surety, if he paid not the money at the day.

Pleito /pléytow/. In Spanish law, the pleadings in a cause.

Plena etcelerisjustitiasfiat partibus /pliynò étsebès jástish(i)y à Fayat pártobas/. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties.

Plenaforisactura/pliynò fórásaktivyúra/. A forfeiture of all that one possesses.

Plena probatio /pliynò prowbéysh(i)yow/. In the civil law, a term used to signify full proof (that is, proof by two witnesses), in contradistinction to semi-plena probatio, which is only a presumption.

Plenarty /pliynárty/pléñ/. In old English law, fullness; a state of being full. A term applied to a benefice when full, or possessed by an incumbent. The opposite state to a vacation, or vacancy.

Plenary action. A complete and formal hearing or trial on the merits as distinguished from a summary hearing which is commonly less strict and more informal. May v. Henderson, 268 U.S. 111, 45 S.Ct. 456, 69 L.Ed. 870.

Plenary confession. A full and complete confession. An admission or confession, whether in civil or criminal law, is said to be "plenary" when it is, if believed, conclusive against the person making it.

Plenary jurisdiction. Full and complete jurisdiction or power of a court over the subject matter as well as the parties to a controversy. See also Jurisdiction.

Plenary powers. Authority and power as broad as is required in a given case.

Plenary proceedings. See Plenary action.

Plenary session. A meeting of all members of a deliberative body, as distinguished from a meeting of a committee of the same body.

Plenary suit. One that proceeds on formal pleadings. Central Republic Bank and Trust Co. v. Caldwell, C.C.A. Mo., 58 F.2d 721. See also Plenary action.

Plene /pliyniy/. Lat. Completely; fully; sufficiently.

Plene administravit /pliyniy administréyvat/. A plea by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered all the assets that have come to his hands, and that no assets remain out of which the plaintiff's claim could be satisfied.

Plene administravit präter /pliyniy administraéyvat prier/. A plea by an executor or administrator that he has "fully administered" all the assets that have come to his hands, "except" assets to a certain amount, which are not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff.

Plene computavit /pliyniy kommeréyvat/. He has fully accounted. A plea in an action of account render, alleging that the defendant has fully accounted.

Pleni potentiairy /plénpoténshiyariy/. One who has full power to do a thing; a person fully commissioned to act for another. A term applied in international law to ministers and envoys of the second rank of public ministers.

Plenum dominium /pliynam domániyam/. Lat. In the civil law, full ownership; the property in a thing united with the usufruct.

Plevin /plévon/. A warrant, or assurance.

Plight. In old English law, an estate, with the habit and quality of the land; extending to a rent charge and to a possibility of dower.

Plot. See Plat or plot.

Plottage. A term used in appraising land values and particularly in eminent domain proceedings to designate the additional value given to city lots by the fact that they are contiguous, which enables the owner to utilize them as large blocks of land. Plottage is a recognized concept in the field of eminent domain, referring to an added increment of value which may accrue to two or more vacant and unimproved contiguous parcels of land held in one ownership because of their potentially enhanced marketability by reason of their greater use adaptability as a single unit; simplistically stated, an assemblage of vacant and unimproved contiguous parcels held in one ownership may have a greater value as a whole than the sum of their values as separate constituent parcels and, hence, plottage value may be considered in determining fair market value. State ex rel. State Highway Commission of Missouri v. Armaco Motors, Inc., Mo.App., 552 S.W.2d 360, 364.

Plow back. To retain earnings for continued investment in the business. To reinvest the earnings and profits into the business instead of paying them out as dividends or withdrawals by partners or proprietor.

Plunder, n. To pillage or loot. To take property from persons or places by open force, and this may be in course of a war, or by unlawful hostility, as in the case of pirates or robbers. The term is also used to express the idea of taking property from a person or place, without just right, but not expressing the nature or quality of the wrong done.

Plunder, n. Personal property belonging to an enemy, captured and appropriated on land; booty. Also the act of seizing such property. See Booty; Prize.

Plunderage. In maritime law, the embezzlement of goods on board of a ship is so called.

Plural. Containing more than one; consisting of or designating two or more.

Plurality /plúráldiý/. The excess of the votes cast for one candidate over those cast for any other. Where there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined, or, in other words, more than one-half of the total number of votes cast.

A plurality normally refers to the state of being numerous; a large number or quantity; while it may perhaps mean two, it embraces any number in excess of two. Technograph Printed Circuits, Limited v. Bendix Aviation Corp., D.C.Md., 218 F.Supp. 1, 52.

An opinion of an appellate court in which more justices join than in any concurring opinion (though not a majority of the court) is a plurality opinion as distinguished from a majority opinion in which a larger number of the justices on the panel join than not.

Plural marriage. See Marriage; Polygamy.

Pluries fi. fa. /pl(y)rúriyiz fá(y)oray fé(shiysa)/. A writ issued where other commands of the court have proved... ineffectual. Process that issues in the third instance, after the first and the alias have been ineffectual.

Pluris writs of execution. Third and subsequent writs of execution issued to enforce a judgment that was not satisfied by the sheriff acting under the original and alias writs of execution.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. In Roman law, a phrase. Examples hurt more than crimes.

Plus peccat author quam actor. In Roman law, a phrase denoting the offense of claiming more than was just in one's pleadings. Prior to Justinian's time, this offense was in general fatal to the action; but, under the legislation of the emperors Zeno and Justinian, the offense (if re, loco, or causa) exposed the party to the payment of three times the damage, if any, sustained by the other side, and (if tempore) obliged him to postpone his action for double the time, and to pay the costs of his first action before commencing a second.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis quam auriti decern. Several eyes see more than one.

P.M. An abbreviation for "postmaster," also for "post-meridiem," afternoon.

P.O. An abbreviation of "public officer," also of "post-office."

Poach. To steal or destroy game on another's land. See Poaching.

Poaching. In criminal law, the unlawful entry upon land for the purpose of taking or destroying fish or game. The illegal taking or killing of fish or game.

Pocket veto. The act of the President in retaining a legislative bill without approving or rejecting it at the end of the legislative session and, in effect, vetoing it by such inactivity. See U.S. Constitution, Art. I, Sec. 7, Cl. 2.

P.O.D. account. An account payable on request to one person during lifetime and on his death to one or more P.O.D. payees, or to one or more persons during their lifetimes and on the death of all of them to one or more P.O.D. payees. Uniform Probate Code, § 6–101(11).

Poena. Lat. Punishment; a penalty.

Poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

Poena corporalis. Corporal punishment.

Poena potius molliendae quam exasperandae sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated.

Poena sint restringenda. Punishments should be restrained.

Poena suos tenere debet actores et non alios. The heir ought not to be bound by a penalty arising out of the wrongful act of the deceased.

Poenalis. In the civil law, penal; imposing a penalty; claiming or enforcing a penalty. Actions poenales, penal actions.

Poena non potest, culpa perennis erit. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual.

Poena tolli potest, culpa perennis erit. The punishment can be removed, but the crime remains.

Poenitentia. Lat. In the civil law, repentance; reconsideration; changing one's mind; drawing back from an agreement already made, or rescinding it.

Locus poenitentiae. Room or place for repentance or reconsideration; an opportunity to withdraw from a negotiation before finally concluding the contract or agreement. Also, in criminal law, an opportunity afforded by the circumstances to a person who has formed an intention to kill or to commit another crime, giving him a chance to reconsider and relinquish his purpose.

Point. A distinct proposition or question of law arising or propounded in a case. See also Issue.

In the case of shares of stock, a point means $1. In the case of bonds a point means $10, since a bond is quoted as a percentage of $1,000. In the case of market averages, the word point means merely that and no more. If, for example, the Dow-Jones Industrial Average rises from 870.25 to 871.25, it has risen a point. A point in this average, however, is not equivalent to $1.
Real estate financing. The word "point" as used in home mortgage finance industry denotes a fee or charge equal to one percent of principal amount of loan which is collected by lender at time the loan is made. It is a fee or charge which is collected only once, at inception of loan, and is in addition to constant long-term stated interest rate on face of loan. B. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 585, 597.

Point reserved. When, in the progress of the trial of a cause, an important or difficult point of law is presented to the court, and the court is not certain of the decision that should be given, it may reserve the point, that is, decide it provisionally as it is asked by the party, but reserve its more mature consideration for the hearing on a motion for a new trial, when, if it shall appear that the first ruling was wrong, the verdict will be set aside. The point thus treated is technically called a "point reserved."

Points. See Point.

Points of law. Those distinct propositions of law on which each side relies in a lawsuit, and on which the court bases its decision (opinion) on.

Point system. The "point system", with respect to suspension of license of operator of a motor vehicle, automatically fixes penalty points following conviction of moving traffic violations and provides for mandatory suspension of the driver's license of a person who has accumulated a statutorially prescribed number of points within a year involved. Sturgill v. Beard, Ky., 303 S.W.2d 908, 909.

Poison. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life. A substance which, on being applied to the human body, internally or externally, is capable of destroying the action of the vital functions, or of placing the solids and fluids in such a state as to prevent the continuance of life.

Poisonous tree doctrine. Doctrine refers to an illegal arrest or search which leads officers to evidence seized in a proper manner that may be inadmissible because of the taint of the original illegality. Com. v. Spofford, 343 Mass. 703, 180 N.E.2d 673. Sometimes also referred to as "fruit of poisonous tree" doctrine (q.v.).

Poison pill. A defensive tactic used by a company that is a target of an unwanted takeover to make its shares or financial condition less attractive to an acquirer. For instance, a firm may issue a new series of preferred shares that give shareholders the right to compel their redemption at a premium price after a takeover. See also Lockup; Porcupine provisions; White knight.

Pole. A measure of length, equal to five yards and a half.

Police. Branch of the government which is charged with the preservation of public order and tranquility, the promotion of the public health, safety, and morals, and the prevention, detection, and punishment of crimes. See also Internal police; Peace (Peace officers); Sheriff.

Police court. The name of an inferior court in several of the states, which has jurisdiction over minor offenses and city ordinances, concurrent jurisdiction in certain matters with justices of the peace, and the powers of a committing magistrate in respect to more serious crimes, and, in some states, a limited jurisdiction for the trial of civil causes.

Police jury. In Louisiana, the governing bodies of the parishes, which are political subdivisions of the state, comparable to counties in other states. National Liberty Ins. Co. of America v. Police Jury of Natchitoches Parish, C.C.A., 96 F.2d 261, 262.

Police magistrate. A magistrate charged exclusively with the duties incident to the common-law office of a conservator or justice of the peace; the prefix "police" serving merely to distinguish them from justices having also civil jurisdiction.

Police magistrate. An inferior judicial officer having jurisdiction of minor criminal offenses, breaches of police regulations, and the like; so called to distinguish them from magistrates who have jurisdiction in civil cases also, as justices of the peace.

Police officer. One of the staff of persons employed in cities and towns to enforce the municipal laws and ordinances for preserving the peace, safety, and good order of the community. Also called "policeman" or "policewoman"; "patrolman" or "patrolwoman", or "peace officer". See also Peace (Peace officers).

Police power. An authority conferred by the American constitutional system in the Tenth Amendment, U.S. Const., upon the individual states, and, in turn, delegated to local governments, through which they are enabled to establish a special department of police; adopt such laws and regulations as tend to prevent the commission of fraud and crime, and secure generally the comfort, safety, morals, health, and prosperity of its citizens by preserving the public order, preventing a conflict of rights in the common intercourse of the citizens, and insuring to each an uninterrupted enjoyment of all the privileges conferred upon him or her by the general laws.

The power of the State to place restraints on the personal freedom and property rights of persons for the protection of the public safety, health, and morals or the promotion of the public convenience and general prosperity. The police power is subject to limitations of the federal and State constitutions, and especially to the requirement of due process. Police power is the exercise of the sovereign right of a government to promote order, safety, security, health, morals and general welfare within constitutional limits and is an essential attribute Policy. The general principles by which a government is guided in its management of public affairs, or the legislature in its measures.

A general term used to describe all contracts of insurance. See Policy of insurance.

This term, as applied to a law, ordinance, or rule of law, denotes its general purpose or tendency considered as directed to the welfare or prosperity of the state or community.

A species of "lottery" whereby the chance is determined by numbers; "numbers game" also being a lottery. People v. Hines, 258 App.Div. 466, 17 N.Y.S.2d 141, 142. Policy is a lottery or game of chance where bettors select numbers to bet on and place the bet with a policy writer. State v. Harris, Mo.App., 325 S.W.2d 352, 354. See Lottery.

Public policy. That principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good. The principles under which the freedom of contract or private dealings is restricted by law for the good of the community. The term "policy," as applied to a statute, regulation, rule of law, course of action, or the like, refers to its probable effect, tendency, or object, considered with reference to the social or political well-being of the state. Thus, certain classes of acts are said to be "against public policy," when the law refuses to enforce or recognize them, on the ground that they have a mischievous tendency, so as to be injurious to the interests of the state, apart from illegality or immorality.

Policyholder. The person who owns the policy of insurance whether he is the insured or not. In most states, any person with an insurable interest may be a policyholder.

Policy of insurance. An instrument in writing, by which one party (insurer), in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another (insured) against a contingent loss, by making him a payment in compensation, whenever the event shall happen by which the loss is to accrue. Contract whereby insurer, in return for premiums, engages, on happening of designated event, to pay certain sum as provided. In re O'Neill's Estate, 143 Misc. 69, 255 N.Y.S. 767, 771. The evidence delivered to the insured of the contract of the insurer, and ordinarily, of itself, constitutes complete evidence of the contract. United Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. McCrory, C.A. Neb., 414 F.2d 928, 932.

The written instrument in which a contract of insurance is set forth.

See also Face of policy; Floater policy; Homeowners policy; Master policy.

Assessable policy. A policy under which a policyholder may be held liable for losses of the insurance company beyond its reserves.

Blanket policy. A policy of fire insurance which contemplates that the risk is shifting, fluctuating, or varying, and is applied to a class of property rather than to any particular article or thing.

The term "specific" as applied in insurance phraseology is frequently used in contrast with "blanket insurance" and denotes coverage of a particular piece of property or property at a specific location, as contrasted with blanket insurance which covers the same and other property in several different locations.

Class of life insurance policies. Those policies issued in the same calendar year, upon the lives of persons of the same age, and on the same plan of insurance.

Endowment policy. A policy which agrees to pay to the insured, if living at the expiration of a certain period, a specified amount of money, and in the event of his death in the interim, agrees to pay the face amount of the policy to his designated beneficiary. Silen v. Silen, 44 Wash.2d 884, 271 P.2d 674, 676.

Extended policy. A policy which provides protection beyond the time when premiums are no longer paid.

Floater policy. A policy of fire insurance not applicable to any specific described goods, but to any and all goods which may at the time of the fire be in a certain building.

Incontestable policy. A policy which contains a provision to the effect that the company after the policy has been in force cannot contest, challenge or cancel the policy on the basis of statements made in the application. The period of contestability may be one, two or three years.

Interest policy. One where the assured has a real, substantial, and assignable interest in the thing insured; as opposed to a wager policy.

Master policy. In group life, medical, etc. insurance, the single policy under which the participants are covered. The individuals covered by the master policy receive a certificate indicating their participation.

Mixed policy. A policy of marine insurance in which not only the time is specified for which the risk is limited, but the voyage also is described by its local termini; as opposed to policies of insurance for a particular voyage, without any limits as to time, and also to purely time policies, in which there is no designation of local termini at all.

Open policy. One in which the value of the subject insured is not fixed or agreed upon in the policy as between the assured and the underwriter, but is left to be estimated in case of loss. The term is opposed to "valued policy," in which the value of the subject insured is fixed for the purpose of the insurance, and expressed on the face of the policy. But this term is also sometimes used to describe a policy in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time.
POLICY OF INSURANCE

Paid-up policy. In life insurance, a policy on which no further payments are to be made in the way of annual premiums.

Participating policy. A policy commonly found in mutual insurance companies and in some stock companies in which the insured participates in the profits by receiving dividends or rebates from future premiums.

Policy loan. An advancement on life policy without a personal obligation on the part of the policyholder as to repayment. Board of Assessors of the Parish of Orleans v. New York Life Ins. Co., 216 U.S. 517, 30 S.Ct. 385, 54 L.Ed. 597. A loan made by an insurance company which takes the policy’s cash reserve as security for the loan.

Policy reserves. Funds held by insurance company specifically to meet its policy obligations.

Term policy. In life insurance, a policy which gives protection for a specified period of time but no cash or reserve value is created in the policy. See insurance.

Time policy. In fire insurance, one made for a defined and limited time, as, one year. In marine insurance, one made for a particular period of time, irrespective of the voyage or voyages upon which the vessel may be engaged during that period.

Valued policy. One in which the value of the thing insured, and also the amount to be paid thereon in the event of loss, is settled by agreement between the parties and inserted in the policy.

Voyage policy. A policy of marine insurance effected for a particular voyage or voyages of the vessel, and not otherwise limited as to time.

Wager policy. An insurance upon a subject-matter in which the party assured has no real, valuable, or insurable interest. A mere wager policy is that in which the party assured has no interest in the thing assured, and could sustain no possible loss by the event insured against, if he had not made such wager. Such policies are generally illegal, or not otherwise written, because the insured does not have an insurable interest.

Policy value. The amount of cash available to the policyholder on the surrender or cancellation of the insurance policy.

Policy year. In insurance, the year which commences with the date of the commencement or anniversary of the policy.

Politiz legibus non leges politiis adaptandae /palishiyiyli lyjabas non liyjyiyiy palishiyas âdaptândiyi/. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics.

Political. Pertaining or relating to the policy or the administration of government, state or national. Pertaining to, or incidental to, the exercise of the functions vested in those charged with the conduct of government; relating to the management of affairs of state, as political theories; or pertaining to exercise of rights and privileges or the influence by which individuals of a state seek to determine or control its public policy; having to do with organization or action of individuals, parties, or interests that seek to control appointment or action of those who manage affairs of a state. State ex rel. Maley v. Civic Action Committee, 238 Iowa 851, 28 N.W.2d 467, 470.

Political action committees. See PAC.

Political corporation. A public or municipal corporation; one created for political purposes, and having for its object the administration of governmental powers of a subordinate or local nature.

Political crime. In general, any crime directly against the government; e.g. treason; sedition. It includes any violent political disturbance without reference to a specific crime. See also Political offenses.

Political law. That branch of jurisprudence which treats of the science of politics, or the organization and administration of government. More commonly called “Political science.”

Political liberty. See Liberty.

Political offenses. As a designation of a class of crimes usually excepted from extradition treaties, this term denotes crimes which are incidental to and form a part of political disturbances; but it might also be understood to include offenses consisting in an attack upon the political order of things established in the country where committed, and even to include offenses committed to obtain any political object. Under extradition treaties is an offense committed in the course of and incidental to a violent political disturbance, such as war, revolution and rebellion; an offense is not of a political character simply because it was politically motivated. Escobedo v. U.S., C.A.Fla., 623 F.2d 1098, 1104. See also Political crime.

Political office. See Office.

Political party. An association of individuals whose primary purposes are to promote or accomplish elections or appointments to public offices, positions, or jobs. State ex rel. Corrigan v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., 169 Ohio St. 42, 157 N.E.2d 331, 333. A committee, association, or organization which accepts contributions or makes expenditures for the purpose of influencing or attempting to influence the election of presidential or vice presidential electors or of any individual whose name is presented for election to any federal, state, or local elective public office, whether or not such individual is elected. Cal.Rev. & Tax Code § 24434(b)(1)(C).

Political questions. Questions of which courts will refuse to take cognizance, or to decide, on account of their purely political character, or because their determination would involve an encroachment upon the executive or legislative powers.

“Political question doctrine” holds that certain issues should not be decided by courts because their resolution is committed to another branch of government and/or because those issues are not capable, for one reason or
A division of the state made by political subdivision.

Political trial. Term loosely applied to trials in which the parties represent fundamentally different political convictions and in which the parties or one of them attempts to litigate their political beliefs.

Politics. The science of government; the art or practice of administering public affairs.

Polity. The form of government; civil constitution.

Polity approach. The "polity approach" under which a polity approach.

Poll, n. A head; an individual person; a register of persons. In the law of elections, a list or register of heads or individuals who may vote in an election; the aggregate of those who actually cast their votes at the election, excluding those who stay away.

Polling the jury. A practice whereby the jurors are asked individually whether they assented, and still absent, to the verdict. State v. Linder, 276 S.C. 304, 278 S.E.2d 335, 337. To poll a jury is to call the names of the persons who compose a jury and require each juror to declare what his verdict is before it is recorded. This may be accomplished by questioning them individually or by ascertaining fact of unanimous concurrence by general question, and once concurrence has been determined, the polling is at an end. Fortenberry v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.A.Tenn., 459 F.2d 114, 115.

Polls. The place where electors cast in their votes.

Poll-tax. A capitation tax; a tax of a specific sum levied upon each person within the jurisdiction of the taxing power and within a certain class (as, all males of a certain age, etc.) without reference to his property or lack of it. A tax upon the privilege of being; it is a sum levied upon persons without regard to property, occupation, income or ability to pay. Tiefel v. Gilligan, Ohio Com.Pl., 41 Ohio Misc. 76, 322 N.E.2d 916, 920.

Poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections are prohibited by the 24th Amendment and as to state elections such were held to be unconstitutional in Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 86 S.Ct. 1079, 16 L.Ed.2d 169.

Po. lo. suo. An old abbreviation for the words "ponit loco suo" (puts in his place), used in warrants of attorney.

Pollute. To corrupt or defile. The contamination of soil, air and water by noxious substances and noises. See also Pollution.

Pollution. Contamination of the environment by a variety of sources including but not limited to hazardous substances, organic wastes and toxic chemicals. Pollution is legally controlled and enforced through various federal and state laws and agencies, including common law nuisance laws, e.g., Boomer v. Atlantic Cement Co., 26 N.Y.2d 219, 309 N.Y.S.2d 312, 257 N.E.2d 870. Examples of federal laws are the Clean Water Act, 33 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq., and the Clean Air Act, 31 U.S.C. § 7401 et seq. See also Environmental Protection Agency; Hazardous substance; Superfund; Toxic waste.

Polyandry /poliyändriy/. The civil condition of having more husbands than one to the same woman; a social order permitting plurality of husbands.

Polygamy est plurium simul virorum uxorumque conubium /poligemiy3 est pliy{kir}iy3 s{y}y{m}al var{y}r{r}am ık{y}arımviy kan(y)uwbiy3m/. Polygamy is the marriage with many husbands or wives at one time.

Polygamy /poligamiy/. The offense of having several wives or husbands at the same time, or more than one wife or husband at the same time. Bigamy literally means a second marriage distinguished from a third or other; while polygamy means many marriages,—implies more than two. Polygamy is a crime in all states.

A person is guilty of polygamy, a felony of the third degree, if he marries or cohabits with more than one spouse at a time in purported exercise of the right of plural marriage. The offense is a continuing one until all cohabitation and claim of marriage with more than one spouse terminates. This section does not apply to parties to a polygamous marriage, lawful in the country of which they are residents or nationals, while they are in transit through or temporarily visiting this State. Model Penal Code, § 230.1.
Polygarchy /pɔləgɑːrki/. A term sometimes used to denote a government of many or several; a government where the sovereignty is shared by several persons; a collegiate or divided executive.

Polygraph. Also known as a lie detector, it is an electro-mechanical instrument used to determine whether an examinee is truthfully answering questions. It simultaneously measures and records certain physiological changes in the human body which it is believed are involuntarily caused by an examinee’s conscious attempt to deceive an interrogator. U.S. v. DeBetham, D.C.Cal., 486 F.Supp. 1377, 1384. Though historically inadmissible on grounds of unreliability, polygraph evidence is increasingly being admitted if, for example, the parties stipulate in advance to its admission or it is being offered to impeach or corroborate witness testimony. U.S. v. Piccinonna, C.A.Fla., 885 F.2d 1529.

With certain exceptions, employers engaged in commerce are statutorily prohibited from requiring employees or prospective employees to submit to a polygraph test. Employee Polygraph Protection Act of 1988, 29 U.S.C.A. § 2001 et seq. See also Lie detector.

Polyopsony. The condition of a market characterized by the fewness of buyers. The fewness has an effect on the price of the materials or products.

Polypoly. A market condition characterized by the fewness of sellers where this has a direct effect on prices.

Pond. A body of stagnant water without an outlet, larger than a puddle and smaller than a lake; or a like body of water with a small outlet.

Great ponds. In Maine and Massachusetts, natural ponds having a superficial area of more than ten acres, and not appropriated by the proprietors to their private use prior to a certain date.

Private pond. A body of water wholly on the lands of a single owner, or of a single group of joint owners or tenants in common, which did not have any such connection with any public waters that fish could pass from one to the other. At common law, if pond was so connected with public waters that at time of high water, fish could go in and out, it was not “private pond” from the words of the writ, “pone per vadium et salvos plegios,” “put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant.”

Ponendis in assisis /ponends in sasýyuzs/. An old writ directing a sheriff to impanel a jury for an assise or real action.

Ponendum in ballium /ponendam in belyiam/. An old writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable.

Ponendum sigillum ad exceptionem /ponendam sázýém að aksepshiyónam/. A writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff’s evidence, verdict, or other proceedings, before them.

Pone per vadium /póniý pár vèdyiýam/. In English practice, an obeloate writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff’s suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute. It was so called from the words of the writ, “pone per vadium et salvos plegios,” “put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant.”

Ponit se super patriam /pownat siy s(y)uwpwar pástri-yam/. Lat. He puts himself upon the country. The defendant’s plea of not guilty in a criminal action was recorded, in old English practice, in these words, or in the abbreviated form “po. se.”

Pool. A combination of persons or corporations engaged in the same business, or for the purpose of engaging in a particular business or commercial or speculative venture, where all contribute to a common fund, or place their holdings of a given stock or other security in the hands and control of a managing member or committee, with the object of eliminating competition as between the several members of the pool, or of establishing a monopoly or controlling prices or rates by the weight and power of their combined capital, or of raising or depressing prices on the stock market, or simply with a view to the successful conduct of an enterprise too great for the capital of any member individually, and on an agreement for the division of profits or losses among the members, either equally or pro rata. Also, a similar combination not embracing the idea of a pooled or contributed capital, but simply the elimination of destructive competition between the members by an agreement to share or divide the profits of a given business or venture, as, for example, a contract between two or more competing railroads to abstain from “rate wars” and (usually) to maintain fixed rates, and to divide their earnings from the transportation of freight in fixed proportions. Such type pooling arrangements are illegal under the Sherman Antitrust Act. See also Cartel; Trust.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur /pòndarántar tèstiyz nôn n(y)ìwmaréntar/. Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

Pondus /pónda/. In old English law, poundage; i.e., a duty paid to the crown according to the weight of merchandise.

Pondus regis /póndas rýyas/. The king’s weight; the standard weight appointed by the king.

Pone /póniý/. In old English practice, an original writ formerly used for the purpose of removing suits from the court-baron or county court into the superior courts of common law. It was also the proper writ to remove all suits which were before the sheriff by writ of justice. But this writ is now in disuse, the writ of certiorari being the ordinary process by which at the present day a cause is removed from a county court into any superior court.

Pondus /póndas rýyas/. The king’s weight; the standard weight appointed by the king.
In various methods of gambling, a “pool” is a sum of money made up of the stakes contributed by various persons, the whole of which is then wagered as a stake on the event of a race, game, or other contest, and the winnings (if any) are divided among the contributors to the pool pro rata. Or it is a sum similarly made up by the contributions of several persons, each of whom then makes his guess or prediction as to the event of a future contest or hazard, the successful bettor taking the entire pool. Such pools are distinct from the practice of bookmaking. U. S. v. Berent, C.A.Nev., 523 F.2d 1360, 1361.

A body of standing water, without a current or issue, accumulated in a natural basin or depression in the earth, and not artificially formed. See Pond.

Pooling agreement. A contractual arrangement among shareholders relating to the voting of their shares. So long as such agreement is limited to voting as shareholders, it is enforceable.

Pooling of interests. A method of accounting for mergers in which the acquired company’s assets are recorded on the acquiring company’s books at their cost when originally acquired. No goodwill account is created under the pooling method.

Poor debtors’ oath. See Pauper’s oath; Poverty affidavit.

Pope. The bishop of Rome, and supreme head of the Roman Catholic Church.

Popular sense. In reference to the construction of a statute, this term means that sense which people conversant with the subject-matter with which the statute is dealing would attribute to it.

Populiscitum /pówpyōlasəytəm/. Lat. In Roman law, a law enacted by the people; a law passed by an assembly of the Roman people, in the comitia centuriata, on the motion of a senator; differing from a plebisctum, in that the latter was always proposed by one of the tribunes.

Populus /půpələs/. Lat. In Roman law, the people; the whole body of Roman citizens, including as well the patricians as the plebeians.

Porción /pɔrˈ锡on/. In Spanish law, a part or portion; a lot or parcel; an allotment of land.

Porcupine provisions. Defensive provisions in articles of incorporation or bylaws designed to make unwanted takeover attempts impossible or impractical without the consent of the target’s management. See also Lockup; Poison pill; White knight.

Pornographic. That which is of or pertaining to obscene literature; obscene; licentious. Material is pornographic or obscene if the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to the prurient interest and if it depicts in a patently offensive way sexual conduct and if the work taken as a whole lacks serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24–25, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 419. See also Dominant theme; Obscene; Pandering of obscenity; Prurient interest.

Pornography. See Pornographic.

Port. A place for the loading and unloading of the cargoes of vessels, and the collection of duties or customs upon imports and exports. A place, on the seacoast, great lakes, or on a river, where ships stop for the purpose of loading and unloading cargo, or for purpose of taking on or letting off passengers, from whence they depart, and where they finish their voyage. A port is a place intended for loading or unloading goods; hence includes the natural shelter surrounding water, as also sheltered water produced by artificial jetties, etc. The Baldhill, C.C.A.N.Y., 42 F.2d 123, 125.

Foreign port. One exclusively within the jurisdiction of a foreign nation, hence one without the United States. But the term is also applied to a port in any state other than the state where the vessel belongs or her owner resides. Port other than home port.

Free port. See that title.

Home port. The port at which a vessel is registered or enrolled or where the owner resides.

Port charges, dues, or tolls. Pecuniary exactions upon vessels availing themselves of the commercial conveniences and privileges of a port. Christianssand Shipping Co. v. Marshall, D.C.Pa., 22 F.2d 192, 194.

Port of call. Port at which ships usually stop on a route or voyage.

Port of delivery. The port which is to be the terminus of any particular voyage, and where the vessel is to unload or deliver her cargo, as distinguished from any port at which she may touch, during the voyage, for other purposes.

Port of departure. The port from which vessel clears and departs upon start of voyage. As used in the United States statutes requiring a ship to procure a bill of health from the consular officer at the place of departure, is not the last port at which the ship stops while bound for the United States, but the port from which she cleared.

Port of destination. The port at which a voyage is to end. In maritime law and marine insurance, the term includes both ports which constitute the termini of the voyage; the home port and the foreign port to which the vessel is consigned as well as any usual stopping places for the receipt or discharge of cargo.

Port of discharge. In a policy of marine insurance, means the place where the substantial part of the cargo is discharged, although there is an intent to complete the discharge at another basin.

Port of entry. One of the ports designated by law, at which a custom-house or revenue office is established for the execution of the laws imposing duties on vessels and importations of goods. Port where immigrants arrive. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1221.

Port-reeve, or port-warden. An officer maintained in some ports to oversee the administration of the local regulations; a sort of harbor-master.
Port risk insurance. In marine insurance, a risk upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has taken her departure upon another voyage. See also Port risk insurance.

Port toll. The toll paid for bringing goods into a port.

Portal-to-Portal Act. Federal statute regulating pay for non-productive time required of employee to reach place of employment and to return in some instances.

Port authority. Governmental agency authorized by a state or the federal government to regulate and plan traffic through a port, and also commonly charged with responsibility of encouraging or securing businesses to locate on land or areas served by port. Sometimes such authorities also have responsibility over establishment and maintenance of airports, bridges, tollways, and surface transportation in metropolitan area of port; e.g. New York Port Authority, which is operated jointly by New York and New Jersey under an interstate compact.

Portfolio. In investments, the collective term for all the securities (which may consist of various types) held by one person or institution.

Portfolio income. Income from interest, dividends, rentals, royalties, capital gains, or other investment sources. Portfolio income is not considered passive income, therefore net passive losses cannot be used to offset net portfolio income. See also Passive investment income; Passive loss.

Portio legitima /pórsi(i)yow bjidama/. Lat. In the civil law, the birthright portion; that portion of an inheritance to which a given heir is entitled, and of which he cannot be deprived by the will of the decedent, without special cause, by virtue merely of his relationship to the testator.

Portion. An allotted part; a share, a parcel; a division in a distribution; a share of an estate or the like, received by gift or inheritance. Lecompte v. Davis' Ex'r, 285 Ky. 433, 148 S.W.2d 292, 295. See Per capita; Per stirpes.

Portion disponibile. Fr. In French law, that part of a man's estate which he may bequeath to other persons than his natural heirs. A parent leaving one legitimate child may dispose of one-half only of his property; one leaving two, one-third only; and one leaving three or more, one-fourth only; and it matters not whether the disposition is inter vivos or by will.

Portoria /portóriya/. In the civil law, duties paid in ports on merchandise. Taxes levied in old times at city gates. Tolls for passing over bridges.

Port risk insurance. In contradistinction to voyage or time insurance, means insurance upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has taken her departure on another voyage. Bristol S.S. Corp. v. London Assur., D.C.N.Y., 404 F.Supp. 749, 752.

Portsale. In old English law, an auction; a public sale of goods to the highest bidder; also a sale of fish as soon as it is brought into the haven.

Portus est locus in quo exportantur ewrimportantur mercies /pórtas ést lókas in kwów éksportàntar éd importàntar már'sí/./. A port is a place where goods are exported or imported.

Position. Extent of person's investment in a particular security or market.

Positive. Laid down, enacted, or prescribed. Express or affirmative. Direct, absolute, explicit. As to positive Condition; Fraud; Proof; and Servitude, see those titles.

Positive evidence. Direct evidence. Eye witness testimony. Direct proof of the fact or point in issue; evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. See also Evidence.

Positive law. Law actually and specifically enacted or adopted by proper authority for the government of an organized jural society. See also Legislation.

Positivi juris /pózitáivay júros/. Lat. Of positive law.

Posito uno oppositorum, negatur alterum /pazish(i)yow yúwnow apozatoram nageytar oltarám/. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied.

Posse /pósi/. Lat. A possibility. A thing is said to be in posse when it may possibly be; in esse when it actually is. Group of people acting under authority of police or sheriff and engaged in searching for a criminal or in making an arrest. Same as Posse comitatus (q.v.).

Posse comitatus /pósi kómátiyas/. Lat. The power or force of the county. The entire population of a county above the age of fifteen, which a sheriff may summon to his assistance in certain cases, as to aid him in keeping the peace, in pursuing and arresting felons, etc. Williams v. State, 263 Ark. 973, 490 S.W.2d 117, 121.

Possess. To occupy in person; to have in one's actual and physical control; to have the exclusive detention and control of; to have and hold as property; to have a just right to; to be master of; to own or be entitled to.

Term “possess” under narcotic drug laws, means actual control, care and management of the drug. Collini v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 487 S.W.2d 132, 135. Defendant "possesses" controlled substance when defendant knows of substance's presence, substance is immediately accessible, and defendant exercises "dominion or control"

See also Hold; Possession.

Possessio /pzésh(i)yow/. Lat. Civil law. That condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. This condition of fact is called "detention," and it forms the substance of possession in all its varieties.

Old English law. Possession; seisin. The detention of a corporeal thing by means of a physical act and mental intent, aided by some support of right.

General Classification

Pedis possessio /píydas pzésh(i)yow/. A foothold; an actual possession of real property, implying either actual occupancy or enclosure and use.

Possessio bona fide /pzésh(i)yow bówna fáydiy/. Possession in good faith. Possessio mala fide, possession in bad faith. A possessor bona fide is one who believes that no other person has a better right to the possession than himself. A possessor mala fide is one who knows that he is not entitled to the possession.

Possessio bonorum /pzésh(i)yow bownórm/. In the civil law, the possession of goods. More commonly termed "bonorum possessio" (q.v.).

Possessio civilis /pzésh(i)yow siválas/. In Roman law, a legal possession, i.e., a possessing accompanied with the intention to be or to thereby become owner; and, as so understood, it was distinguished from "possessio naturalis," otherwise called "nuda detentio," which was a possessing without any such intention. Possessio civilis was the basis of usucapio or of longi temporis possessio, and was usually (but not necessarily) adverse possession.

Possessio fratris /pzésh(i)yow fréstras/. The possession or seisin of a brother; that is, such possession of an estate by a brother as would entitle his sister of the whole blood to succeed him as heir, to the exclusion of a half-brother. Hence, derivatively, that doctrine of the older English law of descent which shut out the half-blood from the succession to estates; a doctrine which was abolished by the descent act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 106.

Possessio longi temporis /pzésh(i)yow lónjaj témpora/. See Usucapio.

Possessio naturalis /pzésh(i)yow nátýrerýlas/. See Possessio civilis, above.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio /pzésh(i)yow ĕst kwéssay píydas pzésh(i)yow/. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse heredem /pzésh(i)yow fréstras díy fúywdow simplexy féyast sorórm éisí harýydom/. The brother's possession of an estate in fee-simple makes the sister to be heir.

Possession. Having control over a thing with the intent to have and to exercise such control. Oswald v. Weigel, 219 Kan. 616, 549 P.2d 598, 599. The detention and control, or the manual or ideal custody, of anything which may be the subject of property, for one's use and enjoyment, either as owner or as the proprietor of a qualified right in it, and either held personally or by another who exercises it in one's place and name. Act or state of possessing. That condition of facts under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure to the exclusion of all other persons.

The law, in general, recognizes two kinds of possession: actual possession and constructive possession. A person who knowingly has direct physical control over a thing, at a given time, is then in actual possession of it. A person who, although not in actual possession, knowingly has both the power and the intention at a given time to exercise dominion or control over a thing, either directly or through another person or persons, is then in constructive possession of it. The law recognizes also that possession may be sole or joint. If one person alone has actual or constructive possession of a thing, possession is sole. If two or more persons share actual or constructive possession of a thing, possession is joint.

Generally, "possession" within context of title insurance policies refers to open, visible and exclusive use. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota, Colo.App., 560 P.2d 839, 842.

See also Adverse possession; Constructive possession; Continguous possession; Exclusive possession; Hold; Notorious possession; Occupancy; Repossession.

Actual possession. Exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy and physical control of the party. Field Furniture Co. v. Community Loan Co., 257 Ky. 825, 79 S.W.2d 211, 215. See also general definition above.

Adverse possession. See Adverse possession.

Chose in possession. A thing (subject of personal property) in actual possession, as distinguished from a "chose in action," which is not presently in the owner's possession, but which he has a right to demand, receive, or recover by suit.

Civil possession. In modern civil law and in the law of Louisiana, that possession which exists when a person ceases to reside in a house or on the land which he occupied, or to detain the movable which he possessed, but without intending to abandon the possession. It is the detention of a thing by virtue of a just title and under the conviction of possessing as owner. A fiction resulting from the registry of the title of the original owner.

Constructive possession. Possession not actual but assumed to exist, where one claims to hold by virtue of some title, without having the actual occupancy, as, where the owner of a tract of land, regularly laid out, is in possession of a part, he is constructively in possession of the whole. See also general definition above.

Corporal possession. The continuing exercise of a claim to the exclusive use of a material thing. The elements of this possession are first, the mental attitude of the claimant, the intent to possess, to appropriate to oneself; and second, the effective realization of this attitude. All the authorities agree that an intent to exclude others must coexist with the external facts, and must be fulfilled in the external physical facts in order to constitute possession.

Criminal law. Possession as necessary for conviction of offense of possession of controlled substances with intent to distribute may be constructive as well as actual. U. S. v. Craig, C.A.Tenn., 522 F.2d 29, 31; as well as joint or exclusive, Garvey v. State, 176 Ga.App. 268, 335 S.E.2d 640, 647. The defendants must have had dominion and control over the contraband with knowledge of its presence and character. U. S. v. Morando-Alvarez, C.A. Ariz., 520 F.2d 882, 884. See also Possess.

Possession, as an element of offense of stolen goods, is not limited to actual manual control upon or about the person, but extends to things under one's power and dominion. McConnell v. State, 48 Ala.App. 523, 266 So.2d 328, 333.

Possession as used in indictment charging possession of stolen mail may mean actual possession or constructive possession. U. S. v. Ellison, C.A.Cal., 469 F.2d 413, 415.

To constitute "possession" of a concealable weapon under statute proscribing possession of a concealable weapon by a felon, it is sufficient that defendant have constructive possession and immediate access to the weapon. State v. Kelley, 12 Or.App. 496, 507 P.2d 837, 839.

Derivative possession. The kind of possession of one who is in the lawful occupation or custody of the property, but not under a claim of title of his own, but under a right derived from another, as, for example, a tenant, bailee, licensee, etc.

Dispossession. The act of ousting or removing one from the possession of property previously held by him, which may be tortious and unlawful, as in the case of a forcible amotion, or in pursuance of law, as where a landlord "dispossesses" his tenant at the expiration of the term or for other cause by the aid of judicial process. See Dispossess proceedings; Ejectment; Eviction; Process (Summary process).

Estate in possession. An estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency. An estate where the tenant is in actual pernancy, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

Exclusive possession. See Exclusive possession.

Hostile possession. This term, as applied to an occupant of real estate holding adversely, is not construed as implying actual enmity or ill will, but merely means that he claims to hold the possession in the character of an owner, and therefore denies all validity to claims set up by any and all other persons. See Adverse possession.

Naked possession. The actual occupation of real estate, but without any apparent or colorable right to hold and continue such possession; spoken of as the lowest and most imperfect degree of title.

Natural possession. That by which a man detains a thing corporeally, as, by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable in possession; natural possession is also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession or with a title which is void.

Notorious possession. See Notorious possession.

Open possession. Possession of real property is said to be "open" when held without concealment or attempt at secrecy, or without being covered up in the name of a third person, or otherwise attempted to be withdrawn from sight, but in such a manner that any person interested can ascertain who is actually in possession by proper observation and inquiry. See Adverse possession.

Peaceable possession. See Peaceable.

Pedal possession. In establishing title by adverse possession this means actual possession; that is, living upon or actually occupying the land, or placing improvements directly upon it.

Possession, writ of: Where the judgment in an action of ejectment is for the delivery of the land claimed, or its possession, this writ is used to put the plaintiff in possession. It is in the nature of execution.

Quasi possession. Is to a right what possession is to a thing, it is the exercise or enjoyment of the right, not necessarily the continuous exercise, but such an exercise as shows an intention to exercise it at any time when desired.

Scrambling possession. By this term is meant a struggle for possession on the land itself, not such a contest as is waged in the courts, or possession gained by an act of trespass, such as building a fence.

Unity of possession. Joint possession of two rights by several titles, as where a lessee of land acquires the title in fee-simple, which extinguishes the lease. The term also describes one of the essential properties of a joint estate, each of the tenants having the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole.

Vacant possession. An estate which has been abandoned, vacated, or forsaken by the tenant. The abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and, therefore, if the tenant have goods on the premises it will not be so considered.

Possession is nine-tenths of the law. This adage is not to be taken as true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his antagonist's.

Possession vaut titre /pazeshan vow tiytr(a)/. Fr. In English law, as in most systems of jurisprudence, the fact of possession raises a prima facie title or a presumption of the right of property in the thing possessed. In other words, the possession is as good as the title (about).
Possessor mala fide /pażesar málá fáidy/. The possessor who possesses as owner by virtue of an act sufficient in terms to transfer property, the defects of which he was ignorant of. He ceases to be a bona fide possessor from the moment these defects are made known to him, or are declared to him by a suit instituted for the recovery of the thing by the owner.

Possessor bona fide /pażesar bówná fáidy/. He is a possessor who possesses as owner by virtue of an act sufficient in terms to transfer property, the defects of which he was ignorant of. He ceases to be a possessor in bad faith is he who possesses as master, but who assumes this quality, when he well knows that he has no title to the thing, or that his title is vicious and defective.

Possessor. One who possesses; one who has possession. See also Occupant.

Possessor bona fide /pażesar bówna fáidy/. He is a possessor who possesses as owner by virtue of an act sufficient in terms to transfer property, the defects of which he was ignorant of. He ceases to be a possessor from the moment these defects are made known to him, or are declared to him by a suit instituted for the recovery of the thing by the owner.

Possessor mala fide /pażesar málá fáidy/. The possessor in bad faith is he who possesses as master, but who assumes this quality, when he well knows that he has no title to the thing, or that his title is vicious and defective.

Possessory. Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession.

Possessory action. See next title.

Possessory action. An action which has for its immediate object to obtain or recover the actual possession of the subject-matter; as distinguished from an action which merely seeks to vindicate the plaintiff's title, or which involves the right of a tenant to obtain possession of a vessel, had under a claim of title. A "possessory action" is one brought by a possessor of immovable property to be maintained in his possession when his possession has been disturbed or to be restored to possession from which he has been evicted. Mott v. Smith, La.App., 273 So.2d 675, 677. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Process (Summary process).

An action founded on possession. Trespass for injuries to personal property is called a "possessory action," because it lies only for a plaintiff who, at the moment of the injury complained of, was in actual or constructive, immediate, and exclusive possession.

Admiralty practice. One which is brought to recover the possession of a vessel, had under a claim of title.

Old English law. A real action which had for its object the regaining possession of the freehold, of which the defendant or his ancestors had been unjustly deprived by the present tenant or possessor thereof.

Possessory claim. The title of a pre-emptor of public lands who has filed his declaratory statement but has not paid for the land.

Possessory interest. Right to exert control over specific land to exclusion of others. Right to possess property by virtue of an interest created in the property though it need not be accompanied by title; e.g. right of a tenant for years.

A possessory interest in land exists in a person who has (a) a physical relation to the land of a kind which gives a certain degree of physical control over the land, and an intent so to exercise such control as to exclude other members of society in general from any present occupation of the land; or (b) interests in the land which are substantially identical with those arising when the elements stated in Clause (a) exist. Restatement, Property, § 7.

Possessory lien. A lien is possessory where the creditor has the right to hold possession of the specific property until satisfaction of the debt or performance of an obligation.

Possessory warrant. The proceeding by possession warrant is a summary remedy for the recovery of a personal chattel which has been taken by fraud, violence, enticement, or seduction from the possession of the party complaining or which, having been in his recent possession, has disappeared and is believed to be in the possession of the party complained against. The purpose of the proceeding is to protect and quiet the possession of personality, but only as against acts which are inhibited by statute.

Possibilitas /possibilatás/. Lat. Possibility; a possibility. Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam reviviscatur, a possibility will never be revived after the dissolution of its execution. Post executionem status, lex non patitur possibilitatem, after the execution of an estate the law does not suffer a possibility.

Possibility. An uncertain thing which may happen. A contingent interest in real or personal estate.

It is either near (or ordinary), as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another, or remote (or extraordinary), as where it is limited to a man, provided he marries a certain woman, and that she shall die and he shall marry another.

See also Impossibility; Probability.

Bare possibility. The same as a naked possibility. See below.

Naked possibility. A bare chance or expectation of acquiring a property or succeeding to an estate in the future, but without any present right in or to it to which the law would recognize as an estate or interest.

Possibility coupled with an interest. An expectation recognized in law as an estate or interest, such as occurs in executory devises and shifting or springing uses. Such a possibility may be sold or assigned.

Possibility of reverter. Future estate left in creator or in his successors in interest upon simultaneous creation of estate that will terminate automatically within a period of time defined by occurrence of specified event. United Methodist Church in West Sand Lake v. Kunz, 78 Misc.2d 565, 357 N.Y.S.2d 637, 640. The interest which remains in a grantor or testator after the conveyance or devise of a fee simple determinable and which permits the grantor to be revested automatically of his estate on breach of the condition.

Possibility on a possibility. A remote possibility, as if a remainder be limited in particular to A.'s son John, or Edward, it is bad if he have no son of that name, for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of that particular name.
Possible. Capable of existing, happening, being, becoming or coming to pass; feasible, not contrary to nature of things; neither necessitated nor precluded; free to happen or not; contrasted with impossible. In another sense, the word denotes improbability, without excluding the idea of feasibility. It is also sometimes equivalent to “practicable” or “reasonable,” as in some cases where action is required to be taken “as soon as possible.” See also Potential.

Post. Lat. After; as occurring in a report or a textbook, term is used to send the reader to a subsequent part of the book. Same as “infra.”

Post, n. Military establishment where body of troops is stationed; also place where soldier is stationed.

Post, v. To bring to the notice or attention of the public by affixing to a post or wall, or putting up in some public place; to display in a conspicuous manner; to announce, publish or advertise by use of placard. To place in mails. In accounting, to transfer an entry from one place to another, or to a ledger. As regards posting of bail, see Bail. See also Posting.

Post-act. An after-act; an act done afterwards.

Postage. Charges for postal service.

Postal. Relating to the mails; pertaining to the post-office.

Postal currency. During a brief period following soon after the commencement of the civil war in the United States, when specie change was scarce, postage stamps were popularly used as a substitute; and the first issues of paper representatives of parts of a dollar, issued by authority of congress, were called “postal currency.” This issue was soon merged in others of a more permanent character, for which the later and more appropriate name is “fractional currency.”

Postal order. A money order. A letter of credit furnished by the government, at a small charge, to facilitate the transmission of money.

Postal Service. The United States Postal Service replaced the Post Office Department in 1971. It is administered by a governing board whose members are appointed by the President. The head of the Service is the Postmaster General.

Post-conviction remedies. Federal. A federal prisoner, attacking the constitutionality of his sentence, may move the court which imposed the sentence to vacate, set aside or correct the same. This motion, under 28 U.S.C.A. § 2255, must normally be made before the prisoner can seek habeas corpus relief.

State. Almost every state has one or more post-conviction procedures that permit prisoners to challenge at least some constitutional violations. A substantial group of states have adopted special post-conviction statutes or court rules, roughly similar to section 2255 of 28 U.S.C.A., that encompass all constitutional claims. Case v. Neb., 381 U.S. 336, 338, 85 S.Ct. 1486, 14 L.Ed.2d 422. Others, following the federal habeas corpus statute, have held that at least some constitutional violations are jurisdictional defects cognizable under a common law or statutory writ of habeas corpus. Ex Parte Story, 88 Okl.Cr. 358, 203 P.2d 474. The writ of coram nobis is also viewed in several states as an appropriate remedy for presenting certain types of constitutional claims. People v. Cooper, 307 N.Y. 253, 120 N.E.2d 813. In addition, several states have adopted the Uniform Post Conviction Procedure Act.

See also Habeas corpus.

Post-date. To date an instrument as of a time later than that at which it is really made. The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is post-dated. U.C.C. § 3–114.

Post-dated check. A check issued before the stated date of the instrument. One delivered prior to its date, generally payable at sight or on presentation on or after day of its date. See Post-date.

Post diem /powst diyzm/. After the day; as, a plea of payment post diem, after the day when the money became due.

Post disseisin /powst dasiyzn/. In old English law, the name of a writ, which lies for him who, having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel disseisin, is again disseised by a former disseisor.

Postea /powsttia/. In the common-law practice, a formal statement, indorsed on the nisi prius record, which gives an account of the proceedings at the trial of the action.

Posted waters. Waters flowing through or lying upon inclosed or cultivated lands, which are preserved for the exclusive use of the owner or occupant by his posting notices (according to the statute) prohibiting all persons from shooting, trapping, or fishing thereon, under a prescribed penalty.

Posteriora derogant prioribus /pastriyórŏ děrăgant pryórŏbas/. Posterior things derogate from things prior.

Postiores /pəstēriyŏriyz/. Lat. This term was used by the Romans to denote the descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree.

Posteriority /pəstēhriŏhŏrĭtĭ/. This is a word of comparison and relation in tenure, the correlative of which is the word “priority.” Thus, a man who held lands or tenements of two lords was said to hold of his more ancient lord by priority, and of his less ancient lord by posteriority. It has also a general application in law consistent with its etymological meaning, and, as so used, it is likewise opposed to priority.

Posterity /pəstēhriŏtĭ/. All the descendants of a person in a direct line to the remotest generation.

Post executionem status lex non patitur possibilitatem /pōwst eksakyuwshiyownam stēytas léks nōn pătstăr pōsbiylatēyom/. After the execution of the estate the law suffers not a possibility.

Post facto /pōwst fēktow/. After the fact. See Ex post facto.
Post-factum, or postfactum /pòwstfàktaum/. An after-event; an act done afterwards; a post-event.

Post-fine. In old conveyancing, a fine or sum of money, (otherwise called the "king's silver") formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land.

Post hoc /pòwst hòk/. Lat. After this; after this time; hereafter.

Posthumous. That which is done after the death of a person as the publication of a book after the death of the author, or the birth of a child after the death of its father.

Posthumous child /pòstyamas chàyld/. Child born after the death of his or her father. See Unborn child.

Posthumus pro nato habetur /pòstyamas prò nèytow hàbìytar/. A posthumous child is considered as though born [at the parent's death].

Posting. In accounting, the act of transferring an original entry to a ledger. The act of mailing a document. Form of substituted service of process consisting of displaying the process in a prominent place when other forms of service are unavailing.

The process of posting of a check means the usual procedure followed by a payor bank in determining to pay an item and in recording the payment including one or more of the following or other steps as determined by the bank: verification of any signature; ascertaining that sufficient funds are available; affixing a "paid" or other stamp; entering a charge or entry to a customer's account; correcting or reversing an entry or erroneous action with respect to the item. U.C.C. § 4-109.

In connection with trespass statutes, the act of placing or affixing signs on private property in a manner to give notice of the trespass. E.g. La.R.S. 14:63.5

Postliminium /pòwstlimiiniym/. Lat. In the civil law, a doctrine or fiction of the law by which the restoration of a person to any status or right formerly possessed by him was considered as relating back to the time of his original loss or deprivation; particularly in the case of one who, having been taken prisoner in war, and having escaped and returned to Rome, was regarded, by the aid of this fiction, as having never been abroad, and was thereby reinstated in all his rights.

The term is also applied, in international law, to the recapture of property taken by an enemy, and its consequent restoration to its original owner.

Postliminium fingit eum qui captos est in civitate semper fuisse /pòwstlimiiniym finjìt iyam kwày képtòwès èst in sivàtytìy sèmpor fyùwìsiy/. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state.

Postliminy /pòwstlimiiniy/. See Postliminium.

Post liitem motam /pòwst làytim mòwttam/. Lat. After suit moved or commenced. Depositions in relation to the subject of a suit, made after litigation had commenced, were formerly sometimes so termed.

Postman. A letter-carrier; mailman. In England, a senior barrister in the court of exchequer, who had precedence in motions, so called from the place where he sat; such ceased to exist when the court was absorbed into the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court in 1873.

Postmark. A stamp or mark put on letters or other mailable matter received at the post-office for transmission through the mails.

Postmaster. An officer of the United States Postal Service appointed to take charge of a local post-office and transact the business of receiving and forwarding the mails at that point, and such other business as is committed to him under the postal laws.

Postmaster general. The head of the U.S. Postal Service.

Post-mortal /pòwstmòrtal/. After death; pertaining to matters occurring after death. A term generally applied to an autopsy or examination of a dead body, to ascertain the cause of death, or to the inquisition for that purpose by the coroner.

Postnatal /pòwstnéytal/. Those born after. See Post natus.

Post natus /pòwst nèytas/. Born afterwards. A term once used in private international law to designate a person who was born after some historic event (such as the American Revolution or the act of union between England and Scotland), and whose rights or status will be governed or affected by the question of his birth before or after such event.

Post-natal /pòwstnàtal/. A species of bank-notes payable at a future time, and not on demand.

Post-nuptial /pòwstnúpshal/. After marriage.

Post-nuptial agreement. Agreements or settlements made after marriage between spouses still married to determine the rights of each in the others' property in the event of divorce or death. They take the form of separation agreements, property settlements in contemplation of a separation or divorce, or property settlements where there is no intention of the parties to separate. Friedlander v. Friedlander, 80 Wash.2d 293, 494 P.2d 208, 212. Compare Pre-nuptial agreement; Separation agreement.

Post-nuptial settlement. See Post-nuptial agreement.

Post-obit. Lat. An agreement by which the obligor borrows a certain sum of money and promises to pay a larger sum, exceeding the lawful rate of interest, upon the death of a person from whom he has some expectation, if the obligor be then living.
Post-obit bond. A bond given by an expectant, to become due on the death of a person from whom he will have property. A bond or agreement given by a borrower of money, by which he undertakes to pay a larger sum, exceeding the legal rate of interest, on or after the death of a person from whom he has expectations, in case of surviving him. Such are common in England.

Postpone. To put off; defer; delay; continue; adjourn; as when a hearing is postponed. Also to place after; to set below something else; as when an earlier lien is for some reason postponed to a later lien. The term carries with it the idea of deferring the doing of something or the taking effect of something until a future or later time. Gartner v. Roth, 26 Cal.2d 184, 157 P.2d 361, 363.

Post prolem suscitatam /pöwst pröwłam sässtäytam/. After issue born (raised).

Post-terminal sittings. Sittings after term. See Sitting.

Post-conviction remedies; Post-trial motions. General term to describe those motions which are permitted after trial such as motion for new trial (Fed.R.Civil P. 59), and motion for relief from judgment (Rule 60).

Potestas suprema seipsum dissolvere potest, ligare potest /pöwst lageriy non powst/. Supreme power can dissolve [unloose] but cannot bind itself.

Potestas inter pretatur /pöwstas intarprütätar/. A power is strictly interpreted.

Potentia est duplex, remota et propinqua; et potenia remolissima et vana est que nunquam venit in actum /poténsh(i)yə dööbt sëkway jastish(i)yəm, nön äntsäiydar(i)yə/. Power ought to follow justice, not go before it.

Potential. Existing in possibility but not in act. Naturally and probably expected to come into existence at some future time, though not now existing; for example, the future product of grain or trees already planted, or the successive future installments or payments on a contract or engagement already made. Things having a "potential existence" may be the subject of mortgage, assignment, or sale. See Possible.

Potestas /potëstasə/. Lat. In the civil law, power, authority, domination; empire. Imperium, or the jurisdiction of magistrates. The power of the father over his children, patria potestas. The authority of masters over their slaves.

Appendant or appurtenant powers. Those existing where the donee of the power has an estate in the land and the power is to take effect wholly or in part out of that estate, and the estate created by its exercise affects the estate and interest of the donee of the power.

Collateral powers. Those in which the donee of the power has no interest or estate in the land which is the subject of the power. Also called naked powers.

Constitutional powers. The right to take action in respect to a particular subject-matter or class of matters, involving more or less of discretion, granted by the constitution to the several departments or branches of the government, or reserved to the people. Powers in this sense are generally classified as legislative, executive, and judicial (q.v.) and further classified as enumerated (or express), implied, inherent, resulting, or sovereign powers.

Commerce powers. Power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 3, U.S.Const.

Enforcement powers. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 26th Amendments each contain a section providing, in these or equivalent words, that "Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."

Enumerated or express powers. Powers expressly provided for in Constitution; e.g., U.S.Const. Art. I, § 8.

Implied powers. Such as are necessary to make available and carry into effect those powers which are expressly granted or conferred, and which must therefore be presumed to have been within the intention of the constitutional or legislative grant. See Enforcement powers, above; also Necessary and proper powers, below. See also Penumbra doctrine.

Inherent powers. Powers which necessarily inhere in the government by reason of its role as a government; e.g., conducting of foreign affairs. United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp, 299 U.S. 304, 315, 316, 57 S.Ct. 216, 81 L.Ed. 242. See also Supremacy clause.

Necessary and proper powers. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 18 gives Congress power "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers (i.e. those enumerated in clauses 1-17), and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof." See also Penumbra doctrine.

Preemptive powers. See Preemption; Supremacy clause.

Reserved or residual state powers. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. 10th Amend., U.S.Const.

Resulting powers. Those powers which "result from the whole mass of the powers of the National Government and from the nature of political society." American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 26 U.S. (1 Pet.) 516, 7 L.Ed. 242.

Spending power. Power of Congress "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Art. I, § 8, Cl. 1, U.S.Const.

Corporate powers. The right or capacity to act or be acted upon in a particular manner or in respect to a particular subject; as, the power to have a corporate seal, to sue and be sued, to make by-laws, to carry on a particular business or construct a given work.

General and special powers. A power is general when it authorizes the alienation in fee, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of the lands embraced in the power to any alienee whatsoever. It is special (1) when the persons or class of persons to whom the disposition of the lands under the power is to be made are designated, or (2) when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee.

General and special powers in trust. A general power is in trust when any person or class of persons other than the grantee of such power is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of the proceeds or other benefits to result from the alienation. A special power is in trust (1) when the disposition or charge which it authorizes is limited to be made to any person or class of persons other than the holder of the power, or (2) when any person or class of persons other than the holder is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power.

Implied powers. Powers not granted in express terms but existing because they are necessary and proper to carry into effect some expressly granted power. See also Constitutional powers, above.

Inherent powers. Those which are enjoyed by the possessors of natural right, without having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government, of a father to control his children. Some of these are regulated and restricted in their exercise by law, but are not technically considered in the law as powers.

Inherent agency power is a term used in the Restatement of Agency to indicate the power of an agent which is derived not from authority, apparent authority or estoppel, but solely from the agency relation and exists for the protection of persons harmed by or dealing with a servant or other agent. Restatement, Second, Agency § 8A.

Ministerial powers. See Ministerial.

Naked power. One which is simply collateral and without interest in the donee, which arises when, to a mere stranger, authority is given of disposing of an interest, Power coupled with an interest. A right or power to do some act together with an interest in the subject-matter on which the power is to be exercised. It is distinguished from a naked power, which is a mere authority to act, not accompanied by any interest of the donee in the subject-matter of the power. See Power of alienation.

For other compound terms, such as Power of appointment; Power of sale; etc., see the following titles.

Power coupled with an interest. A right or power to do some act, together with an interest in the subject-matter on which the power is to be exercised. It is distinguished from a naked power, which is a mere authority to act, not accompanied by any interest of the donee in the subject-matter of the power. See Power of alienation.

A power of appointment may be exercisable by deed or by will depending upon the terms established by the donor of the power, and is defined, generally, as power or authority given to person to dispose of property, or interest therein, which is vested in person other than donee of the power. In re Conroy's Estate, 67 C.A.3d 734, 136 Cal.Rptr. 807, 809.

Powers are either: Collateral, which are given to strangers; i.e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply "collateral," or powers not coupled with an interest, or powers not being interests. Or they are powers relating to the land. These are called "appendant" or "appurtenant," because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life.

Such an estate must be created, which will attach on an interest actually vested in himself. Or they are called "in gross," if given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enabled him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross.

An important distinction is established between general and particular powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases including himself or his estate. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed or will creating the power.

A general power is beneficial when no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution. A general power is in trust when any person or class of persons, other than the grantee of such power, is designated as entitled to the proceeds, or any portion of the proceeds, or other benefits to result from the alienation.

When a power of appointment among a class requires that each shall have a share, it is called a "distributive" or "non-exclusive" power; when it authorizes, but does not direct, a selection of one or more to the exclusion of the others, it is called an "exclusive" power, and is also distributive; when it gives the power of appointing to a certain number of the class, but not to all, it is exclusive only, and not distributive. A power authorizing the donee either to give the whole to one of a class or to give it equally among such of them as he may select (but not to give one a larger share than the others) is called a "mixed" power.

For the estate tax and gift tax effects of powers of appointment, see I.R.C. §§ 2041 and 2514.

See also General power of appointment; Illusory appointment; Limited power of appointment.

Special power of appointment. A power of appointment that cannot be exercised in favor of the donee or his or her estate but may be exercised only in favor of identifiable person(s) other than the donee. See also Limited power of appointment.

Testamentary power. A power of appointment that can only be exercised through a will (i.e., upon the death of the holder).

Power of attorney. An instrument in writing whereby one person, as principal, appoints another as his agent and confers authority to perform certain specified acts or kinds of acts on behalf of principal. Complaint of Bankers Trust Co., C.A.Pa., 752 F.2d 874, 885. An instrument authorizing another to act as one's agent or attorney. The agent is attorney in fact and his power is revoked on the death of the principal by operation of law. Such power may be either general (full) or special (limited).

Durable power of attorney. Exists when person executes a power of attorney which will become or remain effec-Power of disposition. Every power of disposition is deemed absolute, by means of which the donee of such power is enabled in his life-time to dispose of the entire fee for his own benefit; and, where a general and beneficial power to devise the inheritance is given to a tenant for life or years, it is absolute, within the meaning of the statutes of some of the states. See Power of appointment.

Power of sale. A clause commonly inserted in mortgages and deeds of trust, giving the mortgagee (or trustee) the right and power, on default in the payment of the debt secured, to advertise and sell the mortgaged property at public auction (but without resorting to a court for authority), satisfy the creditor out of the net proceeds, convey by deed to the purchaser, return the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor, and thereby divest the latter's estate entirely and without any subsequent right of redemption.

Power of termination. The interest left in the grantor or testator after the conveyance or devise of a fee simple on condition subsequent or conditional fee, e.g. "to A on condition that the property be used for church purposes." When such property is no longer used for church purposes, the grantor may enter or commence an action for entry based on the breach of the condition. However, he is not automatically revested. He must enter or commence an action.

P.P. An abbreviation for "propria persona," in his proper person, in his own person, and for per procuration (q.u.).

P.P.I. Policy proof of interest, i.e., in the event of loss, the insurance policy is to be deemed sufficient proof of interest.

Practicable, practicably. Practicable is that which may be done, practiced, or accomplished; that which is performable, feasible, possible; and the adverb practicably means in a practicable manner. Within liability policy providing that when accident occurred, written notice should be given by or on behalf of insured to insurer or any of its authorized agents as soon as practicable, "practicable" was held to mean feasible in the circumstances. Frey v. Security Ins. Co. of Hartford, D.C.Pa., 331 F.Supp. 140, 143.

Practice. Repeated or customary action; habitual performance; a succession of acts of similar kind; custom; usage. Application of science to the wants of men. The enforcement of rights or the redress of wrongs, as distinguished from the substantive law which gives the right or denounces the wrong. The form, manner, or order of instituting and conducting an action or other judicial proceeding, through its successive stages to its end, in accordance with the rules and principles laid down by law or by the regulations and precedents of the courts. The term applies as well to the conduct of criminal as to civil actions, to proceedings in equity as well as at law, and to the defense as well as the prosecution of any proceeding. Wells Lamont Corp. v. Bowles, Em.App., 149 F.2d 364, 366.

Practice of law. The rendition of services requiring the knowledge and the application of legal principles and technique to serve the interests of another with his consent. R.J. Edwards, Inc. v. R.L. Hert, Okl., 504 P.2d 407, 416. It is not limited to appearing in court, or advising and performing of services in the conduct of the various shapes of litigation, but embraces the preparation of pleadings, and other papers incident to actions and special proceedings, and in larger sense includes legal advice and counsel and preparation of legal instruments by which legal rights and obligations are established. Washington State Bar Ass'n v. Great Western Union Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 91 Wash.2d 48, 586 P.2d 870. A person engages in the "practice of law" by maintaining an office where he is held out to be an attorney, using a letterhead describing himself as an attorney, counseling clients in legal matters, negotiating with opposing counsel about pending litigation, and fixing and collecting fees for services rendered by his associate. State v. Schumacher, 214 Kan. 1, 519 P.2d 1116, 1127.

Practice of medicine. The treatment of injuries as well as the discovery of the cause and nature of disease, and the administration of remedies, or the prescribing of treatment therefor.

Practice acts. Statutes that govern practice and procedure in courts (e.g., Title 28, United States Code). Such acts are frequently supplemented with court rules (e.g., Fed.Rules of Civil Procedure).

Practice court. In English law, a court attached to the court of king's bench, which heard and determined common matters of business and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc. It was usually called the "bail court." It was held by one of the puisne justices of the king's bench. See also Moot court.

Practices. A succession of acts of a similar kind or in a like employment.

Practitioner. He who is engaged in the exercise or employment of any art or profession as contrasted with one who teaches such. See Practice.

Preceptores /priyseptórioyz/. Lat. In old English law, masters. The chief clerks in chancery were formerly so called, because they had the direction of making out remedial writs.

Preceptories /práséptariyz/. Lat. In feudal law, a kind of benefices, so called because they were possessed by the more eminent templars whom the chief master by his authority created and called "Preceptores Templi."

Precipe /préspiy/. Lat. In practice, an original writ drawn up in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason why he had not done it. It includes an order to the clerk of court to issue an execution on a judgment already rendered.
A paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written. It is filed in the office out of which the required writ is to issue. Also an order, written out and signed, addressed to the clerk of a court, and requesting him to issue a particular writ.

Praecipe quod reddat /prəˈspiə kwəd rəˈdaɪt/. Command that he render. A writ directing the defendant to restore the possession of land, employed at the beginning of a common recovery.

Praecipe, tenant to the /ˈtɛntənt tə də prəˈspiə/. A person having an estate of freehold in possession, against whom the praecipe was brought by a tenant in tail, seeking to bar his estate by a recovery.

Praecipitium /prəˈspɪtʃiəm/. The punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

Praecessus /prəˈsɛsəs/. A legal demand for an act by way of process or suit. Sometimes used to mean a pleading in the present tense.

Praedial /prəˈdiəl/. That which arises immediately over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient land. It always presupposes two pieces of land (praedia) belonging to different proprietors; one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "praedium dominans," and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "praedium servit prae dio." A right which is granted for the advantage of one piece of land over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient land. It always presupposes two pieces of land (praedia) belonging to different proprietors; one burdened with the servitude, called "praedium servit prae dio," and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "praedium dominans." Such as arise merely known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

Praedictus /prəˈdɪktəs/. Lat. Aforesaid. In civil law, the name of an estate which suffers a servitude or easement to another estate; the servient tenement.

Praelegatum /prəˈlæɡətəm/. Lat. In Roman law, a preparatory oath. A term applied to bonds and other engagements given to answer the contempt with which he stands charged.

Praefinitum /prəˈfiːnətəm/. In old English law, a preparatory oath.

Praefecturae /prəˈfɛkt(y)əri/. In Roman law, conquered towns, governed by an officer called a "prefect," who was chosen in some instances by the people, in others by the pretors.

Praefatum /prəˈfətəm/. In old English law, the name given to an estate which suffers a servitude or easement to another estate; the servient tenement.

Praemunire /prəˈmjuːnər/. In old English law, an offense against the king and his government, though not subject to capital punishment. So called from the words of the writ which issued preparatory to the prosecution: "Praemunire facias A. B. quod sit coram nobis," etc.; "Cause A. B. to be forewarned that he appear before us to answer the contempt with which he stands charged." The statutes establishing this offense, the first of which... was made in the thirty-first year of the reign of Edward I, were framed to encounter the perceived papal usurpations in England; the original meaning of the offense called "praemunire" being the introduction of a foreign power into the kingdom, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belonged to the king alone. The penalties of praemunire were afterwards applied to other heinous offenses. 4 Bl.Comm. 103-117.

Prevaricator /prxtextu cujus, by pretense, or under pretext color. Prætextu liciti non debet admitii illicitum /pratéksh(y)uw lástáy nó débt admitáy alisátom/. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Prevaricator /prxtextu cujus, by pretense, or under pretext color. Prætextu liciti non debet admitii illicitum /pratéksh(y)uw lástáy nó débt admitáy alisátom/. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Prevaricator /prxtextu cujus, by pretense, or under pretext color. Prætextu liciti non debet admitii illicitum /pratéksh(y)uw lástáy nó débt admitáy alisátom/. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Prevaricator /prvársketar/"várskéy"/. Lat. In the civil law, one who betrays his trust, or is unfaithful to his trust. An advocate who aids the opposite party by betraying his client's cause.

Prætextus /pratékstas/. Lat. A pretext; a pretense or color. Prætextu liciti non debet admitii illicitum /pratéksh(y)uw lástáy nó débt admitáy alisátom/. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Prætextus /pratékstas/. Lat. A pretext; a pretense or color. Prætextu liciti non debet admitii illicitum /pratéksh(y)uw lástáy nó débt admitáy alisátom/. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Preambula /praksas/. Lat. Use; practice. Praxias judicial interpres legum /praksas júýdikam ást intáprýży liygam/. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws.

Prayer. The request contained in a bill in equity that the court will grant the process, aid, or relief which the complainant desires. Also, by extension, the term is applied to that part of the bill which contains this request. Under modern rules practice, the pleader does not pray for relief, but, rather, demands it. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(a). See Prayer for relief.

Prayer for relief. That portion of a complaint (more properly called "demand for relief") in a civil action which sets forth the requested relief or damages to which the pleader deems himself entitled. This is a requisite element of the complaint. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(a).

Prayer of process. A petition with which a bill in equity used to conclude, to the effect that a writ of subpoena might issue against the defendant to compel him to answer upon oath all the matters charged against him in the bill.

Pray in aid. In old English practice, to call upon for assistance. In real actions, the tenant might pray in aid or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate.

In current English practice, term refers to practice of attorney in action involving several parties to claim benefit for his client of argument used by another counsel for his client.

Preamble. A clause at the beginning of a constitution or statute explanatory of the reasons for its enactment and the objects sought to be accomplished. Generally, a preamble is a declaration by the legislature of the reasons for the passage of the statute and is helpful in the interpretation of any ambiguities within the statute to which it is prefixed. Griffith v. New Mexico Public Service Comm., 86 N.M. 113, 520 P.2d 269, 271. It has been held however to not be an essential part of act, and neither enlarges nor confers powers. Portland Van & Storage Co. v. Hoss, 139 Or. 434, 9 P.2d 122, 126.

Prejudicial evidence. The kind and degree of evidence prescribed in advance (as, by statute) as requisite for the proof of certain facts or the establishment of certain instruments. It is opposed to casual evidence, which is left to grow naturally out of the surrounding circumstances.

Prejudicial /priydiyans/. The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, according to rank, beginning with the Attorney and Solicitor General, and Queen’s Counsel, and ending with barristers at large.

Prebend. In English ecclesiastical law, a stipend granted in cathedral churches; also, but improperly, a prebendary. A simple prebend is merely a revenue; a prebend with dignity has some jurisdiction attached to it. The term "prebend" is generally confounded with "canonicate," but there is a difference between them. The former is the stipend granted to an ecclesiastic in consideration of his officiating and serving in the church; whereas the canonicate is a mere title or spiritual quality which may exist independently of any stipend.

Fixed portion of rents and profits of cathedral church used for maintenance of prebendaries.
Prebendary /prébendér/. An ecclesiastical person serving on the staff of a cathedral, and receiving a stated allowance or stipend from the income or endowment of the cathedral, in compensation for his services.

Precaria /prakéríyə/. In old English law, day-works which the tenants of certain manors were bound to give their lords in harvest time. Magna precaria was a great or general reaping day.

Precarious /prakéríyəs/. Liable to be returned or rendered up at the mere demand or request of another; hence, held or retained only on sufferance or by permission; and, by an extension of meaning, doubtful, uncertain, dangerous, very liable to break, fail, or terminate.

Precarious loan. A bailment by way of loan which is not to continue for any fixed time, but may be recalled at the mere will and pleasure of the lender (e.g. a demand loan). A loan, the repayment of which is in doubt or uncertain. A non-performing loan.

Precarious possession. In modern civil law, possession is called "precarious" which one enjoys by the leave of another and during his pleasure.

Precarious right. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it.

Precarious trade. In international law, such trade as may be carried on by a neutral between two belligerent powers by the mere sufferance of the latter.

Precarium /prakéríyəm/. Lat. In the civil law, a conventio whereby one allows another the use of a thing or the exercise of a right gratuitously until revocation. The bailee acquires thereby the lawful possession of the thing, except in certain cases. The bailor can redemand the thing at any time, even should he have allowed it to the bailee for a designated period.

Precatory /prékatəriəri/. Having the nature of prayer, request, or entreaty; conveying or embodying a recommendation or advice or the expression of a wish, but not a positive command or direction.

Precatory trust. A trust created by certain words, which are more like words of entreaty and permission than of command or certainty. Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are "wish and request," "have fullest confidence," "heartily beseech," and the like. See Trust.

Precatory words. Words of entreaty, request, desire, wish, or recommendation, employed in wills, as distinguished from direct and imperative terms. Mere precatory words or expressions in a trust or will are ineffective to dispose of property. There must be a command or order as to the disposition of property.

Precaution /prakóshan/. Previous action; proven foresight; care previously employed to prevent mischief or to secure good result; or a measure taken beforehand; an active foresight designed to ward off possible problems, accidents, liability, or secure good results. Rincon v. Berg Co., Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 811, 813.

Precedence /pré半导snə/ or predecency /pré半导dsəsni/. The act or state of going before; adjustment of place. The right of being first placed in a certain order. See also Preference; Precedent; Priority.

Precedence, patent of. In old English law, a grant from the crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and precedence as are assigned in their respective patents.

Precedent /pré导读nt/. An adjudged case or decision of a court, considered as furnishing an example or authority for an identical or similar case afterwards arising or a similar question of law. Courts attempt to decide cases on the basis of principles established in prior cases. Prior cases which are close in facts or legal principles to the case under consideration are called precedents. A rule of law established for the first time by a court for a particular type of case and thereafter referred to in deciding similar cases. See also Stare decisis.

A course of conduct once followed which may serve as a guide for future conduct. See Custom and usage; Habit.

Precedent condition. Such as must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged. See Condition.

Precedents sub silentio /pré导读nts səb salənʃiələw/. Silent uniform course of practice, uninterrupted though not supported by legal decisions.

Prece partium /priəsiə pərʃəm/. The continuance of a suit by consent of both parties.

Precept /priəpekt/. An order, writ, warrant, or process. An order or direction, emanating from authority, to an officer or body of officers, commanding him or them to do some act within the scope of their powers. An order in writing, sent out by a justice of the peace or other like officer, for the bringing of a person or record before him. Precept is not to be confined to civil proceedings, and is not of a more restricted meaning than "process." It includes warrants and processes in criminal as well as civil proceedings.

Rule imposing standard of conduct or action.

In English law, the direction issued by a sheriff to the proper returning officers of cities and boroughs within his jurisdiction for the election of members to serve in parliament. The direction by the judges or commissioners of assize to the sheriff for the summoning a sufficient number of jurors. The direction issued by the clerk of the peace to the overseers of parishes for making out the jury lists. Written command of justice of the peace or other like officer for the bringing of a person or record before him. In old English criminal law, instigation to commit a crime.

In old French law, a kind of letters issued by the king in subversion of the laws, being orders to the judges to do or tolerate things contrary to law.

Precept of attachment. Precept of attachment is an order to attach the goods and property of the defendant issued by a court generally after the action has been Preces primarise /priˈsɪsiːrəs/. In English ecclesiastical law, a right of the crown to name to the first prebend that becomes vacant after the accession of the sovereign, in every church of the empire. This right was exercised by the crown of England in the reign of Edward I.

Precinct /priˈsɪŋkt/. A constable’s or police district. A small geographical unit of government. An election district created for convenient localization of polling places. A county or municipal subdivision for casting and counting votes in elections.

Preciput. In French law, a portion of an estate or inheritance which falls to one of the coheirs over and above his equal share with the rest, and which is to be taken out before partition is made.

Precise /prəˈsaɪs/. Having determinate limitations. To the point.

Preclude /prəˈkljuːd/. To prohibit or prevent from doing something; e.g., injunction.

Precludi non /prəˈkljuːdi nən/. Lat. In common law pleading, the commencement of a replication to a plea in bar, by which the plaintiff “says that, by reason of anything in the said plea alleged, he ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action against him, the said defendant, because he says,” etc.

Preclusion order. Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 37(b)(2)(B), a party to an action who fails to comply with an order for discovery may be precluded from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses.

Preconization /priˈkɑːnəzɪˈʃən/. Proclamation.

Precontract. A contract or engagement made by a person, which is of such a nature as to preclude him from lawfully entering into another contract of the same nature.

Predatory intent. In purview of Robinson-Patman Act, means that alleged price discriminator must have at least sacrificed present revenues for purpose of driving competitor out of market with hope of recouping losses through subsequent higher prices. International Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., C.A.Tex., 517 F.2d 714, 723. See also Predatory pricing.

An inference to be drawn from predatory pricing is that defendant is acting with anticompetitive intent. Double H Plastics, Inc. v. Sonoco Products Co., D.C.Pa., 575 F.Supp. 389, 394. See also Predatory intent.

Predecessor. One who goes or has gone before; the correlative of “successor.” One who has filled an office or station before the present incumbent. Applied to a body politic or corporate, in the same sense as “ancestor” is applied to a natural person.

Predial servitude /priˈdiəl sərˈvət(y)uwd/. A charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another owner. A charge on one estate for the stipulated benefit of another estate; the benefit must be attributable to any person who may own the dominant estate at any time. Guillotte v. Wells, C.A.La. App., 485 So.2d 187, 189. To exist, there must be two different estates, servient and dominant, belonging to different owners, with benefit to dominant estate. Marine Enterprises v. Ahoy Marine Services, C.A.La.App., 496 So.2d 1080, 1082. See Predial servitude.

Predisposition. For purposes of entrapment defense, may be defined as defendant’s inclination to engage in illegal activity for which he has been charged, i.e., that he is ready and willing to commit the crime. It focuses on defendant’s state of mind before government agents suggest that he commit crime. U.S. v. Ortiz, C.A.Utah, 804 F.2d 1161, 1165. See also Premeditation.

Predominant. Something greater or superior in power and influence to others with which it is connected or compared.

Preemption /priˈɛm(p)ʃən/. Doctrine adopted by U.S. Supreme Court holding that certain matters are of such a national, as opposed to local, character that federal laws preempt or take precedence over state laws. As such, a state may not pass a law inconsistent with the federal law. Examples are federal laws governing interstate commerce. See also Federal preemption; Supremacy clause.

As applied to state action versus local action, “preemption” means that where legislature has adopted scheme for regulation of given subject, local legislative control over such phases of subject as are covered by state regulation ceases. Hutchcraft Van Service, Inc. v. City of Urbana Human Relations Commission, 60 Ill. Dec. 532, 536, 104 Ill.App.3d 817, 433 N.E.2d 329, 333.

In international law, the right of pre-emption was formerly the right of a nation to detain the merchandise of strangers passing through her territories or seas, in order to afford to her subjects the preference of purchase.

In old English law, the first buying of a thing. A privilege formerly enjoyed by the crown, of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the king’s purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner.
Preemption claimant. One who has settled upon land subject to pre-emption, with the intention to acquire title to it, and has complied, or is proceeding to comply, in good faith, with the requirements of the law to perfect his right to it. Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U.S. 575, 581, 24 L.Ed. 1130. See Preemption right.

Preemption doctrine. See Preemption.

Preemption entry. See Entry.

Preemption right. A privilege accorded by the government to the actual settler upon a certain limited portion of the public domain, to purchase such tract at a fixed price to the exclusion of all other applicants. Nix v. Allen, 112 U.S. 129, 5 S.Ct. 70, 28 L.Ed. 675. One who, by settlement upon the public land, or by cultivation of a portion of it, has obtained the right to purchase a portion of the land thus settled upon or cultivated, to the exclusion of all other persons.

Preemptive right. The privilege of a stockholder to maintain a proportionate share of ownership by purchasing a proportionate share of any new stock issues. An existing stockholder in most jurisdictions has the right to buy additional shares of a new issue to preserve his equity before others have a right to purchase shares of the new issue. The purpose of such rights is to protect shareholders from dilution of value and control when new shares are issued. In modern corporation statutes, preemptive rights may be limited or denied. See also Stock.

Pre-existing duty. A common law rule which holds that where a party does or promises to do what he or she is already legally obligated to do, there exists no sufficient consideration to support this new promise. The Uniform Commercial Code has eliminated the "pre-existing duty" rule in sales contracts. UCC § 209-(1). Palmer v. Safe Auto Sales, Inc., 114 Misc.2d 964, 452 N.Y.S.2d 995, 996.

Prefect. In French law, the name given to the public functionary who is charged in chief with the administration of the laws, in each department of the country. Crespin v. U.S., 168 U.S. 208, 18 S.Ct. 53, 42 L.Ed. 438. The term is also used, in practically the same sense, in Mexico. But in New Mexico, a prefect is a probate judge.

Prefer. To bring before; to prosecute; to try; to proceed with. Thus, preferring an indictment signifies prosecuting or trying an indictment.

To give advantage, priority, or privilege; to select for first payment, as to prefer one creditor over others.

Preference. The paying or securing to one or more of his creditors, by an insolvent debtor, the whole or a part of their claim, to the exclusion or detriment of the rest. The act of an insolvent debtor who, in distributing his property or in assigning it for the benefit of his creditors, pays or secures to one or more creditors the full amount of their claims or a larger amount than they would be entitled to receive on a pro rata distribution. Jackson v. Coons, 285 Ky. 154, 147 S.W.2d 45, 47. It imports the relation of existing creditors having equal equities at the time of the transfer whereby the rights of one are advanced over those of another. In re George Rodman, Inc., C.A.Okl., 792 F.2d 125, 127.

In bankruptcy law, a transfer by an insolvent debtor to one or more of his or her creditors whereby the creditor to whom the property was transferred is put in a better position than other creditors with respect to their priority claims to the assets of the insolvent. The bankruptcy trustee may disallow such preferential payments or transfers of property. Bankruptcy Code § 547. See also Secured creditor; Voidable preference.

Preference share. One giving its holder a preference, either as to receipt of dividends, or as to payment in case of winding up, or both. In re Schaffer Stores Co., 224 App.Div. 268, 229 N.Y.S. 735, 739.

Preferential assignment. An assignment of property for the benefit of creditors, made by an insolvent debtor, in which it is directed that a preference (right to be paid first in full) shall be given to a creditor or creditors therein named over other creditors. Such assignments are controlled by statute in most states, normally requiring recording, filling of schedules of assets and liabilities, giving notice to creditors, etc. Most all state statutes prohibit preferential assignments as being fraudulent conveyances. See Preference.

Preferential claim. See Preferential debts.

Preferential debts. In bankruptcy, those debts which are payable in priority to all others; as, wages of employees and administrative costs. Such debts are classified according to priority of claim. See Bankruptcy Code § 507.

Preferential dividend. See Preferred stock.

Preferential shop. A place of employment in which union members are given preference over nonunion members in matters of employment by agreement with the employer. A labor situation in a business in which preference is given to union men in hiring and layoff, but nonunion men may be hired when members of the union are not available. See Right to work laws.

Preferential tariff. A tariff which imposes lower rates of duty on goods imported from some countries ("preferred countries") than on the same goods imported from other countries. See also Most favored nation clause.

Preferential transfer. See Preference; Preferential assignment.

Preferred. Possessing or accorded a priority, advantage, or privilege. Generally denoting a prior or superior claim or right of payment as against another thing of the same kind or class; e.g. creditor with perfected security interest.

Preferred creditor. Creditor with preferential right to payment over junior creditors; e.g. creditor with perfected security interest has priority over unsecured creditor. U.C.C. § 9-301. See also Preferential debts.

Preferred dividend. See Dividend.
Preferred dockets. Lists of preference cases prepared by the clerks when the cases are set for trial. For example, because of the constitutional right to a speedy trial in criminal cases, criminal dockets are normally given preference over civil dockets.

Preferred stock. Stock shares that have preferential rights to dividends or to amounts distributable on liquidation, or to both, ahead of common shareholders. Preferred shares are usually entitled only to receive specified limited amounts as dividends or on liquidation. If preferred shares are entitled to share in excess distributions with common shareholders on some defined basis, they are participating preferred shares. Participating preferred shares may also be called class A common, or some similar designation to reflect its open-ended rights. See also Stock.

Callable. Preferred stock which is subject by its terms to being called in for payment at a predetermined price.

Cumulative dividend. If a dividend is passed, it must be paid to the preferred stockholders before the common stockholders receive their current dividend, and hence, the dividends accumulate in connection with this type of preferred stock.

Non-cumulative dividend. Once a preferred dividend is passed in a particular period, the right to that dividend has passed though the preferred stockholder is entitled to his dividend in the next period before the common stockholders receive their dividend.

Participating. That type of preferred stock which is entitled to additional dividends beyond its stated dividend after the common stock dividend has been paid.

Preferred stock bailout. A procedure whereby the issuance, sale, and later redemption or a preferred stock dividend was used by a shareholder to obtain long-term capital gains without any loss of voting control over the corporation. In effect, therefore, the shareholder was able to bail-out corporate profits without suffering the consequences of dividend income treatment. This procedure led to the enactment by Congress of I.R.C. § 306 which, if applicable, converts the prior long-term capital gain on the sale of the stock to ordinary income. Under these circumstances, the amount of ordinary income is limited to the shareholder's portion of the corporation's earnings and profits existing when the preferred stock was issued as a stock dividend. However, the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 has changed the impact of I.R.C. § 306 substantially due to the repeal of the favorable tax treatment previously given to long term capital gains.

Prior. Preferred stock which takes precedence over other issues of preferred stock of the same corporation.

Preferred stockholders. Beneficial holders of preferred stock shares.

Preferred stockholders' contract. Term used to describe the provisions of the articles of incorporation, the bylaws, or the resolution of the board of directors, creating and defining the rights of holders of the preferred shares in question. Preferred shareholders have only very limited statutory or common law rights outside of the preferred shareholders' contract.

Pregnancy. The condition resulting from the fertilized ovum. The existence of the condition beginning at the moment of conception and terminating with delivery of the child.

Extra uterine or ectopic pregnancy is the development of the ovum outside of the uterine cavity, as in the Fallopian tubes or ovary. Extra uterine pregnancy commonly terminates by rupture of the sac, profuse internal hemorrhage, and death if not relieved promptly by a surgical operation.

Pregnancy, plea of. A plea which a woman capitally convicted may plead in stay of execution; for this, though it is no stay of judgment, yet operates as a respite of execution until she is delivered. See also Matrons, jury of.

Pregnant negative. See Negative pregnant.

Prejudice. A forejudgment; bias; partiality; preconceived opinion. A leaning towards one side of a cause for some reason other than a conviction of its justice. See also Average man test; Bias; Discrimination.

Evidence. Within rule allowing exclusion of relevant evidence if probative value is substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice, means undue tendency to move tribunal to decide on improper basis. State v. Trafton, Me., 425 A.2d 1320, 1324. See Fed.Evid.R. 403.

Of judge. That which disqualifies judge is condition of mind, which sways judgment and renders judge unable to exercise his functions impartially in particular case. It refers to mental attitude or disposition of the judge toward a party to the litigation, and not to any views that he may entertain regarding the subject matter involved. State ex rel. Mitchell v. Sage Stores Co., 157 Kan. 622, 143 P.2d 652, 655.

Speedy trial. Prejudice with respect to right to speedy trial means actual prejudice to defendant's ability to present effective defense, U.S. v. Menke, D.C.Pa., 339 F.Supp. 1023, 1026, and such prejudice is not confined to merely an impairment of the defense but includes any threat to what has been termed an accused's significant stakes, psychological, physical and financial, in the prompt termination of a proceeding which may ultimately deprive him of life, liberty or property. U.S. v. Dreyer, C.A.N.J., 533 F.2d 112, 115.

Without prejudice. Where an offer or admission is made "without prejudice," or a motion is denied or a bill in equity dismissed "without prejudice," it is meant as a declaration that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost, except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided. See also Dismissal with prejudice; Dismissal without prejudice.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR

State v. Gilcrist, 15 Wash.App. 892, 552 P.2d 690, 693. Such may be the ground for new trial and reversal of judgment. Fed.R.Civil P. 59. See also Error; Plain error rule.

Prejudicial publicity. Due process requires that all parties to an action, civil or criminal, receive a trial by an impartial jury or tribunal free from outside influences. Extensive newspaper, radio and television coverage of a criminal trial may deprive the defendant of a fair trial. Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 16 L.Ed.2d 600. See Gag order; Trial (Trial by news media).

Preliminary. Introductory; initiatory; preceding; temporary and provisional; as preliminary examination, injunction, articles of peace, etc.

Preliminary complaint. In some states, a court without jurisdiction to hear a criminal case on its merits may issue a preliminary complaint or process and conduct a probable cause or bind over hearing on such complaint.

Preliminary evidence. Such evidence as is necessary to commence a hearing or trial and which may be received conditionally in anticipation of other evidence linking it to issues in the case. See Foundation.

Preliminary examination. See Preliminary hearing.

Preliminary hearing. The hearing by a judge to determine whether a person charged with a crime should be held for trial. A hearing held in felony cases prior to indictment during which the state is required to produce sufficient evidence to establish that there is probable cause to believe (a) that a crime has been committed and (b) that the defendant committed it. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1.

Preliminary hearing before magistrate is, basically, a first screening of the charge; its function is not to try the defendant, nor does it require the same degree of proof or quality of evidence as is necessary for an indictment or for conviction at trial. Its function is to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to hold an accused for trial. Mattioli v. Brown, 71 Misc.2d 99, 335 N.Y.S.2d 613, 615.

Compare Arraignment. See also Information.

Preliminary injunction. A preliminary injunction should be granted only upon a clear showing by party seeking the extraordinary remedy of (1) probable success upon a trial on the merits, and (2) likely irreparable injury to him unless the injunction is granted, or (3) if his showing of probable success is limited but he raised substantial and difficult issues meriting further inquiry, that the harm to him outweighs the injury to others if it is denied. Cohen v. Price Commission, D.C.N.Y., 337 F.Supp. 1236, 1239. See Fed.R.Civil P. 65. See also Injunction.
inclusive term, and it does not have one definite and fixed meaning; its meaning is to be determined by its context and is dependent on circumstances in which used, and may mean a room, shop, building, or any definite area. Allen v. Genry, Ala., 97 So. 1728, 1732.

A dwelling unit and the structure of which it is a part and faculties and appurtenances therein and grounds, areas, and facilities held out for the use of tenants generally or whose use is promised to the tenant. Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, 1.301(a).

In criminal law. The term as used in a search warrant includes land, buildings, and appurtenances thereto. State v. Trujillo, 95 N.M. 535, 624 P.2d 44.

In workers’ compensation acts. “Premises” of the employer as used in workers’ compensation acts is not restricted to the permanent site of the statutory employer’s business nor limited to property owned or leased by him but contemplates any place under the exclusive control of employer where his usual business is being carried on or conducted. Boatman v. Superior Outdoor Advertising Co., Mo.App., 482 S.W.2d 743, 745.

A bounty or bonus; a consideration given to invite a loan or a bargain, as the consideration paid to the assignor by the assignee of a lease, or to the transferer by the transferee of shares of stock, etc. So stock is said to be “at a premium” when its market price exceeds its nominal or face value. The excess of issue (or market) price over par value. See Par.

In granting a lease, part of the rent is sometimes capitalized and paid in a lump sum at the time the lease is granted. This is called a “premium.”

The sum paid or agreed to be paid by an insured to the underwriter (insurer) as the consideration for the insurance. The price for insurance protection for a specified period of exposure.

See also Earned premium; Net premium; Net single premium.

Advance premium. Payment made at the start of the period covered by the insurance policy.

Premium note. A promissory note given by the insured for part or all of the amount of the premium.

Securities. The amount by which a preferred stock or bond may sell above its par (face) value. In the case of a new issue of bonds or stocks, premium is the amount the market price rises over the original selling price. Also refers to a charge sometimes made when a stock is borrowed to make delivery on a short sale. May refer, also, to redemption price of a bond or preferred stock if it is higher than face value.

Unearned premium. Portion of original premium not yet earned by insurance company and therefore due policyholder if the policy should be cancelled. In accounting, the account which reflects that portion of a premium that has been paid for insurance coverage which has not yet been extended. The basic insurance reserve in the casualty insurance business. Since policyholders typically pay the full premium in advance, the premium is wholly “unearned” when the primary insur er receives it. United States v. Consumer Life Ins. Co., 430 U.S. 725, 729, 97 S.Ct. 1440, 1443, 52 L.Ed.2d 4. See I.R.C. § 801(c).

Premium bond. See bond.

Premium loan. Loan made for purpose of paying an insurance premium and secured by the policy.

Premium pudicitiae /priyamiyam pyowdasshiyiy/. The price of chastity. A compensation for the loss of chastity, paid or promised to, or for the benefit of, a seduced female.

Premium tax. Tax paid by insurer on gross insurance premiums sold in state.

Premunire /premonayriy/. See Premunire.

Prenatal injuries. See Child.

Prenda /prénda/. In Spanish law, pledge.

Prender, prendre /préndar próndr(a)/. L. Fr. To take. The power or right of taking a thing without waiting for it to be offered. See A prendre.

Prender de baron /préndar da bårôn/. L. Fr. In old English law, a taking of husband; marriage. An exception or plea which might be used to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder against the killer of her former husband.

Prenomen /priynowman/. Lat. The first or Christian name of a person.

Pre-nuptial agreement. One entered into by prospective spouses prior to marriage but in contemplation and in consideration thereof; by it, the property or other financial rights of one or both of the prospective spouses are determined or are secured to one or both of them or their children. Friedlander v. Friedlander, 80 Wash.2d 293, 494 P.2d 208, 212. A number of states have adopted the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act which prescribes the content, execution, amendment, etc. of such agreements. See also Antenuptial agreement; Mat rital agreements; Post-nuptial agreement.

Prepaid expense. An expense paid before it is currently due. In accounting, an expenditure for a benefit not yet enjoyed, e.g. pre-paid insurance premiums from the standpoint of the insured. Cash basis as well as accrual basis taxpayers are generally required to capitalize pre-payments for rent, insurance, etc. that cover more than one year. Deductions are taken during the period the benefits are received.

Prepaid income. In accounting, income received but not yet earned; also referred to as deferred revenue.

Prepaid interest. Interest received before the time it is earned.

Prepaid legal services. System by which persons may pay premiums to cover future legal services much the same as payments are made for future medical expenses. Such plan may be either open-ended whereby the person can secure legal services from the attorney of his choice, or closed-end whereby he must secure the services of a particular attorney, group of attorneys, or list of attorneys.

Preparation. With respect to criminal offense, consists in devising or arranging means or measures necessary for its commission, while attempt is direct movement toward commission after preparations are made. State v. Quick, 199 S.C. 256, 19 S.E.2d 101, 103. See also Aid and at.

Prepare. To provide with necessary means; to make ready; to provide with what is appropriate or necessary.

Prepayment. Payment of debt obligation or expense before it is due.

Prepayment clause. Provision in mortgage or note giving borrower right to pay off the indebtedness before it becomes due. See also Prepayment penalty.

Prepayment penalty. A penalty under a note, mortgage, or deed of trust, imposed when the loan is paid before its due date. Consideration to terminate loan at borrower's election before maturity. See also Penalty clause.

Prepayments. Assets representing expenditures for future benefits. Rent and insurance premiums paid in advance are usually classified as current prepayments.

Prepense. Forethought; preconceived; premeditated.

Preponderance of evidence. As standard of proof in civil cases, is evidence which is of greater weight or more convincing than the evidence which is offered in opposition to it; that is, evidence which as a whole shows that the fact sought to be proved is more probable than not. Braud v. Kinchen, La.App., 310 So.2d 657, 659. With respect to burden of proof in civil actions, means greater weight of evidence, or evidence which is more credible and convincing to the mind. That which best accords with reason and probability. The word "preponderance" means something more than "weight"; it denotes a superiority of weight, or outweighing. The words are not synonymous, but substantially different. There is generally a "weight" of evidence on each side in case of contested facts. But juries cannot properly act upon the weight of evidence, in favor of the one having the onus, unless it overbear, in some degree, the weight upon the other side.

That amount of evidence necessary for the plaintiff to win in a civil case. It is that degree of proof which is more probable than not.

Preponderance of evidence may not be determined by the number of witnesses, but by the greater weight of all evidence, which does not necessarily mean the greater number of witnesses, but opportunity for knowledge, information possessed, and manner of testifying determines the weight of testimony.

See also Fair preponderance of evidence.

Prerogative /prərəˈɡətəv/. An exclusive or peculiar right or privilege. The special power, privilege, immi-nity, right or advantage vested in an official person, either generally, or in respect to the things of his office, or in an official body, as a court or legislature.

Prerogative court. In old English law, a court established for the trial of all testamentary causes, where the deceased left bona notabilia within two different dioceses; in which case the probate of wills belonged to the archbishop of the province, by way of special prerogative. And all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons were originally cognizable herein, before a judge appointed by the archbishop, called the "judge of the prerogative court," from whom an appeal lay to the privy council. The jurisdiction of these courts became obsolete with the transfer of the testamentary jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

Prerogative law. That part of the common law of England which is more particularly applicable to the king.

Prerogative writs. In English law, the name was given to certain judicial writs issued by the courts only upon proper cause shown, never as a mere matter of right, the theory being that they involved a direct interference by the government with the liberty and property of the subject, and therefore were justified only as an exercise of the extraordinary power (prerogative) of the crown. In America, issuance is now generally regulated by statute, and such are generally referred to as extraordinary writs or remedies.

Such writs have been abolished in the federal and most state courts with the adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure. The relief formerly available by such writs is now available by appropriate action or motion under the Rules of Civil Procedure. See Rule 81. These writs are the writs of mandamus, procedendo, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and certiorari.

Pres /priːs/. L. Fr. Near. Cy pres, so near; as near. See Cy pres.

Presale. Sale of real estate (e.g., condominium units) before construction has started.

Presbyter /prɛzˈbɛtər/. Lat. In civil and ecclesiastical law, an elder; a presbyter; a priest.

Presbyterianism. One of the principal systems of church polity known as the "Christian Protestant Church", occupying an intermediate position between episcopacy and congregationalism. A religious faith or doctrine, based on the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Larger and Shorter Catechisms.

Presbyterium. That part of the church where divine offices are performed; formerly applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priest, and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church.

Prescribable /prɛskrɪˈbælbəl/. That to which a right may be acquired by prescription.
Prescribe. To assert a right or title to the enjoyment of a thing, on the ground of having hitherto had the uninterrupted and immemorial enjoyment of it.

To lay down authoritatively as a guide, direction, or rule; to impose as a peremptory order; to dictate; to point, to direct; to give as a guide, direction, or rule of action; to give law. To direct; define; mark out.

In a medical sense "prescribe" means to direct, designate, or order use of a particular remedy, therapy, medicine, or drug.

Prescription. A direction of remedy or remedies for a disease, illness, or injury and the manner of using them. A right to use another's property.

Prescriptive easement. A claim of prescription in a que estate. See also Adverse possession.

International law. Acquisition of sovereignty over a territory through continuous and undisputed exercise of sovereignty over it during such a period as is necessary to create under the influence of historical development the general conviction that the present condition of things is in conformity with international order. See also Acquisitoion of sovereignty over a territory.

Real property law. The name given to a mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment. Hester v. Sawyers, 41 N.M. 497, 71 P.2d 646, 649. Prescription is the term usually applied to incorporeal hereditaments, while "adverse possession" is applied to lands. See Hereditaments.

In Louisiana, prescription is defined as a manner of acquiring the ownership of property, or discharging debts, by the effect of time, and under the conditions regulated by law. Each of these prescriptions has its special and particular definition. The prescription by which the ownership of property is acquired, is a right by which a mere possessor acquires the ownership of a thing which he possesses by the continuance of his possession during the time fixed by law. The prescription by which debts are released, is a peremptory and perpetual bar to every species of action, real or personal, when the creditor has been silent for a certain time without urging his claim. In this sense of the term it is very nearly equivalent to what is elsewhere expressed by "limitation of actions," or rather, the "bar of the statute of limitations."

See also Adverse possession; Prescriptive easement.

Prescriptive easement. A right to use another's property which is not inconsistent with the owner's rights and which is acquired by a use, open and notorious, adverse and continuous for the statutory period (e.g., twenty years). To a certain extent, it resembles title by adverse possession but differs to the extent that the adverse user acquires only an easement and not title. To create an easement by "prescription," the use must have been open, continuous, exclusive, and under claim of right for statutorily prescribed period with knowledge or imputed knowledge of the owner. Matsu v. Chavez, 96 N.M. 775, 635 P.2d 584, 587. See also Adverse possession.

Presence. Act, fact, or state of being in a certain place and not elsewhere, or within sight or call, at hand, or in some place that is being thought of. The existence of a person in a particular place at a given time particularly with reference to some act done there and then. Besides actual presence, the law recognizes constructive presence, which latter may be predicated of a person who, though not on the very spot, was near enough to be accounted present by the law, or who was actively co-operating with another who was actually present.

Presence of an officer. An offense is committed in "presence" or "view" of officer, within rule authorizing arrest without warrant, when officer sees act constituting it, though at distance, or when circumstances within his observation give probable cause for belief that defendant has committed offense, or when he hears disturbance created by offense and proceeds at once to scene, or if offense is continuing, or has not been fully consummated when arrest is made.

Presence of defendant. In the trial of all felonies, the defendant or accused has the right to be present at every stage of the criminal proceeding unless he willfully and without justification absents himself or by his conduct renders it impossible to conduct the trial. In many states, this rule does not obtain as to misdemeanors. Fed.R.Crim.P. 43 specifies when the presence of the defendant is required and not required.

Presence of the court. A contempt is in the "presence of the court," if it is committed in the ocular view of the court, or where the court has direct knowledge of the contempt.

Presence of the testator. Will is attested in presence of testator if witnesses are within range of any of testator's senses. In re Demaris' Estate, 166 Or. 36, 110 P.2d 571, 585, 586. See Attestation.

Present, n. A gift; a gratuity; anything presented or given.

Present, adj. Now existing; at hand; relating to the present time; considered with reference to the present time. See also Presentment.

Present ability. As used in describing an element of the crime of assault, it means immediate or a point near immediate as regards the defendant's capacity to inflict harm. People v. Ranson, 40 Cal.App.3d 317, 114 Cal. Rptr. 874, 877.

Present conveyance. A conveyance made with the intention that it take effect at once and not at a future time.
Present danger test. See Clear and present danger doctrine.

Present enjoyment. The immediate or present possession and use of an estate or property, as distinguished from such as is postponed to a future time.

Present estate. An estate in immediate possession; one now existing, or vested at the present time; as distinguished from a future estate, the enjoyment of which is postponed to a future time.

Present interest. One which entitles the owner to the immediate possession of the property.

A "present interest", as distinguished from a future interest for purpose of federal gift tax annual exclusion, denotes a present right to realize, enjoy or use donated property. Duffey v. U. S., D.C.Minn., 182 F.Sup. 765, 767. An interest in property is a "present interest" if the donee has the right presently to use, possess, or enjoy it. Gilmore v. C. I. R., C.A. 6th, 213 F.2d 520, 521.

Present sale. A sale which is accomplished by the making of the contract. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

Present time. A period of appreciable and generally considerable duration within which certain transactions are to take place.

Present use. One which has an immediate existence, and is at once operated upon by the statute of uses.

Presentative advowson /přázentatav advávze/. See Advowson.

Pre-sentence hearing. Procedural step prior to sentencing at which a judge may examine the presentence report and all other relevant material before imposing sentence. Sentencing is a "critical stage" of a criminal prosecution requiring assistance of appointed counsel. Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254, 19 L.Ed.2d 336. See Pre-sentence investigation; Pre-sentence report.

Pre-sentence investigation. Investigation of the relevant background of a convicted offender, usually conducted by a probation officer attached to a court, designed to act as a sentencing guide for the sentencing judge. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3552 and Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(c). See also Pre-sentence report.

Pre-sentence report. The report prepared from the presentence investigation, which is designed to assist the judge in passing sentence on a convicted defendant. Presentence reports vary in scope and focus, but typically contain at least the following items: (1) complete description of the situation surrounding the criminal activity; (2) offender's educational background; (3) offender's employment background; (4) offender's social history; (5) residence history of the offender; (6) offender's medical history; (7) information about environment to which the offender will return; (8) information about any resources available to assist the offender; (9) probation officer's view of the offender's motivations and ambitions; (10) full description of the defendant's criminal record; and, (11) recommendation as to disposition. See e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. § 3552 and Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(c) with regard to presentence reports in federal criminal cases.

Presenter. Any person presenting a draft or demand for payment for honor under a credit even though that person is a confirming bank or other correspondent which is acting under an issuer's authorization. U.C.C. § 5-112(3). See also Presentment.

Presenting bank. Any bank presenting an item except a payor bank, U.C.C. § 4-105(e), i.e., a bank that demands of a drawee or other payor that she pay or accept a draft or other instrument.

Presently. Immediately; now; at once. A right which may be exercised "presently" as opposed to one in reversion or remainder.

Presentment. The written notice taken by a grand jury of any offense, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the government. A presentment is an accusation, initiated by the grand jury itself, and in effect an instruction that an indictment be drawn. U. S. v. Briggs, C.A.Fla., 514 F.2d 794, 804. A written accusation of crime made and returned by the grand jury upon its own initiative in the exercise of its lawful inquisitorial powers, is in the form of a bill of indictment, and in practice is signed individually by all the grand jurors who return it. State v. Hudson, Tenn.Cr.App., 487 S.W.2d 672, 674. See also Indictment; Information; Presenter.

The production of a negotiable instrument to the drawee for his acceptance, or to the drawer or acceptor for payment; or of a promissory note to the party liable, for payment of the same. Presentment is a demand for acceptance or payment made upon the maker, acceptor, drawee or other payor by or on behalf of the holder. U.C.C. § 3-504(1).

Presentment warranty. See Warranty.

Present recollection recorded. A witness may use any document which helps revive or "jog" his memory of a past event and such document does not thereby become evidence. His testimony is the evidence though the opponent is entitled to see and examine the document and to impeach the credibility of the witness with it. Fed.Evid.R. 612. See also Past recollection recorded.

Present recollection revived. The use by a witness of some writing or other object to refresh his recollection so that he may testify about past events from present recollection. Askins v. State, Md.App., 284 A.2d 626, 631. See also Present recollection recorded.

Authors. The present instrument. The phrase "these presents" is used in any legal document to designate the instrument in which the phrase itself occurs.

Present value. Time value of money. Current value of a future payment, or series of payments, discounted at some compound or discount rate. The amount as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future, discounted to the date certain. See, e.g., U.C.C. § 2A–103.

Preservation. Keeping safe from harm; avoiding injury, destruction, or decay; maintenance. It is not cre-
Preside. To occupy the place of authority as of president, chairman, moderator, etc. To direct, control or regulate proceedings as chief officer, moderator, etc. To possess or exercise authority. To preside over a court is to "hold" it—to direct, control, and govern it as the chief officer. A judge may "preside" whether sitting as a sole judge or as one of several judges.

President. One placed in authority over others; a chief officer; a presiding or managing officer; a governor, ruler, or director. The chairman, moderator, or presiding officer of a legislative or deliberative body, appointed to keep order, manage the proceedings, and govern the administrative details of their business.

The chief executive magistrate of a state or nation, particularly under a democratic form of government; or of a province, colony, or dependency. In the United States, the word is commonly used in reference to the private as well as public character of the nation's chief executive. U. S. v. Metzdorf, D.C.Mont., 252 F. 933, 937.

Presidential electors. A body of electors chosen in the different states, whose sole duty it is to elect a president and vice-president of the United States. Each state appoints, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state is entitled in congress. Const.U.S. Art. 2, § 1; Amendment XII; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 13 S.Ct. 3, 36 L.Ed. 869. The usual method of appointment is by general ballot, so that each voter in a state votes for the whole number of electors to which his state is entitled. See Electoral college.

Presidential powers. See Executive powers.

President of the United States. The official title of the chief executive officer of the federal government in the United States.

Press. The aggregate of publications issuing from the press, or the giving publicity to one's sentiments and opinions through the medium of printing; as in the phrase "liberty of the press." Freedom of the press is guaranteed by the First Amendment. See Liberty.

In old English practice, a piece or skin of parchment, several of which used to be sewed together in making up a roll or record of proceedings. 1 Bl.Comm. 183.

Pressing seamen. See Impressment.

Pressing to death. See Peine forte et dure.

Prest. In old English law, a duty in money to be paid by the sheriff upon his account in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands.

Pressation /prəˈsteɪʃən/. In old English law, a pressing or payment of money. A payment or performance; the rendering of a service.

Prestimony /prɛstəˈmənəni/ or præstimowni/ /priˈstəməw̫ni/. In canon law, a fund or revenue appropriated by the founder for the subsistence of a priest, without being erected into any title or benefice, chapel, prebend, or priory. It is not subject to the ordinary; but of it the patron, and those who have a right from him, are the collators.

Prest money. In old English law, a payment which binds those who receive it to be ready at all times appointed, being meant especially of soldiers.

Presumably. Fit to be assumed as true in advance of conclusive evidence; credibly deduced; fair to suppose; by reasonable supposition or inference; what appears to be entitled to belief without direct evidence. See Presumption.

Presume. To assume beforehand. In a more technical sense, to believe or accept upon probable evidence. See Presumption.

Presumed intent. A person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his voluntary acts. The government is not required in crimes to prove that a defendant intended the precise consequences of his act and his criminal intent can be inferred from his act.

Presumption. An inference in favor of a particular fact. A presumption is a rule of law, statutory or judicial, by which finding of a basic fact gives rise to existence of presumed fact, until presumption is rebutted. Van Wart v. Cook, Okl.App., 557 P.2d 1161, 1163. A legal device which operates in the absence of other proof to require that certain inferences be drawn from the available evidence. Port Terminal & Warehousing Co. v. John S. James Co., D.C.Ga., 92 F.R.D. 100, 106.

A presumption is an assumption of fact that the law requires to be made from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. A presumption is not evidence. A presumption is either conclusive or rebuttable. Every rebuttable presumption is either (a) a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence or (b) a presumption affecting the burden of proof. Calif.Evid.Code, § 600.

In all civil actions and proceedings not otherwise provided for by Act of Congress or by the Federal Rules of Evidence, a presumption imposes on the party against whom it is directed the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut or meet the presumption, but does not shift to such party the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of nonpersuasion, which remains throughout the trial upon the party on whom it was originally cast. Federal Evidence Rule 301.

See also Disputable presumption; Inference; Juris et de jure; Presumptive evidence; Prima facie; Raise a presumption.

Commercial law. A presumption means that the trier of fact must find the existence of the fact presumed unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its non-existence. U.C.C. § 1-201(31).

Conclusive presumptions. A conclusive presumption is one in which proof of basic fact renders the existence of the presumed fact conclusive and irrebuttable. Such is created when a jury is charged that it must infer the presumed fact if certain predicate facts are established. People v. Sellers, 3 Dept., 109 A.D.2d 387, 492 N.Y.S.2d 127, 128. Few in number and often statutory, the majority view is that a conclusive presumption is in reality a substantive rule of law, not a rule of evidence. An example of this type of presumption is the rule that a child under seven years of age is presumed to be incapable of committing a felony. The Federal Evidence Rules (301, 302) and most state rules of evidence are concerned only with rebuttable presumptions. Compare Rebuttable presumption, below.

Conflicting presumptions. See Inconsistent presumptions below.

Inconsistent presumptions. If presumptions are inconsistent, the presumption applies that is founded upon weightier considerations of policy. If considerations of policy are of equal weight neither presumption applies. Uniform Rules of Evidence. Rule 301(b).

Irrebuttable presumption. See Conclusive presumptions, above.

Mandatory presumption. See Conclusive presumptions, above.

Permissive presumption. One which allows, but does not require, trier of fact to infer elemental fact from proof by prosecutor of basic one, and which places no burden of any kind on defendant. State v. Scott, 8 Ohio App.3d 1, 8 O.B.R. 1, 455 N.E.2d 1363, 1368.

Presumptions of fact. Such are presumptions which do not compel a finding of the presumed fact but which warrant one when the basic fact has been proved. The trend has been to reject the classifications of presumptions of "fact" and presumptions of "law". See inference.

Presumptions of law. A presumption of law is one which, once the basic fact is proved and no evidence to the contrary has been introduced, compels a finding of the existence of the presumed fact. The presumption of law is rebuttable and in most cases the adversary introduces evidence designed to overcome it. The trend has been to reject the classifications of presumptions of "law" and presumptions of "fact." See Procedural presumption.

Procedural presumption. One which is rebuttable, which operates to require production of credible evidence to refute the presumption, after which the presumption disappears. Maryland Cas. Co. v. Williams, C.A.Miss., 377 F.2d 389, 394, 35 A.L.R.3d 275.

Rebuttable presumption. A presumption that can be overturned upon the showing of sufficient proof. In general, all presumptions other than conclusive presumptions are rebuttable presumptions. Once evidence tending to rebut the presumption is introduced, the force of the presumption is entirely dissipated and the party with the burden of proof must come forward with evidence to avoid a directed verdict. Compare Conclusive presumptions, above.

Statutory presumption. A presumption, either rebuttable or conclusive, which is created by statute in contrast to a common law presumption; e.g. I.R.C. § 6062 (individual’s name on tax return is prima facie evidence of his authority to sign return).

Presumption of death. A presumption which arises upon the disappearance and continued absence of a person from his customary location or home for an extended period of time, commonly 7 years, without any apparent reason for such absence. Magers v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., C.A.Mo., 335 S.W.2d 355.

Presumption of innocence. A hallowed principle of criminal law to the effect that the government has the burden of proving every element of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt and that the defendant has no burden to prove his innocence. It arises at the first stage of the criminal process but it is not a true presumption because the defendant is not required to come forward with proof of his innocence once evidence of guilt is introduced to avoid a directed verdict of guilty.

Presumption of innocence succinctly conveys the principle that no person may be convicted of a crime unless the government carries the burden of proving his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt but it does not mean that no significance at all may be attached to the indictment. U. S. v. Friday, D.C.Mich., 404 F.Supp. 1343, 1346.

Presumption of legitimacy. Whenever it is established in an action that a child was born to a woman while she was the lawful wife of a specified man, the party asserting the illegitimacy of the child has the burden of producing evidence and the burden of persuading the trier of fact beyond reasonable doubt that the man was not the father of the child. Bernheimer v. First Natl. Bank, 359 Mo. 1119, 225 S.W.2d 745; Model Code of Evidence, Rule 703.

Presumption of survivorship. A presumption of fact, to the effect that one person survived another, applied for the purpose of determining a question of succession or similar matter, in a case where the two persons perished in the same catastrophe, and there are no circumstances extant to show which of them actually died first, except those on which the presumption is founded, viz., differences of age, sex, strength, or physical condition.

Presumptive. Resting on presumption; created by or arising out of presumption; inferred; assumed; supposed; as, "presumptive" damages, evidence, heir, notice, or title.

Presumptive evidence. Prima facie evidence or evidence which is not conclusive and admits of explanation or contradiction; evidence which must be received and treated as true and sufficient until and unless rebutted by other evidence, i.e., evidence which a statute says shall be presumptive of another fact unless rebutted. See Presumption; Prima facie evidence.

Presumptive trust. Trust raised by implication of law and presumed always to have been contemplated by parties; intention as to which is to be found in nature of transaction but not expressed in deed or instrument of conveyance, and is thus distinguished from "constructive trust." Kollbaum v. K & K Chevrolet Inc., 196 Neb. 555, 244 N.W.2d 173, 174. Also called "Resulting trust."

Prêt /prê/. In French law, a loan. A contract by which one of the parties delivers an article to the other, to be used by the latter, on condition of his returning, after having used it, the same article in nature or an equivalent of the same species and quality.

Prêt à intérêt /prê à ântêrê/. Loan at interest. A contract by which one of the parties delivers an article to the other, to be used by the latter, on condition of his returning, after having used it, the same article in nature or an equivalent of the same species and quality.

Prêt à usage /prê à juwâsâzh/. Loan to use. A contract by which one of the parties delivers an article to the other, to be used by the latter, on condition of his returning, after having used it, the same article in nature or an equivalent of the same species and quality.

Pretax earnings. Net income before income taxes.

Prêt de consommation /prê dâ kônsonmasâyown/. Loan for consumption. A contract by which one of the parties delivers an article to the other, to be used by the latter, on condition of his returning, after having used it, the same article in nature or an equivalent of the same species and quality. A contract identical with the commodatum (q.v.) of the civil law.

Pretend. To feign or simulate; to hold that out as real which is false or baseless.

Prête-nom /prêtnôwm/. One who lends his name.

Pretense. See False pretenses.

Preter legal /priytyar liygal/. Not agreeable to law; exceeding the limits of law; not legal.

Pretermisson. The state of one who is pretermitted, as an heir or child of the testator. The act of omitting a child or heir from a will.

Pretermisson statute. Those laws of the various states which make provision for children and heirs who have been omitted from the will of the father or ancestor. Commonly the child takes the same share of the estate which he would have taken if the testator had died intestate unless the omission was intentional and not occasioned by accident or mistake. Nicholson v. Sorensen, Alaska, 517 P.2d 766, 768. See Pretermitted heir.

Pretermit /priytyrmít/. To "pretermit" is to pass by, to omit or to disregard, e.g., failure of testator to mention his children in his will.
against the defendant unless the admissions are reduced to writing and signed by the defendant and his attorney. Fed.R.Crim.P. 17.1.

Pre-trial discovery. Those devices which may be used by the parties to an action prior to trial to discover evidence and otherwise prepare for trial such as interrogatories, depositions, requests for admission of fact, etc. provided for under rules of procedure and statutes; e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 26–37. See Discovery.

Pre-trial diversion. A system of recent origin by which certain defendants in criminal cases are referred to community agencies prior to trial while their criminal complaints or indictments are held in abeyance. The defendant may be given job training, counselling, and education. If he responds successfully within a specified period (e.g. 90 days, more or less), the charges against him are commonly dismissed.

Pre-trial hearing. See Pre-trial conference.

Pre-trial intervention. A program that diverts selected criminal defendants from the normal prosecution process in order that they can be rehabilitated and returned to the community as productive citizens with no criminal record. Upon successfully completing the PTL program the pending criminal charges are dismissed. See e.g. N.J.Court Rule 3:28.

Pre-trial order. An order embodying the terms and stipulations agreed upon at the pre-trial conference or hearing. This order governs the conduct of the trial and binds the parties unless, for good cause shown, the trial judge modifies it. Fed.R.Civil P. 16.

Preval. To be or become effective or effectual, to be in force, to obtain, to be in general use or practice, to be commonly accepted or adopted; to exist. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Gamble, 155 Fla. 678, 21 So.2d 348, 350. To succeed; to win.

Prevailing party. The party to a suit who successfully prosecutes the action or successfully defends against it, prevailing on the main issue, even though not necessarily to the extent of his original contention. The one in whose favor the decision or verdict is rendered and judgment entered. Jordan v. Elizabethan Manor, 181 Mont. 424, 593 P.2d 1049, 1055. This may be the party prevailing in interest, and not necessarily the prevailing party unless court otherwise directs, "prevailing party" means a party who has obtained some relief in an action, even if that party has not sustained all of his or her claims. First Commodity Traders, Inc. v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., C.A.III., 766 F.2d 1007, 1015.

The interpretation of this term is important as regards attorney fees in that by statute in certain cases (e.g., civil rights) attorney fees are awarded to the prevailing party. See e.g., 42 U.S.C.A. § 1988. See also Equal Access to Justice Act.

Prevarication /pravarékéshon/. In the civil law, the action with unfaithfulness and want of probity; deceitful, crafty, or unfaithful conduct; particularly, such as is manifested in concealing a crime.

Prevent. To hinder, frustrate, prohibit, impede, or preclude; to obstruct; to intercept. Orme v. Atlas Gas and Oil Co., 217 Minn. 27, 13 N.W.2d 757, 761. To stop or intercept the approach, access, or performance of a thing. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Prevention. In the civil law, the right of a judge to take cognizance of an action over which he has concurrent jurisdiction with another judge.

In canon law, the right which a superior person or officer has to lay hold of, claim, or transact an affair prior to an inferior one, to whom otherwise it more immediately belongs.

Preventive detention. Confinement imposed generally on a defendant in criminal case who has threatened to escape or otherwise violate the law while awaiting trial or disposition, or of a mentally ill person who may harm himself or others. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3142. The term is also used to describe the improper use of bail. See also Commitment; Preventive justice.

Preventive injunction. See Restraining order.

Preventive justice. The system of measures taken by government with reference to the direct prevention of crime. It generally consists in obliging those persons whom there is probable ground to suspect of future misbehavior to give full assurance to the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not happen, by requiring pledges or securities to keep the peace, or for their good behavior (e.g. peace bonds).

Preventive remedy. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Previous. Antecedent; prior; before. Sometimes limited in meaning to "next prior to" or "next preceding".

Previously taxed income (PTI). Before the Subchapter S Revision Act of 1982, the undistributed taxable income of an S corporation was taxed to the shareholders as of the last day of the corporation's tax year and usually could be withdrawn by the shareholders without tax consequences at some later point in time. The role of PTI has been taken over by the accumulated adjustments account.

Price. The cost at which something is obtained. Something which one ordinarily accepts voluntarily in exchange for something else. The consideration given for the purchase of a thing. Amount which a prospective seller indicates as the sum for which he is willing to sell; market value. The amount of money given or set as the amount to be given as a consideration for the sale of a specified thing. The term may be synonymous with cost, and with value, as well as with consideration, though price is not always identical either with consideration. The consideration given for the purchase of a thing. Amount which a prospective seller indicates as the sum for which he is willing to sell; market value. The term may be synonymous with cost, and with value, as well as with consideration, though price is not always identical either with consideration.

See also Asking price; Fair market value; Going price; Liquidation price; Open price term.

Support price. A minimum price set by the government for a particular agricultural raw commodity. For example, the support price of wheat may be set at, say $2 per bushel. That means that the farmer never has to sell his or her wheat below that support price. See also Parity.

Target price. Prices set by the government for particular agricultural commodities such as wheat and corn. If the actual market price falls below the target price, farmers get a subsidy from the government for the difference. See Parity.

Unit pricing. Pricing of food products expressed in a well-known unit such as ounces or pounds.

Price current. A list or enumeration of various articles of merchandise, with their prices, the duties, if any, payable thereon, when imported or exported, with the drawbacks occasionally allowed upon their exportation, etc.

Price discrimination. Exists when a buyer pays a price that is different from the price paid by another buyer for an identical product or service. Price discrimination is prohibited if the effect of this discrimination may be to lessen substantially or injure competition, except where it was implemented to dispose of perishable or obsolete goods, was the result of differences in costs incurred, or was given in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor. Clayton Act, § 2. See also Predatory intent; Robinson-Patman Act.

Price earnings ratio. The market price per share of a company's common stock divided by the company's annual earnings per share. For example, a stock selling for $50 per share, and earnings of $5 per share, is said to be selling at a price earnings ratio of 10 to 1.

Price-fixing. A combination formed for the purpose of and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity. Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Center Associates, D.C. N.Y., 472 F.Supp. 665, 676. The cooperative setting of price levels or range by competing firms, which would otherwise be set by natural market forces. Such agreements are in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Price-fixing within intent of Sherman Act is either horizontal (dealing with arrangements among competitors, as between competing retailers) or vertical (attempting to control resale price, as agreements between manufac-

See also Horizontal price-fixing; Peg; Per se violations; Predatory intent; Resale price maintenance; Vertical price-fixing contract.

Price index. A number representing average prices as a percent of the average prevailing at some other time (called the base or base year).

Price leadership. A market condition in which a leader in the industry establishes a price and the others in the field follow suit by adopting that price as their own. Price leadership implies a set of industry practices or customs under which list price changes are normally announced by a specific firm accepted as the leader by others, who follow the leader's initiatives. Such practices have been held to not be in violation of the antitrust laws in the absence of a showing of confederated action or an intent to monopolize. United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 40 S.Ct. 293, 64 L.Ed. 343; United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693, 47 S.Ct. 748, 71 L.Ed. 1302.

Price supports. A device used generally by the federal government to keep prices (normally commodity prices) from falling below a predesignated level by such means as loans, subsidies, and government purchases. See also Parity; Price.

Priest. A sacerdotal minister of a church. A person in the second order of the ministry, as distinguished from bishops and deacons.

Priest-penitent privilege. In evidence, the recognition of the seal of confession which bars testimony as to the contents of a communication from one to his confessor. Nearly all states provide for this privilege by statute.

Prima impressionis /práymi impréshiyówns/. A case prima impressionis (of the first impression) is a case of a new kind, to which no established principle of law or precedent directly applies, and which must be decided entirely by reason as distinguished from authority. See First impression case.

Primae preces /práymi prýsíyz/. Lat. In the civil law, an imperial prerogative by which the emperor exercised the right of naming to the first prebend that became vacant after his accession, in every church of the empire.

Prima facie /práymi fýshiy(i)y//. Lat. At first sight; on the first appearance; on the face of it; so far as can be judged from the first disclosure; presumably; a fact presumed to be true unless disproved by some evidence to the contrary. State ex rel. Herbert v. Whims, 68 Ohio App. 39, 38 N.E.2d 596, 599, 22 O.O. 110. See also Presumption.

Prima facie case. Such as will prevail until contradicted and overcome by other evidence. Pacific Telephone
A prima facie case consists of sufficient evidence in the type of case to get plaintiff past a motion for directed verdict in a jury case or motion to dismiss in a nonjury case; it is the evidence necessary to require defendant to proceed with his case. White v. Abrams, C.A.Cal., 495 F.2d 724, 729. Courts use concept of "prima facie case" in two senses: (1) in sense of plaintiff producing evidence sufficient to render reasonable a conclusion in favor of allegation he asserts; this means plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to allow his case to go to jury, and (2) courts use "prima facie" to mean not only that plaintiff's evidence would reasonably allow conclusion plaintiff seeks, but also that plaintiff's evidence compels such a conclusion if the defendant produces no evidence to rebut it. Husbands v. Com. of Pa., D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 1107, 1139.

Prima facie evidence. Evidence good and sufficient on its face. Such evidence as, in the judgment of the law, is sufficient to establish a given fact, or the group or chain of facts constituting the party's claim or defense, and which if not rebutted or contradicted, will remain sufficient. Evidence which, if unexplained or uncontradicted, is sufficient to sustain a judgment in favor of the issue which it supports, but which may be contradicted by other evidence. State v. Haremza, 213 Kan. 201, 515 P.2d 1217, 1222.

That quantum of evidence that suffices for proof of a particular fact until the fact is contradicted by other evidence; once a trier of fact is faced with conflicting evidence, it must weigh the prima facie evidence with all of the other probative evidence presented. Godesky v. Provo City Corp., Utah, 690 P.2d 541, 547. Evidence which, standing alone and unexplained, would maintain the proposition and warrant the conclusion to support which it is introduced. An inference or presumption of law, affirmative or negative of a fact, in the absence of proof, or until proof can be obtained or produced to overcome the inference.

See also Presumptive evidence.

Prima facie tort. The infliction of intentional harm, resulting in damage, without excuse or justification, by an act or series of acts which would otherwise be lawful. Cartwright v. Golub Corp., 51 A.D.2d 407, 381 N.Y.S.2d 901, 902. See also Strict liability.

Primage /práymaj/. In old mercantile law, a small allowance or compensation payable to the master and mariners of a ship or vessel; to the former for the use of his cables and ropes to discharge the goods of the merchant; to the latter for lading and unlading in any port or haven. It is no longer, however, a gratuity to the master, unless especially stipulated; but it belongs to the owners or freighters, and is nothing but an increase of the freight rate.
an issue, the courts will refrain from entertaining the case until the agency has fulfilled its statutory obligation. Sunflower Elec. Co-op., Inc. v. Kansas Power and Light Co., C.A.Kan., 603 F.2d 791, 796. The doctrine does not involve jurisdiction in the technical sense, but it is a doctrine predicated on an attitude of judicial self-restraint and is applied when the court feels that the dispute should be handled by an administrative agency created by the legislature to deal with such problems. Kerr v. Department of Game, 14 Wash.App. 427, 542 P.2d 467, 469. See also Exhaustion of administrative remedies.

Primary liability. In commercial law, a description of the nature of a signer’s engagement, i.e., his or her contract liability, on an instrument which means that he or she is obligated to pay without someone else refusing to pay. Ordinarily, the liability of a maker or acceptor is primary.

Primary market. In finance, the market where the initial sale by the issuer of new securities occurs; in contrast with secondary market where previously issued securities are traded. Compare Secondary market.

Primary obligation. In contract law, the foundational requirement of a contracting party from which other obligations may spring; e.g. in a contract of sale, the buyer’s primary obligation is to purchase the goods.

Primary powers. The principal authority given by a principal to his agent. It differs from "mediate powers."

Primary purpose. That which is first in intention; which is fundamental. The principal or fixed intention with which an act or course of conduct is undertaken.

Prime. A chief ecclesiastic; an archbishop who has jurisdiction over his province, or one of several metropolitans presiding over others. Exarch comes nearest to it in the Greek church. Thus the archbishop of Canterbury is styled "Primate of all England;" the archbishop of York is "Primate of England."

Prime contractor. The party to a building contract who is charged with the total construction and who enters into sub-contracts for such work as electrical, plumbing and the like. Also called "general contractor."

Prime cost. The true price paid for goods upon a bona fide purchase.

Prime interest rate. Usually defined as the lowest rate of interest from time to time charged by a specific lender to its most credit worthy customers for short term unsecured loans. The prime rate is often used as the floor or base rate for setting interest rates on other loans (e.g., consumer loans).

Prime maker. The person who signs a negotiable instrument such as a note and becomes primarily liable thereon.

Prime minister. The name given to the head of the executive branch of parliamentary government, serving under the Chief of State who is usually a monarch. In England, he is the head of the cabinet, and usually holds the office of the First Lord of the Treasury. The office was unknown to the law until 1906, when the prime minister was accorded a place in the order of precedence. By constitutional custom the prime minister is a member of the House of Commons and selected by the Queen.

Primer. A law French word, signifying first; primary.

Primer election. A term used to signify first choice; e.g., the right of the eldest co-partner to first choose a purpurp.

Primer fine. On suing out the writ or praecipe called a "writ of covenant," there was due to the crown, by ancient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for. That was one-tenth of the annual value.

Primer seizin. See Seisin.

Prime serjeant. In English law, the king’s first serjeant at law.

Prime tenant. See Tenant.

Primicerius. In Old English law, the first of any degree of men.

Primitie. In Old English law, first fruits; the first year’s whole profits of a spiritual preferment.

Primitive obligation. See Obligation.

Primo beneficio. A Latin word meaning first right.

Primo executienda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstruatur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis praecipe. To the first-born among several children of the same parents; seniority by birth in the same family. The superior or exclusive right possessed by the eldest son, and particularly, his right to succeed to the estate of his ancestor, in right of his seniority by birth, to the exclusion of younger sons.

Primogenitura. The state of being the first-born among several children of the same parents; seniority by birth in the same family. The superior or exclusive right possessed by the eldest son, and particularly, his right to succeed to the estate of his ancestor, in right of his seniority by birth, to the exclusion of younger sons.

Primogenitus. In Old English law, a first-born or eldest son.

Primo venienti. To the first coming. An executor anciently paid debts as they were presented, whether the assets were sufficient to meet all debts or not.

Primum decretum. The first decree; a preliminary decree granted on the non-appearance of a defendant, by which the plaintiff was put in possession of his goods, or of the thing itself which was demanded. In the courts of admiralty, this name was given to a provisional decree.

Prince. In a general sense, a sovereign; the ruler of a nation or state. More particularly, the son of a king or emperor, or the issue of a royal family; as princes of the blood. The chief of any body of men. In English law, the eldest son of the reigning sovereign is invested as the Prince of Wales.

Princeps /prínseps/. Lat. In the civil law, the prince; the emperor.

Princeps et respublica ex justa causa possunt rem meam auferre /prínseps ét réspubliká ék jássta kózā posant rém miyom oféhriy/. The prince and the commonwealth, for a just cause, can take away my property.

Princeps legibus solutus est /prínseps liyjabas sál(y)kwást ést/. The emperor is released from the laws; is not bound by the laws.

Princeps mavult domesticos milites quam stipendiari¬os bellicis opponere casibus /prínseps meyvalt doméstakwos miliće wyivót bélasas apównarí kéyasbas/. A prince, in the chances of war, had better employ domestic than stipendiary troops.

Princess royal /prínssás réóyal/. In English law, the eldest daughter of the sovereign.

Principal, adj. Chief; leading; most important or considerable; primary; original. Highest in rank, authority, character, importance, or degree.

As to principal Challenge; Contract; Obligation; Office; and Vein, see those titles.

Principal establishment. In the law concerning domicile, the principal domestic establishment. Mosely v. Dabezies, 142 La. 256, 76 So. 705, 706. See Domicile; Resident.

Principal fact. In the law of evidence, a fact sought and proposed to be proved by evidence of other facts (termed "evidentiary facts") from which it is to be deduced by inference. A fact which is the principal and ultimate object of an inquiry, and respecting the existence of which a definite belief is required to be formed.

Principal, n. The source of authority or right. A superintendent, as of a school.

An amount of money that has been borrowed or invested. The capital sum of a debt or obligation, as distinguished from interest or other additions to it. An amount on which interest is charged or earned. Amount of debt, not including interest. The face value of a note, bond, mortgage, etc. that must be repaid as distinct from the interest that is paid thereon. Capital sum placed at interest, due as a debt, or use as a fund, as distinguished from interest or profit. Klitgaard v. Gaines, Tex.Civ.App., 479 S.W.2d 765, 770.

See also Coprincipal; Undisclosed principal.

Criminal law. One who is present at and participates in the crime charged or who procures an innocent agent to commit the crime. State v. Furr, 292 N.C. 711, 235 S.E.2d 193, 198. A chief actor or perpetrator, or an aider and abettor actually or constructively present at the commission of the crime, as distinguished from an "accessory." At common law, a principal in the first degree is he that is the actor or absolute perpetrator of the crime; and, in the second degree, he who is present, aiding and abetting the principal in the first degree. The distinction between principals in the first and second degrees has been abrogated in the Model Penal Code and by many state codes.

Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal. Also, whoever willfully causes an act to be done which if directly performed by him or another would be an offense against the United States, is punishable as a principal. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2.

Principal in the first degree. A principal in the first degree may simply be defined as the criminal actor; the one who actually commits a crime, either by his own hand, or by an inanimate agency, or by an innocent human agent. Johnson v. State, 303 Md. 487, 495 A.2d 1, 12. He is the one who, with the requisite mental state, engages in the act or omission concurring with the mental state which causes the criminal result.

Principal in the second degree. To be a principal in the second degree, one must be present at the commission of a criminal offense and aid, counsel, command, or encourage the principal in the first degree in the commission of that offense. This requirement of presence may be fulfilled by constructive presence. A person is constructively present when he is physically absent from the situs of the crime but aids and abets the principal in the first degree at the time of the offense from some distance.

Investments. The person for whom a broker executes an order, or a dealer buying or selling for his own account. The term "principal" may also refer to a person's capital or to the face amount of a bond.

Law of agency. The term "principal" describes one who has permitted or directed another (i.e. agent or servant) to act for his benefit and subject to his direction and control, such that the acts of the agent become binding on the principal. Principal includes in its meaning the term "master", a species of principal who, in addition to other control, has a right to control the physical conduct of the species of agents known as servants, as to whom special rules are applicable with reference to harm caused by their physical acts.

If, at the time of a transaction conducted by an agent, the other party thereto has notice that the agent is acting for a principal and of the principal's identity, the principal is a disclosed principal. If the other party has notice that the agent is or may be acting for a principal but has no notice of the principal's identity, the principal for whom the agent is acting is a partially disclosed Principal. If the other party has no notice that the agent is acting for a principal, the one for whom he acts is an undisclosed principal. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 4.

Law of guaranty and suretyship. The person primarily liable, for whose performance of his obligation the guarantor or surety has become bound.

Principal and surety. Relationship between accommodation maker and party accommodated on promissory note is that of "principal and surety." Putney Credit Union v. King, 130 Vt. 86, 286 A.2d 282, 284.

Trust law. Property as opposed to income. The term is often used to designate the corpus of a trust. If, for example, G places real estate in trust with income payable to A for life and the remainder to B upon A's death, the real estate is the principal or corpus of the trust. See also Kentucky Rule. The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Principal and Income Act.

Vice principal. A vice principal is an employee to whom the master delegates those absolute or nondelegable duties cast upon a master for protection of his employees, and who is in charge of the master's business or any department thereof, and whose duties are exclusively supervision, direction and control of the work of subordinate employees engaged therein, whose duty it is to obey him. Haynie v. Haynie, Okl., 426 P.2d 717, 724. Vice principal is servant who, in addition to his authority to direct and supervise work of those under him, has authority to hire and discharge a subordinate servant. Sartain v. Southern Nat. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 364 S.W.2d 245, 252.

Principalis /prinsapéylas/. Lat. Principal; a principal debtor; a principal in a crime.

Principalis debet semper exucit anquevam pervenia¬tur ad fidejussores /prinsapéylas débet sempar àtkskyúttay ántsakwam parvéniyétyar àt faydiyayisáriyay/. The principal should always be exhausted before coming upon the sureties.

Principal residence. The residence (which may be a single family home, trailer, condominium, or houseboat) where the taxpayer resides most of the time. For tax purposes, capital gains may be deferred on the sale of the taxpayer's principal residence if a new residence is purchased within a certain period of time.

Principia data sequuntur concomitantia /prinsip(i)yiya déyta sokwántor kankómaténshiyiya/. Given principles are followed by their concomitants.

Principia probant, non probantur /prinsip(i)yiya prówbant, nón prówbantor/. Principles prove; they are not proved. Fundamental principles require no proof.

Principis obsta /prinsipiyus öbstey/. Withstand beginnings; oppose a thing in its early stages, if you would do so with success.

Principiorum non est ratio /prinsipiyórám nón èst réyshiyow/. There is no reasoning of principles; no argument is required to prove fundamental rules.

Principium est potissima pars cujusque rei /prinsipiyam èst patíssama párz kajaskwiy riyay/. The principle of anything is its most powerful part.

Principle. A fundamental truth or doctrine, as of law; a comprehensive rule or doctrine which furnishes a basis or origin for others; a settled rule of action, procedure, or legal determination. A truth or proposition so clear that it cannot be proved or contradicted unless by a proposition which is still clearer. That which constitutes the essence of a body or its constituent parts. That which pertains to the theoretical part of a science.

Printers Ink Statute. A model statute drafted in 1911 and adopted with some variations in a number of states making it a misdemeanor to advertise a representation that is untrue, deceptive or misleading.

Prior /práýar/. Lat. The former; earlier; preceding; preferable or preferred.

Prior, n. The chief of a convent; next in dignity to an abbot.

Prior, adj. Earlier; elder; preceding; superior in rank, right, or time; as, a prior lien, mortgage, or judgment.

Prior art. In patent law, includes any relevant knowledge, acts, descriptions and patents which pertain to, but predate, invention in question. Mooney v. Brunswick Corp., C.A.Wis., 663 F.2d 724, 733. Anything in tangible form that may properly be relied on by patent office in patent cases in support of rejection on matter of substance, not form, of claim in pending application for patent. Borden, Inc. v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., D.C.Tex., 381 F.Supp. 1178, 1203. Prior art may also be relied on by a court to hold a patent claim invalid, i.e., not novel or not unobvious. 35 U.S.C.A. § 102.

Prior creditor. Generally, the creditor who is accorded priority in payment from the assets of his debtor. See Preferential debts; Preferred creditor.

Prior inconsistent statements. In evidence, prior statements made by the witness which contradict statements made on the witness stand may be introduced to impeach the witness after a foundation has been laid and an opportunity given to the witness to affirm or deny whether such prior statements were made. Such impeachment may be made through the witness himself or through another witness who heard the prior statements or by means of inconsistent prior depositions (Fed.R.Civ. P. 32(a)). Such prior inconsistent statements are not admissible to prove the truth of the matter asserted but only to impeach the credibility of the witness. See Fed.Evid.R. 613(b). See also Declaration (Declaration against interest); Impeachment.

Priori petenti /práýoray poténtay/. To the person first applying. In probate practice, where there are several persons equally entitled to a grant of administration (e.g., next of kin of the same degree), the rule of the court is to make the grant priori petenti, to the first applicant.

Priority. Precedence, going before. A legal preference or precedence. The relative ranking of competing Prior restraints on speech and publication are the common-law offense of one who, being lawfully in custody, escapes from the place where he is confined, by the employment of force and violence. This offense is to be distinguished from "rescue" (q.v.), which is a deliverance of a prisoner from unlawful custody by a third person, and from "escape" which is an unauthorized departure of a prisoner from legal custody without the use of force. The trend however of modern statutes is to abandon these common-law distinctions based upon the presence or absence of force, and substitute other factors to determine the grade of the offense; with "prison breaking" generally referring to escaping from prison or jail by any means. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. § 751 et seq.

Prisoner. One who is deprived of his liberty. One who is kept against his will in confinement or custody in a prison, penitentiary, jail, or other correctional institution, as a result of conviction of a crime or awaiting trial.

Prior restraint. A system of "prior restraint" is any scheme which gives public officials the power to deny use of a forum in advance of its actual expression. Prior restraint is not limited to the suppression of a thing before it is released to the public; rather, an invalid prior restraint is an infringement upon constitutional right to disseminate matters that are ordinarily protected by the First Amendment without there first being a judicial determination that the material does not qualify for First Amendment protection. State v. I, A Woman—Part II, 53 Wis.2d 102, 191 N.W.2d 897, 902, 903.

Prior petens /práyar pédanz/. The person first applying.

Prius vitis laboravimus, nunc legibus /práyas vishyás lábaréyvamás, náyk liyjabas/. We labored first with vices, now with laws.
Privacy laws. Those federal and state statutes which prohibit an invasion of a person’s right to be left alone (e.g. to not be photographed in private), and also restrict access to personal information (e.g. income tax returns, credit reports); and overbearing of private communications (e.g. electronic surveillance). Some provide for equitable relief in the form of injunction to prevent the invasion of privacy while others specifically call for money damages and some provide for both legal and equitable protection. See e.g. Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1681n-p). See also Privacy, right of.

The federal Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.A. § 552a) provides for making known to the public the existence and characteristics of all personal information systems kept by every Federal agency. The Act permits an individual to have access to records containing personal information on that individual and allows the individual to control the transfer of that information to other Federal agencies for nonroutine uses. The Act also requires all Federal agencies to keep accurate accountings of transfers of personal records to other agencies and outsiders, and to make the accountings available to the individual. The Act further provides for civil remedies for the individual whose records are kept or used in contravention of the requirements of the Act.

Breach of privacy is knowingly and without lawful authority: (a) Intercepting, without the consent of the sender or receiver, a message by telephone, telegraph, letter or other means of private communications; or (b) Divulging, without the consent of the sender or receiver, the existence or contents of such message if such person knows that the message was illegally intercepted, or if he illegally learned of the message in the course of employment with an agency in transmitting it. Kansas Criminal Code 21-4002. See Eavesdropping; Wietapping.

Privacy, right of. The right to be let alone; the right of a person to be free from unwarranted publicity; and right to live without unwarranted interference by the public in matters with which the public is not necessarily concerned. Term “right of privacy” is generic term encompassing various rights recognized to be inherent in concept of ordered liberty, and such right prevents governmental interference in intimate personal relationships or activities, freedoms of individual to make fundamental choices involving himself, his family, and his relationship with others. Industrial Foundation of the South v. Texas Indus. Acc. Bd., Tex., 540 S.W.2d 668, 679. The right of an individual (or corporation) to withhold himself and his property from public scrutiny, if he so chooses.

It is said to exist only so far as its assertion is consistent with law or public policy, and in a proper case equity will interfere, if there is no remedy at law, to prevent an injury threatened by the invasion of, or infringement upon, this right from motives of curiosity, gain or malice. Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 44 S.Ct. 336, 68 L.Ed. 696. While there is no right of privacy found in any specific guarantees of the Constitution, the Supreme Court has recognized that zones of privacy may be created by more specific constitutional guarantees and thereby impose limits upon governmental power. Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693, 712, 96 S.Ct. 1155, 1166, 47 L.Ed.2d 405; Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 97 S.Ct. 869, 51 L.Ed.2d 64. See also Warren and Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, 4 Harv.L.Rev. 193.

Tort actions for invasion of privacy fall into four general classes: Appropriation, consisting of appropriation, for the defendant’s benefit or advantage, of the plaintiff’s name or likeness, Carlisle v. Fawcett Publications, 201 Cal.App.2d 733, 20 Cal.Rptr. 405; Intrusion, consisting of intrusion upon the plaintiff’s solitude or seclusion, as by invading his home (Ford Motor Co. v. Williams, 108 Ga.App. 21, 132 S.E.2d 206), eavesdropping (LaCrone v. Ohio Bell Tel. Co., 114 Ohio App. 299, 182 N.E.2d 15, 19 O.O.2d 236); as well as persistent and unwanted telephone calls (Housh v. Peth, 165 Ohio St. 35, 133 N.E.2d 340, 59 O.O. 60); Public disclosure of private facts, consisting of a cause of action in publicity, of a highly objectionable kind, given to private information about the plaintiff, even though it is true and no action would lie for defamation, Melvin v. Reid, 112 Cal.App. 285, 297 P. 91; False light in the public eye, consisting of publicity which places the plaintiff in a false light in the public eye, Norman v. City of Las Vegas, 64 Nev. 38, 177 P.2d 442. See also False light privacy; Invasion of privacy.

As to private Act; Agent; Bill; Boundary; Business; Carrier; Chapel; Corporation; Detective; Dwelling; Establishment; Examination; Ferry; Nuisance; Pond; Property; Prosecutor; Rights; Road; Sale; School; Seal; Statute; Stream; Trust; Water; War; Way; Wharf; and Wrong, see those titles.

Private bank. An unincorporated banking institution owned by an individual or partnership and, depending upon state statutes, subject to or free from state regulation.

Private bill. Legislation for the special benefit of an individual or a locality. Many State constitutions prohibit such legislation except by general law. See also Private law.

Privateer /právıtɐr/. A vessel owned, equipped, and armed by one or more private individuals, and duly commissioned by a belligerent power to go on cruises and make war upon the enemy, usually by preying on his commerce. A private vessel commissioned by a nation by the issue of a letter of marque to its owner to carry on all hostilities by sea, presumably according to the laws of war. Formerly a state issued letters of marque to its own subjects, and to those of neutral states as well, but a privateersman who accepted letters of marque from both belligerents was regarded as a pirate. By the Declaration of Paris (April, 1856), privateering was abolished, but the United States, Spain,
Private letter ruling. A written statement issued to the taxpayer by the Internal Revenue Service in which interpretations of the tax laws are made and applied to a specific set of facts. Function of the letter ruling, usually sought by the taxpayer in advance of a contemplated transaction, is to advise the taxpayer regarding the tax treatment he can expect from the I.R.S. in the circumstances specified by the ruling. U. S. v. Wahlin, D.C.Wis., 384 F.Supp. 43, 47. See also Letter ruling.

Private nuisance. A private nuisance is generally anything that by its continuous use or existence works annoyance, harm, unreasonable interference, inconvenience or damage to another landowner in the enjoyment of his property. Robie v. Lillis, 112 N.H. 492, 299 A.2d 155, 158. A nuisance affecting a single individual or definite small number of persons in enjoyment of private rights not common to the public. Spur Industries, Inc. v. Del E. Webb Development Co., 108 Ariz. 178, 494 P.2d 700, 705. It is only a tort, and the remedy therefor lies exclusively with the individual whose rights have been disturbed. Philadelphia Elec. Co. v. Hercules, Inc., C.A.Pa., 762 F.2d 303, 315. See also Nuisance. Compare Public nuisance.

Private offering. See Offering; Private placement.

Private person. Term sometimes used to refer to persons other than those holding public office or in military services.

Mexico, and Venezuela did not accede to this declaration. It has been thought that the constitutional provision empowering Congress to issue letters of marque deprives it of the power to join in a permanent treaty abolishing privateering. See Piracy.

Piracy and privateering are federal offenses. 18 U.S. C.A. § 1561 et seq.

Private foundations. An organization which is operated privately for the advancement of charitable or educational projects. An organization generally exempt from taxation that is subject to additional statutory restrictions on its activities and on contributions thereto. Excise taxes may be levied on certain prohibited transactions, and the Internal Revenue Code places more stringent restrictions on the deductibility of contributions to private foundations. IRC § 509. See also Charitable organizations; Foundation.

Private international law. A name used by some writers to indicate that branch of the law which is now more commonly called “Conflict of laws” (q.v.).

Private law. That portion of the law which defines, regulates, enforces, and administers relationships among individuals, associations, and corporations. As used in contradistinction to public law, the term means all that part of the law which is administered between citizen and citizen, or which is concerned with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where both the person in whom the right inheres and the person upon whom the obligation is incident are private individuals. See also Private bill; Special law. Compare Public law.

Private letter ruling. A written statement issued to the taxpayer by the Internal Revenue Service in which interpretations of the tax laws are made and applied to a specific set of facts. Function of the letter ruling, usually sought by the taxpayer in advance of a contemplated transaction, is to advise the taxpayer regarding the tax treatment he can expect from the I.R.S. in the circumstances specified by the ruling. U. S. v. Wahlin, D.C.Wis., 384 F.Supp. 43, 47. See also Letter ruling.

Private nuisance. A private nuisance is generally anything that by its continuous use or existence works annoyance, harm, unreasonable interference, inconvenience or damage to another landowner in the enjoyment of his property. Robie v. Lillis, 112 N.H. 492, 299 A.2d 155, 158. A nuisance affecting a single individual or definite small number of persons in enjoyment of private rights not common to the public. Spur Industries, Inc. v. Del E. Webb Development Co., 108 Ariz. 178, 494 P.2d 700, 705. It is only a tort, and the remedy therefor lies exclusively with the individual whose rights have been disturbed. Philadelphia Elec. Co. v. Hercules, Inc., C.A.Pa., 762 F.2d 303, 315. See also Nuisance. Compare Public nuisance.

Private offering. See Offering; Private placement.

Private person. Term sometimes used to refer to persons other than those holding public office or in military services.

Private placement. Adoption. In adoption cases, the placement of a child for adoption by the mother or parents themselves or by an intermediary like a lawyer or doctor, rather than by an adoption agency. Also sometimes called a “direct” placement.

Securities. The sale of a stock or bond issued directly to private persons, institutional investors, etc., outside of a public offering. Securities Act (1933), § 4(2). See also Direct placement; Offering.

Private ruling. See Letter ruling; Private letter ruling.

Privation /prəˈvɪʃən/. A taking away or withdrawing.

Privatio presupponit habitum /prəˈvɪʃən(ə)l/. A deprivation presupposes a possession.

Privatis factionibus non dubium est non ludi jus ceterorum /prəˈvɪʃən(ə)l/. The agreement of private individuals does not derogate from the public right [law].

Privatum commodum publico cedit /prəˈvɪʃəm kəˈmədəm pəˈbləʊkəʊ ˈsɪdət/. Private good yields to public. The interest of an individual should give place to the public good.

Privatum incommodum publico bono pensatur /prəˈvɪʃəm ɪnˈkɒmədəm pəˈbləʊkəʊ bəˈnəʊ pensəˈdər/. Private inconvenience is made up for by public benefit.

Privies /prɪˈvaɪz/. Those who are partakers or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another. Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 126 N.J.Eq. 406, 9 A.2d 311, 326; Hamelik v. Sypek, 152 Misc. 799, 274 N.Y.S. 875. They are of six kinds:

(1) Privies of blood; such as the heir to his ancestor.

(2) Privies in representation; as executors or administrators to their deceased testator or intestate.

(3) Privies in estate; as grantor and grantee, lessor and lessee, assignor and assignee, etc.

(4) Privies in respect to contract.

(5) Privies in respect of estate and contract; as where the lessor assigns his interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues, the lessor not having accepted the assignee.

(6) Privies in law; as the lord by escheat, a tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, the incumbent of a benefice, a husband suing or defending in right of his wife, etc.

“Privies,” in the sense that they are bound by the judgment, are those who acquired an interest in the subject-matter after the rendition of the judgment. “Privies” to a judgment are those whose succession to the rights of property affected occurs after the institution of the suit and form a party to it.
Prignus /prsvign/ Lat. In the civil law, a step-daughter.

Prigna /prsvigna/. Lat. In the civil law, a son of a husband or wife by a former marriage; a stepson.

Privilege. A particular and peculiar benefit or advantage enjoyed by a person, company, or class, beyond the common advantages of other citizens. An exceptional or extraordinary power or exemption. A peculiar right, advantage, exemption, power, franchise, or immunity held by a person or class, not generally possessed by others.

In tort law, the ability to act contrary to another individual's legal right without that individual having legal redress for the consequences of that act; usually raised by the actor as a defense.

An exemption from some burden or attendance, with which certain persons are indulged, from a supposition of law that the stations they fill, or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their time and care, and that, therefore, without this indulgence, it would be impracticable to execute such offices to that advantage which the public good requires. That which releases one from the performance of a duty or obligation, or exempts one from a liability which he would otherwise be required to perform, or sustain in common with all other persons. See also Exemption; Immunity.

See also Doctor-patient privilege; Executive privilege; Husband-wife privilege; Journalist’s privilege; Legislative immunity; Marital communications privilege; Newsman’s privilege; Patient-physician privilege; Priest-penitent privilege; Privileged communications; Right; State secrets privilege.

Attorney-client, doctor-patient, etc. privilege. See Privileged communications, and also specific privileges.

Civil law. A right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be preferred before other creditors. Civil Code La. art. 3186. It is merely an accessory of the debt which it secures, and falls with the extinguishment of the debt. The civil law privilege became, by adoption of the admiralty courts, the admiralty lien. The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U.S. 1, 13 S.Ct. 498, 37 L.Ed 345.

Communications. See Privileged communications.

Deliberative process privilege. This governmental privilege permits government to withhold documents that reflect advisory opinions, recommendations and deliberations comprising part of a process by which government decisions and policies are formulated, and was developed to promote frank and independent discussion among those responsible for making governmental decisions and to protect against premature disclosure of proposed agency policies or decisions. F.T.C. v. Warner Communications Inc., C.A.Cal., 742 F.2d 1156, 1161.

Discovery. When interrogatories, depositions or other forms of discovery seek information which is otherwise privileged, the party from whom it is sought may claim his privilege. Fed.R.Civil P. 26; Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. See also Protective order; Work product rule.

Evidence. See Privileged communications; Privileged evidence.

Executive privilege. The protection afforded to confidential presidential communications. However, the generalized need for confidentiality of high level communications cannot sustain an absolute unqualified presidential privilege. U. S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039. See also Executive privilege.

Journalist’s privilege. See Journalist’s privilege; Newsman’s privilege; Shield laws.

Libel and slander. An exemption from liability for the speaking or publishing of defamatory words concerning another, based on the fact that the statement was made in the performance of a political, judicial, social, or personal duty. Privilege is either absolute or conditional. The former protects the speaker or publisher without reference to his motives or the truth or falsity of the statement. This may be claimed in respect, for instance, to statements made in legislative debates, in reports of military officers to their superiors in the line of their duty, and statements made by judges, witnesses, and jurors in trials in court. Conditional privilege (called also “qualified privilege”) will protect the speaker or publisher unless actual malice and knowledge of the falsity of the statement is shown. This may be claimed where the communication related to a matter of public interest, or where it was necessary to protect one’s private interest and was made to a person having an interest in the same matter. Saroyan v. Burkett, 57 Cal.2d 706, 21 Cal.Rptr. 557, 558, 371 P.2d 293.

For defense of “constitutional privilege” in libel actions, see Libel.

Maritime law. An allowance to the master of a ship of the same general nature with primage, being compensation, or rather a gratuity, customary in certain trades, and which the law assumes to be a fair and equitable allowance, because the contract on both sides is made under the knowledge of such usage by the parties.

Parliamentary law. The right of a particular question, motion, or statement to take precedence over all other business before the house and to be considered immediately, notwithstanding any consequent interference with or setting aside the rules of procedure adopted by the house. The matter may be one of “personal privilege,” where it concerns one member of the house in his capacity as a legislator, or of the “privilege of the house,” where it concerns the rights, immunities, or dignity of the entire body, or of “constitutional privilege,” where it relates to some action to be taken or some order of proceeding expressly enjoined by the constitution.

Privilege from arrest. A privilege extended to certain classes of persons, either by the rules of international law, the policy of the law, or the necessities of justice or of the administration of government, whereby they are exempted from arrest on civil process, and, in some cases, on criminal charges, either permanently, as in the case of a foreign minister and his suite, or temporarily, as in the case of members of the legislature, parties and possessing or enjoying privilege; exempt from the privilege of self-incrimination.

Privilege. Privilege is the general term applied to certain rules of law by which particular circumstances justify conduct which otherwise would be tortious, and thereby defeat the tort liability (or defense) which, in the absence of such circumstances, ordinarily would follow from that conduct. In other words, even if all of the facts necessary to a prima facie case of tort liability can be proved, there are additional facts present sufficient to establish some privilege, and therefore defendant has committed no tort. Privileges thus differ from other defenses, such as contributory negligence, which operate to bar plaintiff's recovery but do not negate the tortious nature of defendant's conduct. Conversely, plaintiff's privilege may defeat a defense which defendant otherwise might have had. The term and concept of privilege apply primarily to the intentional torts, but also appear in other areas, such as defamation. See Libel and Slander, above.

A privilege may be based upon: (a) the consent of the other affected by the actor's conduct, or (b) the fact that its exercise is necessary for the protection of some interest of the actor or of the public which is of such importance as to justify the harm caused or threatened by its exercise, or (c) the fact that the actor is performing a function for the proper performance of which freedom of action is essential. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 10.

Privileges may be divided into two general categories: (1) consent, and (2) privileges created by law irrespective of consent. In general, the latter arise where there is some important and overriding social value in sanctioning defendant's conduct, despite the fact that it causes plaintiff harm.

Privilege is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by defendant. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

Writ of privilege. A common law process to enforce or maintain a privilege; particularly to secure the release of a person arrested in a civil suit contrary to his privilege.

Privilege against self-incrimination. The privilege derived from the Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const., and similar provisions in the constitutions of states. It requires the government to prove a criminal case against the defendant without the aid of the defendant as a witness against himself, though it protects only communications, not physical evidence such as handwriting and fingerprints. It is invocable by any witness who is called to the witness stand against his wishes whether the proceeding be a trial or grand jury hearing or a proceeding before an investigating body, but it is waived when the witness voluntarily takes the witness stand. See also Immunity; Link-in-chain.

Privileged. Possessing or enjoying a privilege; exempt from burdens; entitled to priority or precedence.

Privileged communications. Those statements made by certain persons within a protected relationship such as husband-wife, attorney-client, priest-penitent and the like which the law protects from forced disclosure on the witness stand at the option of the witness, client, penitent, spouse. In federal courts, the extent and scope of the specific privilege is to be governed by federal common law or state rules governing evidentiary privileges. Fed.Evid. Rule 501. See also Attorney-client privilege; Communication; Conditionally privileged communication; Journalist's privilege; Privilege.

Privileged copyholds. See Copyhold.

Privileged debts. Those which an executor or administrator, trustee in bankruptcy, and the like, may pay in preference to others; such as funeral expenses, servants' wages, and doctors' bills during last sickness, etc. See also Preferential debts.

Privileged evidence. In addition to privileged communications (q.v.), privileged evidence may also include governmental secrets or records, identity of informer, grand jury proceedings, certain types of accident reports, and attorney's work product.

Privileges and immunities clause. There are two Privileges and Immunities Clauses in the federal Constitution and Amendments, the first being found in Art. IV, and the second in the 14th Amendment, § 1, second sentence, clause 1. The provision in Art. IV states that "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States," while the 14th Amendment provides that "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

The purpose of these Clauses is to place the citizens of each State upon the same footing with citizens of other states, so far as the advantages resulting from citizenship in those states is concerned; to insure that a citizen of State A who ventures into State B be accorded the same privileges that the citizens of State B enjoy. Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 68 S.Ct. 1156, 92 L.Ed. 1460. Pursuing a common calling, plying a trade, and doing business in another state are examples of "privileges" protected by the privileges and immunities clause of the Federal Constitution. Powell v. Daily, Wyo., 712 P.2d 356, 359. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Privilegia quæ re vera sunt in præjudicium rei publīcæ, magis tamen habent speciosam frontispiciam, et boni publici pretex tum, quam bonæ et legales concessiones; sed prætextu licti non debet admi tiri illicitum /privaliyy(iy)a kwiy ri vira sânt in prêjudish(iy)om riyaypsibiayiy, meyaay teyman haebont splyshiyowws frântaspish(iy)a, et bownay pâblosay prystêkstom, kwâm bönwiy et lsgêlyiy konsëshiyowwiyay; sêd prätêkstiyyuw listay nôn débant admi yay ałiastom/. Privileges which are truly in prejudice of public good have, however, a more specious front and pretext of public good than good and legal grants; but, under pretext of legality, that which is illegal ought not to be admitted.
Privilegium /privilibjij(ly)am/. In Roman law, a special constitution by which the Roman emperor conferred on some single person some anomalous or irregular right, or imposed upon some single person some anomalous or irregular obligation, or inflicted on some single person some anomalous or irregular punishment. When such privilegia conferred anomalous rights, they were styled "favorable." When they imposed anomalous obligations, or inflicted anomalous punishments, they were styled "odious." A private law inflicting a punishment or conferring a reward.

In civil law, every peculiar right or favor granted by the law, contrary to the common rule. A species of lien or claim upon an article of property, not dependent upon possession, but continuing until either satisfied or released. Such is the lien, recognized by maritime law, of seamen upon the ship for their wages.

Privilegium clericale /privilibjij(ly)am klēhrakēlyly/. The benefit of clergy (q.v.).

Privilegium est beneficium personale, et extinguit /privilibjij(ly)am/. Privilege is, as it were, a private law of no force against the commonwealth. Even necessity does not excuse, where the act to be done is against the commonwealth.

Privilegium est quasi privata lex /privilibjij(ly)am/. A qualified property in animals fera naturae; i.e., a privilege of hunting, taking, and killing them, in exclusion of others.

Privity. In its broadest sense, "privity" is defined as mutual or successive relationships to the same right of property, or such an identification of interest of one person with another as to represent the same legal right. Petersen v. Fee Intern., Ltd., D.C.Okl., 435 F.Supp. 938, 942. Derivative interest founded on, or growing out of, contract, connection, or bond of union between parties; mutuality of interest. Hodgson v. Midwest Oil Co., C.C.A.Wyo., 17 F.2d 71, 75. Thus, the executor is in privity with the testator, the heir with the ancestor, the assignee with the assignor, the donee with the donor, and the lessee with the lessor. Litchfield v. Crane, 123 U.S. 549, 8 S.Ct. 210, 31 L.Ed. 199.

Privity signifies that relationship between two or more persons is such that a judgment involving one of them may justly be conclusive upon others, although other was not party to lawsuit. Gill and Duffus Services, Inc. v. A.M. Nural Islam, C.A., 675 F.2d 404, 405, 218 U.S.App.D.C. 385.

Private knowledge; joint knowledge with another of a private concern; cognizance implying a consent or concurrence. See Insider; Legal privity; Privy.

Horizontal privity. Such privity is not, in reality, a state of privity but rather one of nonprivity. The term refers to those who are not in the distributive chain of a product but who, nonetheless, use the product and retain a relationship with the purchaser, such as a member of the purchaser's family. Szajna v. General Motors Corp., 115 Ill.2d 294, 104 Ill.Dec. 898, 503 N.E.2d 760, 765. See also U.C.C. § 2-318.

Privity of blood. Such existed between an heir and his ancestor (privity in blood inheritable), and between co-partners. This privity was formerly of importance in the law of descent cast.

Privity of contract. That connection or relationship which exists between two or more contracting parties. It was traditionally essential to the maintenance of an action on any contract that there should subsist such privity between the plaintiff and defendant in respect of the matter sued on. However, the absence of privity as a defense in actions for damages in contract and tort actions is generally no longer viable with the enactment of warranty statutes (see e.g. U.C.C. § 2-318 below), acceptance by states of doctrine of strict liability (q.v.), and court decisions (e.g. MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050) which have extended the right to sue for injuries or damages to third party beneficiaries, and even innocent bystanders (Elmore v. American Motors Corp., 70 Cal.2d 578, 75 Cal.Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84).

U.C.C. § 2-318 provides three Alternative provisions (A-C) covering third party beneficiaries of express or implied warranties. Most states have enacted Alternative A: "A seller's warranty whether express or implied extends to any natural person who is in the family or household of his buyer or who is a guest in his home if it is reasonable to expect that such person may use, consume or be affected by the goods and who is injured in person by breach of the warranty. A seller may not exclude or limit the operation of this section." Other states have further broaded this model provision. For example Massachusetts U.C.C. § 2-318 provides: "Lack of privity between plaintiff and defendant shall be no defense in any action brought against the manufacturer, seller, lessor or supplier of goods to recover damages for breach of warranty, express or implied, or for negligence, although the plaintiff did not purchase the goods from the defendant if the plaintiff was a person whom the manufacturer, seller, lessor or supplier might reasonably have expected to use, consume or be affected by the goods.

Privity of estate. Mutual or successive relation to the same right in property such as that which exists between lessor and lessee or their successors.

A subtenant, who is in privity of estate with the original lessor, may avail himself of any covenants in the original lease which "touch and concern" the land. Castle v. Double Time, Inc. Okl., 737 P.2d 900.

Privity of possession. Relationship which exists between parties in successive possession of real property. Such relationship becomes important in cases of adverse possession claims.

Privity or knowledge. Under Rev.St. §§ 4283–4286 (46 U.S.C.A. §§ 183–186) withholding the right to limit liability if the shipowner had "privity or knowledge" of the fault which occasioned damages, privity or knowledge must be actual and not merely constructive, and must involve a personal participation of the owner in some fault or act of negligence causing or contributing to the injury suffered. The words import actual knowledge of the things causing or contributing to the loss, or knowledge or means of knowledge of a condition of things likely to produce or contribute to the loss without adopting proper means to prevent it.

Privy. A person who is in privity with another. One who is a partaker or has any part or interest in any action, matter, or thing. In connection with the doctrine of res judicata, one who, after the commencement of the action, has acquired an interest in the subject matter affected by the judgment through or under one of the parties, as by inheritance, succession, purchase or assignment. Ryne v. Miami-Dade Water and Sewer Authority, Fla.App., 402 So.2d 54, 55. See Insider; Privies; Privy.

As an adjective, the word has practically the same meaning as "private."

Privy council. In England, the principal council of the sovereign, composed of the cabinet ministers, and other persons chosen by the king or queen as privy councillors. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council acts as a court of ultimate appeal in various cases from Crown colonies and the Commonwealth. The importance of the Privy Council has been replaced to a great extent by the Cabinet.

Privy councillor. A member of the privy council.

Privy purse. In England, the income set apart for the sovereign's personal use.

Privy seal. In England, a seal used in making out grants or letters patent, preparatory to their passing under the great seal. A seal which the sovereign uses to such grants or things as pass the great seal. A seal of the British government which is affixed to documents not requiring the great seal.

Privy signet /priviy signat/. In English law, the signet or seal which is first used in making out grants and private letters and which is always in the custody of the Queen's secretaries.

Privy token /priviy tówkan/. A false mark or sign, forged object, counterfeited letter, key, ring, etc., used to deceive persons, and thereby fraudulently obtain possession of property. A false privy token is a false privy document or sign, not such as is calculated to deceive men generally, but designed to defraud one or more individuals. Cheating by such false token was not indictable at common law.

Privy verdict. A verdict given privily to the judge out of court, but which was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. Now generally superseded by the "sealed verdict," i.e., one written out, sealed up, and delivered to the judge or the clerk of the court. See Sealed verdict.

Prize. Anything offered as a reward of contest. A reward offered to the person who, among several persons or among the public at large, shall first (or best) perform a certain undertaking or accomplish certain conditions. An award or recompense for some act done; some valuable thing offered by a person for something done by others. It is distinguished from a "bet" or "wager" in that it is known before the event who is to give either the premium or the prize, and there is but one operation until the accomplishment of the act, thing, or purpose for which it is offered.

The fair market value of a prize or award is generally includible in gross income. Certain exceptions are provided where the prize or award is made in recognition of religious, charitable, scientific, educational, artistic, literary, or civic achievement providing certain other requirements are met. I.R.C. § 74.

A vessel or cargo, belonging to one of two belligerent powers, apprehended or forcibly captured at sea by a war-vessel or privateer of the other belligerent, and claimed as enemy's property, and therefore liable to appropriation and condemnation under the laws of war. The apprehension and detention at sea of a ship or other vessel, by authority of a belligerent power, either with the design of appropriating it, with the goods and effects it contains, or with that of becoming master of the whole or a part of its cargo.

Prize courts. Courts having jurisdiction to adjudicate upon captures made at sea in time of war, and to condemn the captured property as prize if lawfully subject to that sentence. In England, the admiralty courts have jurisdiction as prize courts, distinct from the jurisdiction on the instance side. A special commission issues in time of war to the judge of the admiralty court, to enable him to hold such court. In the United States, the federal district courts have jurisdiction in cases of prize. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1333.

Prize goods. Goods which are taken on the high seas, jure belli, out of the hands of the enemy.

Prize law. The system of laws and rules applicable to the capture of prize at sea; its condemnation, rights of the captors, distribution of the proceeds, etc.

Prize money. A dividend from the proceeds of a captured vessel, etc., paid to the captors. U. S. v. Steever, 113 U.S. 747, 5 S.Ct. 765, 28 L.Ed. 1133.

Pro. For; in respect of; on account of; in behalf of. The introductory word of many Latin phrases.

Proamita /prowámsta/. Lat. In the civil law, a great paternal aunt; the sister of one's grandfather.
Proavus /prowavas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandmother.

Proavia /prowavas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandmother.

Proavunculus /prowavagkyulas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandfather's or great-grandmother's brother.

Proavus /prawavos/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandfather. Employed in making genealogical tables.

Probability. Likelihood; appearance of reality or truth; reasonable ground of presumption; consonance to reason. The likelihood of a proposition or hypothesis being true, from its conformity to reason or experience, or from superior evidence or arguments adduced in its favor. A condition or state created when there is more evidence in favor of the existence of a given proposition than there is against it.

High probability rule. In admiralty law, a rule relating to the right of insured to abandon a vessel, by virtue of which the right of abandonment does not depend upon the certainty, but upon the high probability of a total loss, either of the property, or voyage, or both. The result is to act not upon certainties, but upon probabilities; and if the facts present a case of extreme hazard, and of probable expense, exceeding half the value of the ship, the insured may abandon, though it should happen that she was afterwards recovered at a less expense.

Probable. Having the appearance of truth; having the character of probability; appearing to be founded in reason or experience. Having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt; likely. See also Possible.

Probable cause. Reasonable cause; having more evidence for than against. A reasonable ground for belief in certain alleged facts. A set of probabilities grounded in the factual and practical considerations which govern the decisions of reasonable and prudent persons and is more than mere suspicion but less than the quantum of evidence required for conviction. U.S v. Riemer, D.C. Ohio, 392 F.Supp. 1291, 1294. An apparent state of facts found to exist upon reasonable inquiry (that is, such inquiry as the given case renders convenient and proper), which would induce a reasonably intelligent and prudent man to believe, in a criminal case, that the accused person had committed the crime charged, or, in a civil case, that a cause of action existed. Cook v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 32 P.2d 430, 431. See also Information and belief; Reasonable and probable cause; Reasonable belief; Reasonable grounds.

Arrest, search and seizure. Reasonable grounds for belief that a person should be arrested or searched. The evidentiary criterion necessary to sustain an arrest or the issuance of an arrest or search warrant. "Probable cause" to arrest exists where facts and circumstances within officers' knowledge and of which they had reasonably trustworthy information are sufficient in themselves to warrant a person of reasonable caution in the belief that an offense has been or is being committed; it is not necessary that the officer possess knowledge of facts sufficient to establish guilt, but more than mere suspicion is required. State v. Phillips, 67 Hawaii 535, 696 P.2d 346, 350. Probable cause is the existence of circumstances which would lead a reasonably prudent man to believe in guilt of arrested party; mere suspicion or belief, unsupported by facts or circumstances, is insufficient. State v. Jones, 248 Or. 428, 435 P.2d 317, 319. It permits an officer to arrest one for a felony without a warrant. Probable cause justifying officer's arrest without warrant has been defined as situation where officer has more evidence favoring suspicion that person is guilty of crime than evidence against such suspicion, but there is some room for doubt. Nugent v. Superior Court for San Mateo County, 254 C.A.2d 420, 62 Cal.Rptr. 217, 221.

The finding of probable cause for issuance of an arrest warrant (as required by 4th Amend.) may be based upon hearsay evidence in whole or part. Fed.R.Crim.P. 4(b). See also Rule 5.1(a) (Preliminary examination), and Rule 41(c) (Search and seizure).

See also Arrest; Probable cause hearing; Search; Search warrant.

False imprisonment action. For arrest which must be shown as justification by defendants in action for false imprisonment is reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficient in themselves to warrant cautious man in believing accused to be guilty, but does not depend on actual state of case in point of fact, as it may turn out upon legal investigation, but on knowledge of facts which would be sufficient to induce reasonable belief in truth of accusation. Christ v. McDonald, 152 Or. 494, 52 P.2d 655, 658.

Malicious prosecution action. In context of civil action for malicious prosecution, is such a state of facts in mind of defendant as would lead a person of ordinary caution and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that plaintiff had committed a crime. Carroll v. Gillespie, 14 Mass.App. 12, 436 N.E.2d 431, 435. See Malicious prosecution.

Probable cause hearing. That procedural step in the criminal process at which the judge or magistrate decides whether a complaint should issue or a person should be bound over to a grand jury on a showing of probable cause. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1(a). See Preliminary hearing.

Probable consequence. One that is more likely to follow its supposed cause than it is not to follow it.

Probable evidence. Presumptive evidence is so called, from its foundation in probability. See Presumption.

Probably. In all probability; so far as the evidence shows; presumably; likely.

Probandi necessitas incumbit illi qui agit /probândy nasëstês onkâmbst ilay kwây éyjst/. The necessity of proving lies with him who sues. In other words, the Probate. Court procedure by which a will is proved to be valid or invalid; though in current usage this term has been expanded to generally refer to the legal process wherein the estate of a decedent is administered. Generally, the probate process involves collecting a decedent's assets, liquidating liabilities, paying necessary taxes, and distributing property to heirs. These activities are carried out by the executor or administrator of the estate, usually under the supervision of the probate court or other court of appropriate jurisdiction. See Probate court; Probate jurisdiction.

In the canon law, "probate" consisted of probatio, the proof of the will by the executor, and approbatio, the approbation given by the ecclesiastical judge to the proof.

Probate bond. One required by law to be given to the probate court or judge, as incidental to proceedings in such courts, such as the bonds of executors, administrators, and guardians.

Probate code. The body or system of law relating to all matters of which probate courts have jurisdiction; e.g. Uniform Probate Code.

Probate court. A court having general powers over probate of wills, administration of estates, and, in some states, empowered to appoint guardians or approve the adoption of minors. Court with similar functions is called Surrogate or Orphan's Court in certain states. See also Court of Orphans; Probate jurisdiction.

Probate duty. A tax laid by government on every will admitted to probate or on the gross value of the personal property of the deceased testator, and payable out of the decedent's estate. See also Estate tax; Inheritance tax.

Probate estate. The property of a decedent that is subject to administration by the executor or administrator of an estate.

Probate homestead. See Homestead.

Probate jurisdiction. The exercise of the ordinary, generally understood power of a probate, surrogate or orphan's court, which includes the establishment of wills, settlement of decedents' estates, supervision of guardianship of infants, control of their property, and other powers and functions pertaining to such subjects. See also Probate court.

Probate proceeding. A general designation of the actions and proceedings whereby the law is administered upon the various subjects within "probate jurisdiction" (q.v.).

Probatio /probésh(y)ow/. Lat. Proof; more particularly direct, as distinguished from indirect or circumstantial evidence.

Probatio mortua /probésh(y)ow móryuwa/. Dead proof; that is proof by inanimate objects, such as deeds or other written evidence.

Probation. The evidence which proves a thing; the act of proving; proof; trial; test. Used in the latter sense when referring to the initial period of employment during which a new, transferred, or promoted employee must prove or show that he is capable of performing the required duties of the job or position before he will be considered as permanently employed in such position. As applied to teachers, term means that teacher is on trial, with his competence and suitability remaining to be finally determined. Turner v. Board of Trustees, Calexico Unified School Dist., 121 Cal.Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1171, 1178.

Sentence imposed for commission of crime whereby a convicted criminal offender is released into the community under the supervision of a probation officer in lieu of incarceration. State v. Fields, 67 Haw. 268, 686 P.2d 1379, 1387. It is not a matter of right, but rather is an act of grace and clemency available only to those defendants found eligible by the court. People v. Brown, 172 Cal.App.2d 30, 342 P.2d 410, 412. It implies that defendant has a chance to prove himself and its purpose is reform and rehabilitation. For this purpose the defendant must agree to specified standards of conduct and the public authority operating through the court implies promises that if he makes good, his probation will continue; however, his violation of such standards subjects his liberty to revocation. Baine v. Beckstead, 10 Utah 2d 4, 347 P.2d 554, 558.

In determining whether the defendant is entitled to a sentence of probation, the court looks to such matters as the nature and circumstances of the offense, the history and characteristics of the defendant, and the need for the sentence imposed. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3553(a), 3561 et seq.; Fed.R.Crim.P. 32.

The defendant is entitled to be represented by counsel in probation proceedings under Sixth Amendment. Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254, 19 L.Ed.2d 336.

Probationer. A convicted offender who is allowed to go at large, under suspension of sentence, during good behavior.

Probationes debent esse evidentes, id est, perspicuae et faciles intelligi /probésh(y)ow pliyuna/. Proof of the will by the executor, and approbatio, the approbation given by the ecclesiastical judge to the proof.

Proofs ought to be evident, that is, perspicuous and easily understood.

Probation officer. One who supervises a person (commonly juveniles) placed on probation by a court in a criminal proceeding. He is required to report to the court the progress of the probationer and to surrender him if he violates the terms and conditions of his probation.

Probatio plena /probésh(y)ow pliyuna/. In the civil law, full proof; proof by two witnesses, or a public instrument.

Probatio semi-plena /probésh(y)ow sêmaypliyuna/. In the civil law, half-full proof; half-proof. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument.
Probatio viva /próbéysh(í)yow váýva/. Living proof; that is, proof by the mouth of living witnesses.

Probatio externis, præsumuntur media /próbéyta es akstrýmys, prílyzýmántor miýd(i)yra/. The extremes being proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed.

Probative evidence /prówbétov évédons/. In the law of evidence, means having the effect of proof; tending to prove, or actually proving an issue; that which furnishes, establishes, or contributes toward proof. Akin v. Hill's Estate, 201 Kan. 306, 440 P.2d 585, 590. Testimony characterizing quality of proof and having fitness to induce conviction of truth, consisting of fact and reason co-operating as co-ordinate factors. Globe Indemnity Co. v. Daviess, 243 Ky. 356, 47 S.W.2d 990, 992. See also Relevant evidence.

Probator /próbétar/. In old English law, strictly, an accomplice in felony who to save himself confessed the fact, and charged or accused any other as principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good his charge. It also signified an approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another.

Probatum est /próbéytam èst/. Lat. It is tried or proved.

Pro bono /prów bóñów/. Lit. For the good; used to describe work or services (e.g. legal services) done or performed free of charge.

Pro bono et malo /prów bóñów èt málow/. For good and ill; for advantage and detriment.

Pro bono publico /prów bóñów pásblakow/. For the public good; for the welfare of the whole. For example, "pro bono" legal work is providing legal services to indigents without charge.

Probus et legals homo /prówbas èt légýylas hówmow/. Lat. A good and lawful man. A phrase particularly applied to a juror or witness who was free from all exception, and competent in point of law to serve on juries. In the plural form: probi et legales homines.

Procedendo /prówswédândow/. Action wherein court of superior jurisdiction orders court of inferior jurisdiction to proceed to judgment, but has no bearing on nature of judgment to be entered. State ex rel. Jacobs v. Municipal Court of Franklin County, 26 Ohio App.2d 113, 269 N.E.2d 629, 631, 55 O.O.2d 245. A writ by which a cause which has been removed from an inferior to a superior court by certiorari or otherwise is sent down again to the same court, to be proceeded in there, where it appears to the superior court that it was removed on insufficient grounds.

More commonly, a case returned to a lower court is said to be remanded to such court.

A writ (procedendo ad judicium) which issued out of the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, when judges of any subordinate court delayed the parties for that they would not give judgment either on the one side or on the other, when they ought so to do. In such a case, a writ of procedendo ad judicium was awarded, commanding the inferior court in the sovereign's name to proceed to give judgment, but without specifying any particular judgment. It was the earliest remedy for the refusal or neglect of justice on the part of the courts. In re Press Printers & Publishers, C.C.A. N.J., 12 F.2d 660, 664.

A writ by which the commission of a justice of the peace is revived, after having been suspended. 1 Bl. Comm. 353.

Procedendo on aid prayer /prówswédândou dýn éypréyä). If one pray in aid of the crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the sovereign in chancery, and the justices in the common pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loquela come to them. So, also, on a personal action.

Procedural due process. The guarantee of procedural fairness which flows from both the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments due process clauses of the Constitution. For the guarantees of procedural due process to apply, it must first be shown that a deprivation of a significant life, liberty, or property interest has occurred. This is necessary to bring the Due Process Clause into play.

Minimal procedural due process is that parties whose rights are to be affected are entitled to be heard and, in order that they may enjoy that right, they must be notified. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67, 79, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 1994, 32 L.Ed.2d 556. Procedures which due process requires beyond that minimum must be determined by a balancing analysis based on the specific factual context. Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 1012, 1013, 25 L.Ed.2d 287.

Procedural law. That which prescribes method of enforcing rights or obtaining redress for their invasion, Long v. Storms, 52 Or.App. 685, 629 P.2d 827, 828; machinery for carrying on procedural aspects of civil or criminal action; e.g. Rules of Civil, Criminal, and Appellate Procedure, as adopted by the Federal and most state courts. Barker v. St. Louis County, 340 Mo. 986, 104 S.W.2d 371, 377, 378, 379; Schultz v. Gosslin, 260 Iowa 115, 148 N.W.2d 434, 436. As a general rule, laws which fix duties, establish rights and responsibilities among and for persons, natural or otherwise, are "substantive laws" in character, while those which merely prescribe the manner in which such rights and responsibilities may be exercised and enforced in a court are "procedural laws". State ex rel. Blood v. Gibson Circuit Court, 239 Ind. 394, 137 N.E.2d 475, 478. See also Procedure. Compare Substantive law.

Procedure. The mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced, as distinguished from the substantive law which gives or defines the right, and which, by means of the proceeding, the court is to administer; the machinery, as distinguished from its product. That which regulates the formal steps in an action or other judicial proceeding; a form, manner, and order of conducting suits or prosecutions; e.g. Rules of Civil or Criminal Procedure. The judicial process for enforcing rights and duties recognized by substantive law and for justly administering redress for infraction of them.
433, 435.

Procedure is machinery for carrying on lawsuit including pleading, process, evidence and practice, whether in trial court or appellate court. Brooks v. Texas

The law of procedure is what is commonly termed by jurists "adjective law" (q.v.).

See also Civil procedure; Criminal procedure; Procedural law; Rules of court. Compare Substantive law.

Proceding. In a general sense, the form and manner of conducting judicial business before a court or judicial officer. Regular and orderly progress in form of law, including all possible steps in an action from its commencement to the execution of judgment. Term also refers to administrative proceedings before agencies, tribunal s, bureaus, or the like.

An act which is done by the authority or direction of the court, agency, or tribunal, express or implied: an act necessary to be done in order to obtain a given end; a prescribed mode of action for carrying into effect a legal right. All the steps or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action. Statter v. United States, C.C.A.Alaska, 66 F.2d 819, 822. The word may be used synonymously with "action" or "suit" to describe the entire course of an action at law or suit in equity from the issuance of the writ or filing of the complaint until the entry of a final judgment, or may be used to describe any act done by authority of a court of law and every step required to be taken in any cause by either party.
The proceedings of a suit embrace all matters that occur in its progress judicially.

Term "proceeding" may refer not only to a complete remedy but also to a mere procedural step that is part of a larger action or special proceeding. Rooney v. Vermont Investment Corp., 10 Cal.3d 351, 110 Cal.Rptr. 363, 365, 515 P.2d 297. A "proceeding" includes action and special proceedings before judicial tribunals as well as proceedings pending before quasi-judicial officers and boards. State ex rel. Johnson v. Independent School Dist. No. 810, Wabasha County, 268 Minn. 237, 109
N.W.2d 596, 602. In a more particular sense, any application to a court of justice, however made, for aid in the enforcement of rights, for relief, for redress of injuries, for damages, or for any remedial object.

"Proceeding" means any action, hearing, investigation, inquest, or inquiry (whether conducted by a court, administrative agency, hearing officer, arbitrator, legislative body, or any other person authorized by law) in which, pursuant to law, testimony can be compelled to Collateral proceeding. One in which the particular question may arise or be involved incidentally, but which is not instituted for the very purpose of deciding such question; as in the rule that a judgment cannot be attacked, or a corporation's right to exist be questioned, in any collateral proceeding. See Collateral estoppel doxine.

Legal proceedings. See Legal proceedings.

Ordinary proceedings. Those founded on the regular and usual mode of carrying on a suit by due course at common law.

Special proceeding. Generic term for remedies or proceedings which are not ordinary actions; e.g. condemnation (Fed.R.Civ. P. 71A); vesting title (Rule 70).

A "special proceeding" has reference to such proceedings as may be commenced independently of a pending action by petition or motion upon notice in order to obtain special relief, and, generally speaking, a special proceeding is confined to type of case which was not, under the common-law or equity practice, either an action at law or a suit in equity. Church v. Humboldt County, 248 C.A.2d 855, 57 Cal.Rptr. 79, 81.

Summary proceeding. Any proceeding by which a controversy is settled, case disposed of, or trial conducted, in a prompt and simple manner, without the aid of a jury, without presentment or indictment, or in other respects out of the regular course of the common law. In procedure, proceedings are said to be summary when they are short and simple in comparison with regular proceedings; e.g. conciliation or small claims court proceedings as contrasted with usual civil trial.

Supplementary proceeding. A separate proceeding in an original action, in which the court where the action is pending is called upon to exercise its jurisdiction in aid of execution of the judgment in the action. It is a statutory equivalent in actions at law of the creditor's bill in equity, and in the majority of states where law and equity are merged, is provided as a substitute therefor. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 69. In this proceeding the judgment debtor is summoned to appear before the court (or a referee or examiner) and submit to an oral examination touching all his property and effects, and if property subject to execution and in his possession or control is thus discovered, he is ordered to deliver it up, or a receiver may be appointed. See Execution; Supplementary proceedings.

Proceeds. Issues; income; yield; receipts; produce; money or articles or other thing of value arising or obtained by the sale of property; the sum, amount, or value of property sold or converted into money or into other property. Proceeds does not necessarily mean only cash or money. Phelps v. Harris, 101 U.S. 370, 25
L.Ed. 855. That which results, proceeds, or accrues from some possession or transaction. State Highway Commission v. Spainhower, Mo., 504 S.W.2d 121, 128.
The funds received from disposition of assets or from the issue of securities (after deduction of all costs and fees).
As used in context of debtor’s sale of collateral, “proceeds” includes whatever is received upon the sale, exchange, collection or other disposition of collateral or proceeds. Insurance payable by reason of loss or damage to the collateral is proceeds, except to the extent that it is payable to a person other than a party to the security agreement. Money, checks, deposit accounts, and the like are “cash proceeds”. All other proceeds are “non-cash proceeds”. U.C.C. § 9-306.

Proceres /prósəriyz/. Nobles; lords. The house of lords in England is called, in Latin, “Domus Procerum.” Formerly, the chief magistrates in cities.

Process. A series of actions, motions, or occurrences; progressive act or transaction; continuous operation; method, mode or operation, whereby a result or effect is produced; normal or actual course of procedure; regular proceeding, as, the process of vegetation or decomposition; a chemical process; processes of nature. Kelley v. Coe, App.D.C., 99 F.2d 435, 441.

Process is mode, method or operation whereby a result is produced; and means to prepare for market or to convert into marketable form. Employment Security Commission of Ariz. v. Bruce Church, Inc., 109 Ariz. 183, 507 P.2d 108, 112.

Patent Law

An art or method by which any particular result is produced. An act or series of acts performed upon the subject-matter to be transformed or reduced to a different state or thing. A means or method employed to produce a certain result or effect, or a mode of treatment of given materials to produce a desired result, either by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, irrespective of any machine or mechanical device; in this sense a “process” is patentable, though, strictly speaking, it is the art and not the process which is the subject of patent. Broadly speaking, a “process” is a definite combination of new or old elements, ingredients, operations, ways, or means to produce a new, improved or old result, and any substantial change therein by omission, to the same or better result, or by modification or substitution, with different function, to the same or better result, is a new and patentable process.

Civil and Criminal Proceedings

Process is defined as any means used by court to acquire or exercise its jurisdiction over a person or over specific property. Austin Liquor Mart, Inc. v. Department of Revenue, 18 Ill.App.3d 894, 310 N.E.2d 719, 728. Means whereby court compels appearance of defendant before it or a compliance with its demands. Dansby v. Dansby, 222 Ga. 118, 149 S.E.2d 252, 254.

When actions were commenced by original writ, instead of, as at present, by summons, the method of compelling the defendant to appear was by what was termed “original process,” being founded on the original writ, and so called also to distinguish it from “mesne” or “intermediate” process, which was some writ or process which issued during the progress of the suit. The word “process,” however, as now commonly understood, refers to a summons, or, summons and complaint, and, less commonly, to a writ. The content of the summons, and service requirements, are provided for in Rule of Civil Proc. 4.

See also Abuse (Process); Alias process; Compulsory process; Constructive service of process; Due process of law; Executory process; Long arm statutes; Malicious abuse of legal process; Malicious use of process; Prohibition; Service (Service of process); Summons.

Abuse of process. See Abuse.

Alias process. See that title.

Compulsory process. See Compulsory.

Criminal process. See Warrant.

Final process. The last process in an action; i.e., process issued to enforce execution of judgment.

Irregular process. Term is usually applied to process not issued in strict conformity with the law, whether the defect appears upon the face of the process, or by reference to extrinsic facts, and whether such defects render the process absolutely void or only voidable. Under current practice, a defective summons may be amended under Rule of Civil Proc. 15.

Judicial process. In a wide sense, this term may include all the acts of a court from the beginning to the end of its proceedings in a given cause; but more specifically it means the writ, summons, mandate, or other process which is used to inform the defendant of the institution of proceedings against him and to compel his appearance, in either civil or criminal cases.

Legal process. This term is sometimes used as equivalent to “lawful process.” Thus, it is said that legal process means process not merely fair on its face, but in fact valid. But properly it means a summons, writ, warrant, mandate, or other process issuing from a court.

Mesne process. As distinguished from final process, this signifies any writ or process issued between the commencement of the action and the suing out of execution. “Mesne” in this connection may be defined as intermediate; intervening; the middle between two extremes. The writ of capias ad respondendum was called “mesne” to distinguish it, on the one hand, from the original process by which a suit was formerly commenced; and, on the other, from the final process of execution.

Original process. That by which a judicial proceeding is instituted; process to compel the appearance of the defendant (i.e., summons). Distinguished from “mesne” process, which issues, during the progress of a suit, for some subordinate or collateral purpose; and from “final” process, which is process of execution. See Summons.

Process of interpleader. A means of determining the right to property claimed by each of two or more persons, which is in the possession of a third. See Interpleader.
In French law, a true relation in writing

Proces-verbal. In French law, a true relation in writing due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does upon the occasion. It is a species of inquisition of office, and must be signed by the officer.

Proces-verbal. Such as is issued according to rule and the prescribed practice, which emanates lawfully and in a proper case, from a court or magistrate possessing jurisdiction.

Service of process. See Service.

Summary process. Such as is immediate or instantaneous, in distinction from the ordinary course, by emanating and taking effect without intermediate applications or delays. In some jurisdictions (e.g. Massachusetts), term used to describe action for eviction of tenant.

Trustee process. The name given in some states (particularly in New England) to the process of garnishment or foreign attachment.

Void process. Such as was issued without power in the court to award it, or which the court had not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process.

Process agent. Person authorized to accept service of process in behalf of another (e.g. on behalf of corpora¬tion).

Processioning. Subjecting to some special treatment, to prepare for the market, to convert into marketable form, to make usable, marketable or the like. State v. Four States Drilling Co., 278 Ala. 273, 177 So. 2d 828, 831.

A survey and inspection of boundaries formerly performed in some of the American colonies by the local authorities. It was analogous in part to the English perambulation (q.v.), and was superseded by the introduction of the practice of accurate surveying and of recording.

Process patent. A process patent describes and claims a new and useful method to produce a desired result or any new or useful improvement thereof. 35 U.S.C.A. §§ 100, 100. See also Process (Patent Law).

Process server. Person authorized by law (e.g. sheriff) to serve process papers on defendant.

Processum continuando /prašésom kontinyuwangdow/. In old English practice, a writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer.

Processus legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus /prašésom liyjas ést gréyvas vekséysh(y)ow; èksksyúwsh(y)ow korównat ówpas/. The process of the law is a grievous vexation; the execution of the law crowns the work. The proceedings in an action while in progress are burdensome and vexatious; the execution, being the end and object of the action, crowns the labor, or rewards it with success.

Procréin ami /prošéhn amiy/. (Spelled, also, prochéin any and prochéin amy.) Next friend. As an infant cannot legally sue in his own name, the action must be brought by his procréin ami; that is, some friend (not being his guardian) who will appear as plaintiff in his name.

Prochronism /prowkranizm/. An error in chronology, consisting in dating a thing before it happened.

Procinctus /prásig(kt)s/. Lat. In the Roman law, a girding or preparing for battle. Testamentum in pro¬cinctu, a will made by a soldier, while girding himself, or preparing to engage in battle.

Proclaim. To promulgate; to announce; to publish, by governmental authority, intelligence of public acts or transactions or other matters important to be known by the people. To give wide publicity to; to disclose.

Proclamation. The act of publicly proclaiming or publishing: a formal declaration; an avowal; a public announcement giving notice of a governmental act that has been done or is to be done. The act of causing some governmental matters to be published or made generally known. A written or printed document in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority, usually by a high governmental executive (President, Governor, Mayor).

The declaration made by the bailiff, by authority of the court, that something is about to be done.

In equity practice, proclamation made by a sheriff upon a writ of attachment, summoning a defendant who has failed to appear personally to appear and answer the plaintiff's bill.

Proclamation by lord of manor. In old English law, proclamation made by the lord of a manor (thrice repeated) requiring the heir or devisee of a deceased copyholder to present himself, pay the fine, and be admitted to the estate; failing which appearance, the lord might seize the lands quousque (provisionally).

Proclamation of a fine. In old English law, the notice or proclamation at common law which was made after the engrossment of a fine of lands, and which consisted in its being openly read in court sixteen times, viz., four times in the term in which it was made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms, which, however, was afterwards reduced to one reading in each term.

Proclamation of exigents /prowklomeyshn av égjajants/. In old English law, when an exigent was awarded, a writ of proclamation issued, at the same time, commanding the sheriff of the county wherein the defendant dwelt to make three proclamations thereof in places the most notorious, and most likely to come to his knowledge, a month before the outlawry should take place.

Proclamation of rebellion. In old English law, a proclamation to be made by the sheriff commanding the attendance of a person who had neglected to obey a subpoena or attachment in chancery. If he did not surrender himself after this proclamation, a commission of rebellion issued.
Proclamation of recusants /prökláméyshan av rékyazants/ srékuywants/. A proclamation whereby recu-sants were formerly convicted, on non-appearance at the assizes.

Proclamator /pröklaméytər/. An officer of the English court of common pleas.

Pro confess/o /pröw kanfésow/. For confessed; as confessed. A term applied to a bill in equity, and the decree founded upon it, where no answer is made to it by the defendant. Under rules practice, this has been replaced by a default for want of prosecution. Fed.R.
Civil P. 55(a).

Pro consilio /pröw konsi(li)yow/. For counsel given.
An annuity pro consilio amounts to a condition, but in a feoffment or lease for life, etc., it is the consideration, and does not amount to a condition; for the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory.

Pro-consul /pröwkónsəl/. Lat. In the Roman law, originally a consul whose command was prolonged after his office had expired. An officer with consular authority, but without the title of "consul." The governor of a province.

Pro corpore regni /pröw körpari régnay/. In behalf of the body of the realm.

Procreation. The generation of children.

Proctor /pröktər/. One appointed to manage the affairs of another or represent him in judgment. A procurator, proxy, or attorney. Formerly, an officer of the admiralty and ecclesiastical courts whose duties and business correspond exactly to those of an attorney at law or solicitor in chancery. See also Power of attorney; Procuration; Proxy.

Procuracy /prökyarəsli/. The writing or instrument which authorizes a procurator to act.

Procurador del comun /prökuruasər dəl komuwn/. Sp.
In Spanish law, an officer appointed to make inquiry, put a petitioner in possession of land prayed for, and execute the orders of the executive in that behalf. Le-

Procurare /prökyarəríyi/. Lat. To take care of another's affairs for him, or in his behalf; to manage; to take care of or superintend.

Procuratio /prökyaréysh(i)yow/. Lat. Management of another's affairs by his direction and in his behalf;
procuration; agency.

Procuratio est exhibitio sumptuum necessariorum facta praelatis, qui dioceses peragrando, ecclesias subjectas visitant /prökyaréysh(i)yow əst éksbəsh(i)yow səm(p)tywəm nésəsəriyərəm fəktə prələytəs, kwəi dəjasəizyi pəhrəgrəndəwək, skəlizyi-səbəktəs vəzətam/. Procuration is the providing of necessaries for the bishops, who, in traveling through their dioceses, visit the churches subject to them.

Procuration /prökyaréyshan/. Agency; proxy; the act by which one person gives power to another to act in his place, as he could do himself. Action under a power of attorney or other constitution of agency. Indorsing a bill or note "by procuration" is doing it as proxy for another or by his authority. The use of the word procuration (usually, per procurations, or abbreviated to per proc. or p. p.) on a promissory note by an agent is notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign.

An express procuration is one made by the express consent of the parties. An implied or tacit procuration takes place when an individual sees another managing his affairs and does not interfere to prevent it. Procu-ration are also divided into those which contain absolute power, or a general authority, and those which give only a limited power.

Also, the act or offence of procuring women for lewd purposes.

See also Proctor; Procure; Proxy.

Procurationem adversus nulla est præscriptio /prö-kyaréysh(i)yəwəm advərəs nələ əst prəskripʃ-
(i)yow/. There is no prescription against procuration.

Procuration fee, or money /prökyaréyshan fiy/*məniy/.
In English law, brokerage or commission allowed to scriveners and solicitors for obtaining loans of money.

Procurator /prökyarəytər/. In the civil law, a proctor;
a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration.

In old English law, an agent or attorney; a bailiff or servant. A proxy of a lord in parliament.

In ecclesiastical law, one who collected the fruits of a benefice for another. An advocate of a religious house, who was to solicit the interest and plead the causes of the society. A proxy or representative of a parish church.

See Proctor; Procuration.

Procurores ecclesiæ parochialis /prökyarətɔrəriyz aklizyiyi prəwkiyəyləs/. The old name for churchwardens.

Procurator in rem suam /prökyarəydar in rəm sə(ə)yəwəm/. Proctor (attorney) in his own affair, or with reference to his own property. This term is used in Scotch law to denote that a person is acting under a procuration (power of attorney) with reference to a thing which has become his own property.

Procuratorium /prökyarətɔrərɪyzəm/. In old English law, the procuratory or instrument by which any person or community constituted or delegated their procurator or proctors to represent them in any judicial court or cause.

Procurator litis /prökyarəydar läytəs/. In the civil law, one who by command of another institutes and carries on for him a suit. Procurator is properly used of the attorney of actor (the plaintiff), defensor of the attorney of reus (the defendant). It is distinguished from advoc-tus, who was one who undertook the defence of persons, not things, and who was generally the patron of the person whose defence he prepared, the person himself speaking it. It is also distinguished from cognitor who Conducted the cause in the presence of his principal, and generally in cases of citizenship; whereas the procurator conducted the cause in his principal's absence.

Procureur de la république /prôkyur(y)ur do la républiyik/ (Formerly procureur du roi.) In French law, a public prosecutor, with whom rests the initiation of all criminal proceedings. In the exercise of his office (which appears to include the apprehension of offenders) he is entitled to call to his assistance the public force (posse comitatus) and the officers of police are auxiliary to him.

Procureur general, or imperial /prôkyur(y)ur jênsrâl /'impréyiâl/. In French law, an officer of the imperial court, who either personally or by his deputy prosecuted every one who was accused of a crime according to the forms of French law. His functions were apparently confined to preparing the case for trial at the assizes, assisting in that trial, demanding the sentence in case of a conviction, and being present at the delivery of the sentence. He had a general superintendency over the officers of police and of the juges d'instruction, and he required from the procureur du roi a general report once in every three months.

Procuring cause. The proximate cause; the cause originating a series of events, which, without break in their continuity, result in the accomplishment of the prime object. The inducing cause; the direct or proximate cause. Substantially synonymous with "efficient cause."

A broker will be regarded as the "procuring cause" of a sale, so as to be entitled to commission, if his or her efforts are the foundation on which the negotiations resulting in a sale are begun. A cause originating a series of events which without break in their continuity result in accomplishment of prime objective of the employment of the broker who is producing a purchaser ready, willing and able to buy real estate on the owner's terms. Mohamed v. Robbins, 23 Ariz.App. 195, 531 P.2d 928, 930.

Pro defuncto emtorum /prôw daféktyuém(p)tôróm/. For want (failure) of purchasers.

Pro defuncto exitus /prôw daféktyuú égzatôs/. For, or in case of, default of issue.

Pro defuncto haredis /prôw daféktyuú hâriydôs/. For want of an heir.

Pro defuncto justitie /prôw daféktyuú jôstîshiyô/. For defect or want of justice.

Pro defendente /prôw défendôntiyô/. For the defendant. Commonly abbreviated "pro def."

Pro derelicto /prôw déhrêlîkôw/. As derelict or abandoned. A species of usucaption in the civil law.

Prodigal. Wasteful; extravagant. A spendthrift.

In civil law, a person who, though of full age, is incapable of managing his affairs, and of the obligations which attend them, in consequence of his bad conduct, and for whom a curator is therefore appointed. See Prodigus.

Pro dignitate regali /prôw dîgnatêtiyô ragôyôlyô/. In consideration of the royal dignity.
Prodigus /prôdĭgəs/. Lat. In Roman law, a prodigal; a spendthrift; a person whose extravagant habits manifested an inability to administer his own affairs, and for whom a guardian might therefore be appointed.

Prodition /prôdĭshən/. Treason; treachery.

Proditor /prôdĭtər/. A traitor.

Proditorie /prôdĭtōrĭe/. Treasonably. This is a technical word formerly used in indictments for treason, when they were written in Latin.

Pro diviso /prôw dâvâyzəw/. As divided; i.e., in severalty.

Pro domino /prôw dōmənəw/. As master or owner; in Pro domino

Pro diviso /prôw dâvâyzəw/. As divided; i.e., in severalty.

Pro domino /prôw dōmənəw/. As master or owner; in the character of master.

Pro donato /prôw dənətəw/. As a gift; as in case of gift; by title of gift. A species of usucaption in the civil law.

Pro dote /prôw dôwtə/. As a dowry; by title of dowry. A species of usucaption.

Produce /prûs(w)yə/. n. The product of natural growth, labor, or capital. Articles produced or grown from or on the soil, or found in the soil.

Produce /prûs(y)əwə/. v. To bring forward; to show or exhibit; to bring into view or notice; as, to present a play, including its presentation in motion pictures. To produce witnesses or documents at trial in obedience to a subpoena (Fed.R.Civil P. 45; Fed.R.Crim.P. 17); or to be compelled to produce materials subject to discovery rules (Fed.R.Civil P. 37; Fed.R.Crim.P. 16).

To make, originate, or yield, as gasoline. To bring to the surface, as oil.

To yield, as revenue. Thus, sums are "produced" by taxation, not when the tax is levied, but when the sums are collected.

Producent /prûs(y)əwənt/. The party calling a witness under the old system of the English ecclesiastical courts.

Producing. Bring about; to cause to happen or take place, as an effect or result. Strong v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., Tex.Civ.App., 170 S.W.2d 786, 788.

Producing cause. Respecting broker's commission, is act which, continuing in unbroken chain of cause and effect, produces result. Schebesta v. Stewart, Tex.Civ.App., 37 S.W.2d 781, 786. A producing cause of an employee's death for which compensation is sought is that cause which, in a natural and continuous sequence, produces the death, and without which death would not have occurred. Jones v. Traders & General Ins. Co., 140 Tex. 599, 169 S.W.2d 160, 162. A producing cause is an efficient, existing, or contributing cause which, in natural and continuing sequence, produces the injury or damage complained of, if any. O. M. Franklin Serum Co. v. C. A. Hoover and Son, Tex.Civ.App., 437 S.W.2d 613, 619. See also Procuring cause; Proximate cause.

Product. With reference to property, term refers to proceeds; yield; income; receipts; return. Goods produced or manufactured, either by natural means, by hand, or with tools, machinery, chemicals, or the like. Something produced by physical labor or intellectual effort or something produced naturally or as result of natural process as by generation or growth. Minnesota Power & Light Co. v. Personal Property Tax, Taxing Dist., City of Fraser, School Dist. No. 695, 289 Minn. 64, 182 N.W.2d 685, 691.

Production. Process or act of producing. That which is produced or made; i.e. goods. Fruit of labor, as the productions of the earth, comprehending all vegetables and fruits; the productions of intellect, or genius, as poems and prose compositions; the productions of art, as manufactures of every kind.

Production of suit. In common law pleading, the formula, "and therefore [or thereupon] he brings his suit," etc., with which declarations always conclude. This referred to the production by the plaintiff of his secta or suit, i.e. persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in the declaration.

Productio sectae /prôdîksh(y)əw sêktê/. In old English law, production of suit; the production by a plaintiff of his secta or witnesses to prove the allegations of his count.

Product liability. Refers to the legal liability of manufacturers and sellers to compensate buyers, users, and even bystanders, for damages or injuries suffered because of defects in goods purchased. A tort which makes a manufacturer liable if his product has a defective condition that makes it unreasonably dangerous to the user or consumer. Cobbins v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 3 Ill.App.3d 379, 279 N.E.2d 443, 446.

Although the ultimate responsibility for injury or damage in a products liability case most frequently rests with the manufacturer, liability may also be imposed upon a retailer, occasionally upon a wholesaler or middleman, a bailor or lessor, and infrequently upon a party wholly outside the manufacturing and distributing process, such as a certifier. This ultimate responsibility may be imposed by an action by the plaintiff against the manufacturer directly, or by a claim for indemnification, asserted by way of a cross-claim or third party claim by the retailer or wholesaler, or others who might be held liable for the injury caused by a defective product. Under modern principles of products liability, and with the elimination of privity requirements in most instances, recovery is no longer limited to the purchaser of the product, or even to a user, but may extend to the non-user: the bystander who is injured or damaged by a defective product, for example. However, the term "products liability" normally contemplates injury or damage caused by a defective product, and if loss occurs as a result of a condition on the premises, or as a result of a service, as distinguished from loss occasioned by a defective product, a products liability claim does not ordinarily arise, even though a product may be involved.

For statutory time limits in bringing products liability actions, see Statute (Statute of repose).

See also Economic loss; Enterprise liability; Intended use doctrine; Latent defect; Privity; Strict liability; Warranty.

Product liability insurance. Type of insurance coverage which protects manufacturers and suppliers when claims are made for injuries and damage incurred in the use of their goods or products.

Product market. In antitrust law, the product market includes all other products that can be reasonably substituted by consumers for the product of the business under investigation. The determination of the product market is important in the assessment of the market power of the business.

Pro emptore /prəʊˈemptɔr/. As a purchaser; by the title of a purchaser. A species of usucaption.

Pro facto /prəʊˈfæktoʊr/. For the fact; as a fact; considered or held as a fact.

Pro falsa clamore suo /prəʊˈfəʊltsəʊ kləˈmɔːri/. A nominal amercement of a plaintiff for his false claim, which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant. Obsolete.

Profane. Irreverence towards God or holy things. Writing, speaking, or acting, in manifest or implied contempt of sacred things. Town of Torrington v. Taylor, 59 Wyo. 109, 137 P.2d 621, 624; Duncan v. U. S., C.C.A.Or., 48 F.2d 128, 133. That which has not been consecrated.

Profanity. Irreverence towards sacred things; particularly, an irreverent or blasphemous use of the name of God. Vulgar, irreverent, or coarse language. It is a federal offense to utter an obscene, indecent, or profane language on the radio. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1464.

Profane. A vocation or occupation requiring special, usually advanced, education, knowledge, and skill; e.g. law or medical professions. Also refers to whole body of such profession.

The labor and skill involved in a profession is predominantly mental or intellectual, rather than physical or manual.

The term originally contemplated only theology, law, and medicine, but as applications of science and learning are extended to other departments of affairs, other vocations also receive the name, which implies professed attainments in special knowledge as distinguished from mere skill.

Act of professing; a public declaration respecting something. Profession of faith in a religion.

Professional. One engaged in one of learned professions or in an occupation requiring a high level of training and proficiency. Reich v. City of Reading, 3 Pa.Cmwlth. 511, 284 A.2d 315, 319.

Professional association. Any group of professional people organized to practice their profession together, though not necessarily in corporate or partnership form. A group of professionals organized for education, social activity, lobbying and the like; e.g. bar or medical association. See also Corporation (Professional corporation).

Professional conduct or responsibility. As regards the legal profession, see Canon; Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

Professional corporation. See Corporation.

Proffer. To offer or tender, as, the production of a document and offer of the same in evidence.

Proffered evidence. See Proffer.

Proficua /prəʊˈfɪkjʊwə/. L. Lat. In old English law, profits; especially the "issues and profits" of an estate in land.
Profit. Most commonly, the gross proceeds of a business transaction less the costs of the transaction; i.e., net proceeds. Excess of revenues over expenses for a transaction; sometimes used synonymously with net income for the period. Gain realized from business or investment over and above expenditures.

Profit means accession of good, valuable results, useful consequences, avail, gain, as an office of profit, excess of returns over expenditures or excess of income over expenditure. U. S. v. Mintzes, D.C. Md., 304 F.Supp. 1305, 1312.

The benefit, advantage, or pecuniary gain accruing to the owner or occupant of land from its actual use; as in the familiar phrase "rents, issues and profits," or in the expression "mesne profits."

A division sometimes made of incorporeal hereditaments. Profits are divided into profits à prendre and profits à rendre (q.v.).

Community of profits. See that title.

Gross profit. The difference between sales and cost of goods sold, but excluding expenses and taxes. See also Gross income.

Mesne profits. Intermediate profits; that is, profits which have been accruing between two given periods. Value of use or occupation of land during time it was held by one in wrongful possession and is commonly measured in terms of rents and profits. Thus, after a party has recovered the land itself in an action of ejectment, he frequently brings another action for the purpose of recovering the profits which have been accruing or arising out of the land between the time when his title to the possession accrued or was raised and the time of his recovery in the action of ejectment, and such an action is hence termed an "action for mesne profits."

Net profit. The amount arrived at by deducting from total revenue the cost of goods sold and all expenses. See also Net income; Net profits.

Operating profit. The profit arrived at by deducting from sales all expenses attributable to operations but excluding expenses and income related to non-operating activities such as interest payments.

Paper profit. Profit not yet realized as derived from an appreciation in value of an asset not yet sold (e.g., gain on an unsold stock).

Profit and loss. The gain or loss arising from goods bought or sold, or from carrying on any other business, the former of which, in bookkeeping, is placed on the creditor's side; the latter on the debtor's side. See also Profit and loss account; Profit and loss statement.

Profit à prendre (prôfà à prôndar). Called also "right of common." A right exercised by one person in the soil of another, accompanied with participation in the profits of the soil thereof. A right to take a part of the soil or produce of the land. A right to take from the soil, such as by logging, mining, drilling, etc. The taking (profit) is the distinguishing characteristic from an easement.

Right of "profit à prendre" is a right to make some use of the soil of another, such as a right to mine metals, and it carries with it the right of entry and the right to remove and take from the land the designated products or profit and also includes right to use such of the surface as is necessary and convenient for exercise of the profit. Costa Mesa Union School Dist. of Orange County v. Security First Nat. Bank, 254 Cal.App.2d 4, 62 Cal.Rptr. 113, 118.

Profit à rendre (prôfà à rôndar). Such as is received at the hands of and rendered by another. The term comprehends rents and services.

Surplus profits. Within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the declaration of corporate dividends other than from such profits, means the excess of receipts over expenditures, or net earnings or receipts, or gross receipts, less expenses of operation. Of a corporation, the difference over and above the capital stock, debts, and liabilities.

Undistributed profits. Profits which have not been distributed to the stockholders in the form of dividends though earned by the corporation. See also Undistributed profits tax.

Undivided profits. See that title.

Profit and loss account. A transfer account of all income and expense accounts which is closed into the retained earnings of a corporation or the capital account of a partnership.

Profit and loss statement. A statement showing the income, costs and expenses of a business over a specific period of time; the difference being the income or loss for the period. See also Income statement.

Profiteering. Taking advantage of unusual or exceptional circumstances to make excessive profits; e.g., selling of scarce or essential goods at inflated prices during time of emergency or war. See Insider trading.

Profit margin. Sales minus all expenses as a single amount. The ratio of income to sales revenue. Frequently used to mean the ratio of sales minus all operating expenses divided by sales. A high profit margin is desirable as it indicates that a company is receiving a good return on the cost of goods sold.

Profit-sharing plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer to provide for the participation in the profits of the company by the employees or their beneficiaries. In order to qualify for tax benefits, the plan must provide a definite predetermined formula for allocating the contributions made to the plan among the participants and for distributing the funds accumulated under the plan after a fixed number of years, the attainment of a stated age, or upon the prior occurrence of some event such as layoff, illness, disability, retirement, death, or severance of employment. Such plans are regulated by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). See also Employee Stock Ownership Plan (ESOP).
Qualified profit sharing plan. An employer-sponsored plan that meets the requirements of I.R.C. § 401. If these requirements are met, none of the employer’s contributions to the plan will be taxed to the employee until distributed to him or her (§ 402). The employer will be allowed a deduction in the year the contributions are made (§ 404).

Pro forma / prów fórmə/. As a matter of form or for the sake of form. Used to describe accounting, financial, and other statements or conclusions based upon assumed or anticipated facts.

The phrase “pro forma,” in an appealable decree or judgment, usually means that the decision was rendered, not on a conviction that it was right, but merely to facilitate further proceedings. Cramp & Sons S. & E. Bldg. Co. v. Turbine Co., 228 U.S. 645, 33 S.Ct. 722, 57 L.Ed. 1003.

Prohibition. Act or law prohibiting. As a legacy. A species of usucaption.

Prohibition of a proposed treaty or convention. When a person claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage, judgment, lease, or otherwise, or has a title paramount to the sequestration, he should apply to the court to direct an inquiry whether the applicant has any, and what, interest in the property; and this inquiry is called an “examination pro interesse suo.” Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U.S. 276, 4 S.Ct. 27, 28 L.Ed. 145; Hitz v. Jenks, 185 U.S. 155, 22 S.Ct. 598, 46 L.Ed. 851.

Projectio / prójékshiyow/. Lat. In old English law, a throwing up of earth by the sea.

Project de loi / prówzhey dslwa/. A bill in a legislative body.

Prolem ante matrimonium natam, ita ut post legitimum, lex civilis succedere facit in hereditate parentum; sed prolem, quam matrimonium non parit, succedere non sinit lex anglorum / prówlám ánti métrámöw(n)lym néytm, áyta át póswt lajitamem, léks sválás sakúsítyari feysát in háreséstéytyr pérentam; séd prówlám, kwám métrámöw(n)lym nón pórs, sakúsídyriy nón sáýnt léks aŋglórum/. The civil law permits the offspring born before marriage, provided such offspring be afterwards legitimized, to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the offspring not produced by the marriage to succeed.

Proles / prówliyz/. Lat. Offspring; progeny; the issue of a lawful marriage. In its enlarged sense, it signifies any children.
Proletariat, proletariate /prəˈwɪəˌriːət/ The class or body of proletarians. The class of unskilled laborers, without property or capital, engaged in the lower grades of work. The class of proletarii (see the next title); the lowest stratum of the people of a country, consisting mainly of the waste of other classes, or of those fractions of the population who, by their isolation and their poverty, have no place in the established order of society.

Proletarius /prəˈwɪəˈtʃəriəs/. Lat. In Roman law, a proleter; a person of poor or mean condition; one among the common people whose fortunes were below a certain valuation; one of a class of citizens who were so poor that they could not serve the state with money, but only with their children (proles).

Prolicid /prəˈwaɪlsaɪd/. A word used to designate the destruction of the human offspring. Jurists divide the subject into feticide, or the destruction of the fetus in utero, and infanticide, or the destruction of the new-born infant. See also Abortion.

Prolixity /prəˈwaɪkətɪ/ The unnecessary and superfluous statement of facts in pleading or in evidence.

Promatertera /prəˈmɑːtərˈtərəs/. In the civil law, a great-great-aunt; the sister of one's grandmother.

Promatertera magna /prəˈmɑːtərˈtərəs məˈɡnə/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-aunt.

Promise. A declaration which binds the person who makes it, either in honor, conscience, or law, to do or forbear a certain specific act, and which gives to the person to whom made a right to expect or claim the performance of some particular thing. A declaration, verbal or written, made by one person to another for a good or valuable consideration, in the nature of a covenant by which the promisor binds himself to do or forbear some act, and gives to the promisee a legal right to demand and enforce a fulfillment. An express undertaking, or agreement to carry a purpose into effect. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. v. Claiomine-Reno Co., C.C.A. Iowa, 64 P.2d 224.

An undertaking, however expressed, either that something shall happen, or that something shall not happen, in the future. Plumbing Shop, Inc. v. Pitts, 67 Wash.2d 514, 408 P.2d 382, 384.

A promise is a manifestation of intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified way, so made as to justify a promisee in understanding that a commitment has been made. A promise may be stated in words either oral or written, or may be inferred wholly or partly from conduct. Restatement, Second, Contracts §§ 2, 4.

While a “promise” is sometimes loosely defined as a declaration by any person of his intention to do or forbear from anything at the request or for the use of another, it is to be distinguished, on the one hand, from a mere declaration of intention involving no engagement or assurance as to the future, and, on the other, from “agreement,” which is an obligation arising upon reciprocal promises, or upon a promise founded on a consideration.

See also Aleatory promise; Breach of promise; Conditional promise; Gratuitous promise; Illusory promise; Implied promise; Ofer; Raising a promise.

Commercial law. An undertaking to pay and it must be more than an acknowledgment of an obligation. U.C.C. § 9-102(1)(c).

Fictitious promise. Sometimes called “implied promises,” or “promises implied in law,” occur in the case of those contracts which were invented to enable persons in certain cases to take advantage of the old rules of pleading peculiar to contracts, and which are not now of practical importance.

Illusory promise. A promise in which the promisor does not bind himself to do anything and hence it furnishes no basis for a contract because of the lack of consideration; e.g. a promise to buy whatever goods the promisor chooses to buy.

Mutual promises. Promises simultaneously made by and between two parties; each promise being the consideration for the other.

Naked promise. One given without any consideration, equivalent, or reciprocal obligation, and for that reason not enforceable at law.

New promise. An undertaking or promise, based upon and having relation to a former promise which, for some reason, can no longer be enforced, whereby the promisor recognizes and revives such former promise and engages to fulfill it.

Parol promise. A simple contract; a verbal promise.

Promise implied in fact. Promise implied in fact is merely tacit promise, one which is inferred in whole or in part from expressions other than words by promisor. Cooke v. Adams, Mise., 183 So.2d 925, 927.

Promise implied in law. Promise implied in law is one in which neither words nor conduct of party involved are promissory in form or justify inference of promise and term is used to indicate that party is under legally enforceable duty as he would have been, if he had in fact made promise. Cooke v. Adams, Miss., 183 So.2d 925, 927.

Promise of marriage. A contract mutually entered into by a man and a woman that they will marry each other.

Promise to pay the debt of another. Within the statute of frauds, a promise to pay the debt of another is an undertaking by a person not before liable, for the purpose of securing or performing the same duty for which the party for whom the undertaking is made, continues liable.

Promisee. One to whom a promise has been made.

Promisor. One who makes a promise.

Promissory /prəˈmɪsəri/. Lat. In the civil law, a promiser; properly the party who undertook to do a thing in answer to the interrogation of the other party, who was called the "stipulator."

Promissory /prəˈmɪsəri/. Containing or consisting of a promise; in the nature of a promise; stipulating or engaging for a future act or course of conduct.

As to promissory Oath; Representation; and Warranty, see those titles.

Promissory estoppel. That which arises when there is a promise which promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on part of promisee, and which does induce such action or forbearance, and such promise is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of promise. "Moore" Burger, Inc. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., Tex., 492 S.W.2d 934. Elements of a "promissory estoppel" are a promise clear and unambiguous in its terms, reliance by the party to whom the promise is made, with that reliance being both reasonable and foreseeable, and injury to the party asserting the estoppel as a result of his reliance. James King & Son, Inc. v. De Santis Const. No. 2 Corp., 97 Misc.2d 1063, 413 N.Y.S.2d 78, 81. See Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 90.

Promissory fraud. A promise to perform made at a time when the promisor has a present intention not to perform. It is a misrepresentation of the promisor's frame of mind and is, for that reason a fact which makes it the basis of an action for deceit. It is sometimes called common law fraud.

Promissory note. A promise or engagement, in writing, to pay a specified sum at a time therein stated, or on demand, or at sight, to a person therein named, or to his order, or bearer. An unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay absolutely and at all events a sum certain in money, either on demand or at a specified time and payable to order or bearer. U.C.C. § 3–104.
